Of its 94 members, twelve were fired and ten quit in the first season—under fire. Szell raised the number to 106, including 35 survivors of the original group. "We begin to rehearse," said Szell, "when other orchestras are finished." He has infused unparalleled American technical excellence with a warm Middle European combustibility. It is precise, it is flexible, it has power to spare and disk brakes. It has no characteristic sound, wants none, needs none. It is protean, transforming itself easily into an instrument equally useful for the singularity of Bach or Beethoven, or Debussy or Stravinsky. Says Pierre Boulez, "Of all the orchestras I guest-conduct, I prefer the Cleveland. It is the most flexible."

The poet Yeats wrote: "Whatever flames upon the night/Man's own resinous heart has fed." In mankind's battle to hold back the night George Szell contributed his whole heart.

—HUBERT SAAL

John Barbirolli, 1899-1970

A less courageous man than John Barbirolli might have folded under the criticism during his seven years as conductor of the New York Philharmonic, succeeding Arturo Toscanini in 1937. But Barbirolli stayed to win respect and then returned to England in 1943 to take over Manchester's war-depleted Hallé Orchestra, reduced to 23 musicians. Barbirolli even seduced a lady trombonist away from the Salvation Army in his restoration of the orchestra to 70 strong and a reputation as good as any. Not until 19[illegible] did he change his Hallé title as conductor in chief to laureate conductor for life.

Small, vital, Barbirolli was a lyric and energetic musician. He inherited his style from his Italian father and grandfather, violinists who had both played at the first performance of Verdi's "Otello" in 1887. Even so, and even though he had been baptized Giovanni Battista, Barbirolli was thoroughly English, born over a bakery shop in London. He was English enough to be knighted in 1949 by King George VI and English enough to say last week on the day before he died, "I must go on until I drop. There is no other way for me."

—H. S.

Roy Green—Camera Press

Barbirolli: English enough

themselves of their orchestral fiefs, three European-based international giants have rushed in to claim them. Germany's Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft (DGG) recently signed an exclusive contract with the Boston Symphony Orchestra that matches the BSO's old RCA contract, which guaranteed it a minimum of five LP's a year—minuscule compared with the London orchestras' output.

BSO general manager Thomas Perry indicated that BSO's recording change was primarily a matter of getting off a sinking RCA ship. RCA's Laginestra says: "I don't buy the premise that in five years we won't be there. We've always been in the classical business and it's a business we'll be in as long as we're in business."

Vacuum: Two English companies have also laid claim to their part of the American orchestral market. EMI's American subsidiary, Angel, and Decca's London are both recording the Chicago Symphony, and Angel is recording the Cleveland Orchestra, a relationship recently highlighted by a performance of the Brahms Double Concerto with David Oistrakh and Mstislav Rostropovich.

Just how can foreign companies pay the crippling costs of recording in America and still expect to make money, at a time when RCA and Columbia are pulling in their horns? EMI's Peter Andry explains that his firm was racking its corporate brains to find ways to make its biggest market—America—even bigger. The vacuum being left by Columbia and RCA gave it a chance to move in. "We want to top up our product," says Englishman Andry, a leading record producer, who calls American orchestras "the most efficient, the best music-making machines going." Andry expects to tape enough repertory in America in five years to give Angel's catalogue an American tone for many years beyond that.

London Records' Terry McEwen says: "We did it for our conductors who came to the U.S., Solti to Chicago and Mehta to Los Angeles. Besides that, as a European company, we have other advantages. The only people who have faith in classical music today seem to be the European companies. We believe in classical music and we have the stable European markets to support it."

Image: Of the three European companies, Deutsche Grammophon has made the most thoroughgoing commitment to an American orchestra. Jerry Schoenbaum, president of Polydor, the firm's American branch, intends to use the Boston Symphony Orchestra as part of his campaign to give DGG, owned by Siemens, the German electrical firm, a new image as "an American company" and try to overcome anti-German prejudice. Under its new aegis one of the orchestra's first releases will be works by two Americans—Charles Ives and Carl Ruggles—conducted by 26-year-old Michael Tilson Thomas, whose grandparents helped found the Yiddish theater in New York.

Jeanne Hansen, record buyer for the seventeen May department stores in southern California, says, "Already our Boston Symphony sales are down. Just as there are some people who won't buy a German car, some devoted music lovers won't buy a German record. Old wounds run too deep." DGG will also be sending in members of its stable of conductors, such as Herbert von Karajan and Claudio Abbado, to record with the Boston and give it some sex appeal. In knowledgeable quarters of the industry it is assumed that DGG will even have a say in naming the BSO's next conductor when 71-year-old, ailing William Steinberg steps down.

DGG will also attempt to internationalize the Boston by footing part of the bill for a 1971 European tour, the orchestra's first trip there since 1956. "Our contract with the Boston Symphony," says tall, dark-haired Kurt Kinkele, 48, DGG senior vice president in Hamburg, "is a move that will increase the worldwide standing of DGG." And DGG will be plugging the BSO worldwide through its network of far-flung facilities, including Nippon Grammophon, one of Japan's two leading classical record companies. Japan, which buys $33 million worth of classical records a year, second only to the U.S., seems to prefer German musicians: the most popular conductors there are Karajan, the late Wilhelm Furtwängler, Karl Böhm and Karl Richter.

While the Europeans scurry about, the Americans are convinced the foreigners will never recoup their investment. "They are in for some rude shocks," observes John McClure. "By the time they really get into it, the market will have evaporated. Van Cliburn isn't going to happen again. We've come to the end of an era. The same thing will happen in Europe, later. I'm not crepe-hanging, though. Classical music has a future. It will just be differently done."

The future, according to RCA's Laginestra, "is a question of getting across to the kids." RCA is packaging records in slickly appealing jackets: its "Carmina Burana" design features a woman with an exposed breast. In the wake of the pop hit based on Beethoven's "Ode to Joy" from the Ninth Symphony, London is readying the complete work—but with a crowd shot of the Woodstock festival on the sleeve. DGG, putting on its Americanized face, has sent six miniature records to disk jockeys. Arranged properly, their covers show a nude blonde cradling a bust of Mozart between her thighs.

Newsweek—A.J. Calvo

Packaging Mozart: Getting across to the kids

Apathy: None of these market ploys looks like a real solution to the accelerating plunge in sales of classical records. A&R men, those involved with artists and repertory, ponder the slump with great sadness; but they insist, like Dickens's Mr. Micawber, that "something will turn up." What, they aren't sure.

The basic trouble lies deeper than rising costs or marketing techniques. There exists a primal apathy toward classical music in America—on the part of buyer and seller alike. Since record companies find it easy to sell pop music profitably, why bother with the classics? Why wait years for an investment to pay off? And the companies don't care enough to shore classical divisions up with part of bumper pop profits.

As for the public, what it buys mostly is novel, like music for the Moog synthesizer, or glamorous, like "My Favorite Chopin" by Van Cliburn. Nearly all the classical music most of the music-loving public wants to hear was written before 1900—and has been recorded more than enough. Only so many Beethoven Fifths can be absorbed. In 1970 the public seems to be absorbing less and less of anything classical.

More than a setback for the classical-record business, it is a tragedy for young music and musicians. Says EMI's Andry: "I can see that very soon these orchestras may not be as efficient as they have been. When musicians lose the extra recording money, they may just go off and become shoemakers instead."

RECORDINGS

NEWSWEEK
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W 1[illegible] 000

AUG 10 1970

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100

AUG 1970

The first Steinberg-BSO recording

STEINBERG'S interpretation of "The Great major" is substantial. After a broad introduction he leads the main body of the Allegro at a rather slow tempo, and even the coda (Più moto) does not break from this leisurely conception. Steinberg doubles the wind parts at selected points during the symphony; the wind statement of the initial horn tune at the very end of the first movement is one such example. In general his use of the woodwinds has a meaty German solidity, and it fits well with the Brucknerian cast of his opening movement. The Andante is taken at the faster tempo favored by Mengelberg and Toscanini. Steinberg does not achieve a similar individuality of expression (mainly because he uses rubato less imaginatively), but the orchestra is most responsive; the woodwind solos have exceptional character. In the Scherzo (and Trio) I am again struck by Steinberg's Brucknerian affinity, and again the weight of the winds contributes much. The finale is well done, too, with excellent phrasing and some subtle pointing. The one miscalculation occurs in the second subject, where there is too much of an accent in the middle of the second phrase of the melody. Within its dynamic range, RCA's engineering is very good; The BSO sound is reproduced naturally, without muting the characteristic timbres or the solid bottom. Though at moments this performance seems less gripping than some others, it can be very rewarding given an acceptance of Steinberg's perspective—which is a legitimate one, surely. Other recordings of merit (in addition to Mengelberg and Toscanini) include those by Krips (my basic recommendation among modern editions: London CS-6061) and Skrowaczewski (similar to Steinberg in the Andante but more animated in the first movement and very fast in the finale: Philips World Series WS-9044). I must confess, however, that the older recordings (including Furtwängler's currently-deleted 1951 recording with the Berlin Philharmonic) seem to me somewhat more successful in putting the work together as a whole.

—M.N.K.

SCHUBERT: Symphony No. 9 in C, D. 944; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by William Steinberg. RCA Stereo LSC-3115, $5.98.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100

AUG 1970

ORFF: Carmina Burana; Evelyn Mandac (soprano), Sherrill Milnes (baritone), Stanley Kolk (tenor); New England Conservatory Chorus and Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Seiji Ozawa. RCA Stereo LSC-3161, $5.98.

⑧SUCH music as this ought to be Ozawa's cup of tea, and his recording does have a few points in its favor. The pianos, so important for Orff, are more prominently balanced than usual. Also, happily, Ozawa relies more upon the metronome markings than upon custom in setting his tempi. But the Boston Symphony plays with neither the precision nor the spirit to be heard in the best previous recorded performances by the Philadelphia, New Philharmonia, and Berlin Opera orchestras. The soprano has a firm tone, though even after taking a breath during her nine-measure D at the end of No. 15 (Amor volat undique) she does not sustain it too well over the pianissimo orchestra. The tenor is rather ordinary. The baritone is easily the best of the soloists. Milnes sings with genuine art, and even if some of the high tessitura is troublesome to him he is most sensitive to the nuances of the text. The choruses are more lusty than disciplined. So we come back to Ozawa. On this evidence he is not half the conductor Frühbeck de Burgos is (on Angel S-36333). Ozawa's balances are frequently awry, and some of his characterizations are careless. The Tanz (No. 6) suffers from both of these faults. And why is the last chord held for nine seconds? One gets the impression of a score studied too quickly, and of musicians poorly rehearsed. The sound on the advance review copy I listened to is very good but not better than on other editions. It is worth noting, however, that side two (Parts II and III) lasts nearly 33½ minutes without any loss of fidelity.

—M.N.K.

BEETHOVEN: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 1, in C, Op. 15; Sonata for Piano, No. 22, in F, Op. 54. Sviatoslav Richter, piano. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond. RCA Victrola VICS 1478, $2.98 [from RCA Red Seal LSC 2544, 1962].

Recordings by microphone-shy Sviatoslav Richter are not plentiful and I suppose we should be grateful for what we have. This ten-year-old collaboration (recorded in November 1960) with Munch and the BSO, however, is not one of the pianist's happier efforts. The outer movements are overtense and hard-driven, while the slow movement gets rather unsympathetic off-the-cuff treatment. Munch's blowzy accompaniment veers out of control on more than one occasion and there never seems to be any real rapport between orchestra and soloist.

The filler, one of Beethoven's less frequently played sonatas, provides more congenial material for Richter's assertive, extroverted approach, but this interesting performance is hardly sufficient to give the disc full endorsement.

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 130,000

SEP 1970

WINE, WOMEN AND CARMINA BURANA IN BOSTON

Seiji Ozawa's new recording of the Carl Orff work for RCA goes to the head of the class

STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163,400

SEP 1970

AT THE conclusion of my "Basic Repertoire" article last February devoted to Carl Orff's Carmina Burana and its several recorded performances, I speculated that RCA's forthcoming release of the music with Seiji Ozawa conducting soloists, chorus, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra "might just go to the head of the class." That speculation is now fulfilled—and handsomely so—with the release of the recording, made in Boston's Symphony Hall immediately after Ozawa led the first Boston Symphony performances of the work last November.

The recording duplicates the triumph of the "live" performances. Ozawa's is a propulsive, dynamic account of this vigorous paean to the profane joys of wine, women, and song; at the same time, he responds intuitively to the more tender and reflective sections. The music—its virtues and its faults—is by now well enough known that little need be said about the work itself. As to the performance at hand, one could single out dozens of felicities; a few will have to suffice for the many, however. Throughout the performance, the Boston Symphony plays brilliantly for Ozawa: note particularly the full-throated vibrancy of the "Wheel of Fortune" section at the opening and closing of the score, and also the lusty, sylvan excitement of the orchestral dance that opens the "On the Green" section. Of the three vocal soloists, it is the baritone who carries the major musical burden. Sherrill Milnes is simply superb in his every appearance: the last verse of his first solo is sung in a glorious mezza voce; he brilliantly characterizes the dissolute sot who sings the opening of the section titled "In the Tavern" that begins side two; and he delivers the melismatic patterns of the "Dies, nox et omnia" solos marvelously, shifting effortlessly from full voice to falsetto and back again.

Seiji Ozawa: an intuitive response to the music

RCA

The tenor soloist makes one brief appearance, but what a task Orff sets for him! The writing is high up in the tenor range, cruelly so for most tenors, but Stanley Kolk deals with the challenge of the part better than most.

The soprano does not appear until the last section—"The Court of Love"—but the radiantly beautiful music is worth the wait. And it is a joy to welcome the lovely young Philippine soprano Evelyn Mandac in this performance—her recording debut, unless I am mistaken (though she will soon again appear on records as Eugene Ormandy's soprano soloist in his forthcoming recording of Mahler's Second Symphony for RCA). A recipient of a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for the furtherance of her musical career several years ago, Miss Mandac clearly seems destined for great things. Hers is a warm, seductive vocal quality that appears to be produced without effort.

The choral forces of the New England Conservatory of Music have been appearing regularly in concerts and recordings with the Boston Symphony for nearly two decades. I cannot recall a previous occasion, though, when they have so completely and satisfyingly fulfilled their musical assignment.

Finally, the reproduction is a model of clarity, balance, and massed sonority. The acetate test pressing from which I reviewed the recording contained no printed documentation concerning the technical crew responsible for the result; however, I believe the producer of the disc was Peter Delheim. He has set a high standard indeed for the Deutsche Grammophon producing team that henceforth will be recording the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Martin Bookspan

ORFF: Carmina Burana. Sherrill Milnes (baritone); Stanley Kolk (tenor); Evelyn Mandac (soprano); New England Conservatory and Children's Chorus; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa cond. RCA LSC 3161 $5.98, ⑧ R8S 1161 $6.95.

Record Changer

Ozawa: Smudgy but Sensual

BY CRAIG PALMER
Fine Arts Staff

The same fine line that subdivides the interpretation of profane into either vulgar or sensual, separates the bad recordings of Carl Orff's cantata, "Carmina Burana," from the good.

Seiji Ozawa's new drafting (with the Boston Symphony, soloists Evelyn Mandac, Stanley Kolk, Sherrill Milnes, the New England Conservatory Chorus) gets a little smudgy on unfortunate occasions when synchronization between chorus and orchestra slips or enunciation from the chorus becomes unintelligible.

Nevertheless, seething with bold, dramatic lines, Ozawa's drawing, pagan but not barbaric, passionate, indulging, is one of the most sensual. (RCA LSC-3161)

* * *

No where in the chamber music repertoire is there a composer as amiable and lucidly conversational a house guest as Schubert.

As for chamber ensembles, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, it seems by their new release of Schubert, Milhaud and Hindemith, will not soon wear out its welcome, either.

The Schubert piano trio, opus 99, is one of his most sublime essays for intimate listening, and the players bring it to us rich and warm in color; fastidiously attentive to detail.

Milhaud's "Pastoral" is a nice sherbert before the cerebral exercise in Hindemith's Kleine Kammermusik opus 24, No. 2, on the second side. (RCA LSC-3166)

* * *

It perpetually seems that nothing in music is more sacred than J. S. Bach, himself.

And so it goes with performances of seven sacred choral works — the seven motets — by the Barmen-Gemarke Schola Cantorum and Collegium Aureum, Helmut Kahlhofer conducting. (RCA VICS-6037)

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 290,584 SUN. 333,794

SEP 1 1970

'Carmina Burana'

Brilliant New Recording Made

By John Acord III

SUNDAY OKLAHOMAN
OKLA. CITY, OKLA.
Circ. 274,576

The "goliards," a group of wandering students who hung around Munich about 740 A.D., were probably the first real hippies and earned money for drinking purposes by singing bawdy songs.

The manuscript on which Carl Orff based his choral work "Carmina Burana" is taken from manuscripts left by the goliards and other strolling minesingers that were found in an ancient monastery.

Diskords With Acord

That there is more of the profane than the sacred in this text is easily explained. Carmina is the plural form of carmen, which is the Latin word for song. In Germany, carmina were student songs.

Orff has a special way of setting the ancient texts that elicit an almost physical response from the listener.

Last year one of the most successful concerts of the Oklahoma City Symphony was a performance of this exciting work.

Well, the best recorded version is the newest one under the sparkling and driving baton of the young Japanese conductor, Seiji Ozawa.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra also is given one of its most splendid recordings by RCA's engineers.

The young Philippine soprano, Evelyn Mandac, displays an exciting and pitch-perfect voice.

Sherill Milnes, in the difficult baritone role, is superb as is the short solo of tenor Stanley Kolk. Orff wrote the tenor part so high on the scale it is one of the most difficult things in all music for a male to sing.

RCA has thoughtfully included the complete text of the songs and they are artfully sung by the New England Conservatory Chorus.

This is one of the finest performances of modern music I have heard recently.

THE PLAIN DEALER
CLEVELAND, OHIO
D. 409,414 SUN. 545,032

SEP 6 1970

off the records

by emerson batdorff

Zesty 'Carmina Burana' on tap

The well-ordered frenzy of "Carmina Burana" is with us once again in a resplendent version with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston symphony, soloists and a couple of choruses.

Unexpected, you might call "Carmina Burana." It is made up mostly of vigor. It has its sweet parts, but they are not cloying. And the vigor is never harsh. It's something like a good aftershave lotion.

Carl Orff wrote the songs late in the 1930s. After he saw what he had wrought he wrote his publisher: "Destroy everything I have written up to now."

This was not done, but Orff was on the right track. He is remembered only for "Carmina Burana" and what came after. He's still alive, as far as anyone knows (he's a secretive cuss and wouldn't tell anyone about him dying) and is still able to glory in this music, but there hasn't been much word about him composing lately. He's 75.

"CARMINA Burana" is based on medieval thoughts found piled up in an old abbey in Germany. Orff caused them to be rendered into free verse and then he set them in the percussive style of which he alone is master. Even the singing is largely percussive.

Orff gets a hint of the medieval into his work, but by and large it is entirely modern, and it is the only large chunk of modern music that a number of romantics can stomach without retching.

The soloists here are Evelyn Mandac, a clear, sweet soprano; Stanley Kolk, a tenor with great verve, and Sherrill Milnes, a heroic baritone.

Too often "Carmina Burana" is presented on record without the text, to which nearly everyone will be driven by the compulsion of the music. This record RCA LSC 3161) has a fine text with the Latin or the colloquial German in which the song is sung and also the English of it.

No one should give up on modern music without hearing this. It is entirely possible to make modern music interesting and coherent.

"THE PLANETS" by Holst is an accumulation of agreeable sounds without much development but pleasant to listen to and quite likely to stir up pictures in the imagination.

On a London (SPC 210-49) record, "The Planets" gets an all-too-respectful rendering by Bernard Herrmann and the London Philharmonic. He seems to be overly impressed by the music, and the music isn't really all that significant.

As a result Herrmann is inclined to dawdle. Ideally the conductor would give it the intensity that Holst forgot when he wrote it.

The young Horowitz (1932-34) is to be heard on a Serafim (60114) record of Liszt and Schumann. He had a delicate touch then as he does now and his performance has a fine freshness.

But is there really much feeling to Liszt? Here are his Sonata in B Minor and his Funerailles, both cold and complex, requiring deterity, but not yielding to feeling. The Schumann is warmer. Arabesque, Traumeswirren and Presto Passionato.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100

AUG 1970

ORFF: Carmina Burana; Evelyn Mandac (soprano), Sherrill Milnes (baritone), Stanley Kolk (tenor); New England Conservatory Chorus and Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Seiji Ozawa. RCA Stereo LSC-3161, $5.98.

SUCH music as this ought to be Ozawa's cup of tea, and his recording does have a few points in its favor. The pianos, so important for Orff, are more prominently balanced than usual. Also, happily, Ozawa relies more upon the metronome markings than upon custom in setting his tempi. But the Boston Symphony plays with neither the precision nor the spirit to be heard in the best previous recorded performances by the Philadelphia, New Philharmonia, and Berlin Opera orchestras. The soprano has a firm tone, though even after taking a breath during her nine-measure D at the end of No. 15 (Amor volat undique) she does not sustain it too well over the pianissimo orchestra. The tenor is rather ordinary. The baritone is easily the best of the soloists. Milnes sings with genuine art, and even if some of the high tessitura is troublesome to him he is most sensitive to the nuances of the text. The choruses are more lusty than disciplined. So we come back to Ozawa. On this evidence he is not half the conductor Frühbeck de Burgos is (on Angel S-36333). Ozawa's balances are frequently awry, and some of his characterizations are careless. The Tanz (No. 6) suffers from both of these faults. And why is the last chord held for nine seconds? One gets the impression of a score studied too quickly, and of musicians poorly rehearsed. The sound on the advance review copy I listened to is very good but not better than on other editions. It is worth noting, however, that side two (Parts II and III) lasts nearly 33½ minutes without any loss of fidelity.
—M.N.K.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100

AUG 1970

BEETHOVEN: Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, No. 1, in C, Op. 15; Sonata for Piano, No. 22, in F, Op. 54. Sviatoslav Richter, piano. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Münch, cond. RCA Victrola VICS 1478, $2.98 [from RCA Red Seal LSC 2544, 1962].

Recordings by microphone-shy Sviatoslav Richter are not plentiful and I suppose we should be grateful for what we have. This ten-year-old collaboration (recorded in November 1960) with Munch and the BSO, however, is not one of the pianist's happier efforts. The outer movements are overtense and hard-driven, while the slow movement gets rather unsympathetic off-the-cuff treatment. Munch's blowzy accompaniment veers out of control on more than one occasion and there never seems to be any real rapport between orchestra and soloist.

The filler, one of Beethoven's less frequently played sonatas, provides more congenial material for Richter's assertive, extroverted approach, but this interesting performance is hardly sufficient to give the disc full endorsement.

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 150,000

SEP 1970

The first Steinberg-BSO recording

STEINBERG'S interpretation of "The Great major" is substantial. After a broad introduction he leads the main body of the Allegro at a rather slow tempo, and even the coda (Più moto) does not break from this leisurely conception. Steinberg doubles the wind parts at selected points during the symphony; the wind statement of the initial horn tune at the very end of the first movement is one such example. In general his use of the woodwinds has a meaty German solidity, and it fits well with the Brucknerian cast of his opening movement. The Andante is taken at the faster tempo favored by Mengelberg and Toscanini. Steinberg does not achieve a similar individuality of expression (mainly because he uses rubato less imaginatively), but the orchestra is most responsive; the woodwind solos have exceptional character. In the Scherzo (and Trio) I am again struck by Steinberg's Brucknerian affinity, and again the weight of the winds contributes much. The finale is well done, too, with excellent phrasing and some subtle pointing. The one miscalculation occurs in the second subject, where there is too much of an accent in the middle of the second phrase of the melody. Within its dynamic range, RCA's engineering is very good; The BSO sound is reproduced naturally, without muting the characteristic timbres or the solid bottom. Though at moments this performance seems less gripping than some others, it can be very rewarding given an acceptance of Steinberg's perspective—which is a legitimate one, surely. Other recordings of merit (in addition to Mengelberg and Toscanini) include those by Krips (my basic recommendation among modern editions: London CS-6061) and Skrowaczewski (similar to Steinberg in the Andante but more animated in the first movement and very fast in the finale: Philips World Series WS-9044). I must confess, however, that the older recordings (including Furtwängler's currently-deleted 1951 recording with the Berlin Philharmonic) seem to me somewhat more successful in putting the work together as a whole.
—M.N.K.

SCHUBERT: Symphony No. 9 in C, D. 944; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by William Steinberg. RCA Stereo LSC-3115, $5.98.

STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 133,400

SEP 1970

WINE, WOMEN AND CARMINA BURANA IN BOSTON

Seiji Ozawa's new recording of the Carl Orff work for RCA goes to the head of the class

AT THE conclusion of my "Basic Repertoire" article last February devoted to Carl Orff's Carmina Burana and its several recorded performances, I speculated that RCA's forthcoming release of the music with Seiji Ozawa conducting soloists, chorus, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra "might just go to the head of the class." That speculation is now fulfilled—and handsomely so—with the release of the recording, made in Boston's Symphony Hall immediately after Ozawa led the first Boston Symphony performances of the work last November.

The recording duplicates the triumph of the "live" performances. Ozawa's is a propulsive, dynamic account of this vigorous paean to the profane joys of wine, women, and song; at the same time, he responds intuitively to the more tender and reflective sections. The music—its virtues and its faults—is by now well enough known that little need be said about the work itself. As to the performance at hand, one could single out dozens of felicities; a few will have to suffice for the many, however. Throughout the performance, the Boston Symphony plays brilliantly for Ozawa: note particularly the full-throated vibrancy of the "Wheel of Fortune" section at the opening and closing of the score, and also the lusty, sylvan excitement of the orchestral dance that opens the "On the Green" section. Of the three vocal soloists, it is the baritone who carries the major musical burden. Sherrill Milnes is simply superb in his every appearance: the last verse of his first solo is sung in a glorious mezza voce; he brilliantly characterizes the dissolute sot who sings the opening of the section titled "In the Tavern" that begins side two; and he delivers the melismatic patterns of the "Dies, nox et omnia" solos marvelously, shifting effortlessly from full voice to falsetto and back again.

Seiji Ozawa: an intuitive response to the music

RCA

The tenor soloist makes one brief appearance, but what a task Orff sets for him! The writing is high up in the tenor range, cruelly so for most tenors, but Stanley Kolk deals with the challenge of the part better than most.

The soprano does not appear until the last section—"The Court of Love"—but the radiantly beautiful music is worth the wait. And it is a joy to welcome the lovely young Philippine soprano Evelyn Mandac in this performance—her recording debut, unless I am mistaken (though she will soon again appear on records as Eugene Ormandy's soprano soloist in his forthcoming recording of Mahler's Second Symphony for RCA). A recipient of a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation for the furtherance of her musical career several years ago, Miss Mandac clearly seems destined for great things. Hers is a warm, seductive vocal quality that appears to be produced without effort.

The choral forces of the New England Conservatory of Music have been appearing regularly in concerts and recordings with the Boston Symphony for nearly two decades. I cannot recall a previous occasion, though, when they have so completely and satisfyingly fulfilled their musical assignment.

Finally, the reproduction is a model of clarity, balance, and massed sonority. The acetate test pressing from which I reviewed the recording contained no printed documentation concerning the technical crew responsible for the result; however, I believe the producer of the disc was Peter Delheim. He has set a high standard indeed for the Deutsche Grammophon producing team that henceforth will be recording the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Martin Bookspan

ORFF: Carmina Burana. Sherrill Milnes (baritone); Stanley Kolk (tenor); Evelyn Mandac (soprano); New England Conservatory and Children's Chorus; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa cond. RCA LSC 3161 $5.98, ® R8S 1161 $6.95.

Record Changer

Ozawa: Smudgy but Sensual

BY CRAIG PALMER
Fine Arts Staff

The same fine line that subdivides the interpretation of profane into either vulgar or sensual, separates the bad recordings of Carl Orff's cantata, "Carmina Burana," from the good.

Seiji Ozawa's new drafting (with the Boston Symphony, soloists Evelyn Mandac, Stanley Kolk, Sherrill Milnes, the New England Conservatory Chorus) gets a little smudgy on unfortunate occasions when synchronization between chorus and orchestra slips or enunciation from the chorus becomes unintelligible.

Nevertheless, seething with bold, dramatic lines, Ozawa's drawing, pagan but not barbaric, passionate, indulging, is one of the most sensual. (RCA LSC-3161)

* * *

No where in the chamber music repertoire is there a composer as amiable and lucidly conversational a house guest as Schubert.

As for chamber ensembles, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, it seems by their new release of Schubert, Milhaud and Hindemith, will not soon wear out its welcome, either.

The Schubert piano trio, opus 99, is one of his most sublime essays for intimate listening, and the players bring it to us rich and warm in color; fastidiously attentive to detail.

Milhaud's "Pastoral" is a nice sherbert before the cerebral exercise in Hindemith's Kleine Kammermusik opus 24, No. 2, on the second side. (RCA LSC-3166)

* * *

It perpetually seems that nothing in music is more sacred than J. S. Bach, himself.

And so it goes with performances of seven sacred choral works — the seven motets — by the Barmen-Gemarke Schola Cantorum and Collegium Aureum, Helmut Kahlhofer conducting. (RCA VICS-6037)

HOUSTON CHRONICLE
D. 290,584 SUN. 333,794

SEP 1 1970

'Carmina Burana'

Brilliant New Recording Made

By John Acord III

The "goliards," a group of wandering students who hung around Munich about 740 A.D., were probably the first real hippies and earned money for drinking purposes by singing bawdy songs.

The manuscript on which Carl Orff based his choral work "Carmina Burana" is taken from manuscripts left by the goliards and other strolling minesingers that were found in an ancient monastery.

Diskords With Acord

That there is more of the profane than the sacred in this text is easily explained. Carmina is the plural form of carmen, which is the Latin word for song. In Germany, carmina were student songs.

Orff has a special way of setting the ancient texts that elicit an almost physical response from the listener.

Last year one of the most successful concerts of the Oklahoma City Symphony was a performance of this exciting work.

Well, the best recorded version is the newest one under the sparkling and driving baton of the young Japanese conductor, Seiji Ozawa.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra also is given one of its most splendid recordings by RCA's engineers.

The young Philippine soprano, Evelyn Mandac, displays an exciting and pitch-perfect voice.

Sherill Milnes, in the difficult baritone role, is superb as is the short solo of tenor Stanley Kolk. Orff wrote the tenor part so high on the scale it is one of the most difficult things in all music for a male to sing.

RCA has thoughtfully included the complete text of the songs and they are artfully sung by the New England Conservatory Chorus.

This is one of the finest performances of modern music I have heard recently.

SUNDAY OKLAHOMAN
OKLA. CITY, OKLA.
Circ. 274,576

THE PLAIN DEALER
CLEVELAND, OHIO
D. 409,414 SUN. 545,032

SEP 6 1970

off the records

by emerson batdorff

Zesty 'Carmina Burana' on tap

The well-ordered frenzy of "Carmina Burana" is with us once again in a resplendent version with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston symphony, soloists and a couple of choruses.

Unexpected, you might call "Carmina Burana." It is made up mostly of vigor. It has its sweet parts, but they are not cloying. And the vigor is never harsh. It's something like a good aftershave lotion.

Carl Orff wrote the songs late in the 1930s. After he saw what he had wrought he wrote his publisher: "Destroy everything I have written up to now."

This was not done, but Orff was on the right track. He is remembered only for "Carmina Burana" and what came after. He's still alive, as far as anyone knows (he's a secretive cuss and wouldn't tell anyone about him dying) and is still able to glory in this music, but there hasn't been much word about him composing lately. He's 75.

"CARMINA Burana" is based on medieval thoughts found piled up in an old abbey in Germany. Orff caused them to be rendered into free verse and then he set them in the percussive style of which he alone is master. Even the singing is largely percussive.

Orff gets a hint of the medieval into his work, but by and large it is entirely modern, and it is the only large chunk of modern music that a number of romantics can stomach without retching.

The soloists here are Evelyn Mandac, a clear, sweet soprano; Stanley Kolk, a tenor with great verve, and Sherrill Milnes, a heroic baritone.

Too often "Carmina Burana" is presented on record without the text, to which nearly everyone will be driven by the compulsion of the music. This record RCA LSC 3161) has a fine text with the Latin or the colloquial German in which the song is sung and also the English of it.

No one should give up on modern music without hearing this. It is entirely possible to make modern music interesting and coherent.

"THE PLANETS" by Holst is an accumulation of agreeable sounds without much development but pleasant to listen to and quite likely to stir up pictures in the imagination.

On a London (SPC 210-49) record, "The Planets" gets an all-too-respectful rendering by Bernard Herrmann and the London Philharmonic. He seems to be overly impressed by the music, and the music isn't really all that significant.

As a result Herrmann is inclined to dawdle. Ideally the conductor would give it the intensity that Holst forgot when he wrote it.

The young Horowitz (1932-34) is to be heard on a Serafim (60114) record of Liszt and Schumann. He had a delicate touch then as he does now and his performance has a fine freshness.

But is there really much feeling to Liszt? Here are his Sonata in B Minor and his Funerailles, both cold and complex, requiring deterity, but not yielding to feeling. The Schumann is warmer. Arabesque, Traumeswirren and Presto Passionato.

Classical Records

Another 'Carmina Burana,' and an Orffly Good One, Too

By DON LEWIS of The Journal Staff

MENTION the name Carl Orff and pretty close to 100% of any classical music listeners within earshot will respond with "Carmina Burana." It's a natural reaction. After "Carmina" premiered at Frankfurt, Germany, in 1937, Orff soon renounced everything he had previously written.

And since "Carmina" was first performed in the United States 16 years ago, its growth in popularity has rivalled that of any other contemporary serious music. The current Schwann catalog lists seven recorded versions of the work.

Comes now the eighth, on the RCA label (LSC-3161) with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony. The soloists are soprano Evelyn Mandac, tenor Stanley Kolk and baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the choruses are those of the New England Conservatory, adult and children's groups.

"Carmina Burana" is the first of a trilogy of operas, or scenic oratorios, "Trionfi." It concerns the eating, drinking and lovemaking of sometime students and seminarians of the middle ages. Orff based his works on manuscripts found in an old monastery at Benediktbeuern in the Bavarian Alps, and the lyrics to his songs are in medieval Latin and German.

Ozawa's version has all the color, the pulsing rhythms, the excitement, that has made "Carmina" a classical hit. Its lean economy of melodic line, repeated rhythmic phrases, sensuous lyrics are joyfully set out. The conservatory singers are a fine group, and an able complement to the Boston orchestra. If you missed one of the earlier "Carminas," this one should prove a worthy addition to your collection.

* * *

RCA has broken off its 52 year association with the Boston Symphony, but that doesn't stop the parade of Boston recordings under that label. The company must have built up quite a stockpile.

Among the latest releases is an interesting disc by the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, combining works by Schubert, Milhaud and Hindemith. That's no common combination, but it works out very well.

The Schubert piece is his Trio in B flat, Opus 99, and it is followed by Milhaud's "Pastorale" and Hindemith's "Kleine Kammermusik." It's an enjoyable progression from the bouncy and bright Schubert — with an opening movement highly reminiscent of his beloved "Trout" quintet — to the brief but beautiful "Pastorale" and Hindemith's piquant little numbers for woodwind quintet.

The Boston Symphony has a wealth of fine chamber musicians, and several of them are here: Violinist Joseph Silverstein, cellist Jules Eskin and oboeist Ralph Gomberg among them. The playing, individual and as teams, is first rate. The "Pastorale," by Gomberg, clarinetist Gino Cioffi and bassoonist Sherman Walt, is much more than a buffer between Schubert and Hindemith. It's a gem all by itself.

MILWAUKEE JOURNAL
MILWAUKEE, WISC.
D. 363,795 SUN. 542,109
SEP 6 1970

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINES INC.
50 WEST 44TH STREET, NEW YORK, N.Y. 10036

Orff: Carmina Burana—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, New England Conservatory Chorus & Soloists [RCA Red Seal LSC3161].

Ozawa: a rouser

If you're looking for a recording to show off your hi-fi/stereo system sensationally, then look no further. This is it. For one of the Boston Symphony's final recordings on the RCA label (it switches this fall to Deutsche Grammophon after more than 50 years with RCA), RCA's engineers – headed by Bernard Keville – have come through with as crisply brilliant, clean, full-bodied, and distortion-free (especially in loud passages) sound as the Bostonians have ever enjoyed. Orff's Carmina Burana, of course, is a brilliant showpiece to begin with – full of blazing brass and biting percussive effects, full-blooded choral sections, and alternately lusty and tender sections for orchestra and vocal soloists. Written in the 1930's, its hedonistic text (based mostly on the love poems and drinking songs of defrocked medieval monks) may be morally debatable (if not outright offensive to many), but there is no denying the impact or appeal of the music – which is why it has become one of the most widely popular of relatively recent scores. Ozawa gives it a rousing performance – electric in its excitement and rhythmic pulse, if not always as subtle as Fruhbeck de Burgos' splendid 1966 performance [Angel 36333]. The soloists – Sherrill Milnes, Stanley Kolk, and especially Philippine-born Evelyn Mandac – are all outstanding. Musically and sonically, this is a real blockbuster.

— ROY HEMMING

GARDENA VALLEY, CAL.
NEWS
3 TI. a WEEK 37,538 COMB.
CIRC. OF ALL EDITIONS
SEP 10 1970

The record rack

Classical music comes wrapped in mod style for new audience

By JOE ROBERTS

Newsweek Magazine recently reported that the American classical recording industry is in big trouble:

"The crisis has been building quietly for nearly a decade as Mozart and Bach have lost ground steadily to other longhairs like the Beatles and the Stones."

And as if that weren't enough, the article quotes a spokesman for the world's largest recording company (EMI-Angel) as saying: "There will be a total collapse of the American classical recording system within five years unless someone figures out a more economic one."

Appeal to kids

Some record companies have answered this clarion call with an almost too simple solution—create classical albums that appeal to the largest record-buying segment of the population: the kids.

One way, say some recording company executives, is to package the records in sexy, "now generation" (whatever that means) covers. Naked, voluptuous bunnies as well as handsomely endowed coupples can be found adorning album covers of Mozart, Beethoven and Brahms. Few, obviously, reflect the music inside.

Pictorial exception

One exception is RCA Victor's "Carmina Burana," whose cover features a pop-art couple, the man firmly grasping the woman's exposed breast. The liner headline boasts: "Wandering students who spent their days and nights singing, drinking, making love and praising all these pleasures in earthy poetry."

Happily, Carl Orff's music—brilliantly conducted by the young Japanese virtuoso, Seiji Ozawa with the Boston Symphony Orchestra (RCA Victor 3161)—doesn't let the voyeur down. This dynamic pean to the profane joys of wine, women and song is indeed vigorous, earthy music.

And Ozawa performs the music as well as anyone I've heard. The reproduction is clear and pure, and Ozawa's supporting cast—Baritone Sherill Milnes, Tenor Stanley Kolk, Soprano Evelyn Munda and the New England Conservatory of Music chorus—is excellent, especially the superb voice of Baritone Milnes.

Musical terms

Another admirable attempt to attract a broader buying public for classical music is done not only in packaging, but also in highly musical terms. It is "The Naked Carmen," a pop-rock-classical electronic circus billed as an "Electric Rock Opera" (Mercury SRM I-604).

The concept uses Bizet's well known tunes to weave a network of sounds that should amuse and probably confuse any audience, young or old.

It's almost impossible to sum up the album. Much of it is fresh and funny; too much is trite and melodramatic.

Mixing of styles

But who really can complain about a record that utilizes the Moog Synthesizer, the Detroit Symphony Orchestra conducted by Paul Paray, "Hair" singer Melba Moore as both Carmen and Micaela, opera singer William Walker as Escamillo, Mary Bruce and her Starburds as the children's chorus (or rather the "Universal Military Bubblegum Band"), and on it goes, a nightmarish mixing of pop and classical styles somehow tied together by writer-producers John Corigliano (classical) and David Hess (pop-rock).

Highlights for this reviewer: Don Jose's overly sentimental "Flowurie Song" appropriately sounding like a scratchy old 78 record; the smug roughness of "Playing the Game" (Toreador Song); Miss Moore's sizzling "Habanera," dressed up as a mild protest song out of "Hair" ("When Love Is Free"), and her renditions of "Time" (Micaela's song) and "The Tarot Dealer" (The Card Song); the overwhelming Requiem montage at the end, and Hess' Rod McKuen-like recurring "Faces Are The Same" that attempts to give the whole thing some continuity.

Surprise transform

And if that isn't enough, it is said that the album—a fantasmagorical package—can be transformed into the "Naked Carmen Electronic Spanish Cigar Box Guitar, Light Show and Sound Sculpture." Wow!

If this is the way to salvage the classical record industry—and it just might be—I'm not quite sure if it's going to be worth it.

For the purists—are there any left?—there is the much more preferable Carmen highlights available in convenient cassette form (Ampex-London X 31104) featuring Regina Resnik, or any of three complete operas—either featuring Leontyne Price (RCA Victor 6165), Rise Stevens (RCA Victor monaural LM 6102) or Victoria de los Angeles (Angel S-3613).

Commercial package

Less critical listeners will be satisfied with orchestral excerpts included on the overly commercial package, "Bizet's Greatest Hits" (Columbia cassette 16-11-0128).

Mezzo-soprano Christa Ludwig would seem to make a fine Carmen, but her scenes are sung in German and the harshness of the Teutonic tongue seems rather heavy-handed.

"The Greatest Hits" series seems to be another way of packaging for a mass audience. Any serious classical music listener will find such an arrangement annoying at best. Still, some of the albums, like the Bizet collection, are well put together.

Composer's concept

It depends a good deal on the composer—did he or didn't he anticipate a hit parade concept? Edward Grieg did. "Grieg's Greatest Hits" (Columbia open reel tape, MQ 1105) is a good sampling featuring Conductor George Szell's impressive handling of "Peer Gynt Suite No. 1." Mendelssohn fares well in an album too (Columbia cassette 16-11-0125) that includes Pianist Rudolf Serkin's poetic reading of two lovely songs.

Also "Copland's Greatest Hits" Columbia cassette 16-11-0138) contains Conductor Leonard Bernstein's excellent versions of "Appalachian Spring" and "El Salon Mexico."

Not recommended because they simply defy the hit parade concept are "Greatest Hits" by Beethoven (Columbia open reel MQ 1104) and a badly put together Mozart (Columbia cassette 16-11-0108).

SYOSSET, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND COMMERCIAL REVIEW
D. 8,500
SEP 17 1970

DISC-COURSE

Choice Prokofiev Recordings

by BOB BERNSTEIN

PROKOFIEV: Symphony No. 2. Lieutenant Kije Suite. David Clatworthy, baritone. Boston Symphony Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor LSC-3061

PROKOFIEV: Symphony No. 3. Scythian Suite. Boston Symphony. Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor-2934

PROKOVIEV: Music from Romeo & Juliet. Boston Symphony. Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor LSC-2994

PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto Nos. 3 & 4. John Browning, piano. Boston Symphony. Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor LSC-3019

PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto No. 5. John Browning, piano. WEILL: Music from "The Three Penny Opera". Boston Symphony Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RVA Victor LSC-3121

With its release of the Browning versions of Piano Concertos 3, 4, and 5, RCA Victor completes its Boston Symphony-Leinsdorf-Browning cycle of all the Prokofiev piano concerti. A master of the objective, impersonal whiz-bang delivery, Browning is perhaps the ideal keyboard interpreter of these works, while the elegant Boston Symphony gives him a marvelous and sonorous orchestral framework for his scintillating effects. Browning has plenty of competition from other quarters in the third concerto (Argerich, Cliburn, Graffman, Petrov and Janis), but he need yield pride of place to none. Richter is perhaps more lyrical in his DGG recording of the 5th concerto, but Richter doesn't get around the keys with more finesse than Browning. A special dividend in RCA's offering is a stupendous performance of the Kurt Weill orchestral suite from The Three Penny Opera. Leinsdorf is amazingly mercurial here, witty, as sharp as Mack the Knife himself. No finer edition of the "3 Penny" orchestral excerpts exists. In releasing Leinsdorf's interpretations of the Prokofiev second and third symphonies, RCA moves closer to the completion of its integral Prokofiev symphonic survey under Leinsdorf's baton. Astute as Leinsdorf is, and despite the Boston's history as a "Prokofiev" orchestra first established during Koussevitsky's regime, Leinsdorf is not as comfortable or as idiomatic with the Prokofiev scores as, for example, Rozhdestvensky in his Melodiya-Angel versions of the Prokofiev 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th symphonies which are knowing in the extreme, sympathetic to Prokofiev's intent to a degree that is almost slavish, but beautifully so, and warmly human which Leinsdorf's recreations are not. In the Leinsdorf-Boston unfoldings we get icy brilliance, technical fire (but no corporeal heat!), and stunning sonics. (Rozhdestvensky somehow manages with a less virtuosic orchestra to convey the tremulous poetry and unfaltering lyrical impulse that is Prokofiev at his best. Thus one must advise the record buyer to turn to Melodiya-Angel for Prokofiev's symphonic output. The Romeo and Juliet ballet extracts are beautifully played, but not felt by Leinsdorf quite as deeply and lovingly as they deserve.

LOS ANGELES EVENING & SUNDAY
HERALD EXAMINER
D. 540,793 SUN. 520,466
SEP 13 1970

CLASSICAL RECORD REVIEWS

Colorful 'Carmina Burana'; Impressive G-Major Sextet

By KAREN MONSON
Herald-Examiner Staff Writer

It's Labor Day at the time of writing, and the summer is over. It's a day for relaxation and fun. So, departing from the admittedly more informative format of reviewing records that are, in some way or another, related to each other, I'm giving myself a treat. I'm going through the stacks of recent classical releases, listening self-indulgently to what I want to listen to, and the devil take organization. The purpose is pure entertainment. The results will undoubtedly be motley.

●

Seiji Ozawa conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New England Conservatory Chorus and Children's Chorus and soloists in what may be the longest version of Carl Orff's CARMINA BURANA in recent history on RCA (LSC-3161). The performance just barely makes it onto one record. Not to say that all of Ozawa's tempos are slow—when the spirit and energy are absolutely needed, he summons them. But in the work's more lyrical sections the conductor lets the music languish sensuously, frequently with fine results. This is not the definitive "Carmina Burana."; it ultimately lacks intestinal fortitude—still, it is interesting and colorful. The choruses are fine, and the soloists handle their assignments excellently. Evelyn Mandac, who appeared in the Mahler Second at the Bowl this season under Krips, is the soprano; Stanley Kolk, tenor, and Sherrill Milnes, baritone, complete the forces.

●

Also on RCA (Victorola—VIC-1510), the Boston Symphony of 20 years ago, under Koussevitzky, when the orchestra was at its legendary zenith. It was, no doubt about it, a spectacular ensemble, particularly well adapted for the matter at hand: Sibelius' SYMPHONY NO. 2, Op. 43. This recording was made in November of 1950, seven months before the conductor's death, and the performance deserves to be rereleased again and again. The sound, considering all the electronic processes it must have been through by this time, is still brilliant, and the orchestra is as technically unanimous and flexible as one could want. Koussevitzky conducts the Symphony with warmth and passion, with a feeling for the beams and columns that hold up the musical structure and for the smaller, florid designs around the edges. There are other good recordings of Sibelius' Second Symphony but there is none that's better.

●

Chamber music hath charm for operafile

By Tom Villella

If there is one thing the dyed-in-the-wool operaphile will ordinarily ignore — it's chamber music. I did it for years. Symphonies, piano and violin concertos — all such pieces found space next to the five complete "Aidas," "Traviatas," and 27 Caruso LPs. But chamber music? Not on my monophonic talking machine.

I like to think my musical tastes have matured since those early days when Puccini and Verdi were, for me, the beginning and the end.

Today, the fresh, cool strains of Carl Nielsen's Woodwind Quintet, backed by Franz Berwald's Septet for Strings and Winds, offer a treasure of relaxed sounds. And when played by the Melos Ensemble of London, you'll want to sink in your favorite chair, light your pipe, and let the world with its political scandals, its rioting youth and its monstrous fury simply — HANG. Angel S-36538.

Alexander Borodin's String Quartet is loaded with melodies made more famous by the musical "Kismet." Such gems as "Baubles, Bangles and Beads," and "This Is My Beloved," are heard in all their gentle original settings on Deutsche Grammophon 139 425. The flip side, also rendered with a fine sense of give and take by the Drolc Quartet, is the melancholy String Quartet No. 1 by the master of gloom — Peter Tchaikovsky. Sound: Splendid.

Here's a tip for the tired, bone-weary homemaker wondering where her strength is going to come from. Try the "Cantabile" from this work. Its peaceful melody will give the strength to face anything or anyone.

Only the seasoned chamber music addict could be expected to find that Boston Symphony Chamber Players' three-disc cross-section of that particular art entrancing. In a specially-priced RCA Victor package, the music lover can journey through Schubert "The Trout," Brahms' "Piano Trio," Poulenc's "Sextet" and less interesting pieces by Webern, Martinu and Dhal. Performances: si, si. Sound: natural. LSC-6189.

CHAMBER MUSIC POTPOURRI: Three LPs on DGG's list show a variety of styles and musical ideas. Rossini's Sonatas for Strings Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 6, are real ear-openers — if you are expecting echoes of "Figaro, Figaro," somewhere in his composition. Sorry, no soap. Herbert von Karajan and his Berlin Philharmonic are spirited enough — but this conductor and Rossini?

Mozart's String Quartets K. 575 and 590 ask only that you lose yourself in their tonalities for complete relaxation. A fine effort of the Amadeus Quartet on DDG 139 437.

Schoenberg's String Piece No. 2, Op. 10, with soprano soloist Evelyn Lear is a disappointment — to me. Sorry, not in the class of the other DGG issues commented upon here. Modernists, get out your poison pens — this work turns me off — completely. DGG 139 361.

The Cleveland Press
D. 393,191
SEP 25 1970

DGG Bows First LPs By Boston Symphony

Deutsche Grammophon is kicking off its association with the Boston Symphony with the release of three albums this week. The performances, which were taped in Boston's Symphony Hall last sprin, mark DGG's entry into the classical field with its first American recording group.

Boston Symphony and its associated Boston Pops were signed by DGG last year, ending a 50-year association with RCA Records.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W.-CIRC. N. AVAIL.
SEP 2? 1970

NEW REPUBLIC
WASHINGTON, D. C.
W. 120,000

Boston Symphony 5454

Music

SEP 26 1970

Bad Music News from Madison, Wisconsin

5454

The classical record business in this country is in trouble, for a variety of reasons that were not touched on in a recent two-page spread in Newsweek.

Speaking as a harassed record-store clerk I must report a great deal wrong with the product of the business that's in trouble.

The Newsweek piece quotes a department-store record buyer as saying that sales of Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings are down because people do not want to buy German records. This can hardly be the case, since no B.S.O. recordings have been released on D.G.G. yet. Besides, any experienced record store clerk knows that customers ask for D.G.G. records by label, because the German pressings themselves are almost always flawless, while R.C.A. Red Seal hasn't put out a fine product for years. The reason Herbert van Karajan is the most oversold conductor of the century is because of the fine German engineering; by contrast, a few years ago, at a time when record buyers were investing in good high-fidelity playback equipment as never before, R.C.A. decided to engineer its recordings especially for its own department-store low fidelity consoles. They called it Dynagroove, and it was a large flop, with its muddy bass, muffled mid-range, and absent highs. More recent R.C.A. records do not carry the Dynagroove legend on the covers, but the engineering still isn't as good as it was in the early days of stereo.

More recent R.C.A. pressings, as well as other American-made records, are defective from the pressing plants more often than not. The Newsweek article complains that the R.C.A. recording of Elliot Carter's piano concerto (LSC-3001) has sold less than 5,000 copies since its release two years ago. At least two people on the staff at Discount Records, in Madison, Wisconsin, have been waiting the whole two years for a decent copy of the record. I sold a copy the other day to a young lady who was delighted to find the number in stock; the next day, she brought it back, heartbroken. She couldn't stand the surface noise. Since it is the only available recording of the piece, Mr. Carter is losing royalties.

- A lovely Tchaikovsky record by the Chamber Orchestra of Philadelphia (LSC-3020) and a Rimsky-Korsakoff 'Antar' symphony, coupled with an interesting piece by the obscure twentieth-century Russian Miaskovsky, conducted by Morton Gould (LSC-3022) have been available for a couple of years, but have not been found by rankled record buyers in editions free from defects. The Tchaikovsky disc, while still listed in Schwann, has actually been dropped from R.C.A.'s list, probably because of poor sales.
- More recently, the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy has recorded for R.C.A. the Mahler first symphony, complete with the beautiful 'Blumine' movement (LSC-3107) and the Shostakovich thirteenth symphony, 'Babi Yar,' with poems by Yevtushenko. (LSC-3162). These records have both received good reviews, but the sales figures are disappointing. Neither record has been available without the irritating surface noise. The reviewers, incidentally, rarely complain about the defects, leading one to conclude that they do not care about such things, or perhaps that they receive specially selected copies of the records.
- The Guarneri Quartet has recorded for R.C.A. two-thirds of the Beethoven string quartets; these recordings are available in two half-priced sets. As concert-goers know, the Guarneri's playing is elegant and superlovely; these sets (VCS-6415, 6418) should be good sellers, especially at the low prices, but they are not. The earlier of the two sets has been available for several years; all the copies of both sets have been afflicted with R.C.A.'s special noise. R.C.A., however is not the only offender.
- Westminster, which during the early fifties was one of the most prestigious of the independent classical companies, has under contract the popular soprano Beverly Sills. Her recital records sell fairly well, but her complete recording of Donizetti's Roberto Devereux has been a comparative bomb. Vocal fans are a breed apart, and will listen to their favorite singers under almost any circumstances; nevertheless, I have had customers who register great disappointment and refuse to buy the records when they find out that they are Westminsters. The Westminster recording of Beethoven's Fidelio, featuring Jan Peerce, conducted by Hans Knuappertsbusch, and recorded in good stereo sound, sells at a very special price – when it sells at all. The records are absolutely horrible.
- Philips-Norelco of Holland, one of today's international record companies, had such trouble with its manufacturing operation in this country that it had to throw in the towel, and now imports pressings from Holland, which are as fine as Deutsche Grammophon's, if not better. Last Christmas, many copies of the Colin Davis complete Handel Messiah were sold in domestic Philips pressings; as many as half of them were returned to dealers defective. Domestic Philips pressings still in the stores are avoided by customers as if they were rotten fruit, but at Discount in Madison we have already sold a dozen copies of the new Davis recording of the Berlioz opera The Trojans, a sumptuous, expensive five-record set, in flawless imported pressings. And we've only had it in stock for a week.
- Connoisseur Society, a respectable little operation out of New York, records the fascinating Czech pianist Ivan Moravec, as well as Flamenco guitarist Manitas de Platas, and others. This company goes to great lengths to capture the most realistic piano sound on records, and then apparently manufactures the records out of old poker chips. Every copy of Moravac's Beethoven sonata recordings, as well as his Chopin discs, which may be the best performances on records, are plagued with surface noise. We haven't sold any copies of his new Mozart record at all.

RCA's noise sounds like eggs frying in the background, and is loud enough to drown out quiet portions of the music. It is as if the records were purposely pressed with dust already in the grooves. American records in general are afflicted with all manner of pops and snicks; these sound like scratches, but are invisible to the naked inspecting eye. One of the steps in the transfer from master tape to disc is supposed to be the careful inspection by microscope of the metal-plated "mother," and the removal of defects by means of tiny tools. Apparently, either the record companies are skimping here on quality control, or the negative "stampers" (made from the "mothers") are being carelessly handled on their way to the pressing machines. Another common defect is sides pressed off center. This can be the most irritating defect of all, since it results in a wavery pitch when the record is played. To deepen the mystery, R.C.A., Westminster, and Domestic Philips all have their own low-priced lines (Victrola, Music Guild, and World Series, respectively), and while these lines are not free from problems, they are usually better than the full-priced records.

Westminster is now a part of ABC-Paramount, many of whose popular records (Bluesway, Impulse, etc.) are similarly plagued with problems, but pop buyers complain less.

None of this is necessary. Chuck Nessa, of Madison, operates a little record company out of his basement; he has issued two very interesting avant-garde modern jazz recordings on his Nessa label. He has the records pressed in a little plant in Arizona, where he pays a dime more per disc for his product. But he has had 1000 copies of each release pressed, and he has not had one defective copy returned. This pressing plant reportedly spends most of its time pressing recordings of high-school recitals; it is possible to hear Johnny Jones playing some etude on a flawless pressing but not Ivan Moravec.

There are some grounds for cautious optimism. I have been corresponding with the president of a small classical company about the sound of some older re-mastered recordings; this gentleman's response to my complaints has been gratifying. Whether or not the correspondence will bear fruit in the form of better records remains to be seen, but this executive seems to be happy to get any kind of consumer response at all. It can't hurt to write letters. Perhaps more important is the introduction lately of some lightweight records by R.C.A. In an apparent effo.t to save money on vinyl, this company is making records almost as skinny as post-cards. Consumer reaction so far is vaguely negative, but more important than getting cheated out of some plastic is the fact that these records seem to have very good surfaces.

In the meantime, however, the domestic companies are losing sales to D.G.G., Telefunken, and several other European labels. London records sell better than Angels to customers in the know, because London's classical line is still pressed in England. When an imported record is defective, the next copy is likely to be a good one; when a domestic record is defective, the whole press run is likely to have the same defect. This is nothing but poor quality control.

Donald M. Clarke

Three Great Violin Concertos. Heifetz (violin) with the Chicago Symphony under Reiner (Tchaikovsky and Brahms) and the Boston Symphony under Munch (Mendelssohn). 4 sides, RCA VCS 7058. $13.96. This album of reissues includes the Tchaikovsky, Brahms, and Mendelssohn concertos performed by the most highly esteemed violinist of our day. Though Heifetz offers intensity, excitement, silken tone, and very nearly perfect execution, on the debit side he exhibits a tendency toward glibness and fast playing, particularly in the Mendelssohn. One marvels at these performances, yet there are other violinists well worth hearing, too. Conductors Reiner and Munch were extraordinary collaborators

CONSUMER BULLETIN
WASHINGTON, N. J.
MONTHLY
OCT 1970

The Music Beat

By KALLE VALDMA

THE SUN
BALTIMORE, MD.
(MORNING)
D. 180,656 SUN. 347,939
SEP 27 1970

WITH the release of Seiji Ozawa's version with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, we now find ourselves in an enviable position as far as choice is concerned. By "we" I mean those unabashed and fearless fans of the orgiastic, sometimes banal, rhythmically exciting, tonally ravishing, and always interesting Carmina Burana by Carl Orff. In alphabetical order of conductor, these are the versions of the Carminae that I have been able to get hold of for purposes of comparison: Rafael Frunbeck de Burgos and the New Philharmonia Chorus and Orchestra (Angel 36333), Eugen Jochum and the Bavarian Radio Orchestra and Chorus (Decca DL 9706—no longer in the catalogue), Jochum and the Berlin Opera Orchestra and Chorus, (DGG 139362), Herbert Kegel and the Chorus and Orchestra of Radio Leipzig (Heliodor HS-25004), Eugene Ormandy and the Rutgers University Choir and Philadelphia Orchestra (Columbia MS-6163), Seiji Ozawa with the New England Conservatory Chorus and the Boston Symphony (RCA LSC-3161) Vaclav Smetacek and the Czech Singers Chorus and the Czech Philharmonic Orchestra (Parliament PLP 161), and finally Leopold Stokowski and the Houston Symphony Orchestra and Chorale. I regret that I was not able to scare up a copy by Orff himself, nor have I ever heard his version.

✡

AS SPACE does not permit and documentation can be found elsewhere, I will merely point out that Carmina Burana is a collection of worldly songs (Cantione Profanae) from the Benediktbeuern Monastery located somewhere in the Bavarian Alps. These were orchestrated by Mr. Carl Orff in original settings for a group composed of Symphony Orchestra, Men's, Women's, Children's and Mixed Choruses, Soprano, Baritone, Countertenor, two pianos and various percussion instruments including the glockenspiel. The work is in three main parts, In Springtime, In the Tavern, and the Court of Love in that order, preceded and concluded by a rousing section called Fortune, Empress of the World. There are so many facets to consider in these performances that a final choice will depend on those aspects that the listener finds most important. Since this is mainly a choral work, the prime essential is, of course, a good choral and orchestral combination infused with just the proper tempi from the conductor.

The introductory Fortuna Imperatrix Mundi sets the pace and as such will either lure the listener on or turn him off, so to speak. The interpretations range from slow and majestic a la Burgos and Ormandy, through medium such as Kegel and Jochum-Decca to a more bouncy and lively tempo as exhibited by Jochum-DGG, Ozawa, Smetacek, and finally at too urgent a speed for my liking, the Stokowski. The chorus that Burgos has at his command is perhaps the winner in the evenness and power department while Ozawa's is lively and Ormandy's enunciates exceedingly well.

✡

LET ME diverge and look at the soloists next. The tenor has little to do in terms of amount of material, but that which he has is indeed formidable, encompassing, as it does a range suited to the countertenor. All these recordings, to my knowledge, utilize just a plain, ordinary type of tenor, singing falsetto, to make the feat even more hair-raising. The part in question is the Song of the Roasted Swan: 'O miserable me! Now I'm roasted black!'

In relistening to all these versions I came more and more to the conclusion that almost all these performances had something to offer that was unique, Paul Kuen with Jochum-Decca, powerful and accurate, as was Petrak with Ormandy, Kolk with Ozawa, the spontaneous, pure voice of Rotsch with Kegel and the very expressive and tragic sound of Jaroslav Tomanek with the Czech group. The nod must go to Gerhard Stolze, however, on the Jochum-DGG version, as he seems to be the one who has most closely experienced the plight of a roasted cygnet about to be served. Unfortunately, the chorus on this version does not match the tenor as it does on any of the Ozawa, Burgos or Ormandy issues.

The soprano part is of utmost importance, the m requirements being those of utter femininity and intonational accuracy, as the latter shows up with the utmost clarity in the softer passages. Virginia Babikian is quite fine but has a slightly throaty quality which just misses the mark in her collaboration with Stokowski. Jutta Vulpius (Kegel) is slightly forced in her accentuation, as is Miss Janice Harsanyi on Columbia. Subrtova (Smetacek), Trotschel (Jochum-Decca) and Janowitz (Jochum-DGG) are just sufficiently off key to make it slightly irritating. Miss Evelyn Mandac (Ozawa) sounds very pure and virginal. Lucia Popp with de Burgos takes top honors, however, as she sounds, as the songs would seem to require, ever so sexy in a very sweet, pure way that cannot help but appeal.

✡

OF ALL the baritones present, the most distinguished is probably Dietrich-Fischer-Dieskau on DGG. He always seems spontaneous and in full control and impeccable in tune. Unfortunately, he spoils the most important part, for me at any rate, by doing a version of Der Rattenfanger on the solo part of Tempus est Iucondum (Pleasant is the Season) and forcing some unpleasant accentuations on the part in question. I prefer the beautiful job done by Harve Presnell and Ormandy, the voice being less spectacular, but the phrasing and tempo are perfect. Sherrill Milnes and Ozawa are also excellent here though much more deliberate while Theodor Srubar with Smetacek seems a half tone flat.

It is very difficult to make a choice as nearly every issue has something to recommend it, while even the best ones have drawbacks. The older Jochum recording on Decca shows its age sonically and has a rather closed-in sound on the chorus while the newer one on DGG is excellently recorded but again the group sounds restricted. The Parliament with Smetacek has beautiful sound but some of the soloists are rather weak, especially the baritone.

My personal preferences boil down to the Burgos, Ormandy and Ozawa performances as exhibiting probably the most favorable combinations of tempi, good instrumental and choral work, coupled with the sonic perfection that is most necessary in a work of this sort. Despite some imperfections in the solo parts the Ormandy version remains for me the most exciting, even and cerebral, if that is relevant, of the three. However, since all the aforementioned recordings are now in my private library, I can enjoy any of their assets at will, and will not have to make the formidable choice that faces the new devotee on his next trip to the nearest record outlet.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.
BNAI BRITH MESSENGER
W. 50,800
OCT 2 1970

New Records

Ozawa Flubs 'Carmina Burana'

By FLORESTAN CROCHE

Many major American orchestras, because of the deaths or impending retirements of their musical directors, are looking for conductors. Orchestral seasons across the country have been characterized by parades of visiting maestros, most of them young and glamorous, and each exhibiting his abilities in a repertory best suited to his temperament.

In terms of the ensuing standards of performance the artistic results in this period of transition have been at best haphazard. To be sure, there is always an air of expectation and excitement in awaiting the evaluation of a new and relatively untried young musical personality; but there are also stylistic and mechanical perils—and nowhere are such inadequacies of performance more starkly revealed than in phonograph records.

An interesting case in point is the recent reading of Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana" as performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Seiji Ozawa. Other participants in the RCA release are Evelyn Mandac, soprano; Sherrill Milnes, baritone; Stanley Kokl, tenor, and the New England Conservatory Chorus (Orff, "Carmina Burana," RCA Victor, LSC 3161).

Mr. Ozawa is, of course, a dynamic musical personality, who during the past few years has appeared constantly before the most illustrious orchestras in this country. He has already enjoyed a number of periods of musical directorship—in Toronto and Ravinia.

Last summer he shared the artistic directorship of the Tanglewood Festival, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Gunther Schuller, and he was recently selected as one of the conductors to accompany Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic on its tour of apan.

Frequently his name is mentioned as the possible successor to Erich LLeinsdorf as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A record such as this release of "Carmina Burana" could be interpreted as an important barometer of musical taste an d potential achievement. It is particularly regrettable, therefore, to report that on both counts it is a disappointing accomplishment.

"Carmina Burana" is a powerful, rhythmically and orchestrally colorful work. With Mr, Ozawa's dynamic and romantic instincts and his ability to handle passages of metrical and theatrical inteasity with flair, it might have been thought that this would be music ideal for his conductorial gifts—and ideal for the characteristics of crystalline clarity for whichthe Bosto Symphony Orchestra is famed.

There are many moments of excitement and displays of dramatic overtness, but surprisingly—in a score which is so unproblematical—there is much inaccuracy. The trumpets frequently sound raucous, and the percussion is over exploited, emerging in a plodding and heavy-handed manner.

The chorus sound is frequently faulty in terms of intonation, and uneven in texture. Only the three soloists acquit themselves with the smoothness and elan traditionally associated with performances of tis great orchestra.

Perhaps in their attempt to exploit the boxoffice appeal of Mr. Ozawa, RCA permitted this disc to be released tooo soon. In view of his musical potentialities, perhaps more time should have been given Mr. Ozawa.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.
SEP 26 1970

Sibelius: Symphony No. 2. Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Victrola mono, VIC 1510, $2.98.

The quality of this performance, familiar during the years of Koussevitzky's directorship of the Boston Symphony, was something to anticipate, and the actuality justified the anticipation. It is spacious but not sprawling, taut but not rigid, expressive without being over-expansive—in short, a living likeness of the Koussevitzky insight at its best. What could not be anticipated was the surprising likeness of the great orchestra's sound that is conveyed from Symphony Hall. Identification of the date of origin as November 29, 1950, means that the sound is no longer undiluted Koussevitzky, for Munch succeeded him in 1948, and changes were not slow in coming. If this is the price that must be paid for a relatively recent example of Koussevitzky-Boston collaboration, it is well worth the slight dilution of authenticity. The music making is decidedly his own, and more fully reproduced than in most prior reissues.

Deutsche Grammophon Bows First Boston Symphony Disks

NEW YORK — Deutsche Grammophon, Polydor's classical label, announces issue of its premiere albums with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The initial release, consisting of three disks, represents many "firsts" for those involved.

The performances were taped last spring in Boston's Symphony Hall, and mark Deutsche Grammophon's American recording debut, as well as the first with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under their new exclusive recording contract with the label.

A quartet of award-winning engineers, headed by producer Karl Faust, were flown in from Europe. Though the actual taping was done in the United States, the master tapes were immediately flown to Europe for editing, after which the artists approved the final versions.

The recording engineer for the sessions was Günter Hermanns; Rainer Brock supervised artistic matters. Both were assisted by Joachim Niss.

The first session was conducted by a Deutsche Grammophon exclusive artist, Italy's young Claudio Abbado. Though a stranger neither to the Boston Symphony nor to Deutsche Grammophon and its engineers (he went to the Vienna Conservatory with Rainer Brock), this was his initial American recording date. Abbado selected Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2" and "Pavane for a Dead Princess," along with Debussy's Three Nocturnes: "Fêtes," "Nuages" and "Sirénes." The Boston Symphony Orchestra was joined by the New England Conservatory Chorus.

The second set of sessions was conducted by the 25-year-old, Hollywood-born Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Michael Tilson Thomas. For his recording debut as conductor, Thomas chose to direct the works of two major American composers not previously represented on the Deutsche Grammophon label. The young conductor offers Ives and Ruggles via "Three Places in New England" and "Sun-Treader."

For the third release, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players present Debussy in the three sonatas and "Syrinx."

To herald the release of these first Boston Symphony albums, Deutsche Grammophon has set a heavy advertising and promotion campaign.

Polydor Prexy Jerry Schoenbaum (left) chats with Goody's Sam Stolon (center) and Polydor National Sales Manager Sid Love at Deutsche Grammophon's screening of sales promo film, "An Edition is Born." Color short was shown at a cocktail party last week at St. Moritz Roof Garden to kick off "Beethoven Edition 1970" sales campaign and to introduce dealers and promotional people to the 75-record, 12-volume bi-centennial set that sells for $299.50, along with the bonus book, "Ludwig van Beethoven."

RECORD WORLD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 13,000

OCT 3 1970

DEBUTS: Deutsche Grammophon has just released its first three recordings with the Boston Symphony Orchestra . . . taped last spring in Boston's Symphony Hall, they mark the company's American recording debut and the first with the orchestra under a new exclusive contract. Claudio Abbado conducts the Debussy Nocturnes and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2 and Favane for a Dead Princess . . . Michael Tilson Thomas (his recording debut too) leads Ives' Three Places in New England and Ruggles' Sun-Treader . . . Thomas also plays piano on the third release of four pieces by Debussy for cello, viola, flute, harp and piano.

WOMEN'S WEAR DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 63,818

OCT 12 1970

3 Boston Symphony Sets Mark 1st Deutsche Grammophon U.S. Sessions

NEW YORK — Deutsche Grammophon has marketed its first three recordings with the Boston Symphony, marking the German label's first American sessions.

The sessions, debuting the orchestra under its exclusive contract with the classical arm of Polydor, Inc., were made in Boston Symphony Hall last spring under the direction of four engineers, headed by Karl Faust, who were flown in from Europe. Though taped in the U. S., mastering, processing and pressing were done in Germany, after which the artists approved the final versions.

The sets include Italian conductor Claudio Abbado's versions of Ravel's Daphnis & Chloe, Suite No. 2 and Pavane for a Dead Princess, along with Debussy's Three Nocturnes (Fetes, Nuages and Sirenes); Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony offers Ives and Ruggles "Three Places in New England" and Sun-Treader, respectively (a second Thomas set is planned for early next year); and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players offer three Debussy sonatas and Syrinx.

Big Push For Sets

To launch the release of these first Boston Symphony albums, Deutsche Grammophon has set a heavy advertising and promotion campaign. A limited number of advance test pressings were made available for premiere programming to radio stations in major market areas: New York, Chicago, Boston, Los Angeles, Cleveland, Washington, San Francisco, Detroit, Philadelphia and Houston. With the official release of the albums, copies will be sent to an extensive group of additional radio stations in these and other areas for immediate programming.

Special attention wil be given the Ives/Ruggles disk with Michael Tilson Thomas through underground radio and press.

Advertising will be prominent, and ads are already beginning to appear in October issues of High Fidelity, Stereo Review, Schwann and American Record Guide and the November Coast FM and the Arts. Program advertising will be placed in Boston and Providence with follow-up in New York City and on tour, as well as for the Tanglewood summer season. The orchestra will tour Europe this spring, with the cooperation of Deutsche Grammophon.

A promotional mailing is being prepared to alert subscribers and friends of the orchestra to the new affiliation, and posters and easel backs of the album jackets are being printed for point-of-sale and Symphony Hall display.

Promotional material may be ordered through Polydor Incorporated's creative services department, classical division. Orders for merchandise are now being accepted by Deutsche Grammophon's national sales manager, Sid Love.

The three recordings will be available through Polydor Incorporated on disc, MusiCassette and 8-Track cartridge. Open reel versions of the orchestra works only are available from Ampex/Deutsche Grammophon.

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 16,000

OCT 3 1970

DGG Plans Large-Scale Drive On 1st Boston Symphony LP's

NEW YORK — Deutsche Grammophon Records plans an extensive promotion and advertising campaign for its first three albums with the Boston Symphony, which are slated for mid-October release.

Special attention will be given to an album conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas, the 25-year-old associate conductor of the orchestra. The set pairs Ives' "Three Places in New England" and Ruggles' "Sun-Treader," the first appearances by those American conductors on DGG.

Thomas also plays piano in a Debussy chamber music LP, which also features cellist Jules Eskin, flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, violist Burton Fine, harpist Ann Hobson and violinist Joseph Silverstein. The third pressing couples Debussy and Ravel with Claudio Abaddo conducting. The New England Conservatory Chorus also performs on this disk.

The performers were taped last spring in Boston's Symphony with a quartet of engineers, headed by producer Karl Faust, flown in from Europe. The taping was done in the U.S., but the tapes were flown to Europe for editing, mastering and processing.

Consumer and trade advertising are planned as well as radio spots. Program advertising in Boston, Providence, New York and Tanglewood also is scheduled. The Boston will tour Europe this spring with DGG's cooperation.

Promotional material may be ordered through Polydor Incorporated's Creative Services Department, Classical Division. Orders for merchandise are now being accepted by Sid Love, DGG's national sales manager.

The three recordings will be available on disk, cassette and 8-track tape cartridge. Open reel versions of the orchestral works only can be obtained from Ampex Deutsche Grammophon.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 24,000

OCT 3 1970

Look What Happened To Ozawa!

RECORDS

ORFF: Carmina Burana (RCA)

Despite endless put-downs by the snobbish, this "Scenic Cantata" based on risque poems by medieval renegade monks has become a de facto masterpiece. Here is its at least 10th recording to date, and no indications that anybody's enthusiasm for the piece is about to wane have reached my notice. Seijii Ozawa directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New England Conservatory Choruses (both adults' and children's with Evelyn Mandac (soprano), Stanley Kolk (tenor) and Sherrill Milnes (baritone).

Ozawa takes "Carmina" seriously—his reading is thoughtfully paced and detailed, as if it were of a major symphonic edifice. He savors the poetry and languor as did Fruehbeck (Angel) and the lusty, red-hot excitement almost as much as Ormandy (Columbia). Moreover, his vocal trio is, with only minor reservations, a close match for the solo group Jochum used in his recent edition (DGG). Thus, Evelyn Mandac manages her final "dulcissime" aria with practically the pure, soaring coloratura of Gundula Janowitz, while Kolk's dying swan number sounds exquisitely pained, without lapsing into the slight caricature of Gerhard Stolze.

The performance being this superlative, I wish I could recommend it above all others and be done with it. Unfortunately, everybody connected with the disc transfer deserves to be boiled in oil. The equalization is dynagroove turned inside-out, with a compressed mid-range and highs that cut you like icicles. I tried it with two different cartridges of mine (both known for smoothness of response) and couldn't begin to duplicate the luxurious sound I heard during the live FM stereocast of last fall's concerts that preceded these sessions (same hall of origin, same home music system). Furthermore, the pressing is afflicted with atrocious pre-echo and the platter itself is made of material so thin that I imagine anyone could vertically warp the record (causing severe tracking problems) merely by looking at it cross-eyed. (I didn't even have to look to have the problem.) Under the circumstances, anyone wanting a "Carmina Burana" immediately should buy the genuinely brilliantly engineered Columbia. Others should pray for an open-reel issue, or perhaps an eventual disc remastering, of Ozawa's.

—Abram Chipman

* * *

Carmina Burana
Ozawa
RCA Red Seal
LSC-3161

Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana" is representative of one of the few "longhair" pieces to become a big hit with the public. Since it reached in the United States in 1954, the work has been widely performed even with all of its difficulties.

Based on manuscripts of wandering student seminarians and disenchanted monks who spent their time singing, drinking and making love, the work possesses a high theatrical quality.

Under the capable direction of Seiji Ozawa, the Boston Symphony Orchestra succeeds in capturing the qualities Orff instilled in his work. A most enjoyable album. —Bob Keaton

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
(E) 107,575 (S) 125,175

OCT 18 1970

A RECORD made up largely of fireworks is entitled, as laconically as you can get: "Ozawa-Boston-Stravinsky - Firebird - Petrouchka."

Seiji Ozawa has a great feel for this sort of stuff and the Boston Symphony responds like a fire brigade, charging out from all over. The music that Stravinsky wrote is among his most stringent listenable stuff; it still has it roots in the past.

Later in his career he sometimes spurned the past, but here he is as romantic as aftershave lotion is likely to get.

I have never read anywhere that the name "Victor" now apparently is out of style in the phonograph business. What formerly were RCA Victor records area now labeled just RCA, although the dog still listens to the phonograph under the words "Red Seal." There is still a Victrola record put out by RCA. It is a sort of reprint label; inexpensive but not necessarily inferior recordings.

But no more Victor record.

COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
D. 32,000

OCT 10 1970

THE PLAIN DEALER
CLEVELAND, OHIO
D. 409,414 SUN: 545,032

OCT 25 1970

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 483,000

OCT 31

Hindemith: Kleine Kammermusik (Op. 24, No. 2). Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Milhaud: Pastorale. Schubert: Trio in B flat (Op. 99). RCA stereo, LSC 3166, $5.98.

There is nothing but virtue in the fulfillment of Hindemith's purpose in his five contrasted movements. However, that is not praise so much as verification of the results to be expected from an ensemble whose components include R. Gomberg, oboe; G. Cioffi, clarinet; S. Walt, bassoon; D. A. Dwyer, flute; and John Stagliano, horn—the prime players of their instruments in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As much may be said for the delightful Pastorale of Milhaud whose performers may be—the attributions are vague on this point—Messrs. Gomberg, Cioffi, and Walt. At least they are the ones in the listing who play (well) the instruments for which the work is scored. A rather different thing, however, is the Schubert Trio, for which the string players are Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the BSO, and Jules Eskin, its first cellist. There being no pianist, as such, in the orchestra, Claude Frank has been enlisted as "guest artist." An excellent technician and a particularly able chamber music player, Frank's choice is, abstractly, good. But he produces nothing personal to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, nor does the work really belong in a context of such values. It is clean, affectionate, sophisticated Schubert that he produces with Silverstein and Eskin, a little inclined toward the academic in its unvarying concern for every marking and detail in the score. The inclusion of them is applaudable, but one would prefer to have them integrated into an overall conception that sweeps on irresistibly, rather than observed as so many stop signs, red lights, and crossing markings on the way home. Fine sound.

The Chicago Guide
October 1970
75 cents
Including The WFMT Guide and Channel 11 Program

The Boston Symphony on DGG

Three of the "Big Five" symphony orchestras of the United States have recently changed their recording affiliations; in each case it was a move from a contract which had existed over a long period of time. The Philadelphia Orchestra was first, moving back to RCA after more than two decades of recording for Columbia. Then the Chicago Symphony got, along with a new Music Director and a new Principal Guest Conductor, contracts with two companies: London and Angel.

The latest change of record company was announced a year ago, when Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft (DGG) announced they had signed a long-term contract with the Boston Symphony (which had previously recorded for RCA in what must be the longest continuous association any American orchestra has ever had with a record company). The new affiliation was scheduled to begin this fall, but when RCA finished the sessions early this year for the records to which they were committed under the old contract, DGG was invited to come into Symphony Hall, Boston, for their first sessions.

Logically, the man to lead the Boston Symphony in its first effort for DGG was William Steinberg, the BSO Music Director. But Mr. Steinberg became ill shortly before the first planned sessions, and it was Claudio Abbado and BSO Associate-Conductor (then

Claudio Abbado

Assistant Conductor) Michael Tilson Thomas who have made the first DGG records with the Orchestra which are being released this month. Mr. Abbado directs performances of the three Debussy Nocturnes and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2 and Pavane for a Dead Princess. Mr. Thomas conducts two American works: Carl Ruggles' Sun Treader and Charles Ives' Three Places in New England. A third LP offers compositions played by members of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, that remarkable group, drawn from the BSO, which runs a gamut of instrumental combination and repertoire for public performance and recording. Their album is all Debussy: the Sonatas for 'Cello and Piano, Violin and Piano, and Flute, Viola, and Harp as well as Syrinx (for unaccompanied flute). Michael Tilson Thomas appears as pianist in the solo sonatas.

Magnum/Manos

Michael Tilson Thomas

The new Boston contract also calls for exclusive recording rights to the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, and their first release is an album of Broadway show music: medleys from Hair, Company, Man of La Mancha, and Fiddler on the Roof. A Christmas album from the Boston "Pops" is also scheduled for release very shortly. We had rather hoped, with perverse whimsy, to see the "Pops" albums appear with banner headlines on DGG record jackets as Das Boston Popische Orchester, or some such, but we understand their releases will be on the Polydor label and the jackets will be printed, alas, auf Englisch.

WFMT will broadcast the three new BSO releases (but not the "Pops" album) in a series presentation beginning the 15th and running through the 19th. The listings are headlined The Boston Symphony on DGG.

Maestro Steinberg, by the way, will have made his first record for DGG with the Boston Symphony by the time this note appears; Mr. Thomas has already recorded the Tchaikovsky First Symphony; there will be more American music taped this fall and winter, as well as "standard" repertoire; DGG will be utilizing other conductors from its roster (Herbert von Karajan and Karl Böhm, to name but two) for future BSO recordings; and, of course, Arthur Fiedler will be recording a good deal of new and old "Pops" fare for future DGG release.

Deutsche Grammophon Bows First Boston Symphony Disks

NEW YORK — Deutsche Grammophon, Polydor's classical label, announces issue of its premiere albums with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The initial release, consisting of three disks, represents many "firsts" for those involved.

The performances were taped last spring in Boston's Symphony Hall, and mark Deutsche Grammophon's American recording debut, as well as the first with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under their new exclusive recording contract with the label.

A quartet of award-winning engineers, headed by producer Karl Faust, were flown in from Europe. Though the actual taping was done in the United States, the master tapes were immediately flown to Europe for editing, after which the artists approved the final versions.

The recording engineer for the sessions was Günter Hermanns; Rainer Brock supervised artistic matters. Both were assisted by Joachim Niss.

The first session was conducted by a Deutsche Grammophon exclusive artist, Italy's young Claudio Abbado. Though a stranger neither to the Boston Symphony nor to Deutsche Grammophon and its engineers (he went to the Vienna Conservatory with Rainer Brock), this was his initial American recording date. Abbado selected Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe, Suite No. 2" and "Pavane for a Dead Princess," along with Debussy's Three Nocturnes: "Fêtes," "Nuages" and "Sirénes." The Boston Symphony Orchestra was joined by the New England Conservatory Chorus.

Polydor Prexy Jerry Schoenbaum (left) chats with Goody's Sam Stolon (center) and Polydor National Sales Manager Sid Love at Deutsche Grammophon's screening of sales promo film, "An Edition is Born." Color short was shown at a cocktail party last week at St. Moritz Roof Garden to kick off "Beethoven Edition 1970" sales campaign and to introduce dealers and promotional people to the 75-record, 12-volume bi-centennial set that sells for $299.50, along with the bonus book, "Ludwig van Beethoven."

The second set of sessions was conducted by the 25-year-old, Hollywood-born Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Michael Tilson Thomas. For his recording debut as conductor, Thomas chose to direct the works of two major American composers not previously represented on the Deutsche Grammophon label. The young conductor offers Ives and Ruggles via "Three Places in New England" and "Sun-Treader."

For the third release, the Boston Symphony Chamber Players present Debussy in the three sonatas and "Syrinx."

To herald the release of these first Boston Symphony albums, Deutsche Grammophon has set a heavy advertising and promotion campaign.

DEBUTS: Deutsche Grammophon has released its first three recordings with the Boston Symphony Orchestra . . . taped last spring in Boston's Symphony Hall, they mark the company's American recording debut and the first with the orchestra under a new exclusive contract. Claudio Abbado conducts the Debussy Nocturnes and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2 and Favane for a Dead Princess . . . Michael Tilson Thomas (his recording debut too) leads Ives' Three Places in New England and Ruggles' Sun-Treader . . . Thomas also plays piano on the third release of four pieces by Debussy for cello, viola, flute, harp and piano.

3 Boston Symphony Sets Mark 1st Deutsche Grammophon U.S. Sessions

NEW YORK — Deutsche Grammophon has marketed its first three recordings with the Boston Symphony, marking the German label's first American sessions.

The sessions, debuting the orchestra under its exclusive contract with the classical arm of Polydor, Inc., were made in Boston Symphony Hall last spring under the direction of four engineers, headed by Karl Faust, who were flown in from Europe. Though taped in the U. S., mastering, processing and pressing were done in Germany, after which the artists approved the final versions.

The sets include Italian conductor Claudio Abbado's versions of Ravel's Daphnis & Chloe, Suite No. 2 and Pavane for a Dead Princess, along with Debussy's Three Nocturnes (Fetes, Nuages and Sirenes); Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony offers Ives and Ruggles "Three Places in New England" and Sun-Treader, respectively (a second Thomas set is planned for early next year); and the Boston Symphony Chamber Players offer three Debussy sonatas and Syrinx.

Big Push For Sets

To launch the release of these first Boston Symphony albums, Deutsche Grammophon has set a heavy advertising and promotion campaign. A limited number of advance test pressings were made available for premiere programming to radio stations in major market areas: New York, Chicago, Boston, Los Angeles, Cleveland, Washington, San Francisco, Detroit, Philadelphia and Houston. With the official release of the albums, copies will be sent to an extensive group of additional radio stations in these and other areas for immediate programming.

Special attention wil be given the Ives/Ruggles disk with Michael Tilson Thomas through underground radio and press.

Advertising will be prominent, and ads are already beginning to appear in October issues of High Fidelity, Stereo Review, Schwann and American Record Guide and the November Coast FM and the Arts. Program advertising will be placed in Boston and Providence with follow-up in New York City and on tour, as well as for the Tanglewood summer season. The orchestra will tour Europe this spring, with the cooperation of Deutsche Grammophon.

A promotional mailing is being prepared to alert subscribers and friends of the orchestra to the new affiliation, and posters and easel backs of the album jackets are being printed for point-of-sale and Symphony Hall display.

Promotional material may be ordered through Polydor Incorporated's creative services department, classical division. Orders for merchandise are now being accepted by Deutsche Grammophon's national sales manager, Sid Love.

The three recordings will be available through Polydor Incorporated on disc, MusiCassette and 8-Track cartridge. Open reel versions of the orchestra works only are available from Ampex/Deutsche Grammophon.

DGG Plans Large-Scale Drive On 1st Boston Symphony LP's

NEW YORK — Deutsche Grammophon Records plans an extensive promotion and advertising campaign for its first three albums with the Boston Symphony, which are slated for mid-October release.

Special attention will be given to an album conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas, the 25-year-old associate conductor of the orchestra. The set pairs Ives' "Three Places in New England" and Ruggles' "Sun-Treader," the first appearances by those American conductors on DGG.

Thomas also plays piano in a Debussy chamber music LP, which also features cellist Jules Eskin, flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, violist Burton Fine, harpist Ann Hobson and violinist Joseph Silverstein. The third pressing couples Debussy and Ravel with Claudio Abaddo conducting. The New England Conservatory Chorus also performs on this disk.

The performers were taped last spring in Boston's Symphony with a quartet of engineers, headed by producer Karl Faust, flown in from Europe. The taping was done in the U.S., but the tapes were flown to Europe for editing, mastering and processing.

Consumer and trade advertising are planned as well as radio spots. Program advertising in Boston, Providence, New York and Tanglewood also is scheduled. The Boston will tour Europe this spring with DGG's cooperation.

Promotional material may be ordered through Polydor Incorporated's Creative Services Department, Classical Division. Orders for merchandise are now being accepted by Sid Love, DGG's national sales manager.

The three recordings will be available on disk, cassette and 8-track tape cartridge. Open reel versions of the orchestral works only can be obtained from Ampex Deutsche Grammophon.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 24,000
OCT 3 1970

The Chicago Guide
October 1970
75 cents
Including The WFMT Guide and Channel II Program

The Boston Symphony on DGG

Three of the "Big Five" symphony orchestras of the United States have recently changed their recording affiliations; in each case it was a move from a contract which had existed over a long period of time. The Philadelphia Orchestra was first, moving back to RCA after more than two decades of recording for Columbia. Then the Chicago Symphony got, along with a new Music Director and a new Principal Guest Conductor, contracts with two companies: London and Angel.

The latest change of record company was announced a year ago, when Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft (DGG) announced they had signed a long-term contract with the Boston Symphony (which had previously recorded for RCA in what must be the longest continuous association any American orchestra has ever had with a record company). The new affiliation was scheduled to begin this fall, but when RCA finished the sessions early this year for the records to which they were committed under the old contract, DGG was invited to come into Symphony Hall, Boston, for their first sessions.

Logically, the man to lead the Boston Symphony in its first effort for DGG was William Steinberg, the BSO Music Director. But Mr. Steinberg became ill shortly before the first planned sessions, and it was Claudio Abbado and BSO Associate Conductor (then Assistant Conductor) Michael Tilson Thomas who have made the first DGG records with the Orchestra which are being released this month. Mr. Abbado directs performances of the three Debussy Nocturnes and Ravel's Daphnis and Chloe Suite No. 2 and Pavane for a Dead Princess. Mr. Thomas conducts two American works: Carl Ruggles' Sun Treader and Charles Ives' Three Places in New England. A third LP offers compositions played by members of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, that remarkable group, drawn from the BSO, which runs a gamut of instrumental combination and repertoire for public performance and recording. Their album is all Debussy: the Sonatas for 'Cello and Piano, Violin and Piano, and Flute, Viola, and Harp as well as Syrinx (for unaccompanied flute). Michael Tilson Thomas appears as pianist in the solo sonatas.

Claudio Abbado

Magnum/Manos

Michael Tilson Thomas

The new Boston contract also calls for exclusive recording rights to the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, and their first release is an album of Broadway show music: medleys from Hair, Company, Man of La Mancha, and Fiddler on the Roof. A Christmas album from the Boston "Pops" is also scheduled for release very shortly. We had rather hoped, with perverse whimsy, to see the "Pops" albums appear with banner headlines on DGG record jackets as Das Boston Popische Orchester, or some such, but we understand their releases will be on the Polydor label and the jackets will be printed, alas, auf Englisch.

WFMT will broadcast the three new BSO releases (but not the "Pops" album) in a series presentation beginning the 15th and running through the 19th. The listings are headlined The Boston Symphony on DGG.

Maestro Steinberg, by the way, will have made his first record for DGG with the Boston Symphony by the time this note appears; Mr. Thomas has already recorded the Tchaikovsky First Symphony; there will be more American music taped this fall and winter, as well as "standard" repertoire; DGG will be utilizing other conductors from its roster (Herbert von Karajan and Karl Böhm, to name but two) for future BSO recordings; and, of course, Arthur Fiedler will be recording a good deal of new and old "Pops" fare for future DGG release

Look What Happened To Ozawa!

RECORDS

ORFF: Carmina Burana (RCA)

Despite endless put-downs by the snobbish, this "Scenic Cantata" based on risque poems by medieval renegade monks has become a de facto masterpiece. Here is its at least 10th recording to date, and no indications that anybody's enthusiasm for the piece is about to wane have reached my notice. Seijii Ozawa directs the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New England Conservatory Choruses (both adults' and children's with Evelyn Mandac (soprano), Stanley Kolk (tenor) and Sherrill Milnes (baritone).

Ozawa takes "Carmina" seriously—his reading is thoughtfully paced and detailed, as if it were of a major symphonic edifice. He savors the poetry and languor as did Fruehbeck (Angel) and the lusty, red-hot excitement almost as much as Ormandy (Columbia). Moreover, his vocal trio is, with only minor reservations, a close match for the solo group Jochum used in his recent edition (DGG). Thus, Evelyn Mandac manages her final "dulcissime" aria with practically the pure, soaring coloratura of Gundula Janowitz, while Kolk's dying swan number sounds exquisitely pained, without lapsing into the slight caricature of Gerhard Stolze.

The performance being this superlative, I wish I could recommend it above all others and be done with it. Unfortunately, everybody connected with the disc transfer deserves to be boiled in oil. The equalization is dynagroove turned inside-out, with a compressed mid-range and highs that cut you like icicles. I tried it with two different cartridges of mine (both known for smoothness of response) and couldn't begin to duplicate the luxurious sound I heard during the live FM stereocast of last fall's concerts that preceded these sessions (same hall of origin, same home music system). Furthermore, the pressing is afflicted with atrocious pre-echo and the platter itself is made of material so thin that I imagine anyone could vertically warp the record (causing severe tracking problems) merely by looking at it cross-eyed. (I didn't even have to look to have the problem.) Under the circumstances, anyone wanting a "Carmina Burana" immediately should buy the genuinely brilliantly engineered Columbia. Others should pray for an open-reel issue, or perhaps an eventual disc remastering, of Ozawa's.

—Abram Chipman

* * *

Carmina Burana
Ozawa
RCA Red Seal
LSC-3161

Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana" is representative of one of the few "longhair" pieces to become a big hit with the public. Since it reached in the United States in 1954, the work has been widely performed even with all of its difficulties.

Based on manuscripts of wandering student seminarians and disenchanted monks who spent their time singing, drinking and making love, the work possesses a high theatrical quality.

Under the capable direction of Seiji Ozawa, the Boston Symphony Orchestra succeeds in capturing the qualities Orff instilled in his work. A most enjoyable album. —Bob Keaton

A RECORD made up largely of fireworks is entitled, as laconically as you can get: "Ozawa-Boston-Stravinsky - Firebird - Petrouchka."

Seiji Ozawa has a great feel for this sort of stuff and the Boston Symphony responds like a fire brigade, charging out from all over. The music that Stravinsky wrote is among his most stringent listenable stuff; it still has it roots in the past.

Later in his career he sometimes spurned the past, but here he is as romantic as aftershave lotion is likely to get.

I have never read anywhere that the name "Victor" now apparently is out of style in the phonograph business. What formerly were, RCA Victor records area now labeled just RCA, although the dog still listens to the phonograph under the words "Red Seal." There is still a Victrola record put out by RCA. It is a sort of reprint label: inexpensive but not necessarily inferior recordings.

But no more Victor record.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
OCT 18 1970
COLUMBIA, S. C.
RECORD
D. 32,000
OCT 10 1970
THE PLAIN DEALER
CLEVELAND, OHIO
D. 435,424 SUN. 545,032
OCT 25 1970

Hindemith: Kleine Kammermusik (Op. 24, No. 2). Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Milhaud: Pastorale. Schubert: Trio in B flat (Op. 99). RCA stereo, LSC 3166, $5.98.

There is nothing but virtue in the fulfillment of Hindemith's purpose in his five contrasted movements. However, that is not praise so much as verification of the results to be expected from an ensemble whose components include R. Gomberg, oboe; G. Cioffi, clarinet; S. Walt, bassoon; D. A. Dwyer, flute; and John Stagliano, horn—the prime players of their instruments in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As much may be said for the delightful Pastorale of Milhaud whose performers may be—the attributions are vague on this point—Messrs. Gomberg, Cioffi, and Walt. At least they are the ones in the listing who play (well) the instruments for which the work is scored. A rather different thing, however, is the Schubert Trio, for which the string players are Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the BSO, and Jules Eskin, its first cellist. There being no pianist, as such, in the orchestra, Claude Frank has been enlisted as "guest artist." An excellent technician and a particularly able chamber music player, Frank's choice is, abstractly, good. But he produces nothing personal to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, nor does the work really belong in a context of such values. It is clean, affectionate, sophisticated Schubert that he produces with Silverstein and Eskin, a little inclined toward the academic in its unvarying concern for every marking and detail in the score. The inclusion of them is applaudable, but one would prefer to have them integrated into an overall conception that sweeps on irresistibly, rather than observed as so many stop signs, red lights, and crossing markings on the way home. Fine sound.

140

ORFF: Carmina Burana. Evelyn Mandac, soprano; Stanley Kolk, tenor; Sherrill Milnes, baritone; New England Conservatory Chorus and Children's Chorus; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, cond. RCA Red Seal LSC 3161, $5.98. Tape: R8S 1161, $6.95.

Three outstanding Carmina Burana recordings challenge Ozawa's new entry: the decade-old Ormandy/Columbia best-seller, Angel's sonically admired 1966 version led by Frühbeck de Burgos, and the DGG 1968 remake of the Jochum reading that has been generally acknowledged as the interpretative paradigm ever since it first introduced this music to (mono) discs back in 1953. I suspect that to some extent Ozawa has modeled his reading on Jochum's: it demonstrates much of the same magisterial grip and steadiness, although Ozawa's incisiveness and high-voltage rhythmic electricity are completely individual. These last qualities are spectacularly enhanced by stereoism that not only projects certain details of the scoring more lucidly (the varied collection of percussion instruments in particular) but also best realizes the composer's obvious intention of overwhelming his listeners with sheer force and shattering brilliance. Yet at the same time there is nothing unnaturally contrived in the sonic balances or in the big-auditorium (Boston's Symphony Hall) acoustical ambience.

Inevitably, even so impressive an achievement is not flawless. The choral singing here is less attractive than that of Angel's New Philharmonia Chorus (but the leaner nature and crisper articulation are undoubtedly more effective dramatically). And personal tastes will weigh heavily, as always, in comparative evaluations of the competing soloists. For me, RCA's young Philippine soprano, Evelyn Mandac, comes close to matching DGG's Janowitz in control and Angel's Popp in tonal beauty, while surpassing the former in dramatic personality and both in vocal brilliance (I still remember as incomparable the haunting magic of Sylvia Stahlman's "In trutina" in the 1957 Vanguard version, now out of print). The new version's male soloists are less outstanding. Milnes copes admirably with the impossible demands of the baritone role (often divided, as in the Angel version, between two singers), but DGG's Fischer-Dieskau is well-nigh unbeatable here. And while Kolk sings well, if with considerable strain, every relatively "straight" performance of the wryly humorous Song of the Roasted tends to sound tame after Gerhard Stolze's highly mannered but interpretatively ideal tour de force for DGG.

Over-all, though, this Ozawa/Boston RCA Carmina Burana outdoes all the others in power and sonic incandescence. Ordinarily, this pseudoprimitivistic work makes its maximum effect on first hearing; closer acquaintance exposes more and more of its artificialities and aesthetic weaknesses. Perhaps Ozawa's supreme triumph here is that he manages to overcome that usual sense of disillusionment and, at least momentarily, restores the music's original galvanic excitement. R.D.D.

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 130,000
OCT 1970

DEBUSSY: Nocturnes—Nuages; Fêtes; Sirènes; RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé—Suite No. 2; Pavane; New England Conservatory Chorus; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Claudio Abbado. Deutsche Grammophon Stereo 2530 038, $5.98.

Daphnis:
Martinon, Chi. Sym. .....RCA LSC-2806
Toscanini, NBC Sym. .....RCA VIC-1273
Pavane:
Monteux, Lon. Sym. .....Lon. CS-6248
Nocturnes:
Monteux, Boston Sym.,
Berkshire Fest. Ch .....RCA VICS-1027
Stokowski, Lon. Sym.,
BBC Women's Ch .....Sera. S-60104

ⓢABBADO performs the Daphnis et Chloé Suite with chorus, which is exceedingly well recorded. This conductor's decisions always reflect solid musical realities. He takes the first section of the Suite as fast as he does in order, I suspect, to keep the rhythms clear. If I feel that there should be both more poetry and a more moderate tempo (that the two do not necessarily go together is shown in the slow section of Fêtes), there is nevertheless no shortage of things to admire in the magnificent playing of the Boston Symphony. How good it is to hear those trumpets clearly; what spiky clarinet playing we get in the Danse générale, and what strong horn-playing there is throughout! Though the first flute is quite lovely the second misreads his part after cue 179, playing a crescendo instead of a steady diminuendo to pp. Concertmaster Silverstein is marvelous in his stylish très expressif solo at cue 191. Again in the Pavane there is wonderful playing, but the interpretation is soupy. The Debussy Nocturnes are excellently played, too, and beautifully sung by the New England Conservatory Chorus in Sirènes. Abbado makes no mistakes, but Monteux's earlier recording with the same orchestra has much more atmosphere and nuance. The break to ppp in the middle of Fêtes is thoroughly lacking in mystery; under Abbado, even the Boston Symphony sounds mechanical. Though there is much gentle playing and many caressing sounds in Nuages and Sirènes, Monteux's and Stokowski's are much more preferable accounts because they convey the spirit as well as the letter of Debussy. Abbado obviously has a splendid technique, and what with the shortage of really good conductors he is sure to have a place. Whether or not he should be recording with an orchestra of the caliber of the Boston Symphony, however, the present interpretations certainly do not merit preservation for posterity. Abbado as yet has little to say about this music. —M.N.K.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100
NOV 1970

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15; Piano Sonata No 22 in F, Op. 54; Sviatoslav Richter (piano); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victrola Stereo VICS-1478, $2.98.

BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonata No. 12 in A flat, Op. 26 ("Funeral March"); Piano Sonata No. 23 in F minor, Op. 57 ("Appassionata"); Sviatoslav Richter (piano). RCA Victrola Stereo VICS-1427, $2.98.

ⓢBOTH of these recordings date from 1960, when Richter made his debut in the United States. He is a sensational pianist and these recordings show it, despite their faults. I have always enjoyed Richter's version of the C major Concerto because it is so charming. His very first entrance is somewhat overly expressive—perhaps to make clear that his playing is going to be more personal than Munch's accompaniment, which inclines toward the pompous. To be sure, there is a sufficient amount of pomp in the music itself to justify Munch's approach. This inconsistency is not so severe as it sounds, because Munch and the Boston Symphony are not immune to the lyric impulses. At the end of the Rondo, Richter uses a long ritardando as a transition to the two measures in Adagio tempo. This is a perfectly lovely and most elegant addition. The beauty and distinctiveness of Richter's articulation is a source of constant delight. Even slight emendations of the printed score (as in his changes at measure 100 of the Largo) do not dim the artistry of this performance. The recording is bass-weak in both orchestra and piano. Even after a nearly-maximum bass boost the horns and bassoons are too weak, and the piano tone is not too dry only when the orchestra is boomy. The two-movement F major Sonata which fills out side two (for which the sound can be adequately adjusted) is very well executed. The first movement is taken at a moderately slow tempo d'un menuetto, and Richter is not quite flexible enough for this pace. The second movement is much faster than the usual conception of Allegretto, but Richter makes it "work" in a serious and brilliant performance. The Più Allegro at the end is the more sweeping because Richter so increases his already-fast tempo. The main competition in the bargain-price range is Solomon's account with Menges and the Philharmonia (Seraphim S-60016). (This also has a two-movement sonata coupling: the Op. 90 in E minor). The late English pianist's recording has fewer problems than Richter's. The Philharmonia was at its peak at this time, and the recording is more natural. Solomon himself was a strong but poetic pianist. His recording is the more Beethovenian in style (a distinction based on brightness of extroversion). Solomon's recording of the Sonata is meritorious in the same way as his account of the Concerto; and it is consistently successful, unlike Richter's. Solomon provides his own cadenza in the Concerto, which is preferable to Richter's cut in Beethoven's.

The "Funeral March" in the Twelfth Sonata is played with great force. Richter's performance may be felt as brutal by some, but much of the music is marked fortissimo—and we know how Beethoven played that. The performance must still be crushing, even if today's piano survives. Hungerford's recording has the same tempo (rather fast), but lacks Richter's halting rhythm and power. The Scherzo is also very well done, with plenty of vigor, and the Trio shows marvelous sonorous command. The outer movements have basic problems. The first (variation) movement is played at a quick Andante, with good voicing and phrasing; but the tempo is just too fast. There is more substance to the movement than Richter gets, and this marks his interpretation as superficial. The finale is also too fast. It is full of Beethovenian personality, but Richter finds it only a velocity exercise. The Appassionata is extremely well played, creating exceptional tension, but flawed by two interpretative characteristics. First, Richter's tempo fluctuation in the opening movement is excessive, though he is not sloppy emotionally. And the Presto coda to the finale is played with large ritardandi on the half-note chords, so that the rhythmic relation between the long and short notes is lost. In a recording which is otherwise admirable for its clarity this is an odd feature. It is obvious from more than these mannerisms that Richter cares deeply about the Op. 57, but this is not his best performance of it. Walter Gieseking's 1939 recording, now available on Odyssey (32-16-0314, with the Waldstein) is a better buy. Both of the Richter albums on Victrola have merit, but mainly for those who do not mind having duplicates in their collection. —M.N.K.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100
NOV 1970

SCHOLASTIC VOICE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. - CIRC. N. AVAIL.
OCT 12 1970

THE BEST NEW LPs, CASSETTES & CARTRIDGES

DISCUSSIONS

BY ROY HEMMING
with Dave Finkle, Bud Scoppa

• Fabulous Broadway (Music from: Hair, Company, Man of La Mancha, Fiddler on the Roof) — Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler [Polydor 24-5003].

• Dvorak: New World Symphony & Carnival Overture — Boston Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler [RCA Red Seal LSC 3134].

There is a regrettable tendency among musical snobs (and America's are among the world's worst) to dismiss Arthur Fiedler as a popular but strictly lightweight conductor. Yet the success of the Boston Pops over the past 40 years clearly rests as much on Fiedler's immense talents as on the popular appeal or "hipness" of his programs (as the experience of New York's and Philadelphia's Pops under other conductors has certainly proved). Moreover, Fiedler is respected in other parts of the world (particularly in South America) as a solid, able conductor of all kinds of symphonic music.

Fiedler: unmatched

Last season, on the occasion of Fiedler's 75th birthday, the Boston Symphony (from whose members the Boston Pops is drawn) finally invited Fiedler to guest-conduct a regular concert. RCA's recording of the Dvorak "New World" commemorates that event (although there's not a single reference to it in the liner notes!). Fiedler leads a marvelously spirited, warm, vibrant performance, with a particularly haunting Largo (from which the familiar "Goin' Home" is taken). He rounds off the disc with a rousing Carnival Overture.

Fiedler's first Boston Pops disc under a new Polydor/Deutsche Grammophon contract finds him serving up some uniquely New World musical pastry: Broadway show music. Fiedler is in his best "pops" form — injecting a vitality and crispness into these tunes that few others ever match. One expects the medleys from Fiddler and La Mancha to glow under Fiedler's baton (and they do). But the knockout Hair medley is the album's real prize — making mincemeat of the generation gap, as Fiedler so often does. He then rounds off the disc by showing how on-top-of-things he is, playing the best new Broadway score of the year: Stephen Sondheim's Company. (R.H.)

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
SENIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,293,800
NOV 2 1970

READING, PA.
EAGLE
D. 48,500 S. 8
NOV 12 1970

IN A CLASSICAL GROOVE

GARY TROLLINGER

MAHLER: Symphony No. 5 in C-sharp minor; four songs from "Des Knaben Wunderhorn." Minton, Chicago Symphony, Solti. (London-2 discs)

Georg Solti, new musical director of the Chicago Symphony, is pressing on with a Mahler symphonic cycle that he began primarily with the London Symphony. With the 1st, 2nd and 3rd symphonies already recorded with the LSO and the 4th with Amsterdam's Concertgebouw, Maestro Solti in his first recordings with the Chicago has committed the 5th and 6th to wax. (We'll talk about the 6th next week.)

The Chicago Symphony, by the way, is the latest major American orchestra to go over to a European recording company — in fact, two of them. Carl Maria Giulini, Solti's Chicago co-conducting colleague, leads them on England's Angel label, with Solti doing the honors on London (whose parent company is Decca Records, Ltd., of England). The Chicago Symphony for many years recorded for RCA under Fritz Reiner and later Jean Martinon.

A new Mahler 5th is not short on competition, however. About five years ago, Erich Leinsdorf recorded it with the Boston Symphony and the combination turned out a prize-winning disc. Even today, the Leinsdorf-Boston version remains practically untouchable in its clarity and articulation, both in execution and concept.

The major difference between Leinsdorf and Solti, however, is not one of comparative abilities, but in the way they treat the music. Leinsdorf, as we have noted earlier, tends to view his Mahler in a somewhat more tragic light — and aspect, we might add that fits in quite well with the strength and intensity which Leinsdorf wields with his baton.

Solti takes a somewhat softer view; he takes his slow tempi a bit slower and softer, allowing them to loll leisurely in their lyricism, and he tends to bear down harder and more quickly on the more animated thundering passages. Thus while Solti does not have the estimable French horn playing of a James Stagliano in the third movement (as Leinsdorf did), he massages the music in lighter, spirited vein. The slow fourth movement, very lovely indeed in is an almost breathlessly beautiful, luxuriating in Solti's sunny romanticism.

The recording from a technical standpoint is more airly resonant than the Leinsdorf on RCA, but after that it's almost a tossup on the audio score.

Yvonne Minton is the soloist on the "Wunderhorn" excerpts. Hers is an even, well-modulated vocal style, though we are inclined to think that her rendition is too straightforward to capture the mood of the songs, which in other performances have comethrough as genuinely moving experiences. The anticlimacticism is all the more noticeable following up the Solti symphonic performance.

Miss Minton, of course, may not believe in all that and within her own particular framework the songs are nicely, if all too neatly, done.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
SENIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,293,800
NOV 2 1970

DISCUSSIONS

THE BEST NEW LPs, CASSETTES & CARTRIDGES

• Charles Ives: Calcium Light Night — Gunther Schuller & Orchestra [Columbia Stereo LP MS7318].

Schuller: prophetic

Artists seem to suffer two fates: (1) over-adulation in their lifetime, followed by a fast loss of interest and even scorn; or (2) lack of recognition or neglect in their lifetime, then belated realization of their genius. Charles Ives (1874-1954) is a classic case of the latter.

Connecticut-born Ives wrote some of the most ruggedly individualistic music of the early 20th century — sometimes ahead of Schoenberg, Stravinsky, Bartok, and others in musical ideas. Yet only recently have Ives' works begun to be played (and recorded) with any regularity. Some works, left by Ives in unedited manuscript form, have been edited, reconstructed, or unscrambled by Henry Cowell, Leonard Bernstein, Stokowski, and others. Now composer-conductor Gunther Schuller has turned his hand to editing the major portion of Ives' works for chamber orchestra — and come up with one of the finest albums of the year. The album includes a 4-page set of notes in which Schuller explains exactly which works are as Ives wrote them, which ones he has "reconstructed" (and in what way), and which options he chose when Ives' scores existed in several different forms.

There is not enough space to discuss the merits or delights of each of the 20 short pieces on the LP. There is less of the raucous humor and wild jesting found in some of Ives' bigger orchestral works, but the same fascinating mixture of hymn tunes, patriotic songs, college songs, ragtime, multiple rhythms, polytonality, and everything else (virtually up to the proverbial kitchen sink!). Two pieces, "The Pond" and "Incantation," are among the most lovely lyric pieces Ives ever wrote. "Calcium Light Night" and "A Lecture" are intriguing reminiscences of student days (Yale, 1890's). And "The New River" is an astonishingly prophetic (for 1911) lament for what industrial pollution was doing to Connecticut's Housatonic River.

The chamber orchestra Schuller has assembled for the recording (including the Boston Symphony's percussion section) is excellent. (R.H.)

40

ORFF: Carmina Burana. Evelyn Mandac, soprano; Stanley Kolk, tenor; Sherrill Milnes, baritone; New England Conservatory Chorus and Children's Chorus; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa, cond. RCA Red Seal LSC 3161, $5.98. Tape: ⊞ R8S 1161, $6.95.

Three outstanding Carmina Burana recordings challenge Ozawa's new entry: the decade-old Ormandy/Columbia best-seller, Angel's sonically admired 1966 version led by Frühbeck de Burgos, and the DGG 1968 remake of the Jochum reading that has been generally acknowledged as the interpretative paradigm ever since it first introduced this music to (mono) discs back in 1953. I suspect that to some extent Ozawa has modeled his reading on Jochum's: it demonstrates much of the same magisterial grip and steadiness, although Ozawa's incisiveness and high-voltage rhythmic electricity are completely individual. These last qualities are spectacularly enhanced by stereoism that not only projects certain details of the scoring more lucidly (the varied collection of percussion instruments in particular) but also best realizes the composer's obvious intention of overwhelming his listeners with sheer force and shattering brilliance. Yet at the same time there is nothing unnaturally contrived in the sonic balances or in the big-auditorium (Boston's Symphony Hall) acoustical ambience.

Inevitably, even so impressive an achievement is not flawless. The choral singing here is less attractive than that of Angel's New Philharmonia Chorus (but the leaner nature and crisper articulation are undoubtedly more effective dramatically). And personal tastes will weigh heavily, as always, in comparative evaluations of the competing soloists. For me, RCA's young Philippine soprano, Evelyn Mandac, comes close to matching DGG's Janowitz in control and Angel's Popp in tonal beauty, while surpassing the former in dramatic personality and both in vocal brilliance (I still remember as incomparable the haunting magic of Sylvia Stahlman's "In trutina" in the 1957 Vanguard version, now out of print). The new version's male soloists are less outstanding. Milnes copes admirably with the impossible demands of the baritone role (often divided, as in the Angel version, between two singers), but DGG's Fischer-Dieskau is well-nigh unbeatable here. And while Kolk sings well, if with considerable strain, every relatively "straight" performance of the wryly humorous Song of the Roasted tends to sound tame after Gerhard Stolze's highly mannered but interpretatively ideal tour de force for DGG.

Over-all, though, this Ozawa/Boston RCA Carmina Burana outdoes all the others in power and sonic incandescence. Ordinarily, this pseudoprimitivistic work makes its maximum effect on first hearing; closer acquaintance exposes more and more of its artificialities and aesthetic weaknesses. Perhaps Ozawa's supreme triumph here is that he manages to overcome that usual sense of disillusionment and, at least momentarily, restores the music's original galvanic excitement. R.D.D.

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY
OCT 1970

DEBUSSY: Nocturnes—Nuages; Fêtes; Sirènes; RAVEL: Daphnis et Chloé—Suite No. 2; Pavane; New England Conservatory Chorus; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Claudio Abbado. Deutsche Grammophon Stereo 2530 038, $5.98.

Daphnis:
Martinon, Chi. Sym. .....RCA LSC-2806
Toscanini, NBC Sym. .....RCA VIC-1273
Pavane:
Monteux, Lon. Sym. .....Lon. CS-6248
Nocturnes:
Monteux, Boston Sym.,
Berkshire Fest. Ch .....RCA VICS-1027
Stokowski, Lon. Sym.,
BBC Women's Ch .....Sera. S-60104

Ⓢ ABBADO performs the Daphnis et Chloé Suite with chorus, which is exceedingly well recorded. This conductor's decisions always reflect solid musical realities. He takes the first section of the Suite as fast as he does in order, I suspect, to keep the rhythms clear. If I feel that there should be both more poetry and a more moderate tempo (that the two do not necessarily go together is shown in the slow section of Fêtes), there is nevertheless no shortage of things to admire in the magnificent playing of the Boston Symphony. How good it is to hear those trumpets clearly; what spiky clarinet playing we get in the Danse générale, and what strong horn-playing there is throughout! Though the first flute is quite lovely the second misreads his part after cue 179, playing a crescendo instead of a steady diminuendo to pp. Concertmaster Silverstein is marvelous in his stylish très expressif solo at cue 191. Again in the Pavane there is wonderful playing, but the interpretation is soupy. The Debussy Nocturnes are excellently played, too, and beautifully sung by the New England Conservatory Chorus in Sirènes. Abbado makes no mistakes, but Monteux's earlier recording with the same orchestra has much more atmosphere and nuance. The break to ppp in the middle of Fêtes is thoroughly lacking in mystery; under Abbado, even the Boston Symphony sounds mechanical. Though there is much gentle playing and many caressing sounds in Nuages and Sirènes, Monteux's and Stokowski's are much more preferable accounts because they convey the spirit as well as the letter of Debussy. Abbado obviously has a splendid technique, and what with the shortage of really good conductors he is sure to have a place. Whether or not he should be recording with an orchestra of the caliber of the Boston Symphony, however, the present interpretations certainly do not merit preservation for posterity. Abbado as yet has little to say about this music. —M.N.K.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100
NOV 1970

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15; Piano Sonata No 22 in F, Op. 54; Sviatoslav Richter (piano); Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victrola Stereo VICS-1478, $2.98.

BEETHOVEN: Piano Sonata No. 12 in A flat, Op. 26 ("Funeral March"); Piano Sonata No. 23 in F minor, Op. 57 ("Appassionata"); Sviatoslav Richter (piano). RCA Victrola Stereo VICS-1427, $2.98.

Ⓢ BOTH of these recordings date from 1960, when Richter made his debut in the United States. He is a sensational pianist and these recordings show it, despite their faults. I have always enjoyed Richter's version of the C major Concerto because it is so charming. His very first entrance is somewhat overly expressive—perhaps to make clear that his playing is going to be more personal than Munch's accompaniment, which inclines toward the pompous. To be sure, there is a sufficient amount of pomp in the music itself to justify Munch's approach. This inconsistency is not so severe as it sounds, because Munch and the Boston Symphony are not immune to the lyric impulses. At the end of the Rondo, Richter uses a long ritardando as a transition to the two measures in Adagio tempo. This is a perfectly lovely and most elegant addition. The beauty and distinctiveness of Richter's articulation is a source of constant delight. Even slight emendations of the printed score (as in his changes at measure 100 of the Largo) do not dim the artistry of this performance. The recording is bass-weak in both orchestra and piano. Even after a nearly-maximum bass boost the horns and bassoons are too weak, and the piano tone is not too dry only when the orchestra is boomy. The two-movement F major Sonata which fills out side two (for which the sound can be adequately adjusted) is very well executed. The first movement is taken at a moderately slow tempo d'un menuetto, and Richter is not quite flexible enough for this pace. The second movement is much faster than the usual conception of Allegretto, but Richter makes it "work" in a serious and brilliant performance. The Più Allegro at the end is the more sweeping because Richter so increases his already-fast tempo. The main competition in the bargain-price range is Solomon's account with Menges and the Philharmonia (Seraphim S-60016). (This also has a two-movement sonata coupling: the Op. 90 in E minor). The late English pianist's recording has fewer problems than Richter's. The Philharmonia was at its peak at this time, and the recording is more natural. Solomon himself was a strong but poetic pianist. His recording is the more Beethovenian in style (a distinction based on brightness of extroversion). Solomon's recording of the Sonata is meritorious in the same way as his account of the Concerto; and it is consistently successful, unlike Richter's. Solomon provides his own cadenza in the Concerto, which is preferable to Richter's cut in Beethoven's.

The "Funeral March" in the Twelfth Sonata is played with great force. Richter's performance may be felt as brutal by some, but much of the music is marked fortissimo—and we know how Beethoven played that. The performance must still be crushing, even if today's piano survives. Hungerford's recording has the same tempo (rather fast), but lacks Richter's halting rhythm and power. The Scherzo is also very well done, with plenty of vigor, and the Trio shows marvelous sonorous command. The outer movements have basic problems. The first (variation) movement is played at a quick Andante, with good voicing and phrasing; but the tempo is just too fast. There is more substance to the movement than Richter gets, and this marks his interpretation as superficial. The finale is also too fast. It is full of Beethovenian personality, but Richter finds it only a velocity exercise. The Appassionata is extremely well played, creating exceptional tension, but flawed by two interpretative characteristics. First, Richter's tempo fluctuation in the opening movement is excessive, though he is not sloppy emotionally. And the Presto coda to the finale is played with large ritardandi on the half-note chords, so that the rhythmic relation between the long and short notes is lost. In a recording which is otherwise admirable for its clarity this is an odd feature. It is obvious from more than these mannerisms that Richter cares deeply about the Op. 57, but this is not his best performance of it. Walter Gieseking's 1939 recording, now available on Odyssey (32-16-0314, with the Waldstein) is a better buy. Both of the Richter albums on Victrola have merit, but mainly for those who do not mind having duplicates in their collection. —M.N.K.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 21,100
NOV 1970

READING, PA.
EAGLE
D. 48,500 S.
NOV 1 3 1970

IN A CLASSICAL GROOVE

GARY TROLLINGER

MAHLER: Symphony No. 5 in C-sharp minor; four songs from "Des Knaben Wunderhorn." Minton, Chicago Symphony, Solti. (London-2 discs)

Georg Solti, new musical director of the Chicago Symphony, is pressing on with a Mahler symphonic cycle that he began primarily with the London Symphony. With the 1st, 2nd and 3rd symphonies already recorded with the LSO and the 4th with Amsterdam's Concertgebouw, Maestro Solti in his first recordings with the Chicago has committed the 5th and 6th to wax. (We'll talk about the 6th next week.)

The Chicago Symphony, by the way, is the latest major American orchestra to go over to a European recording company — in fact, two of them. Carl Maria Giulini, Solti's Chicago co-conducting colleague, leads them on England's Angel label, with Solti doing the honors on London (whose parent company is Decca Records, Ltd., of England). The Chicago Symphony for many years recorded for RCA under Fritz Reiner and later Jean Martinon.

A new Mahler 5th is not short on competition, however. About five years ago, Erich Leinsdorf recorded it with the Boston Symphony and the combination turned out a prize-winning disc. Even today, the Leinsdorf-Boston version remains practically untouchable in its clarity and articulation, both in execution and concept.

The major difference between Leinsdorf and Solti, however, is not one of comparative abilities, but in the way they treat the music. Leinsdorf, as we have noted earlier, tends to view his Mahler in a somewhat more tragic light — and aspect, we might add that fits in quite well with the strength and intensity which Leinsdorf wields with his baton.

Solti takes a somewhat softer view; he takes his slow tempi a bit slower and softer, allowing them to loll leisurely in their lyricism, and he tends to bear down harder and more quickly on the more animated thundering passages. Thus while Solti does not have the estimable French horn playing of a James Stagliano in the third movement (as Leinsdorf did), he massages the music in lighter, spirited vein. The slow fourth movement, very lovely indeed in is an almost breathlessly beautiful, luxuriating in Solti's sunny romanticism.

The recording from a technical standpoint is more airly resonant than the Leinsdorf on RCA, but after that it's almost a tossup on the audio score.

Yvonne Minton is the soloist on the "Wunderhorn" excerpts. Hers is an even, well-modulated vocal style, though we are inclined to think that her rendition is too straightforward to capture the mood of the songs, which in other performances have comethrough as genuinely moving experiences. The anticlimacticism is all the more noticeable following up the Solti symphonic performance.

Miss Minton, of course, may not believe in all that and within her own particular framework the songs are nicely, if all too neatly, done.

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINES
NEW YORK, N.Y.
OCT 1

DISCUSSIONS

THE BEST NEW LPs, CASSETTES & CARTRIDGES

BY ROY HEMMING
with Dave Finkle, Bud Scoppa

• Fabulous Broadway (Music from: Hair, Company, Man of La Mancha, Fiddler on the Roof) — Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler [Polydor 24-5003].

• Dvorak: New World Symphony & Carnival Overture — Boston Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler [RCA Red Seal LSC 3134].

There is a regrettable tendency among musical snobs (and America's are among the world's worst) to dismiss Arthur Fiedler as a popular but strictly lightweight conductor. Yet the success of the Boston Pops over the past 40 years clearly rests as much on Fiedler's immense talents as on the popular appeal or "hipness" of his programs (as the experience of New York's and Philadelphia's Pops under other conductors has certainly proved). Moreover, Fiedler is respected in other parts of the world (particularly in South America) as a solid, able conductor of all kinds of symphonic music.

Fiedler: unmatched

Last season, on the occasion of Fiedler's 75th birthday, the Boston Symphony (from whose members the Boston Pops is drawn) finally invited Fiedler to guest-conduct a regular concert. RCA's recording of the Dvorak "New World" commemorates that event (although there's not a single reference to it in the liner notes!). Fiedler leads a marvelously spirited, warm, vibrant performance, with a particularly haunting Largo (from which the familiar "Goin' Home" is taken). He rounds off the disc with a rousing Carnival Overture.

Fiedler's first Boston Pops disc under a new Polydor/Deutsche Grammophon contract finds him serving up some uniquely New World musical pastry: Broadway show music. Fiedler is in his best "pops" form — injecting a vitality and crispness into these tunes that few others ever match. One expects the medleys from Fiddler and La Mancha to glow under Fiedler's baton (and they do). But the knockout Hair medley is the album's real prize — making mincemeat of the generation gap, as Fiedler so often does. He then rounds off the disc by showing how on-top-of-things he is, playing the best new Broadway score of the year: Stephen Sondheim's Company. (R.H.)

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINES
SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
NOV 2 1970

DISCUSSIONS

THE BEST NEW LPs, CASSETTES & CARTRIDGES

• Charles Ives: Calcium Light Night — Gunther Schuller & Orchestra [Columbia Stereo LP MS7318].

Schuller: prophetic

Artists seem to suffer two fates: (1) over-adulation in their lifetime, followed by a fast loss of interest and even scorn; or (2) lack of recognition or neglect in their lifetime, then belated realization of their genius. Charles Ives (1874-1954) is a classic case of the latter.

Connecticut-born Ives wrote some of the most ruggedly individualistic music of the early 20th century — sometimes ahead of Schoenberg, Stravinsky, Bartok, and others in musical ideas. Yet only recently have Ives' works begun to be played (and recorded) with any regularity. Some works, left by Ives in unedited manuscript form, have been edited, reconstructed, or unscrambled by Henry Cowell, Leonard Bernstein, Stokowski, and others. Now composer-conductor Gunther Schuller has turned his hand to editing the major portion of Ives' works for chamber orchestra — and come up with one of the finest albums of the year. The album includes a 4-page set of notes in which Schuller explains exactly which works are as Ives wrote them, which ones he has "reconstructed" (and in what way), and which options he chose when Ives' scores existed in several different forms.

There is not enough space to discuss the merits or delights of each of the 20 short pieces on the LP. There is less of the raucous humor and wild jesting found in some of Ives' bigger orchestral works, but the same fascinating mixture of hymn tunes, patriotic songs, college songs, ragtime, multiple rhythms, polytonality, and everything else (virtually up to the proverbial kitchen sink!). Two pieces, "The Pond" and "Incantation," are among the most lovely lyric pieces Ives ever wrote. "Calcium Light Night" and "A Lecture" are intriguing reminiscences of student days (Yale, 1890's). And "The New River" is an astonishingly prophetic (for 1911) lament for what industrial pollution was doing to Connecticut's Housatonic River.

The chamber orchestra Schuller has assembled for the recording (including the Boston Symphony's percussion section) is excellent. (R.H.)

Records in Review

New Sounds in Boston and Chicago

By WILLIAM A. STORRER

What kind of sound perspective is right for a symphony orchestra? This question has bothered auditors and recording engineers for many years. Now, courtesy of Deutsche Grammophon and British Decca (London in the U.S.) we can hear a whole new approach that perfectly fits the conditions of the individual recording.

When Erich Leinsdorf became music director of the Boston Symphony, he devoted much time to "changing the sound of the ensemble." He spoke of how music was rooted in the fundamental of the harmonic superstructure. Soon the bright French sound of Munch was replaced with a darker, so-called mid-European, sound of Leinsdorf.

As a critic I had much to dislike in this change, not for what it was, but for the attitude it represented. The sound, itself, was good. But the sound at any given moment in a symphony cannot alone produce a satisfying performance. It is the succession of sounds that makes the work and the performance, and this is rhythm. Conductors with a great sense of rhythmic structure in the long run seem to come out ahead of those who concentrate on texture. Ernest Ansermet was the conductor whose exception proves the rule of Toscanini, Szell, van Beinum, Koussevitzky, Bernstein, Munch, Karajan, Solti and so many others.

Few Leinsdorf recordings have transcended his fetish over texture and displayed the natural, instinctively correct sense of rhythmic pulse that makes for a great performance. His Barber of Seville, Mahler First Symphony, Beethoven Seventh and Verdi's Macbeth bear repeated hearings. I keep few other Leinsdorf recordings on my shelf.

Now we have a new sound from Boston and Chicago. It is not, however, so much a new sound of the conductor overconcerned with that aspect, but a sound determined by the recording companies, DGG and Decca. Each has brought to its new base an attitude towards recording that is quite different from that of their common predecessor, RCA Victor.

Victor always worked for what might be called an idealized conception of the sound of the orchestra. This sound is not what one hears in the concert hall, but it is what the recording company thinks might be heard by an auditor in the best seat in a house filled so as to achieve an ideal reverberation time. Since the living room is not a concert hall, the recording company must transform it into an ideal listening room.

Deutsche Grammophon and Decca believe, as I, that one comes closest to a natural acoustic sound by recording the orchestra as it sounds in performance. If the living room is not ideal it, not the recording, should be changed. The only question that then remains is, where does one get the most natural sound.

RCA's sound was decidedly first row center. It "overstated" the music, placing the listener almost on the conductor's podium. London has moved back in the auditorium several rows, yet has gained in true impact. I have never before heard the Chicago Symphony sound so magnificent. DGG has chosen at least two perspectives for their initial Boston releases, one for the BSO, another for Pops.

The Pops sound is simply perfection. When I was recording in Boston in the late fifties and early sixties, I tried to achieve exactly what I hear in the album "Fabulous Broadway" (Polydor 24-5003). It is very close to the sound that emanated from the Symphony Hall stage just after new AKG microphones were installed for the stereo broadcasts about eight years ago. The Pops sounds fantastically brilliant in an acoustic of utmost clarity with broad stereo spread that is stunning; like a Pops night sans coughs, applause and popping champagne corks. Fiedler presents medleys from Hair, Fiddler on the Roof, Man of La Mancha and Company. DGG lists all the members of the Pops and, in a gesture that ought to be repeated elsewhere, even gives the numbers of the original Broadway cast recordings of these shows by competing record companies!

Many readers find, the BSO sound hard to adjust to on a first auditing. The perspective is that of a seat far back in Symphony Hall, yet perfectly natural from that viewpoint. This serves the music; Debussy's Nocturnes and Ravel's Second Daphnis and Chloe Suite with the Pavane pour une Infante defunte (2530 038) on a disc with Claudio Abbado as conductor, and Charles Ives' Three Places in New England coupled to Carl Ruggles' Sun-treader conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas.

One should have, perhaps, expected this change. A comparison of Munch's two recordings of the Berlioz Requiem is enlightening in this respect. The RCA set in front row center BSO, the DGG is tenth row BRO (Bavarian Radio Orchestra). I prefer the latter. We will have to wait on later releases to see if this is to be a permanent DGG perspective or if other "brighter" works will command a different approach.

One will also have to wait to see who else DGG records with the BSO. Their gesture of including Michael Tilson Thomas in their first Boston release will be commended by some. Others will wonder if DGG has not already exhausted the youthful conductor's repertory. I will hold my breath, for Thomas is not a Bernstein taking over from a Bruno Walter, nor ever a Bernard Haitink from a van Beinum. I wish him well, but have my doubts.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

NOV 12 1970

Classical Recordings—

Poetic Joys Of Drink And Love

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI) —In their sweet parting after decades-long togetherness, conservative old RCA and staid old Boston Symphony share a bit of pornography. It illustrates one of RCA's last recordings of the Boston Symphony, which is of Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana," with Seiji Ozawa conducting (3161).

This is the long-hair piece which the long-hair, rock generation finds sensual, as indeed it is, since it is a setting of ancient poetic texts given to the joys of drink and love. One Orff incident is illustrated on the cover. It couldn't be called hardcore pornography but both RCA and the Boston would have been revulsed by its explicitnesss not many years ago. How times have changed!

HOUR
NORWALK, CONN.
(E) 22,150

NOV 13 1970

Omaha World-Herald
OMAHA, NEBR.
(MORNING)
D. 125,376 SUN. 273,394

NOV 29 1970

Musicals

There is a maximum of enthusiasm and skill in the exposition Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops give to tunes from four musicals, "Hair," "Fiddler on the Roof," "Man of La Mancha" and "Company" for Polydor (24-5003).

Symphony treatment of "Acquarius," of "Matchmaker," of "Dulcinea" and of "Another Hundred People" is interesting at worst and on this one it is fetching.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 442,000

OCT 31 1970

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 244,000

NOV 7 1970

When the Boston Symphony, one of the half-dozen greatest orchestras in the world, concluded its long association with RCA and signed with Deutsche Grammophon, another of the most distinguished audio labels in the world, music headines were made. Naturally, early fruits of this international partnership make record news, and the news is good. The most arresting of these features the highly gifted young associate conductor of the Bostonians, Michael Tilson Thomas. He leads an opalescent yet translucent performance of Charles Ives's "Three Places in New England," paired, to the latter's disadvantage, with Carl Ruggles' rough-and-ready, rough-textured "Sun-treader" (Deutsche Grammophon S-2530 048). Mr. Thomas is about as "in" as a wunderkind can get. . . . Claudio Abbado shepherds the properly brilliant Bostonians in some silken readings of French repertory works already more than adequately recorded—Debussy's "Nocturnes," Ravel's second Daphnis and Chloe Suite and the "Pavane pour une Infante défunte" (Deutsche Grammophon S-2530 038). Incidentally, in preparing what I intended to be a spirited defense of the presumably collapsing classical-record market a few weeks ago, I misinterpreted a certain verbal statement made to me in good faith, and implied that DGG was flying the Boston Symphony to Europe for recording sessions. Not so. DGG rather has flown technicians and tons of equipment to Symphony Hall in Boston, where a studio has been built as an evidence of its faith in the BSO. I'm sorry for my inaccuracy and take joy in the faith.

Hindemith: Kleine Kammermusik (Op. 24, No. 2). Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Milhaud: Pastorale. Schubert: Trio in B flat (Op. 99). RCA stereo, LSC 3166, $5.98.

There is nothing but virtue in the fulfillment of Hindemith's purpose in his five contrasted movements. However, that is not praise so much as verification of the results to be expected from an ensemble whose components include R. Gomberg, oboe; G. Cioffi, clarinet; S. Walt, bassoon; D. A. Dwyer, flute; and John Stagliano, horn—the prime players of their instruments in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As much may be said for the delightful Pastorale of Milhaud whose performers may be—the attributions are vague on this point—Messrs. Gomberg, Cioffi, and Walt. At least they are the ones in the listing who play (well) the instruments for which the work is scored. A rather different thing, however, is the Schubert Trio, for which the string players are Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the BSO, and Jules Eskin, its first cellist. There being no pianist, as such, in the orchestra, Claude Frank has been enlisted as "guest artist." An excellent technician and a particularly able chamber music player, Frank's choice is, abstractly, good. But he produces nothing personal to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, nor does the work really belong in a context of such values. It is clean, affectionate, sophisticated Schubert that he produces with Silverstein and Eskin, a little inclined toward the academic in its unvarying concern for every marking and detail in the score. The inclusion of them is applaudable, but one would prefer to have them integrated into an overall conception that sweeps on irresistibly, rather than observed as so many stop signs, red lights, and crossing markings on the way home. Fine sound.

DISCUSSIONS

THE BEST NEW LPs, CASSETTES & CARTRIDGES

BY ROY HEMMING, DAVE FINKLE, BUD SCOPPA

3

Ives: 3 Places in New England; Ruggles: Sun-Treader—Michael Tilson Thomas, Boston Symphony Orchestra [Deutsche Grammophon 2530048]

Not since Leonard Bernstein in the 1940's has a young American conductor bowled over the musical Establishment as completely as 25-year-old Michael Tilson Thomas. After a dramatic, last-minute substitution last fall for the ailing regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, the young Californian went on to conduct 30 other BSO concerts to tremendous acclaim — and to make the orchestra's first recording under its new contract with Deutsche Grammophon. The result of the latter is a triumph for Thomas, for the Boston Symphony, and for Deutsche Grammophon.

Charles Ives' 3 Places in New England is one of the most profoundly piercing inquiries into Americana by any composer. Completed in 1914, it was ahead of its time then, and is still too rarely performed. It is a complex work, both musically and psychologically — by turns shatteringly dramatic and wildly irreverent. It combines bits of old popular songs, hymns, and patriotic marches, and sometimes goes off in several directions at once. Thomas's performance is stunning. He gives parts of the "Putnam's Camp at Redding, Conn." section a more naturally "swinging" jazziness than Ormandy's earlier recording. And the final "Housatonic at Stockbridge" is powerfully performed and beautifully recorded.

Paul J. Hoeffler photo
Thomas: a triumph

Ruggles' symphonic poem Sun-Treader (1932) was inspired by Robert Browning's tribute to Shelley in the poem Pauline ("Light and Life be thine forever . . ."). One critic has aptly described Sun-Treader as having "the remarkable effect of being composed in densities and intensities of sound. The piece is blocked out in rising and falling lines . . . that well up like the rocky contours of a giant landscape." Thomas and the BSO give it a superbly strong, intense performance. (R.H.)

SCHOLASTIC VOICE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. - CIRC. N. A/AIL.

NOV 2 1970

Robert Marsh/Music

BSO on DGG! Great expectations!

Ever since it first arrayed itself before the recording horn 54 years ago with the aristocratic Karl Muck conducting, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been closely associated with the Victor Talking Machine Co. and its corporate successors.

The fact that it suddenly appears before us on the yellow labels of the Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft (with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" on a sporty red Polydor label) brings home the message that the American recording scene is changing rapidly in the classical department.

For years, American companies recorded American orchestras at home and then supplemented their catalogs with records made by European musicians. Now it's the other way around. American companies are doing very little recording of symphonic and operatic music and European record producers are coming into the American field for the first time to use American orchestras for disks of international distribution.

The great attraction of recording abroad always was costs. Orchestra wages were much lower than American scale, so you could get the job done for less. But if costs were lower, so was efficiency. At one session I recall, Artur Rodzinski and one of the best London orchestras spent over two hours recording one 12-minute piece.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED in Europe is that wages have gone up, but the players are no better than they were before. If you come to the United States, the orchestra costs you more per hour, but you get first class music to sell for every minute of recording time you buy.

Thus, although DGG has the great Berlin Philharmonic on its label, the Boston Symphony and Boston "Pops" were a welcome addition.

Boston thus has gone from RCA to DGG, and Chicago, another former RCA orchestra, has moved to EMI (Angel) and the British Decca Co. (London). British Decca also has the Los Angeles Philharmonic, and EMI has been working with the Cleveland Orchestra (which also retains an affiliation with Columbia). Columbia, which once had three of the "Big Five" orchestras (New York, Philadelphia and Cleveland) apparently is using the New York Philharmonic as its primary source of symphonic disks, while RCA has the Philadelphia, under a recent label switch, and is also making use of the London Symphony.

The Cincinnati Symphony is heard on records from the American Decca Co., the Louisville Orchestra records on its own label, and The Utah Symphony works for Vanguard. This leaves some fairly distinguished orchestras, the San Francisco Symphony, the Houston Symphony, the Minnesota Orchestra, the National Symphony and the American Symphony — all of which have recorded in the past — unrepresented on current disks.

THE BOSTON RECORDS are out a little sooner than expected, since the illness of conductor William Steinberg last season upset RCA's plans for the year and permitted the German company to get an early start with sessions last March. As a reminder of the transitional period, we have the first DGG Boston release, with three conductors, and the last of the RCA material, with Seiji Ozawa, music director of the BSO's Tanglewood concerts, in charge.

It is soon apparent that the distinctive recorded sound of the Boston Symphony is, in fact, the synthesis of Serge Koussevitzky's training and Wallace Sabine's acoustical designs for Symphony Hall. If you can make appropriate discounts for 20-year-old sound, the sonorities on the DGG disks are close kin to those of Koussevitzky at work on Victrola VIC-1510, a recently re-released historic recording of one of his specialties, the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

Making comparisons in terms of 1970 and stereo, RCA's recent work produced by Peter Dellheim is plainly the same orchestra and the same hall that one hears in the work of the German team headed by Karl Faust and Rainer Brock. The dual aspect that the Chicago Symphony has displayed as recorded by EMI and British Decca is not present.

RCA's one session with Steinberg, some time last autumn, produced the Symphony No. 9 of Schubert in one of the finer recorded versions of this much-heard work, LSC 3115. It was a promising debut, but illness intervened and the next three records brought three different conductors.

THE OZAWA-RCA RECORD (LSC 3167) completes that conductor's cycle of the three great Stravinsky ballets. He did "The Rite of Spring" for RCA with the Chicago Symphony, and here on a two well filled surfaces are the 1919 suite from the "Firebird" and the 1947 version of "Petrouchka." — not excerpts but the full concert score.

This gives Ozawa a decided advantage over the recent release of music from these ballets by the Chicago Symphony and Carlo Maria Giulini. You get more music for your money with Ozawa, and it is music worth having, since these performance have the rhythmic bite and the keen sense of Stravinsky style that Guilini's lack.

Pianist in the "Petrouchka" is Michael Tilson Thomas, who reappears in the DGG series as conductor of Ives' "Three Places in New England" and Ruggles "Sun Treader," on 2530048 and as a member of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in a lovely Debussy collection on 2530049.

Suddenly you sense why DGG really wanted Boston. It's the greatest orchestra for French music in the world, far surpassing anything in Paris. If you have any doubts, listen to 2530038 in which Claudio Abbado directs, with chorus, the "Three Nocturnes" of Debussy, Ravel's "Pavanne for a Dead Princess," and the second suite from "Daphnis and Chloe."

The recorded performances convey a sense of a living tradition and, in the case of the "Daphnis and Chloe," take one's thoughts back to Koussevitzky version of 40 years ago in which the same grasp of style, the same lightness and refinement in playing, and the same exquisite coloration may be found.

AND THE BOSTON "POPS" and Fiedler haven't changed any either. Polydor 24-5003 offers music from "Hair," "Man of La Mancha," "Fiddler on the Roof" and "Company" in arrangements that ocassionally get a bit pretentious but always reflect the Fiedler touch. This is prime symphonic fun.

Even so, the Ives-Ruggles record wins my special regard. For a German company to begin its American affiliation by choosing a young American conductor to lead American music reflects a degree of sophistication and cultural commitment I must respect. Moreover it's a sensational record, two powerful scores, with the Ruggles a work as solid and gaunt as the granite in the New England hills. This is music not only made in America, but made here in a way it could be made nowhere else.

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
D. 546,570 SUN. 712,125

NOV 15 1970

Records in Review

New Sounds in Boston and Chicago

By WILLIAM A. STORRER

What kind of sound perspective is right for a symphony orchestra? This question has bothered auditors and recording engineers for many years. Now, courtesy of Deutsche Grammophon and British Decca (London in the U.S.) we can hear a whole new approach that perfectly fits the conditions of the individual recording.

When Erich Leinsdorf became music director of the Boston Symphony, he devoted much time to "changing the sound of the ensemble." He spoke of how music was rooted in the fundamental of the harmonic superstructure. Soon the bright French sound of Munch was replaced with a darker, so-called mid-European, sound of Leinsdorf.

As a critic I had much to dislike in this change, not for what it was, but for the attitude it represented. The sound, itself, was good. But the sound at any given moment in a symphony cannot alone produce a satisfying performance. It is the succession of sounds that makes the work and the performance, and this is rhythm. Conductors with a great sense of rhythmic structure in the long run seem to come out ahead of those who concentrate on texture. Ernest Ansermet was the conductor whose exception proves the rule of Toscanini, Szell, van Beinum, Koussevitzky, Bernstein, Munch, Karajan, Solti and so many others.

Few Leinsdorf recordings have transcended his fetish over texture and displayed the natural, instinctively correct sense of rhythmic pulse that makes for a great performance. His Barber of Seville, Mahler First Symphony, Beethoven Seventh and Verdi's Macbeth bear repeated hearings. I keep few other Leinsdorf recordings on my shelf.

Now we have a new sound from Boston and Chicago. It is not, however, so much a new sound of the conductor overconcerned with that aspect, but a sound determined by the recording companies, DGG and Decca. Each has brought to its new base an attitude towards recording that is quite different from that of their common predecessor, RCA Victor.

Victor always worked for what might be called an idealized conception of the sound of the orchestra. This sound is not what one hears in the concert hall, but it is what the recording company thinks might be heard by an auditor in the best seat in a house filled so as to achieve an ideal reverberation time. Since the living room is not a concert hall, the recording company must transform it into an ideal listening room.

Deutsche Grammophon and Decca believe, as I, that one comes closest to a natural acoustic sound by recording the orchestra as it sounds in performance. If the living room is not ideal it, not the recording, should be changed. The only question that then remains is, where does one get the most natural sound.

RCA's sound was decidedly first row center. It "overstated" the music, placing the listener almost on the conductor's podium. London has moved back in the auditorium several rows, yet has gained in true impact. I have never before heard the Chicago Symphony sound so magnificent. DGG has chosen at least two perspectives for their initial Boston releases, one for the BSO, another for Pops.

The Pops sound is simply perfection. When I was recording in Boston in the late fifties and early sixties, I tried to achieve exactly what I hear in the album "Fabulous Broadway" (Polydor 24-5003). It is very close to the sound that emanated from the Symphony Hall stage just after new AKG microphones were installed for the stereo broadcasts about eight years ago. The Pops sounds fantastically brilliant in an acoustic of utmost clarity with broad stereo spread that is stunning; like a Pops night sans coughs, applause and popping champagne corks. Fiedler presents medleys from Hair, Fiddler on the Roof, Man of La Mancha and Company. DGG lists all the members of the Pops and, in a gesture that ought to be repeated elsewhere, even gives the numbers of the original Broadway cast recordings of these shows by competing record companies!

Many readers find, the BSO sound hard to adjust to on a first auditing. The perspective is that of a seat far back in Symphony Hall, yet perfectly natural from that viewpoint. This serves the music; Debussy's Nocturnes and Ravel's Second Daphnis and Chloe Suite with the Pavane pour une Infante defunte (2530 038) on a disc with Claudio Abbado as conductor, and Charles Ives' Three Places in New England coupled to Carl Ruggles' Sun-treader conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas.

One should have, perhaps, expected this change. A comparison of Munch's two recordings of the Berlioz Requiem is enlightening in this respect. The RCA set in front row center BSO, the DGG is tenth row BRO (Bavarian Radio Orchestra). I prefer the latter. We will have to wait on later releases to see if this is to be a permanent DGG perspective or if other "brighter" works will command a different approach.

One will also have to wait to see who else DGG records with the BSO. Their gesture of including Michael Tilson Thomas in their first Boston release will be commended by some. Others will wonder if DGG has not already exhausted the youthful conductor's repertory. I will hold my breath, for Thomas is not a Bernstein taking over from a Bruno Walter, nor ever a Bernard Haitink from a van Beinum. I wish him well, but have my doubts.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

NOV 12 1970

Classical Recordings—

Poetic Joys Of Drink And Love

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI) —In their sweet parting after decades-long togetherness, conservative old RCA and staid old Boston Symphony share a bit of pornography. It illustrates one of RCA's last recordings of the Boston Symphony, which is of Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana," with Seiji Ozawa conducting (3161).

This is the long-hair piece which the long-hair, rock generation finds sensual, as indeed it is, since it is a setting of ancient poetic texts given to the joys of drink and love. One Orff incident is illustrated on the cover. It couldn't be called hardcore pornography but both RCA and the Boston would have been revulsed by its explicitnesss not many years ago. How times have changed!

HOUR
NORWALK, CONN.
(E) 22,150

NOV 13 1970

Omaha World-Herald
OMAHA, NEBR.
(MORNING)
D. 125,376 SUN. 272,391

NOV 29 1970

Musicals

There is a maximum of enthusiasm and skill in the exposition Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops give to tunes from four musicals, "Hair," "Fiddler on the Roof," "Man of La Mancha" and "Company" for Polydor (24-5003).

Symphony treatment of "Acquarius," of "Matchmaker," of "Dulcinea" and of "Another Hundred People" is interesting at worst and on this one it is fetching.

When the Boston Symphony, one of the half-dozen greatest orchestras in the world, concluded its long association with RCA and signed with Deutsche Grammophon, another of the most distinguished audio labels in the world, music headines were made. Naturally, early fruits of this international partnership make record news, and the news is good. The most arresting of these features the highly gifted young associate conductor of the Bostonians, Michael Tilson Thomas. He leads an opalescent yet translucent performance of Charles Ives's "Three Places in New England," paired, to the latter's disadvantage, with Carl Ruggles' rough-and-ready, rough-textured "Sun-treader" (Deutsche Grammophon S-2530 048). Mr. Thomas is about as "in" as a wunderkind can get. . . . Claudio Abbado shepherds the properly brilliant Bostonians in some silken readings of French repertory works already more than adequately recorded—Debussy's "Nocturnes," Ravel's second Daphnis and Chloe Suite and the "Pavane pour une Infante défunte" (Deutsche Grammophon S-2530 038). Incidentally, in preparing what I intended to be a spirited defense of the presumably collapsing classical-record market a few weeks ago, I misinterpreted a certain verbal statement made to me in good faith, and implied that DGG was flying the Boston Symphony to Europe for recording sessions. Not so. DGG rather has flown technicians and tons of equipment to Symphony Hall in Boston, where a studio has been built as an evidence of its faith in the BSO. I'm sorry for my inaccuracy and take joy in the faith.

CUE
NEW YORK
W. 216

NOV 2 1970

OCT 1 1970

Hindemith: Kleine Kammermusik (Op. 24, No. 2). Boston Symphony Chamber Players. Milhaud: Pastorale. Schubert: Trio in B flat (Op. 99). RCA stereo, LSC 3166, $5.98.

There is nothing but virtue in the fulfillment of Hindemith's purpose in his five contrasted movements. However, that is not praise so much as verification of the results to be expected from an ensemble whose components include R. Gomberg, oboe; G. Cioffi, clarinet; S. Walt, bassoon; D. A. Dwyer, flute; and John Stagliano, horn—the prime players of their instruments in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As much may be said for the delightful Pastorale of Milhaud whose performers may be—the attributions are vague on this point—Messrs. Gomberg, Cioffi, and Walt. At least they are the ones in the listing who play (well) the instruments for which the work is scored. A rather different thing, however, is the Schubert Trio, for which the string players are Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the BSO, and Jules Eskin, its first cellist. There being no pianist, as such, in the orchestra, Claude Frank has been enlisted as "guest artist." An excellent technician and a particularly able chamber music player, Frank's choice is, abstractly, good. But he produces nothing personal to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, nor does the work really belong in a context of such values. It is clean, affectionate, sophisticated Schubert that he produces with Silverstein and Eskin, a little inclined toward the academic in its unvarying concern for every marking and detail in the score. The inclusion of them is applaudable, but one would prefer to have them integrated into an overall conception that sweeps on irresistibly, rather than observed as so many stop signs, red lights, and crossing markings on the way home. Fine sound.

DISCUSSIONS

THE BEST NEW LPs, CASSETTES & CARTRIDGES

BY ROY HEMMING, DAVE FINKLE, BUD SCOPPA

Ives: 3 Places in New England; Ruggles: Sun-Treader—Michael Tilson Thomas, Boston Symphony Orchestra [Deutsche Grammophon 2530048]

Not since Leonard Bernstein in the 1940's has a young American conductor bowled over the musical Establishment as completely as 25-year-old Michael Tilson Thomas. After a dramatic, last-minute substitution last fall for the ailing regular conductor of the Boston Symphony, the young Californian went on to conduct 30 other BSO concerts to tremendous acclaim — and to make the orchestra's first recording under its new contract with Deutsche Grammophon. The result of the latter is a triumph for Thomas, for the Boston Symphony, and for Deutsche Grammophon.

Charles Ives' 3 Places in New England is one of the most profoundly piercing inquiries into Americana by any composer. Completed in 1914, it was ahead of its time then, and is still too rarely performed. It is a complex work, both musically and psychologically — by turns shatteringly dramatic and wildly irreverent. It combines bits of old popular songs, hymns, and patriotic marches, and sometimes goes off in several directions at once. Thomas's performance is stunning. He gives parts of the "Putnam's Camp at Redding, Conn." section a more naturally "swinging" jazziness than Ormandy's earlier recording. And the final "Housatonic at Stockbridge" is powerfully performed and beautifully recorded.

Paul J. Hoeffler photo
Thomas: a triumph

Ruggles' symphonic poem Sun-Treader (1932) was inspired by Robert Browning's tribute to Shelley in the poem Pauline ("Light and Life be thine forever . . ."). One critic has aptly described Sun-Treader as having "the remarkable effect of being composed in densities and intensities of sound. The piece is blocked out in rising and falling lines . . . that well up like the rocky contours of a giant landscape." Thomas and the BSO give it a superbly strong, intense performance. (R.H.)

SCHOLASTIC DANCE
NEW YORK
W.-C.

NOV 2 1970

Robert Marsh/Music

BSO on DGG! Great expectations!

Ever since it first arrayed itself before the recording horn 54 years ago with the aristocratic Karl Muck conducting, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been closely associated with the Victor Talking Machine Co. and its corporate successors.

The fact that it suddenly appears before us on the yellow labels of the Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft (with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" on a sporty red Polydor label) brings home the message that the American recording scene is changing rapidly in the classical department.

For years, American companies recorded American orchestras at home and then supplemented their catalogs with records made by European musicians. Now it's the other way around. American companies are doing very little recording of symphonic and operatic music and European record producers are coming into the American field for the first time to use American orchestras for disks of international distribution.

The great attraction of recording abroad always was costs. Orchestra wages were much lower than American scale, so you could get the job done for less. But if costs were lower, so was efficiency. At one session I recall, Artur Rodzinski and one of the best London orchestras spent over two hours recording one 12-minute piece.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED in Europe is that wages have gone up, but the players are no better than they were before. If you come to the United States, the orchestra costs you more per hour, but you get first class music to sell for every minute of recording time you buy.

Thus, although DGG has the great Berlin Philharmonic on its label, the Boston Symphony and Boston "Pops" were a welcome addition.

Boston thus has gone from RCA to DGG, and Chicago, another former RCA orchestra, has moved to EMI (Angel) and the British Decca Co. (London). British Decca also has the Los Angeles Philharmonic, and EMI has been working with the Cleveland Orchestra (which also retains an affiliation with Columbia). Columbia, which once had three of the "Big Five" orchestras (New York, Philadelphia and Cleveland) apparently is using the New York Philharmonic as its primary source of symphonic disks, while RCA has the Philadelphia, under a recent label switch, and is also making use of the London Symphony.

The Cincinnati Symphony is heard on records from the American Decca Co., the Louisville Orchestra records on its own label, and The Utah Symphony works for Vanguard. This leaves some fairly distinguished orchestras, the San Francisco Symphony, the Houston Symphony, the Minnesota Orchestra, the National Symphony and the American Symphony — all of which have recorded in the past — unrepresented on current disks.

THE BOSTON RECORDS are out a little sooner than expected, since the illness of conductor William Steinberg last season upset RCA's plans for the year and permitted the German company to get an early start with sessions last March. As a reminder of the transitional period, we have the first DGG Boston release, with three conductors, and the last of the RCA material, with Seiji Ozawa, music director of the BSO's Tanglewood concerts, in charge.

It is soon apparent that the distinctive recorded sound of the Boston Symphony is, in fact, the synthesis of Serge Koussevitzky's training and Wallace Sabine's acoustical designs for Symphony Hall. If you can make appropriate discounts for 20-year-old sound, the sonorities on the DGG disks are close kin to those of Koussevitzky at work on Victrola VIC-1510, a recently re-released historic recording of one of his specialties, the Second Symphony of Sibelius.

Making comparisons in terms of 1970 and stereo, RCA's recent work produced by Peter Dellheim is plainly the same orchestra and the same hall that one hears in the work of the German team headed by Karl Faust and Rainer Brock. The dual aspect that the Chicago Symphony has displayed as recorded by EMI and British Decca is not present.

RCA's one session with Steinberg, some time last autumn, produced the Symphony No. 9 of Schubert in one of the finer recorded versions of this much-heard work, LSC 3115. It was a promising debut, but illness intervened and the next three records brought three different conductors.

THE OZAWA-RCA RECORD (LSC 3167) completes that conductor's cycle of the three great Stravinsky ballets. He did "The Rite of Spring" for RCA with the Chicago Symphony, and here on a two well filled surfaces are the 1919 suite from the "Firebird" and the 1947 version of "Petrouchka." — not excerpts but the full concert score.

This gives Ozawa a decided advantage over the recent release of music from these ballets by the Chicago Symphony and Carlo Maria Giulini. You get more music for your money with Ozawa, and it is music worth having, since these performance have the rhythmic bite and the keen sense of Stravinsky style that Guilini's lack.

Pianist in the "Petrouchka" is Michael Tilson Thomas, who reappears in the DGG series as conductor of Ives' "Three Places in New England" and Ruggles "Sun Treader," on 2530048 and as a member of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in a lovely Debussy collection on 2530049.

Suddenly you sense why DGG really wanted Boston. It's the greatest orchestra for French music in the world, far surpassing anything in Paris. If you have any doubts, listen to 2530038 in which Claudio Abbado directs, with chorus, the "Three Nocturnes" of Debussy, Ravel's "Pavanne for a Dead Princess," and the second suite from "Daphnis and Chloe."

The recorded performances convey a sense of a living tradition and, in the case of the "Daphnis and Chloe," take one's thoughts back to Koussevitzky version of 40 years ago in which the same grasp of style, the same lightness and refinement in playing, and the same exquisite coloration may be found.

AND THE BOSTON "POPS" and Fiedler haven't changed any either. Polydor 24-5003 offers music from "Hair," "Man of La Mancha," "Fiddler on the Roof" and "Company" in arrangements that ocassionally get a bit pretentious but always reflect the Fiedler touch. This is prime symphonic fun.

Even so, the Ives-Ruggles record wins my special regard. For a German company to begin its American affiliation by choosing a young American conductor to lead American music reflects a degree of sophistication and cultural commitment I must respect. Moreover it's a sensational record, two powerful scores, with the Ruggles a work as solid and gaunt as the granite in the New England hills. This is music not only made in America, but made here in a way it could be made nowhere else.

CHICAGO
SUN-TIMES
D. 546,570 SUN. 712,125

NOV 15 1970

DISC-COURSE

Rubinstein performs at Post Jan. 29

by BOB BERNSTEIN

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15. Artur Rubinstein, piano. Boston Symphony Orchestra Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor LSC-3013.

With this release, Rubinstein is only one concerto shy of completing a second Beethoven concerto cycle in the stereo era (the first cycle had Josef Krips and the Symphony of the Air as Rubinstein's collaborators). The Op. 15 is beautifully played, exhibiting all of the well-seasoned latter-day Rubinstein characteristics: more reserve than romanticism, more elegance than brio, more pearly suavity than passion. All the miraculous tone and singing rhythm that is the Rubinstein hallmark is here, even though Beethoven himself may be largely missing. (Long Islanders still have an opportunity to hear Rubinstein in recital at C.W. Post Center Auditorium on Friday night, January 29 at 8:40. (Remaining tickets are $9, obtainable by writing to Island Concert Hall, Inc., Box 372, Roslyn Heights, N.Y. 11577 or phoning MA 1-4444.)

L I COMMERCIAL REVIEW
SYOSSET, N.Y
D. CIRC. N.AVAIL

DEC 29 1970

Disc Course

Something Different By Boston Symphony

By Bert Willard
News-Press Staff Writer

Parting is such sweet sorrow — or is it?

Not too long ago, RCA Victor severed its hallowed ties with an old friend, the Boston Symphony. That doesn't mean you won't be seeing any more RCA recordings of the Boston orchestra. Far from it — there is a backlog of material in the vaults, enough to fill the record store shelves for months to come.

Before they parted, the Boston Symphony under "mod" Seiji Ozawa came up with Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana" on the RCA label (RCA Victor 3161). And to push sales of this classic, RCA even stooped to sensationalism, emphasizing the rather pornagraphic (?) nature of the lyrics which Orff used as a setting for this cantata based on the joys of carousing and erotic and sensual love.

It's not hardcore porno, to be sure, but it's a far cry from the kind of stuff RCA formerly recorded — and Orff's music, as well as the texts, appeal to the rock generation which has discovered eroticism and the joys of living — and loving — are not exactly new.

Ozawa does a firstrate job on the musical end of this production — and the sound is better than average.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
NEWS-PRESS
D. 38,000 S. 41,000

DEC 5 1970

Seiji Ozawa's Stravinsky

Ozawa's Stravinsky

Stravinsky: "Firebird Suite," "Petrouchka;" Seiji Ozawa, the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

When Ballet Russe director Diaghilev commissioned "Firebird," the work was intended as a gift to his now legendary student, Vaslav Nijunsky.

But "Firebird," along with "Rite of Spring" and "Petrouchka" have, in less than a century, been entrenched in standard ballet repertory around the globe.

Once shocking. (many insisted Stravinsky was a "witchdoctor of sound"), the trio now seem almost melodic when compared to recent 20th century works.

And two of the three are offered on this RCA release under the brilliant baton of Swiji Ozawa.

From "Firebird," the offering includes the Introduction, Firebird's Dance and Variation, Khorovod of the Princesses, Infernal Dance of Kastchei, Lullaby and Finale.

All that's missing as Ozawa pounds to his pulsating climax is Tamara Karsavina.

Little wonder the diva clung to the role as another woman might jealously guard her child.

The power of the "Firebird" is neutralized by the bittersweet delivery of "Petrouchka."

Admittedly, firebirds and magical feathers may not have universal appeal, but hopeless love and futility do. And the composer echoed the inevitability of this theme's appeal when he said he had discovered "Petrouchka, the immortal, wretched hero of every fair the world over."

Stravinsky's music and protagonist are fused in the outrageous, yet poignant score.

Brought to life for a few blazing moments, the puppet dances, loves and dies from an overdose of his own emotion.

Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" is all of us.

The recording is of the composer's 1947 revision of the score.

CHARLESTON W. VA.
GAZETTE-MAIL
SUN. 107,000

DEC 27 1970

Triple-Header Presented by Chamber Group

By MARC S. TASLITT

Boston Symphony Chamber Players: Schubert Trio, op. 99 (Claude Frank, piano); Milhaud Pastorale for Oboe, Clarinet, and Bassoon; Hindemith Kleine Kammermusik, op. 24, no. 2 for wind quintet. RCA LSC-3166.

Making a recording such as this is a worthwhile contribution to the ever-growing number of chamber music "variety packages," both for the selections offered and for the quality of the playing and interpretation.

The Schubert has been re-examined, with emphasis on total, continuous lyricism throughout. If the first movement tempo seems overly slow to some listeners, I suggest listening as though you have never heard it before, and as though countless trio players have not run rough-shod over its endless beauty. An extremely tasteful performance.

The Milhaud piece, in A-B-A (quasi Sonata) form, is a delightful and interesting blend of instruments, as well as a blend of 20th Century and neo-Renaissance sounds. The grace and charm of the writing are purely represented in the playing.

The same may be said of the playing in the Hindemith, although there is far more contrapuntal intricacy and rhythmic variety in this work. The logical chain of events is clearly understandable in this performance, with all the artists playing immaculately as individuals, and yet completely integrated as a whole.

This work is one of the finest in the wind quintet medium, and is a much-appreciated addition to a completely fine disc.

* * *

The Wichita Sunday
Eagle and Beacon
WICHITA, KANS.
SUN. 171,019

DEC 20 1970

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
(E) 107,575 (S) 121

JAN 10 1971

STRAVINSKY: Suite from The Firebird; Petrouchka (complete). Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa conducting. RCA LSC-3167 (S).

As might be expected, Ozawa conducts lively and exciting readings of these two war horses. Yet the results are curiously unmoving compared to such maestros as Ansermet and Monteux. Ozawa seems primarily concerned about bowling the listener over with sumptuous sound. With the aid of the brilliant Boston Symphony Orchestra, this is not too hard to do. Has this ensemble ever sounded bad on records? Not in my experience. The recorded sound is absolutely stunning and the surfaces are much better than the usual RCA product. If only Ozawa had gotten beneath the surface of these works, this would be quite a noteworthy record.

—Michael Mark

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

JAN 1971

Christmas Album Has Holiday Joy

One of the Christmas albums with a lot of holiday spirit and joy is the two-LP set, "The American Family Album of Favorite Christmas Music," a reissue, on RCA. This has the Boston Pops on two sides and the Robert Shaw Chorale on two. The Boston Pops has a side for six bright songs, like "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" and "Sleigh-Ride;" and a side for "Nutcracker" experts, "Sleigh Ride" as written by Mozart, and the dream from "Hansel and Gretel."

The Robert Shaw Chorale has a side for carols and liner notes explain their origins, with more of them from America than we had realized, and a side for exerpts from Handel's "Messiah." The sound and the execution is excellent on this album.

Polydor, the label the Boston Pops is with now, has issued "A Christmas Festival" conducted by Arthur Fielder.

It starts with a 10-minute medley of carols, arranged by Leroy Anderson. There's nothing flashy in this, in fact the arrangements are quite subtle. It would be quality background music for an open house. Also on the album are Bach's lovely "Shepherd's Pastorale" and an instrumental "Hallelujah Chorus."

STAUNTON, VA.
NEWS-LEADER
S. 15,000

DEC 6 1970

DVOŘÁK: Symphony No. 9, in E Minor, Op. 95 ("From the New World"); Carnival Overture, Op. 92. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler cond. RCA LSC 3134 $5.98.

Performance: Spirited
Recording: Bright

Among the highlights of Arthur Fiedler's seventy-fifth birthday celebration last season was the opportunity to hear the venerable maestro of the Boston Pops take on the "parent" orchestra in a full subscription concert. This recording of Dvořák's "New World," of which there have been surprisingly few by native American conductors, is a tangible and altogether worthy souvenir of the occasion.

Fiedler's way with the "New World" is unfussy and spirited in the dramatic episodes, affectionate in the lyrical ones. The Carnival Overture reading that concludes the disc is a rouser. My only reservation about the performance of the symphony is Fiedler's curious failure to realize to its fullest dramatic potential the mighty outburst in the slow movement just before the reprise of the familiar main theme. This is a splendidly bright and full-bodied recording, but a mite brassy at times. D.H.

STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163.400

DEC 1970

The Mating Of BSO And DGG

By ABRAM CHIPMAN

RECORDS

Retrospectively, the most unique happening in recorded classical music during the past year or two has been the big American orchestras' big label switch. Philadelphia came full circle from Columbia back to RCA. Angel-EMI took out a loan on Cleveland and Chicago. More recently, the latter assemblage was introduced to London FFRR under their new music director, Georg Solti, and that combination's pair of Mahler albums will be discussed ere long in this column.

Most innovative, however, has been Deutsche Gramophon Gesellschaft's acquisition of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. DGG's crew is new to American halls, though German accents are not unfamiliar in Boston's musical life, half of the Symphony's dozen directors having been more-or-less teutonic in background. For a half century or so, the BSO has been the near - exclusive phonographic property of RCA Victor (the "near" modifier referring to Koussevitsky's concert performance, issued on Columbia, of Roy Harris' 1933 Symphony) and that long collaboration will doubtless remain documented for years to come on the Red Seal and Victrola labels, with a couple of things "in the icebox" awaiting issue. From now on, however, most of what's new out of Symphony Hall will come bearing that yellow label.

Three initial discs have been received that show how well the "Aristocrat of Orchestras" fares on DGG. Choice of repertoire reflects the European image of Boston's "Specialties de la Maison." There are two records of French impressionism, and one of contemporary American — New England Americana at that. And one of the French discs presents not the full orchestra but their highly successful offshoot—the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

New England Theme

The Yankee program couples Charles Ives' "Three Places in New England" with Carl Ruggles' "Sun Treader." The "Three Places" certainly deserved a recording by the Bostonians, since the subject of the first movement ("St. Gaudens at Boston Common") is located a mere five subway stops from Symphony Hall (the other places are Redding, Conn. and Stockbridge, Mass.). The performance under young Michael Tillson Thomas (now the orchestra's Associate Music Director) has all the brash enthusiasm one would hope for, along with a degree of poetical flavor I didn't find in Ormandy's thrice-issued reading for Columbia. In Vermonter Ruggles' epochal tone poem, the intensity, power and executive brilliance of the present realization likewise supersedes a Columbia rival—by a pickup group under Zoltan Rozsnyai. Each work is an ideal place to begin learning about two of American music's most rugged and uncompromising geniuses, which is to say this record is one of the basic repertory items!

For the French collection, the orchestra, joined by the New England Conservatory Chorus, is under guest conductor Claudio Abbado. Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphis et Chloe" and the "Pavane" is combined with Debussy's "Three Nocturnes." By Munch and Monteux (to say nothing of Ansermet and Boulez) standards, Signor Abbado is far from the ultimate stylist for this repertoire —wind and percussion details are incredibly good, the sounds are pretty, but a prevalent fuzziness and under-articulation prevails that suggest the usual tourist's view of the impressionistic world, rather than the seasoned appreciation of the long-time resident. The BSO responds well to Abbado, nonetheless (they're getting together before the mikes again next month), but hardly with the polish and tone of their prime (cf. the Koussevitsky "Daphnis" suite, a great recording of a quarter-century ago that RCA would do well to issue on Victrola if it felt like pulling rank).

Debussy Sonatas

And from the Chamber Players we've all the Sonatas, plus "Syrinx" for flute unaccompanied by Debussy. The three Sonatas were the only ones completed, in the composer's final years of a projected series of chamber works for diverse instruments (one is reminded of Carl Nielsen and his hopes of writing a Woodwind Concerto for each of his five Quintet playing friends, only two of whom were so honored). No other stereo coupling of these works exists currently in Schwann, making this another record of considerable significance in cornering an enthralling listening experience. Doriot Anthony Dwyer plays "Syrinx" and she's joined in the Sonata for Flute, Viola, and Harp by Burton Fine and Ann Hobson, respectively. Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein in the Violin Sonata, and first cellist Jules Eskin in the score for his instrument, are accompanied by Michael Tillson Thomas at the piano. These are terribly enigmatic works for most players (and listeners) so criticism of the interpretations must of necessity be carping. However, I do find Eskin and Thomas looser and more unbuttoned in the 'Cello Sonata than I generally like to hear, but then the only "ideal" reading of the work I ever heard was one by Rose and Fliesher—and that unrecorded! Silverstein and Thomas project a larger-scale outline of the Violin Sonata that I feel comfortable with (another concertmaster—David Nadien of the New York Philharmonic —recorded for Monitor a dozen years back what I regard as the definitive edition) but the Boston duo is very effective in arguing their case—coherent, dazzling in its detail, and beautifully played. The Trio Sonata "can't miss"—it's one of those works that are hypnotic in all performances, not least of all the current issue. Mrs. Dwyer is a captivating Syrinx.

A good batting average indeed for a debut package. It goes without saying that DGG's engineers get a nicely padded, velure-soft sound from Symphony Hall, in contrast to the nearly metallic brightness and solidity of RCA's typical (pre-Dynagroove) ambience. There's a fine directional focus too and the clean, quiet pressings we take for granted from this firm! Many happy returns!!

Tom Thomas' Turntable

The year 1970 was the Year of Beethoven, the 200th anniversary of Ludwig van Beethoven's birth. Musical societies, concert halls, record companies honored the great composer.

No more prodigious Beethoven salute has come to this turntable than the seven-disc set offered by RCA Victor. The handsome package, including a booklet featuring a fine article by H. C. Robbins Landon, is titled Beethoven: The Nine Symphonies; Boston Symphony/ Leinsdorf.

This isn't the first time Beethoven's symphonies, all nine, have been put into one bag; we wouldn't part with our Toscanini interpretations. But for consummate ability of a conductor, oneness of an orchestra's musicians and skill of stereo engineers, this collection is hard to fault.

Maestro Erich Leinsdorf, no longer with the Boston, had that fine hallmark of symphonic music perform these when conductor and orchestra felt a rapport not always attained. They deliver the majesty the Eroica (Third) demands, the serenity of the Fourth, the power and glory of the Fifth, the grandeur of the Ninth (Chorale).

The Fifth, most popular of them all, if indeed not the most popular symphony ever written, deserves one non-musical comment. In the first movement, the violins sound the rhythmic theme—three short notes, one long note. In Morse code, three dots and a dash mean V—the sign that meant victory to all who fought the Nazis in World War II. It was hummed and whistled by people who never knew whence it came.

* * *

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 8,245

JAN 23 1971

DISC-COURSE

Rubinstein performs at Post Jan. 29

by BOB BERNSTEIN

L I COMMERCIAL REVIEW
SYOSSET, N.Y
D. CIRC. N. AVAIL

DEC 29 1970

BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 1 in C, Op. 15. Artur Rubinstein, piano. Boston Symphony Orchestra Erich Leinsdorf, cond. RCA Victor LSC-3013.

With this release, Rubinstein is only one concerto shy of completing a second Beethoven concerto cycle in the stereo era (the first cycle had Josef Krips and the Symphony of the Air as Rubinstein's collaborators). The Op. 15 is beautifully played, exhibiting all of the well-seasoned latter-day Rubinstein characteristics: more reserve than romanticism, more elegance than brio, more pearly suavity than passion. All the miraculous tone and singing rhythm that is the Rubinstein hallmark is here, even though Beethoven himself may be largely missing. (Long Islanders still have an opportunity to hear Rubinstein in recital at C.W. Post Center Auditorium on Friday night, January 29 at 8:40. (Remaining tickets are $9, obtainable by writing to Island Concert Hall, Inc., Box 372, Roslyn Heights, N.Y. 11577 or phoning MA 1-4444.)

Seiji Ozawa's Stravinsky

Ozawa's Stravinsky

Stravinsky: "Firebird Suite," "Petrouchka;" Seiji Ozawa, the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

When Ballet Russe director Diaghilev commissioned "Firebird." the work was intended as a gift to his now legendary student, Vaslav Nijunsky.

But "Firebird," along with "Rite of Spring" and "Petrouchka" have, in less than a century, been entrenched in standard ballet repertory around the globe.

Once shocking. (many insisted Stravinsky was a "witchdoctor of sound"), the trio now seem almost melodic when compared to recent 20th century works.

And two of the three are offered on this RCA release under the brilliant baton of Swiji Ozawa.

From "Firebird," the offering includes the Introduction, Firebird's Dance and Variation, Khorovod of the Princesses, Infernal Dance of Kastchei, Lullaby and Finale.

All that's missing as Ozawa pounds to his pulsating climax is Tamara Karsavina.

Little wonder the diva clung to the role as another woman might jealously guard her child.

The power of the "Firebird" is neutralized by the bittersweet delivery of "Petrouchka."

Admittedly, firebirds and magical feathers may not have universal appeal, but hopeless love and futility do. And the composer echoed the inevitability of this theme's appeal when he said he had discovered "Petrouchka, the immortal, wretched hero of every fair the world over."

Stravinsky's music and protagonist are fused in the outrageous, yet poignant score.

Brought to life for a few blazing moments, the puppet dances, loves and dies from an overdose of his own emotion.

Stravinsky's "Petrouchka" is all of us.

The recording is of the composer's 1947 revision of the score.

CHARLESTON W. VA.
GAZETTE-MAIL
SUN. 107,000

DEC 27 1970

The Mating Of BSO And DGG

By ABRAM CHIPMAN

RECORDS

Retrospectively, the most unique happening in recorded classical music during the past year or two has been the big American orchestras' big label switch. Philadelphia came full circle from Columbia back to RCA. Angel-EMI took out a loan on Cleveland and Chicago. More recently, the latter assemblage was introduced to London FFRR under their new music director, Georg Solti, and that combination's pair of Mahler albums will be discussed ere long in this column.

Most innovative, however, has been Deutsche Gramophon Gesellschaft's acquisition of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. DGG's crew is new to American halls, though German accents are not unfamiliar in Boston's musical life, half of the Symphony's dozen directors having been more-or-less teutonic in background. For a half century or so, the BSO has been the near - exclusive phonographic property of RCA Victor (the "near" modifier referring to Koussevitsky's concert performance, issued on Columbia, of Roy Harris' 1933 Symphony) and that long collaboration will doubtless remain documented for years to come on the Red Seal and Victrola labels, with a couple of things "in the icebox" awaiting issue. From now on, however, most of what's new out of Symphony Hall will come bearing that yellow label.

Three initial discs have been received that show how well the "Aristocrat of Orchestras" fares on DGG. Choice of repertoire reflects the European image of Boston's "Specialties de la Maison." There are two records of French impressionism, and one of contemporary American — New England Americana at that. And one of the French discs presents not the full orchestra but their highly successful offshoot—the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

New England Theme

The Yankee program couples Charles Ives' "Three Places in New England" with Carl Ruggles' "Sun Treader." The "Three Places" certainly deserved a recording by the Bostonians, since the subject of the first movement ("St. Gaudens at Boston Common") is located a mere five subway stops from Symphony Hall (the other places are Redding, Conn. and Stockbridge, Mass.). The performance under young Michael Tillson Thomas (now the orchestra's Associate Music Director) has all the brash enthusiasm one would hope for, along with a degree of poetical flavor I didn't find in Ormandy's thrice-issued reading for Columbia. In Vermonter Ruggles' epochal tone poem, the intensity, power and executive brilliance of the present realization likewise supersedes a Columbia rival—by a pickup group under Zoltan Rozsnyai. Each work is an ideal place to begin learning about two of American music's most rugged and uncompromising geniuses, which is to say this record is one of the basic repertory items!

For the French collection, the orchestra, joined by the New England Conservatory Chorus, is under guest conductor Claudio Abbado. Ravel's Second Suite from "Daphis et Chloe" and the "Pavane" is combined with Debussy's "Three Nocturnes." By Munch and Monteux (to say nothing of Ansermet and Boulez) standards, Signor Abbado is far from the ultimate stylist for this repertoire —wind and percussion details are incredibly good, the sounds are pretty, but a prevalent fuzziness and under-articulation prevails that suggest the usual tourist's view of the impressionistic world, rather than the seasoned appreciation of the long-time resident. The BSO responds well to Abbado, nonetheless (they're getting together before the mikes again next month), but hardly with the polish and tone of their prime (cf. the Koussevitsky "Daphnis" suite, a great recording of a quarter-century ago that RCA would do well to issue on Victrola if it felt like pulling rank).

Debussy Sonatas

And from the Chamber Players we've all the Sonatas, plus "Syrinx" for flute unaccompanied by Debussy. The three Sonatas were the only ones completed, in the composer's final years of a projected series of chamber works for diverse instruments (one is reminded of Carl Nielsen and his hopes of writing a Woodwind Concerto for each of his five Quintet playing friends, only two of whom were so honored). No other stereo coupling of these works exists currently in Schwann, making this another record of considerable significance in cornering an enthralling listening experience. Doriot Anthony Dwyer plays "Syrinx" and she's joined in the Sonata for Flute, Viola, and Harp by Burton Fine and Ann Hobson, respectively. Concertmaster Joseph Silverstein in the Violin Sonata, and first cellist Jules Eskin in the score for his instrument, are accompanied by Michael Tillson Thomas at the piano. These are terribly enigmatic works for most players (and listeners) so criticism of the interpretations must of necessity be carping. However, I do find Eskin and Thomas looser and more unbuttoned in the 'Cello Sonata than I generally like to hear, but then the only "ideal" reading of the work I ever heard was one by Rose and Fliesher—and that unrecorded! Silverstein and Thomas project a larger-scale outline of the Violin Sonata that I feel comfortable with (another concertmaster—David Nadien of the New York Philharmonic —recorded for Monitor a dozen years back what I regard as the definitive edition) but the Boston duo is very effective in arguing their case—coherent, dazzling in its detail, and beautifully played. The Trio Sonata "can't miss"—it's one of those works that are hypnotic in all performances, not least of all the current issue. Mrs. Dwyer is a captivating Syrinx.

A good batting average indeed for a debut package. It goes without saying that DGG's engineers get a nicely padded, velure-soft sound from Symphony Hall, in contrast to the nearly metallic brightness and solidity of RCA's typical (pre-Dyna-groove) ambience. There's a fine directional focus too and the clean, quiet pressings we take for granted from this firm! Many happy returns!!

BOLLSTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
(F) 122,575 (S) 121

JAN 10 1971

Disc Course

Something Different By Boston Symphony

By Bert Willard
News-Press Staff Writer

Parting is such sweet sorrow — or is it?

Not too long ago, RCA Victor severed its hallowed ties with an old friend, the Boston Symphony. That doesn't mean you won't be seeing any more RCA recordings of the Boston orchestra. Far from it — there is a backlog of material in the vaults, enough to fill the record store shelves for months to come.

Before they parted, the Boston Symphony under "mod" Seiji Ozawa came up with Carl Orff's "Carmina Burana" on the RCA label (RCA Victor 3161). And to push sales of this classic, RCA even stooped to sensationalism, emphasizing the rather pornagraphic (?) nature of the lyrics which Orff used as a setting for this cantata based on the joys of carousing and erotic and sensual love.

It's not hardcore porno, to be sure, but it's a far cry from the kind of stuff RCA formerly recorded — and Orff's music, as well as the texts, appeal to the rock generation which has discovered eroticism and the joys of living — and loving — are not exactly new.

Ozawa does a firstrate job on the musical end of this production — and the sound is better than average.

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.
NEWS-PRESS
D. 36,000 S. 41,000

DEC 5 1970

Triple-Header Presented by Chamber Group

By MARC S. TASLITT

Boston Symphony Chamber Players: Schubert Trio, op. 99 (Claude Frank, piano); Milhaud Pastorale for Oboe, Clarinet, and Bassoon; Hindemith Kleine Kammermusik, op. 24, no. 2 for wind quintet. RCA LSC-3166.

Making a recording such as this is a worthwhile contribution to the ever-growing number of chamber music "variety packages," both for the selections offered and for the quality of the playing and interpretation.

The Schubert has been re-examined, with emphasis on total, continuous lyricism throughout. If the first movement tempo seems overly slow to some listeners, I suggest listening as though you have never heard it before, and as though countless trio players have not run rough-shod over its endless beauty. An extremely tasteful performance.

The Milhaud piece, in A-B-A (quasi Sonata) form, is a delightful and interesting blend of instruments, as well as a blend of 20th Century and neo-Renaissance sounds. The grace and charm of the writing are purely represented in the playing.

The same may be said of the playing in the Hindemith, although there is far more contrapuntal intricacy and rhythmic variety in this work. The logical chain of events is clearly understandable in this performance, with all the artists playing immaculately as individuals, and yet completely integrated as a whole.

This work is one of the finest in the wind quintet medium, and is a much-appreciated addition to a completely fine disc.

* * *

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 16,719

JAN 1971

STRAVINSKY: Suite from The Firebird; Petrouchka (complete). Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa conducting. RCA LSC-3167 (S).

As might be expected, Ozawa conducts lively and exciting readings of these two war horses. Yet the results are curiously unmoving compared to such maestros as Ansermet and Monteux. Ozawa seems primarily concerned about bowling the listener over with sumptuous sound. With the aid of the brilliant Boston Symphony Orchestra, this is not too hard to do. Has this ensemble ever sounded bad on records? Not in my experience. The recorded sound is absolutely stunning and the surfaces are much better than the usual RCA product. If only Ozawa had gotten beneath the surface of these works, this would be quite a noteworthy record.

—Michael Mark

The Wichita Sunday
Eagle and Beacon
WICHITA, KANS.
SUN. 171,015

DEC 20 1970

Christmas Album Has Holiday Joy

One of the Christmas albums with a lot of holiday spirit and joy is the two-LP set, "The American Family Album of Favorite Christmas Music," a reissue, on RCA. This has the Boston Pops on two sides and the Robert Shaw Chorale on two. The Boston Pops has a side for six bright songs, like "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" and "Sleigh-Ride;" and a side for "Nutcracker" experts, "Sleigh Ride" as written by Mozart, and the dream from "Hansel and Gretel."

The Robert Shaw Chorale has a side for carols and liner notes explain their origins, with more of them from America than we had realized, and a side for exerpts from Handel's "Messiah." The sound and the execution is excellent on this album.

Polydor, the label the Boston Pops is with now, has issued "A Christmas Festival" conducted by Arthur Fielder.

It starts with a 10-minute medley of carols, arranged by Leroy Anderson. There's nothing flashy in this, in fact the arrangements are quite subtle. It would be quality background music for an open house. Also on the album are Bach's lovely "Shepherd's Pastorale" and an instrumental "Hallelujah Chorus."

STAUNTON, VA.
NEWS-LEADER
S. 15,000

DEC 6 1970

DVOŘÁK: Symphony No. 9, in E Minor, Op. 95 ("From the New World"); Carnival Overture, Op. 92. Boston Symphony Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler cond. RCA LSC 3134 $5.98.

Performance: Spirited
Recording: Bright

Among the highlights of Arthur Fiedler's seventy-fifth birthday celebration last season was the opportunity to hear the venerable maestro of the Boston Pops take on the "parent" orchestra in a full subscription concert. This recording of Dvořák's "New World," of which there have been surprisingly few by native American conductors, is a tangible and altogether worthy souvenir of the occasion.

Fiedler's way with the "New World" is unfussy and spirited in the dramatic episodes, affectionate in the lyrical ones. The Carnival Overture reading that concludes the disc is a rouser. My only reservation about the performance of the symphony is Fiedler's curious failure to realize to its fullest dramatic potential the mighty outburst in the slow movement just before the reprise of the familiar main theme. This is a splendidly bright and full-bodied recording, but a mite brassy at times. D.H.

STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163,400

DEC 1970

Tom Thomas' Turntable

The year 1970 was the Year of Beethoven, the 200th anniversary of Ludwig van Beethoven's birth. Musical societies, concert halls, record companies honored the great composer.

No more prodigious Beethoven salute has come to this turntable than the seven-disc set offered by RCA Victor. The handsome package, including a booklet featuring a fine article by H. C. Robbins Landon, is titled Beethoven: The Nine Symphonies; Boston Symphony/Leinsdorf.

This isn't the first time Beethoven's symphonies, all nine, have been put into one bag; we wouldn't part with our Toscanini interpretations. But for consummate ability of a conductor, oneness of an orchestra's musicians and skill of stereo engineers, this collection is hard to fault.

Maestro Erich Leinsdorf, no longer with the Boston, had that fine hallmark of symphonic music perform these when conductor and orchestra felt a rapport not always attained. They deliver the majesty the Eroica (Third) demands, the serenity of the Fourth, the power and glory of the Fifth, the grandeur of the Ninth (Chorale).

The Fifth, most popular of them all, if indeed not the most popular symphony ever written, deserves one non-musical comment. In the first movement, the violins sound the rhythmic theme—three short notes, one long note. In Morse code, three dots and a dash mean V—the sign that meant victory to all who fought the Nazis in World War II. It was hummed and whistled by people who never knew whence it came.

* * *

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 8,215

JAN 23 1971

Records in View

Pianos: Their Players and Relatives

By WILLIAM A. STORRER

Some fine playing from the Boston Symphony Chamber Players graces Deutsche Grammophon's first disc with the ensemble (2530 049). Much to this critic's delight is the subtlety of Michael Tilson Thomas. As a pianist he clearly possesses a sensitivity akin to that of the peers whom he accompanies in Debussy's three sonatas, cellist Jules Eskin in the First, flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, violinist Burton Fine and harpist Ann Hobson in the Second, and violinist Joseph Silverstein in the Third. Miss Dwyer plays the Syrinx for Flute solo. Everywhere it is Thomas, with seeming perfect sense of rhythm, who creates the tension that makes these performances truly captivating.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

FEB 11 1971

REVIEW

An Ideal Tape For Car Stereo

TCHAIKOVSKY: The Nutcracker (Excerpts). Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler, conductor. RCA Victor Red Seal 8-track cartridge R8S-1169.

"The Nutcracker" is the ideal sort of piece for that 45-minute car trip you have to undertake if you happen to have an 8-track cartridge deck under your dashboard.

There are lots of little pieces, all pleasant to listen to, some familiar, some unfamiliar, and all beautifully caught on this cartridge which makes the Boston Pops sound as magnificent as did the Chicago Symphony in its prime.

—I L.

The Evening Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 318,026 SUN. 362,408

FEB 11 1971

STRAVINSKY: The Firebird—Suite (1919 version); Petruchka (1947 version). Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa cond. RCA LSC 3167 $5.98, ⓢ R8S 1164 $6.95, ⓒ RK 1164 $6.95.

Performance: Brilliant but wayward
Recording: Very good

These performances seem to me to exemplify a stage in the distressing progress of Seiji Ozawa from a fresh, vibrant, spontaneously musical talent of exceptional promise to an increasing self-indulgence and disinclination to penetrate the real nature of a score. There is a great deal of brilliant playing on the record, and the direction is obviously strong and enthusiastic. But hardly a single tempo realizes Stravinsky's meticulous markings with any accuracy. Most of Ozawa's speeds are too fast, and the Shrove-Tide Fair in Petruchka suffers disastrously from the general sense of haste. Occasionally he errs in the other direction, and in more than one place he distorts the relation between tempos—the clearest example is the Round Dance of the Princesses in Firebird, where practically no distinction is made between the passages marked quarter-note 72 and those marked 92.

Textures, too, are often subjected to distortion. At figure 181 in Petruchka, near the end of the Wet-Nurses' Dance, the trumpet, marked mezzo-forte, is actually louder than the rest of the orchestra, which is meant to be playing forte—and in consequence Ozawa's alteration of the trumpet part becomes glaringly evident. Michael Tilson Thomas' piano solo in Petruchka is beautifully played, but it too is balanced far more prominently than it ought to be in a number of passages.

For more faithful representations of Firebird and Petruchka, I suggest Ansermet, Monteux, Stravinsky himself, Bernstein (in Firebird), or Rosbaud (in Petruchka). The present disc can be regarded only as one gifted but shallow young man's gloss on the music.

B.J.

STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163,400

FEB 1971

Classical music still comes first at DDG

By EDWIN SAFFORD

DEUTSCHE GRAMMOPHON Gesellschaft (DGG), the Hanover-based German recording company, made its intentions clear last week that it will not follow the lead of some large domestic companies. It will not, in other words, go after a huge sales market by playing down its classical division in favor of the pop scene.

In the late summer of 1969 it was announced DGG had lured the Boston Symphony Orchestra away from RCA Victor. Under that label the orchestra had performed since 1917 when its first record was cut in Camden, N.J., with Karl Muck directing.

Since then, of course, both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops were staples of the RCA catalogue. When announcement came that DGG and its Polydor subsidiary were taking over, the news was greeted with considerable approval. So were the initial recordings released this past fall.

Last week DGG unveiled a symbol of its permanence and determination at Boston's Symphony Hall. This was its recording control room below the building's auditorium. It was designed in cooperation with the acoustical consulting firm, Bolt, Beranek and Newman, Cambridge, Mass.

The installation is in contrast to previous recording methods. In recent years DGG's predecessor rolled out equipment stored in Symphony Hall and set it up in the Ancient Instruments Room, a location which inspired some humor. Tapes were made there, from performances on the auditorium floor, and then equipment was returned to storage.

There are other differences as well. While RCA draped the auditorium with velour curtains, hung from its top balcony, DGG is making more use of Symphony Hall's celebrated acoustical properties.

All DGG employs are several plywood panels situated around the orchestra itself, to direct and reflect sound. The great rectangular room, designed after the old Leipzig (Germany) Gewandhaus by McKim, Meade and White, does the rest to simulate the presence of Symphony Hall in your living room.

While the orchestra plays, down in the control room a DGG engineer and his assistant manipulate the equipment, which is a combination of German and American-made. Beside the engineer, a musical consultant follows the score being performed, beating time carefully, and telephoning up to the conductor after a section of music has been taped.

A further change from previous procedure is that tapes now are edited in Boston. Only when everyone concerned is satisfied with the edited result are tapes sent to Germany for transferral to discs and pre-recorded tapes. Normally, the time from recording session to release for sale takes six months, although it may be shorter.

Thus, you are likely to have a Boston Symphony Orchestra recording, conducted by Claudio Abbado, which includes Scriabine's "Poem of Ecstacy" and the Tchaikovsky "Romeo and Juliet Fantasy Overture", sometime in the summer. These were the works being taped in four channels last Monday. With Scriabine coming back full steam into popularity, and a performance of the "Romeo and Juliet" which should eclipse easily the watery likes of "Love Story," this ought to be general favorite.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
(M) 66,728 (S) 2

FEB 14 1971

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144

FEB 6 1971

Classical Scene

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)

RCA's tardiness in exploiting the Beethoven bicentennial with a deluge of Beethoven recordings probably can be attributed to switching over to its new "dynaflex" disc which is thinner and lighter than the record in general use and almost as flexible as any pancake.

It is pretty to look at, a pleasure to handle. It works well and is silent on a changer in a stack and promises to fulfill the maker's claim that surface noises will be slower to develop with repeated use.

The RCA contribution to the Beethoven 200th birthday observance is magnificent. First, there are recordings of all 32 of the piano sonatas by Artur Schnabel's best known pupil, Claude Frank, on 12 boxed records but marketed under RCA's budget-price label (Victrola 9000).

Then there are recordings of all 16 string quartets plus the "grosse fuge" by the Guarneri Quartet on 11 boxed records which carry RCA's "Red Seal" label (11-100).

Next are all nine of the symphonies performed by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf on seven boxed records (Red Seal 6903). Still to come are all five of the piano concertos played by Artur Rubinstein with Leinsdorf and the Bostonian on four boxed records (Red Seal 6417).

Records in View

Pianos: Their Players and Relatives

By WILLIAM A. STORRER

Some fine playing from the Boston Symphony Chamber Players graces Deutsche Grammophon's first disc with the ensemble (2530 049). Much to this critic's delight is the subtlety of Michael Tilson Thomas. As a pianist he clearly possesses a sensitivity akin to that of the peers whom he accompanies in Debussy's three sonatas, cellist Jules Eskin in the First, flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, violinist Burton Fine and harpist Ann Hobson in the Second, and violinist Joseph Silverstein in the Third. Miss Dwyer plays the Syrinx for Flute solo. Everywhere it is Thomas, with seeming perfect sense of rhythm, who creates the tension that makes these performances truly captivating.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

FEB 11 1971

REVIEW

An Ideal Tape For Car Stereo

TCHAIKOVSKY: The Nutcracker (Excerpts). Boston Pops, Arthur Fiedler, conductor. RCA Victor Red Seal 8-track cartridge R8S-1169.

"The Nutcracker" is the ideal sort of piece for that 45-minute car trip you have to undertake if you happen to have an 8-track cartridge deck under your dashboard.

There are lots of little pieces, all pleasant to listen to, some familiar, some unfamiliar, and all beautifully caught on this cartridge which makes the Boston Pops sound as magnificent as did the Chicago Symphony in its prime.

—I L.

The Evening Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 318,026 SUN. 362,408

FEB 11 1971

STRAVINSKY: The Firebird—Suite (1919 version); Petruchka (1947 version). Boston Symphony Orchestra, Seiji Ozawa cond. RCA LSC 3167 $5.98, ® R8S 1164 $6.95, © RK 1164 $6.95.

Performance: Brilliant but wayward
Recording: Very good

These performances seem to me to exemplify a stage in the distressing progress of Seiji Ozawa from a fresh, vibrant, spontaneously musical talent of exceptional promise to an increasing self-indulgence and disinclination to penetrate the real nature of a score. There is a great deal of brilliant playing on the record, and the direction is obviously strong and enthusiastic. But hardly a single tempo realizes Stravinsky's meticulous markings with any accuracy. Most of Ozawa's speeds are too fast, and the Shrove-Tide Fair in Petruchka suffers disastrously from the general sense of haste. Occasionally he errs in the other direction, and in more than one place he distorts the relation between tempos—the clearest example is the Round Dance of the Princesses in Firebird, where practically no distinction is made between the passages marked quarter-note 72 and those marked 92.

Textures, too, are often subjected to distortion. At figure 181 in Petruchka, near the end of the Wet-Nurses' Dance, the trumpet, marked mezzo-forte, is actually louder than the rest of the orchestra, which is meant to be playing forte—and in consequence Ozawa's alteration of the trumpet part becomes glaringly evident. Michael Tilson Thomas' piano solo in Petruchka is beautifully played, but it too is balanced far more prominently than it ought to be in a number of passages.

For more faithful representations of Firebird and Petruchka, I suggest Ansermet, Monteux, Stravinsky himself, Bernstein (in Firebird), or Rosbaud (in Petruchka). The present disc can be regarded only as one gifted but shallow young man's gloss on the music.

B.J.

STEREO REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 163,400

FEB 1971

Classical music still comes first at DDG

By EDWIN SAFFORD

DEUTSCHE GRAMMOPHON Gesellschaft (DGG), the Hanover-based German recording company, made its intentions clear last week that it will not follow the lead of some large domestic companies. It will not, in other words, go after a huge sales market by playing down its classical division in favor of the pop scene.

In the late summer of 1969 it was announced DGG had lured the Boston Symphony Orchestra away from RCA Victor. Under that label the orchestra had performed since 1917 when its first record was cut in Camden, N.J., with Karl Muck directing.

Since then, of course, both the Boston Symphony and the Boston Pops were staples of the RCA catalogue. When announcement came that DGG and its Polydor subsidiary were taking over, the news was greeted with considerable approval. So were the initial recordings released this past fall.

Last week DGG unveiled a symbol of its permanence and determination at Boston's Symphony Hall. This was its recording control room below the building's auditorium. It was designed in cooperation with the acoustical consulting firm, Bolt, Beranek and Newman, Cambridge, Mass.

The installation is in contrast to previous recording methods. In recent years DGG's predecessor rolled out equipment stored in Symphony Hall and set it up in the Ancient Instruments Room, a location which inspired some humor. Tapes were made there, from performances on the auditorium floor, and then equipment was returned to storage.

There are other differences as well. While RCA draped the auditorium with velour curtains, hung from its top balcony, DGG is making more use of Symphony Hall's celebrated acoustical properties.

All DGG employs are several plywood panels situated around the orchestra itself, to direct and reflect sound. The great rectangular room, designed after the old Leipzig (Germany) Gewandhaus by McKim, Meade and White, does the rest to simulate the presence of Symphony Hall in your living room.

While the orchestra plays, down in the control room a DGG engineer and his assistant manipulate the equipment, which is a combination of German and American-made. Beside the engineer, a musical consultant follows the score being performed, beating time carefully, and telephoning up to the conductor after a section of music has been taped.

A further change from previous procedure is that tapes now are edited in Boston. Only when everyone concerned is satisfied with the edited result are tapes sent to Germany for transferral to discs and pre-recorded tapes. Normally, the time from recording session to release for sale takes six months, although it may be shorter.

Thus, you are likely to have a Boston Symphony Orchestra recording, conducted by Claudio Abbado, which includes Scriabine's "Poem of Ecstacy" and the Tchaikovsky "Romeo and Juliet Fantasy Overture", sometime in the summer. These were the works being taped in four channels last Monday. With Scriabine coming back full steam into popularity, and a performance of the "Romeo and Juliet" which should eclipse easily the watery likes of "Love Story," this ought to be general favorite.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
(M) 66,728 (S) 2

FEB 14 1971

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144

FEB 6 1971

Classical Scene

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)

RCA's tardiness in exploiting the Beethoven bicentennial with a deluge of Beethoven recordings probably can be attributed to switching over to its new "dynaflex" disc which is thinner and lighter than the record in general use and almost as flexible as any pancake.

It is pretty to look at, a pleasure to handle. It works well and is silent on a changer in a stack and promises to fulfill the maker's claim that surface noises will be slower to develop with repeated use.

The RCA contribution to the Beethoven 200th birthday observance is magnificent. First, there are recordings of all 32 of the piano sonatas by Artur Schnabel's best known pupil, Claude Frank, on 12 boxed records but marketed under RCA's budget-price label (Victrola 9000).

Then there are recordings of all 16 string quartets plus the "grosse fuge" by the Guarneri Quartet on 11 boxed records which carry RCA's "Red Seal" label (11-100).

Next are all nine of the symphonies performed by the Boston Symphony under Erich Leinsdorf on seven boxed records (Red Seal 6903). Still to come are all five of the piano concertos played by Artur Rubinstein with Leinsdorf and the Bostonian on four boxed records (Red Seal 6417).

ORCHESTRA AND PERSONNEL PUBLICITY

$50,000 Birthday Gift For Boston Symphony

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S)

OCT 7 1970

GRANTS AND AWARDS — The Charles E. Merrill Trust has announced a grant of $50,000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with the Orchestras 90th anniversary fund drive, which has an overall goal of $6 million to be raised by the end of the 1970-71 season. The grant is to be used at the discretion of the Orchestras trustees.

The Ford Foundation has announced grants totalling $ million for support of the arts and humanistic scholarship. Among organizations receiving recognition is the Kodaly Institute of Wellesley which was awarded $298,265. Organized in 1969 with the assistance of an earlier Ford grant, the Institute is developing a program to foster musical literacy and proficiency among school children.

OPPORTUNITIES for singers and instrumentalists — Various local orchestras and choral groups have announced openings for singers and instrumentalists for the coming season. The degree of musical proficiency required varies with each group, and interested persons may obtain further information at the indicated phone numbers.

Civic Symphony of Boston, 731-0662; Chorus Pro Musica (adult and new children's chorus), 267-7442; Philharmonic Society of Arlington, 862-5154; Cambridge Civic Symphony, 566-0284 and 484-4864; Belmont Chorus, 244-2117; Braintree; Braintree Choral Society, 843-1880. The Melrose Symphony also needs players; interested persons should write Raymond P. Gouin, P.O. Box 28, Melrose Highlands, 02177, including a brief resume with age, address, instrument played and training.

STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
(E) 70,000 (S) 60,00

SEP 6 1970

TIMES
BARRE, VERMONT
(E) 12,0[illegible]

OCT [illegible] 1970

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
(E) 107,[illegible] (S) [illegible]

NOV 1 1970

CURTIN IS FIRST 'GRANRUD ARTIST'

LENOX, Mass. (AP) — A bequest of $75,000 has been received by the Boston Symphony from the estate of Mrs. Marian D. Granrud of Springfield, Mass., which she left for use at Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home.

The money is going to be used to bring artists in residence or instructors to Tanglewood for seminars, workshops and master classes.

The first artist in residence is soprano Phyllis Curtin, who will give master classes 10 hours a week during the eight-week season this summer.

Grant $50,000 to Boston Symphony

BANNER
BENNINGTON, VERMONT
(E) 6,200

OCT 6 1970

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 23,[illegible]
(S) 566,[illegible]

CITIZEN
BELMONT, MASS.
WEEKLY 4,200

OCT 8 1970

MADISON CO.
HYDE PARK, VT.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

OCT [illegible] 1970

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(E) 85,055

OCT 30 1970

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 3,650

OCT 7 1970

FENCE VIEWER
SUDBURY, MASS.
WEEKLY 3,516

OCT 6 1970

BURLINGTON TIMES
UNION
BURLINGTON, MASS
WEEKLY 6,590

OCT 8 1970

MINUTEMAN
BEDFORD, MASS.
WEEKLY 3,100

OCT 8 1970

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
(M) [illegible] (S) [illegible]

OCT 8 1970

MINUTE MAN
LEXINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 7,975

OCT [illegible] 1970

SENTINEL
FRANKLIN, MASS
WEEKLY 3,940

OCT 8 1970

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 120,[illegible]

OCT 8 1970

JAN 1971

BOSTON, Mass. — Talcott M. Banks, President of the Board of Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Charles E. Merrill Jr., Chairman of the Charles E. Merrill Trust have announced a grant of $50,000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with the orchestra's 90th anniversary fund. The grant is to be used at the discretion of the orchestra's trustees and will be used to support the activities of the orchestra.

The 90th anniversary fund has an overall goal of $6 million to be raised by the end of the 1970-71 orchestra season. The fund's co-chairmen are trustee Philip K. Allen and overseer George H. Kidder.

The 90th anniversary ball, held in April of this year, was the official kick-off of the 90th anniversary season, which opened Friday, Sept. 25, with a Boston Symphony concert conducted by the orchestra's music director, William Steinberg.

Banks, acknowledging the grant on behalf of the trustees, said that he is "deeply gratified and warmly appreciative of this fine gift." It will help greatly to support our orchestra in a difficult time and encourage us to achieve our 90th anniversary fund goal."

Brown Left $1-Million In N.Y. Will

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
(M) 66,728 (S) 2[illegible]

FEB 4 1971

Mrs. Martha Baird Rockefeller, who died Jan. 24, left in her will one million dollars to Brown University, it was disclosed yesterday.

The total estate of Mrs. Rockefeller, the widow of John D. Rockefeller Jr., was estimated at 36.7 million dollars.

Of that amount, 36.5 million dollars will go to philanthropic organizations established by descendents of her husband and to other charitable organizations, according to the will, which was filed yesterday in Surrogate's Court in New York City.

Other large contributions include one million dollars to the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston and $500,000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mrs. Rockefeller, who was formerly married to Arthur M. Allen, a Providence lawyer who died in 1950, married Mr. Rockefeller in Providence in 1951. She had made many large gifts to Rhode Island institutions, including Brown, during her life.

Springfield Orchestra Receives $13,800 Grant for Youth Program

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(E) 85,055

DEC 3 1970

The Springfield Orchestra Association has been awarded a grant of $13,800 for the development of its youth program from the National Endowment for the Arts.

The Springfield Symphony Orchestra was among 40 orchestras in 26 states, which received grants totalling $1,820,060, Nancy Hanks, chairman of the NEA, announced today. Of this, $333,000 came from private donations and $1,487,060 from federal funds.

The Springfield Association award reads: "To develop a youth program involving children's concerts with the full orchestra and in - school demonstration concerts with orchestra ensembles in cities of Western Massachusetts and Northern Connecticut."

Three other New England orchestras received NEA grants.

Symphony Society of Greater Hartford received $15,000 for the purpose of "performing" a series of concerts for high schools and to present a young people's concert program for Grades 4-6, which involves mixed - media programs."

Boston Philharmonic Society was granted $7,300 for the "establishment of a continuing Philharmonic Guild in each community where concerts are given through six repeat performances of already prepared programs."

Boston Symphony Orchestra was awarded $75,000 so it could "increase its Public Service Activities Program designed to attract a 'second audience' involving free summer concerts, concerts by touring ensembles, and concerts for young people."

Miss Hanks noted that this is the second round of grants aiding orchestras to expand programs to young people; serve a more representative cross - section of their communities; improve artistic standards; and increase their capacity to generate local financial support.

The first round of grants, totalling $1,680,000 to 34 orchestras was announced last August. With the new grants, 73 orchestras in 38 states will receive a total of $3,500,060 in federal and private funds this year.

"Prior to this year," Miss Hanks said, "the Endowment's assistance to orchestras was minimal and token; we just didn't have the funds for a significant program."

"Now, thanks to the support of President Nixon and the Congress, and the generosity of private donors, fine symphony music will be available to more people in more places throughout the country than ever before. We hope to continue our support for these efforts in future years."

Each orchestra project was recommended by the National Council on the Arts, a Presidentially - appointed advisory board of distinguished artists and private citizens, following through review by panels of experts in the field.

The National Endowment for the Arts is a federal government agency created by Congress in 1965 to encourage and assist the arts in America.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(E) 30,100

NOV 28 1970

BSO Given $75,000 Grant By the U.S.

Grants totaling $1,820,060 to 40 symphony orchestras in 26 states have been announced by Nancy Hanks, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts. Private sources donated $333,000 of this amount, with the remainder coming from the federal government.

The purpose of the grants is to expand young people's concerts, serve a broader cross-section of the community, improve artistic standards and help generate local financial support. The individual awards range from $5,000 to $200,000, with three orchestras, San Francisco, Minnesota and St. Louis, each receiving the latter amount.

Massachusetts recipients include the Springfield Orchestra, $13,800; the Boston Philharmonia, $7,300, and the Boston Symphony. $75,000. All of those grants were made on a "matching" basis.

Talcott Banks, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony issued a statement which said in part: "It is deeply gratifying to see the federal government moving to expand its support of these efforts, and we feel relief in addition to gratitude, for the importance of these activities is great and the need for major assistance desperate."

TIMES (C)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. [illegible]

NOV 23 1970

$1.82-Million in Grants Awarded To 40 Orchestras in 26 States

Forty symphony orchestras in 26 states have been awarded grants totaling $1,820,060, it was announced by Nancy Banks, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts. Private sources provided $333,000 of the endowment, with the remainder coming from Federal funds. Last August, grants totaling $1,680,000 were awarded to 34 orchestras.

Miss Hanks said that the present round of grants will be used to expand programs to young people, serve a more representative cross-section of their communities, improve artistic standards and increase their capacity to generate local financial support. She noted also that the endowment's assistance to orchestras prior to this year was minimal because of a lack of funds. This year, however, because of the support of President Nixon, the Congress and private dinors, the financial assistance to orchestras was made available.

The present grants, recommended by the National Council on the Arts, range from $5,000 to the Birmingham Symphony Association to $200,000 each to the San Franscisco Symphony Association, the Minnesota Orchestra of Minneapolis and the St. Louis Symphony Society.

Three local aggregations received grants for programs for young people. They were: The Philharmonic Symphony-Society of New York, $75,000; The American Symphony Orchestra with a $50,000 award and the Brooklyn Philharmonia, Inc., which received a $15,000 grant.

Among the other awards were $100,000 to the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Inc.; $100,000 to the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra; $99,500 to the Symphony Society of San Antonio, and $75,000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.

ENTERTAINMENT

POST
WASH., D. C.
(M) 470,780 (S)

NOV 26 1970

ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS GRANTS

The National Endowment for the Arts yesterday awarded grants totalling $1,820,060 to 40 of the country's symphony orchestras. Private donations accounted for $333,000 and federal funds for the balance of $1,487,060.

Nancy Hanks, chairman of the Endowment, in announcing the grants, pointed out that they have been given to assist orchestras to serve young people, to serve a greater cross-section of their communities, to improve artistic standards, and to increase local orchestras' capacity to raise local support.

An earlier round of grants to 34 orchestras was made last August. It totalled $1,680,000 of which $250,000 went to the National Symphony. With the present grants, 73 orchestras will receive a total of $3,500,060 from federal and private funds this year.

The grants were as follows:

For Young People

American Symphony (New York), $5,000; Birmingham Symphony, $5,000; Brooklyn Philharmonia, $15,000; Cincinnati Symphony, $75,250; Denver Symphony, $43,510; Florida Symphony (Orlando) $15,000; Houston Sypmhony, $50,000; Memphis Orchestral Society, $19,900; Milwaukee Symphony, $36,500.

North Carolina Symphony, $25,000; Oklahoma City Symphony, $26,000; Philadelphia Orchestra, $15,500; San Diego Symphony, $19,700; San Francisco Symphony, $200,000; Spokane Symphony, $25,000.

Springfield Orchestra (Mass.,) $13,800; Hartford Symphony, $15,000; Tulsa Philharmonic, $25,800.

Expanded Public Programs

Anchorage Symphony, $10,000; Baltimore Symphony, $100,000; Boston Philharmonic, $7,300; Boston Symphony, $75,000; Detroit Symphony, $100,000; El Paso Symphony, $10,000; Indianapolis Symphony, $39,000; Minnesota Orchestra (Minneapolis), $200,000; Nashville Symphony, $17,400; New Orleans Philharmonic, $50,000; New York Philharmonic, $75,000; Oregon Symphony, $16,500; Richmond Symphony, $20,000; St. Louis Symphony, $200,000; St. Paul Civic Philharmonic, $25,000; Shreveport Symphony, $6,400; West Virginia Arts Council, $50,000; Wichita Symphony, $10,000; Youngstown Symphony, (Ohio) $20,000.

Professional Services

Greater Akron Musical Association, $16,000; Symphony Society of San Antonio, $99,500.

Martha Baird Rockefeller

Rockefeller widow dies of heart attack

Martha Baird Rockefeller, widow of John D. Rockefeller Jr., died of a heart attack at her Park Avenue home yesterday. She was 75.

The native of Madera, Calif., married the philanthropist in 1951. She was the stepmother of his five sons, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller; former Arkansas Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller; John D. III; David and Laurance, and their sister(Mrs. Jean Mauze.

A noted concert pianist, Mrs. Rockefeller played with the London Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. After retiring as a performer in 1931, she gave time and money to the New England Conservatory of Music, which she had attended, and other music organizations.

Among many charitable endeavors, Mrs. Rockefeller maintained an interest in Occidental College in Los Angeles, which she had also attended; Brown University, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Colonial Williamsburg and Harvard Divinity School.

In 1962, the Martha Baird Rockefeller Fund for Music was established to help young musicians.

Mrs. Rockefeller's first marriage ended in divorce. Her second husband, Arthur Moulton Allen, a friend of John D. Rockefeller Jr., died in 1950.

Nine years after Mrs. Rockefeller's third marriage in Providence, R.I., Rockefeller died in Tucson, Ariz. He left half of his $150 million fortune to his widow, half to the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, of which Mrs. Rockefeller became a trustee in 1960.

Rockefeller's first wife, the former Abby Greene Aldrich, died in 1948. Martha Baird Rockefeller had no children.

A private service for family and close friends was scheduled for today. A memorial service will be held later.

Staten Island Advance
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
D. 62,019 SUN. 59,089
JAN 25 1971

STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MAS
(E) 70,000 (S) 60
FEB 28 1971

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr. Dies at 75

Associated Press.
Martha Baird Rockefeller

Mrs. Martha Baird Rockefeller, widow of John D. Rockefeller Jr. and stepmother of Governor Rockefeller, died of a coronary occlusion at her home, 740 Park Avenue. She was 75 years old.

Mrs. Rockefeller, a former concert pianist and more recently a benefactor of music, was married to Mr. Rockefeller at her home in Providence, R. I., on Aug. 15, 1951.

Mr. Rockefeller, noted for his philanthropy in giving away the ever-growing millions that accrued from the vast fortune he had inherited, died on May 11, 1960, at the age of 86 in Tucson, Ariz., where he and Mrs. Rockefeller were vacationing. His first wife, the former Abby Greene Aldrich, daughter of the late Senator Nelson W. Aldrich of Rhode Island, died in 1948.

Widow of a Lawyer

Mrs. Martha Baird Rockefeller had been married twice before. Her second husband, Arthur Moulton Allen, a Providence lawyer and a classmate and friend of Mr. Rockefeller, died in 1950. Her first marriage, to Adrian van Laar of New York, ended in divorce in 1924. She had no children.

She was the stepmother also of John D. Rockefeller 3d, Laurance S. Rockefeller, Winthrop Rockefeller and David Rockefeller, and their sister, Mrs. Jean Mauzé.

"She had remained close to the Rockefeller Brothers and their sister, working with them in a number of common undertakings," a spokesman for the family said.

She was born March 15, 1895, in Madera, Calif., the daughter of the late William Finley Baird and Almina Abby Smith Baird of Streator, Ill.

Family from Ireland

Her ancestors were Scottish-Irish Presbyterian clergymen and educators who came to this country in the late seventeen-hundreds and settled in Pennsylvania. The Baird family traces back to the first baronet of the Scottish clan of the name, created in 1695.

After graduating from Blairsville (Pa.) School for Girls, Mrs. Rockefeller attended Occidental College in Los Angeles and then studied music, first at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston and later under Artur Schnabel in Berlin.

In 1918, she appeared as an assisting artist with Mme. Nellie Melba, the Australian soprano. During the nineteen-twenties she toured widely in Europe, the British Isles and the United States, appearing as a concert pianist in recitals and with leading symphony orchestras.

In 1926 she made her London debut at Royal Albert Hall with Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Symphony Orchestra under the late Serge Koussevitzky in Boston and Providence.

in 1962 the Martha Baird Rockefeller Fund for Music to encourage and aid young professional musicians of unusual promise. Besides making grants to individuals, the fund gives to a variety of organizations in all parts of the country that employ or otherwise help young musicians.

Mrs. Rockefeller made substantial contributions over the years to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the City Center of Music and Drama, Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, the Manhattan School of Music, the Metropolitan Opera Association, and the New England Conservatory of Music.

In the 1969-70 season she made gifts for the City Center's new production of "Rigoletto" and for the Metropolitan's new mountings of "Norma" and "Der Freischütz."

Benefactor of College

Mrs. Rockefeller had been governor of the American Red Cross, and maintained her interest in Occidental College. She supported organizations of special interest to her late husband. Among these are Colonial Williamsburg, Harvard Divinity School, the Riverside Church, Brown University, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the National Council of Churches and the Sealantic Fund.

In 1960 she became a trustee of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, whose program is supported in part by trustee contributions. Besides a major gift he made in 1951, the late John D. Rockefeller Jr. bequeathed half of his $150-million estate to the fund. He left his widow the other half.

A private service will be held today to be attended by family and close friends. A memorial service will be held later.

NEW YORK TIMES 1-25-71

New York Post
D. 708,180 SAT. 369,902
FEB 4 1971

Mrs. Rockefeller Leaves Brown $1-Million

Mrs. Martha Baird Rockefeller, who died Jan. 24, left in her will one million dollars to Brown University, it was disclosed yesterday.

The total estate of Mrs. Rockefeller, the widow of John D. Rockefeller Jr., was estimated at 36.7 million dollars.

Of that amount, 36.5 million dollars will go to philanthropic organizations established by descendants of her husband and to other charitable organizations, according to the will, which was filed yesterday in Surrogate's Court in New York City.

Other large contributions include one million dollars to the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston and $500,000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mrs. Rockefeller, who was formerly married to Arthur M. Allen, a Providence lawyer who died in 1950, married Mr. Rockefeller in Providence in 1951. She had made many large gifts to Rhode Island institutions, including Brown, during her life.

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
(E) 150,082
FEB 4 1971

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
(E) 150,082
FEB 9 1971

Million-Dollar Bequest May Be Too Late

The New England Conservatory of Music in Boston has been promised one million dollars in the will of the late Mrs. Martha Baird Rockefeller, but there may be no conservatory when the money becomes available.

The 104-year-old conservatory may close in June unless 5½ million dollars can be raised before then, said Gerald F. Lennick, director of development and public relations.

Meanwhile, he said, "it could take anywhere from six to eight or 10 months before (Mrs. Rockefeller's) will is probated."

Mrs. Rockefeller, an alumna of the conservatory and former Providence resident, died Jan. 24. She also left a million dollars to Brown University and $500,000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, as well as other bequests.

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr. Dies; Was Concert Pianist

© N.Y. Times News Service

Mrs. Martha Baird Rockefeller, 75, widow of John D. Rockefeller Jr., stepmother of Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller of New York and a noted concert pianist in her younger days in Providence, died yesterday in New York.

Mrs. Rockefeller, who had appeared with leading symphony orchestras during the 1920s, was married to Mr. Rockefeller at her home, at 184 Upton Ave. on Aug. 15, 1951.

She was president of the Providence Community Concert Association from 1937 to 1950 and was a trustee of the New England Conservatory of Music since 1952.

She was a major benefactor of several hospitals in Providence. In the mid 1950s, Mrs. Rockefeller made gifts of about $50,000 each to Roger Williams General Hospital, the Providence Lying-In Hospital and the Rhode Island Hospital.

In 1965, she donated a million dollars to the New England Conservatory contingent upon the conservatory raising three million dollars in a fund drive. She was a conservatory graduate in the class of 1917.

Mr. Rockefeller and his wife's second husband, Arthur M. Allen, a Providence lawyer, who died in May 1950, were classmates at Brown University and the Rockefeller and Allen families had been friends for years. Her first marriage to Adrian Van Laar of New York ended in divorce in 1924.

Continued on Page 19, Col. 7

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr. Dies; Was Concert Pianist

Continued From Page One

Mr. Rockefeller was first married to Abby Greene Aldrich of Warwick, daughter of U.S. Sen. Nelson W. Aldrich, in 1901. She died in 1948. Senator Aldrich was commonly known as the "general manager of the United States" because of the immense power he wielded in the Senate.

In the wedding ceremony, Mr. Rockefeller was attended by his son, John D. Rockefeller 3rd.

Two other sons, Nelson Rockefeller, eventually governor of New York, and David Rockefeller, were also at the ceremony. She was the stepmother of Laurance S. Rockefeller and Winthrop Rockefeller, former governor of Arkansas.

Mrs. Rockefeller made her London debut as a concert pianist as Martha Baird at Royal Albert Hall with Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Symphony Orchestra and her American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in Boston and Providence in 1918.

She lived in London most of the time between 1923 and 1930 and in 1931 she retired from the concert stage but continued her active interest in music.

In 1962 she established the Martha Baird Rockefeller Fund for Music to encourage and aid young professional musicians of exceptional promise.

She made substantial contributions over the years to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the New York City Center of Music and Drama, Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, the Manhattan School of Music, the Metropolitan Opera Association as well as the New England Conservatory.

Mrs. Rockefeller made an unrestricted gift of $511,360 to Brown University in 1964. Her husband had graduated from the university in 1897. Mrs. Rockefeller's gift was made in the closing months of a major fund drive by the university in an attempt to help Brown meet its campaign goal.

Mrs. Rockefeller held a wide variety of positions in Providence civic organizations, all of which she resigned when she moved from this city to New York after her marriage.

She had been a member of the national board of governors of the American Red Cross and held several offices in the Providence Chapter of the Red Cross.

Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr.
—1951 Photo

Mrs. Rockefeller was a member of the commission which planned and supervised the building of the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

She was born in Madera, Calif., in 1895, the daughter of the late William Finley Baird and Almina Abby Smith of Streator, Ill. She made her first public appearance as a pianist at the age of eight in California before an audience of 5,000.

Her ancestors were Scottish-Irish Presbyterian clergymen and educators who came to the United States in the late 18th century and settled in Pennsylvania. The Baird family traces back to the first baronet of the Scottish clan of the name, created in 1695.

Mrs. Rockefeller attended Blairsville School for Girls in Blairsville, Pa., and Occidental College in Los Angeles. After graduating from the New England Conservatory she studied under Arthur Schnabel in Berlin. In 1918, early in her career, she appeared as an assisting artist with Madame Melba.

In 1941, with Henry M. Wriston, then president of Brown University, she organized the youth division for the British War Relief Society for Rhode Island.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
(M) 60,738
JAN 25 1971

E. J. DIAS

A Look At the Arts

Those unusually large bequests of Mrs. Martha Baird Rockefeller, widow of John D. Rockefeller Jr., to a number of cultural institutions certainly spread a good deal of joy and hope among those who wish well to the arts. Mrs. Rockefeller left $10,000,000 to the Lincoln Center for performing Arts in New York, $5,000,000 to the Metropolitan Opera Company, $1,000,000 to the New York Philharmonic, and, of considerable area interest, $1,000,000 to the struggling New England Conservatory of Music and $500,000 to the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

However, mingled with the delight and hope for the future is a recurrent worry; this worry is that friends and patrons of those institutions benefited by the bequests will now assume that all financial probelms are solved and that no further giving will be needed. That such a sanguine belief is far from the truth is evidenced by the words of Gunther Schuller, president of the New England Conservatory. He has expressed his fear that other donors might minimize the substantial aid still needed by the Conservatory to meet next year's deficit of $1,000,000 and to raise the $16,000,000 endowment required for long-range security.

In fact, although bequests such as Mrs. Rockefeller's are, of course, genuinely helpful and welcome, the arts in this nation continue to be in a woeful financial state. Consequently, a nationwide campaign to preserve the arts and to protect them from acute financial crisis through a substantial increase in federal support has just been launched.

The organization, which is called Partnership for the Arts, is headed by Amyas Ames, who is also chairman of Lincoln Center and of the New York Philharmonic.

"Our purpose as a partnership," notes Ames, "is to call public attention to the nationwide plight of the arts. Our role is to serve as a coordinating agency to bring together those who work for and love the arts in a common cause — the revitalization of the arts — and to rally support from business, labor, education, young people, and other supporters in our communities."

The immediate aim of the partnership is to secure from the 92d Congress the full $30,000,000 authorization for the arts-supporting Federal agency, the National Endowment for the Arts. In its long-range plans, the partnership will seek a broad commitment of government support of the arts at a $200,000,000 Federal funding level — a sum representing only $1 per person in the United States.

Incidentally, the Partnership represents the total family of the arts, including museums, orchestras, opera companies, dance companies, theaters, and the visual arts. And, as I have written before, the scant Federal support of the arts in this nation has been a national disgrace when compared to the lavish subsidies which most Western European governments grant to their artistic institutions.

Rockefeller Estate: $36.7M

The late Martha Baird Rockefeller, widow of John D. Rockefeller Jr., left more than $36.7 million in bequests.

Mrs. Rockefeller, who died Jan. 24, left the bulk of her estate to charitable organizations and to philanthropic organizations established by descendants of her husband.

Mrs. Rockefeller was the stepmother of Gov. Rockefeller, Mrs. Jean Manze, John D. Rockefeller 3d, Laurance S. Rockefeller, Winthrop Rockefeller.

Included in the will is a personal bequest of $200,000 to Mrs. Mary M. Packard, a long-time friend and companion.

The other specific clauses bequeath $36.5 million to various charities and the residue of the estate, after taxes and expenses, to philanthropic organizations set up by her husband.

A spokesman for attorneys representing the executors of the estate said the value of the remainder of the estate would not be known for some time.

The will, dated May 21, 1968, made the following charitable bequests: Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, $10 million; Colonial Williamsburg, $5 million: Metropolitan Opera Assn., $5 million; Martha Baird Rockefeller Fund for Music, $5 million, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, $5 million.

Also listed were Brown University, $1 million: Riverside Church, $1 million; New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society, $1 million; Occidental College, Los Angeles, $1 million; New England Conservatory of Music Boston, $1 million, and Boston, Symphony Orchestra, $500,000.

Also named were American National Red Cross, $250,000; Community Blood Council of Greater New York, $250,000, and Osteopathic Hospital and Clinic of New York and Foundation for Research of New York Academy of Osteopathy, $500,000 to be divided by the executors.

The remainder of the estate will go to the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, the Rockefeller Family Fund or other foundations established by her husband or his descendants.

Specific allocations to family organizations will be determined by the executors.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S)
NOV 25 1970

BSO, Boston Philharmonia Benefit from Cash Grants

Grants totalling $1,820,060 to 40 symphony orchestras in 26 states were announced this week by Nancy Hanks, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts. Private sources donated $333,000 of this amount, with the remainder coming from the federal government.

The purpose of the grants is to expand young people's concerts, serve a broader cross-section of the community, improve artistic standards, and help generate local financial support. In size the awards range from $5,000 to $200,000, with three orchestras (San Francisco, Minnesota and St. Louis) receiving the latter amount.

Local recipients include the Springfield Orchestra ($13,800), the Boston Philharmonia ($7,300) and the Boston Symphony ($75,000), all of whose awards were made on a "matching" basis.

Robert Brink, concertmaster and president of the Boston Philharmonia, expressed pleasure with the Foundation's "vote of confidence in our efforts to promote children's concerts and to bring music to people throughout the state."

Talcott Banks, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony, issued a statement which in part said: "It is deeply gratifying to see the federal government moving to expand its support of these efforts, and we feel relief in addition to gratitude, for the importance of these activities is great and the need for major assistance desperate."

Athens of America

by Henry Morgenthau

The Arts in Boston
by Bernard Taper
170 pp. Harvard $6.00

Bernard Taper, a veteran staff reporter for the New Yorker magazine turned researcher for the Harvard-MIT Joint Center for Urban Studies, has recorded an "outsider's view of the cultural state" of "The Arts in Boston." It appears that the "outsider" was taken in by the "insiders." Being on unfamiliar terrain he was never able to free himself to observe comprehensively and objectively.

Henry Morgenthau is executive producer at WGBH-TV and a free-lance writer.

From time to time the author makes a point that reveals his natural good judgment and penetrating eye. But a large portion of this slim volume is given over to analysis and deploring of the financial woes of the cultural estate as seen by businessmen, fund raisers, and directors of cultural institutions rather than artists and creative people.

Mr. Taper has written a kind of auditor's report in talk-of-the-town style, breezy and spiced with humor. Although he is never entirely overwhelmed by fiscal concerns one could wish that he had placed them in a different perspective.

One of the basic problems noted by the author is that Boston is still suffering from a tradition which insulated the arts from life making them the private preserve of gentle folk. This tradition is by no means exclusive to Boston, but it got rooted here early, thrived, and has persisted longer and more vigorously than elsewhere. He appropriately documents the origins of this attitude with a letter from John Adams:

"I must study politics and war that my sons may have liberty to study mathematics and philosophy, geography and natural history and naval architecture, navigation, commerce and agriculture in order to give their children a right to study painting, poetry, music, architecture, statuary, tapestry, and porcelain."

Mr. Taper sees this as "the quintessentially Bostonian attitude . . . ultimately it seems to me almost as perverse as if he had said, 'I must be a celibate so that my grandchildren may have the right to enjoy fornication.' "

The puritanical patriotic men of commerce who shaped and controlled this hub of the universe, as Mr. Taper sees them, "turned to the arts as their sanctuary, their private garden, their clubs.

The arts have been more honored in Boston and by 'the best people' but they have possibly been enjoyed rather less than they have been honored. Never have they played a meaningful part in the life of the whole Boston community. Those who patronize the arts in Boston have kept aloof from politics, business, and practical affairs."

Out of this tradition has come the business and mass media enterprise. And what is more all of this has very little to do with the financial problems.

Continued on next page

Boston Arts Festival, 1964.

Another of Mr. Taper's preoccupation is the problem of housing the arts, but here again he seems to be worrying most about the old line companies.

Group Foundation which would incorporate an arts center in the redevelopment of area on the edge of the Common referred to as the "Hinge Block."

"Under this plan, Boston would get an arts center that included an opera hall and a number of other facilities—some the retreat from practical affairs of city government by the Yankees. It came to be taken for granted by those running City Hall that the arts were the private preserve of the Yankees, not the concern of the Municipality. If there had been in this century any disposition to alter that ston

Lehrer

oint, the conditions of near bank- in which the city languished for years would have effectively in- much being done about it."

his Epilogue, Mr. Taper deplores ndition which both fails to produce cknowledge creativity. "It is one to recognize that Boston needs a t and quite another to figure out ne would set about materializing a marvel," he says. "Then, even if Mozart did appear on the scene, ght have difficulty getting his mu- rformed under present conditions."

ston has indeed turned its back on of its most eminent home grown . At the appropriate time The Bos- ymphony failed to invite Leonard ernstein to become its conductor. For the dedication of the War Memorial Auditorium, Robert Lowell was rejected because he had been a conscientious objector. General George Patton's son was selected in his place. But perhaps this kind of observation is best left to the pen of an "outsider."

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

JUL 12 1970 N Eng

U.S. PROCESSING ORCHESTRA GIFTS

Endowment for the Arts to Distribute $1.68-Million

By DONAL HENAHAN

The bill under which the Federal Government more than doubled last year's appropriation for the National Endowment for the Arts has begun producing its first major fruit. Staff members of the endowment, which has been given $17.59-million to spread around the nation's arts during the next year, were at work yesterday on a $1.68-million grant to 34 symphony orchestras, details of which will be announced in a few days, according to an endowment spokesman. Grants to groups and individuals in other areas of the arts will be disclosed later.

All five so-called major orchestras—New York Philharmonic, Chicago Symphony, Boston Symphony, Philadelphia Orchestra and Cleveland Orchestra—are included in the grants, most of which are given on a dollar-for-dollar matching basis. Only a third of the orchestras that applied were approved for grants, the spokesman said.

Bill Sought by Nixon

Although the bill was signed into law last Friday by President Nixon, his action was a foregone conclusion. "It was his bill," an endowment spokesman said. "He asked for it, and there was no question but he would sign it."

The bill, which proposed an appropriation more than doubling last fiscal year's total figure of $8.25-million, passed its major test on June 30 in the House of Representatives when large-scale shifts of sentiment in favor of the bill resulted in a 262-78 vote. It cleared a House-Senate conference with surprising ease on July 22.

One factor in the switches, it was believed, was the fact that the bill provides that each of the 55 national arts councils receive $75,000 — except for Guam and Samoa, which get only $65,000. Congress liked this democratic approach to the arts. The $4,105,000 thus earmarked represents the largest item in the endowment's budget for the year ending June, 1971. The total amount available to be spent on the arts, called program funds, is $8,465,000.

Private Aid Stimulated

The program-funds amount does not reflect the full force of the endowment's grants, Forence Lowe, a press spokesman in the endowment's public affairs section, said yesterday.

"The grants generate $3 or $4 in private funds for each Federal dollar we offer," she said. "That's the history of it, we've found."

The endowment's $17.59-million appropriation includes, besides program funds, a treasury fund of $2.5 million, which may be given out when matched in advance. The orchestra grantees, on the other hand, will have a year to come up with the matching amount.

The orchestra grants are the second fund offer to symphony orchestras by the endowment since Nancy Hanks was appointed chairman last September. On March 10 of this year, the Government granted $706,000 to 12 orchestras and opera companies. The first awards under the new appropriations bill, announced last Friday, went to 20 young painters and sculptors, each of whom received a $7,500 fellowship.

The new grant to the 34 orchestras is only "the first round" in that area, Miss Hanks said yesterday. Others will be announced during the year.

"The basic reason the bill went through Congress with such big votes and so much enthusiasm," Miss Hanks said, "was the change that has taken place in the arts during the last two years in this country. There is a much broader interest throughout the country now, and more vitality. I would never have believed five years ago (when the Endowment came into existence) that interest in the arts could grow as so fast."

TIMES (M)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 858,600

AUG 6 1970

'The Arts in Boston'

Continued from preceding page

concept of Boston as the Athens of America. Apparently what this meant to our eighteenth and nineteenth century city fathers was a kind of warehouse where imported art prized for its rarity and remoteness of origin in time and place would be held in bond. In a very direct way some of the merchant sea captains engaged in the China tea trade declared an extra dividend in art treasures which established the magnificent oriental collection in the Museum of Fine Arts. In fairness, it must be said that the Museum also has a superb collection of native arts including painting, silver and furniture.

In time, as music was added to the visual arts for special patronage, the emphasis was again on foreign imports. The Boston Symphony has been largely middle European in its conductors, musicians and repertoire, entertaining a middle class and middle age audience.

Altogether, the Athens of America seemed to have little resemblance to its namesake where in the 5th century B.C. the arts were the creative contemporary expression of resident genius. Here in Boston, like the exotic hot-house plants in the courtyard of the Gardner Museum, the benefactors of culture seem to have selected those arts most alien to our soil—and our times—for their most doting patronage.

On the contrary, literature which has been the outstandingly successful indigenous art, has been left to flower on its own without patrons. World renown has come to New England in large measure because of the writers who lived in or near Boston. Their names sound a great refrain: Longfellow, Emerson, Thoreau, James—Henry and William, Hawthorne, Lowell—Amy and Robert, and Frost.

It is this pattern of patronage which explains why in our time two great dinosaurs draw off most of the meagre funds available for cultural enterprise. Mr. Taper points out.

"From the figures, one may note how dominant are just two organizations—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and The Museum of Fine Arts—in the cultural life of Boston. The expenditure of these two organizations amounted to over $7 million, accounting for some 70 per cent of the total art expenditures of the major art organizations. Their deficits—$374,000 for the Museum and $293,000 for the Symphony—add up to an even higher percent of the total."

Mr. Taper's observations of the way in which these two organizations dominate the cultural establishment are significantly revealing. At the same time he seems to underestimate the general cultural vitality of the community. He is captivated by the establishment view of looking to the old institutions as centers of regeneration. The way he sees it:

Harold Tovish

"Boston is, of course, very well endowed in some aspects of the arts, but in others less so. Some of its art institutions are world renowned. The standards of these major institutions are high, but they tend to be oriented toward the past. The dominant attitude might be termed custodial or curatorial rather than creative. One is not aware of any great creative ferment in the arts in Boston.

What can be done to foster new work of high caliber is hard to say. It has been suggested that Boston's two most hallowed institutions—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Museum of Fine Arts—could exact more leadership than they presently do in encouraging contemporary work. This point seems to me to be valid."

Perhaps one of Mr. Taper's pitfalls lies in the imbalance of people he talked to. The chapter headed "Some Boston Voices in the Arts— An Assemblage of Interviews," reveals a roster for the most part of the chief administrators of cultural institutions. Elsewhere the conversations are supplemented with comments by fund raisers, foundation executives, business men and public officials.

It's too bad he didn't talk to more practicing artists. His brief encounters with them are all revealing.

"Tom Lehrer: What are you going to be doing in your Boston study? Are you going to be writing about how to keep the symphony alive? And how to keep museums alive? And theater? Why bother? Those things are essentially dead, and nobody really cares about them any more, except in terms of social rather than artistic events. The symphony's only real role now is making recordings, and the theater, except as a workshop or training ground, has practically been replaced by the movies. These things concern only a small minority, and I am no more disturbed by their decline than I would be by the demise of polo."

In reference to the inadequacy of Boston's facilities for opera, Taper says: "I remember asking John Updike during an intermission of "Tosca" how he was liking the performance." He replied, "It's very restful. I can't hear a thing."

Harold Tovish, the sculptor, explains why he chose to live here instead of New York.

"In general, the quality of life around Boston is better—fewer irritations, fewer demands on your energies. We moved here about a dozen years ago and bought a big house in Brookline, big enough so that my wife, Marianna Pinedia, a sculptor too—we both have studios. It would cost a fortune to duplicate our setup in New York—it would be out-of-the question.

John Updike

"Another thing—artists in this area don't see much of each other. You don't find cliques here as you do in New York—an artist doesn't become obsolete overnight the way he can in New York.

The art market up here is minute compared to New York. It is a fact of life that an artist does not earn a national reputation by exhibiting in the Boston area. Eventually, he must show in New York and establish himself there. If he can do this without having to go live in New York, he will be a lucky man, I think because he can work more peacefully, more thoughtfully in this part of the country."

Robert Lowell, who was not interviewed in this book and chooses to live most of the time in New York, sums it up in the line: "here in Cambridge, where anyone can be no one."

But having talked more with the managers than the creators of art, Mr. Taper is not fully appreciative of the major thrust in cultural affairs here which has so little to do with the old cultural institutions and attitudes. Much of this activity is gaining momentum in the younger generation that likes to "do their own thing," and that does it with devotion to technical competence, freedom from established traditions, and a renewed sense of community.

This condition has produced at least two new ranks of activity which appear to be more viable in today's environment than the old dinosaurs. Borrowing from the terminology of the Edinborough Festival one might call them "the Fringe" and "Beyond the Fringe." In New York it would be termed "off Broadway" and "Off-Off Broadway" or "underground."

It is always hard to know where to draw the line. But in the first category one might include such new but well established organizations as the Boston Ballet, the Charles Theatre, Theatre Company of Boston, The Cambridge and Back Bay cinema art houses, the de-

Continued on Page Nine

Nelson Aldrich

'The Arts in Boston'

Continued from Page Two

Cordova Museum, the Institute of Contemporary Arts.

In the second category are the coffee houses devoted to satire such as "The Proposition" and the many featuring folk and rock music, Cambridge Commons summer concerts, the rash of publications—mostly weeklies—concerned with both arts and ideology, and the many independent filmmakers.

Somewhere in between one might place the University based theatre and filmmaking activities at Harvard, Boston University, Brandeis and elsewhere, and $30 million worth of facilities, let us say, if created in the conventional way—for an outlay of a few hundred thousand dollars."

The major financial burden would be born by private developers of the total commercial complex under requirements set by the Boston Redevelopment Authority (BRA). Preliminary sketches envisage a 2000 seat opera house and two theatres with seating capacities of 1,000 and 300. Desirable as these small houses may be aesthetically and acoustically, they are not acceptable or viable in terms of performing arts economics.

Whatever the shortcomings of the

U.S. PROCESSING ORCHESTRA GIFTS

Endowment for the Arts to Distribute $1.68-Million

By DONAL HENAHAN

The bill under which the Federal Government more than doubled last year's appropriation for the National Endowment for the Arts has begun producing its first major fruit. Staff members of the endowment, which has been given $17.59-million to spread around the nation's arts during the next year, were at work yesterday on a $1.68-million grant to 34 symphony orchestras, announced in a few days, according to an endowment spokesman. Grants to groups and individuals in other areas of the arts will be disclosed later.

All five so-called major orchestras—New York Philharmonic, Chicago Symphony, Boston Symphony, Philadelphia Orchestra and Cleveland Orchestra—are included in the grants, most of which are given on a dollar-for-dollar matching basis. Only a third of the orchestras that applied were approved for grants, the spokesman said.

Bill Sought by Nixon

Although the bill was signed into law last Friday by President Nixon, his action was a foregone conclusion. "It was his bill," an endowment spokesman said. "He asked for it, and there was no question but he would sign it."

The bill, which proposed an appropriation more than double of $8.25-million, passed its major test on June 30 in the House of Representatives when large-scale shifts of sentiment in favor of the bill resulted in a 262-78 vote. It cleared a House-Senate conference with surprising ease on July 22.

One factor in the switches, it was believed, was the fact that the bill provides that each of the 55 national arts councils receive $75,000 — except for Guam and Samoa, which get only $65,000. Congress liked this democratic approach to the arts. The $4,105,000 thus earmarked represents the largest item in the endowment's budget for the year ending June 1971

45

'The Arts in Boston'

Continued from Page Two

Cordova Museum, the Institute of Contemporary Arts.

In the second category are the coffee houses devoted to satire such as "The Proposition" and the many featuring folk and rock music, Cambridge Commons summer concerts, the rash of publications—mostly weeklies—concerned with both arts and ideology, and the many independent filmmakers.

Somewhere in between one might place the University based theatre and filmmaking activities at Harvard, Boston University, Brandeis and elsewhere, and the Centre for Advanced Visual Studies at MIT.

In another category are the many professional artists and architects who find the area a good place to work and often to prosper. Boston, which has a distinguished architectural tradition from Bullfinch to Richardson to present day international firms which have sported names like Gropius and Sert in association with Harvard and MIT trained talent.

Some architects have gone beyond the narrow limits of their profession. An outstanding example is the leadership of Nelson Aldrich whose related sense of beauty and community made him a prime mover behind the Boston Arts Festival, the new City Hall design competition, and almost every cultural milestone in the New Boston.

All in all one might say that greater Boston has tremendous artistic vitality equalled in this country only in San Francisco. New York, yes, but there the arts are so much more the creatures of business and mass media enterprise. And what is more all of this has very little to do with the financial problems.

Another of Mr. Taper's preoccupation is the problem of housing the arts, but here again he seems to be worrying most about the old line companies.

Robert Lowell

"The Back Bay Theatre has been torn down and the War Memorial Auditorium (recently renamed the John Hynes Memorial Auditorium) has been built. The Auditorium where the Metropolitan Opera performs for a week on its annual tour is not at all suitable for opera or dance . . . The price of not having a home could be extinction for these groups."

Mr. Taper is very enthusiastic about a plan put forth by the Boston Study Group Foundation which would incorporate an arts center in the redevelopment of area on the edge of the Common referred to as the "Hinge Block."

"Under this plan, Boston would get an arts center that included an opera hall and a number of other facilities—some $30 million worth of facilities, let us say, if created in the conventional way—for an outlay of a few hundred thousand dollars."

The major financial burden would be born by private developers of the total commercial complex under requirements set by the Boston Redevelopment Authority (BRA). Preliminary sketches envisage a 2000 seat opera house and two theatres with seating capacities of 1,000 and 300. Desirable as these small houses may be aesthetically and acoustically, they are not acceptable or viable in terms of performing arts economics.

Whatever the shortcomings of the "Hinge Block," the general notion of integrating commercial and cultural development, I agree with Mr. Taper when he says:

"What I would really like to see happen is that each company do as much as it can to create beauty within the area in which it exercises absolute power. A company should make its products as beautiful as possible. The quality of the environment in which its employees work as beautiful as possible. If business would make that its goal, we would have a society in which there would be no need for fund drives. The arts would simply flourish. And I think business would too."

The author also has a good deal to say about the lack of public funds for the arts in this city. Here again his analysis falls back on his underlying thesis:

"In other old cities patterns of private patronage of the arts were gradually modified to some extent by passage of time and adaptation to new social conditions. Boston's pattern became fixed, a kind of anthropological curiosity, as a result of the capture of City Hall by the Irish around the turn of the century and the retreat from practical affairs of city government by the Yankees. It came to be taken for granted by those running City Hall that the arts were the private preserve of the Yankees, not the concern of the Municipality. If there had been in this century any disposition to alter that viewpoint, the conditions of near bankruptcy in which the city languished for many years would have effectively inhibited much being done about it."

Tom Lehrer

In his Epilogue, Mr. Taper deplores the condition which both fails to produce and acknowledge creativity. "It is one thing to recognize that Boston needs a Mozart and quite another to figure out how one would set about materializing such a marvel," he says. "Then, even if a new Mozart did appear on the scene, he might have difficulty getting his music performed under present conditions."

Boston has indeed turned its back on some of its most eminent home grown talent. At the appropriate time The Boston Symphony failed to invite Leonard Bernstein to become its conductor. For the dedication of the War Memorial Auditorium, Robert Lowell was rejected because he had been a conscientious objector. General George Patton's son was selected in his place. But perhaps this kind of observation is best left to the pen of an "outsider."

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

JUL 12 1970 N Eng

U.S. PROCESSING ORCHESTRA GIFTS

Endowment for the Arts to Distribute $1.68-Million

By DONAL HENAHAN

The bill under which the Federal Government more than doubled last year's appropriation for the National Endowment for the Arts has begun producing its first major fruit. Staff members of the endowment, which has been given $17.59-million to spread around the nation's arts during the next year, were at work yesterday on a $1.68-million grant to 34 symphony orchestras, details of which will be announced in a few days, according to an endowment spokesman. Grants to groups and individuals in other areas of the arts will be disclosed later.

All five so-called major orchestras—New York Philharmonic, Chicago Symphony, Boston Symphony, Philadelphia Orchestra and Cleveland Orchestra—are included in the grants, most of which are given on a dollar-for-dollar matching basis. Only a third of the orchestras that applied were approved for grants, the spokesman said.

Bill Sought by Nixon

Although the bill was signed into law last Friday by President Nixon, his action was a foregone conclusion. "It was his bill," an endowment spokesman said. "He asked for it, and there was no question but he would sign it."

The bill, which proposed an appropriation more than doubling last fiscal year's total figure of $8.25-million, passed its major test on June 30 in the House of Representatives when large-scale shifts of sentiment in favor of the bill resulted in a 262-78 vote. It cleared a House-Senate conference with surprising ease on July 22.

One factor in the switches, it was believed, was the fact that the bill provides that each of the 55 national arts councils receive $75,000 — except for Guam and Samoa, which get only $65,000. Congress liked this democratic approach to the arts. The $4,105,000 thus earmarked represents the largest item in the endowment's budget for the year ending June, 1971. The total amount available to be spent on the arts, called program funds, is $8,465,000.

Private Aid Stimulated

The program-funds amount does not reflect the full force of the endowment's grants, Forence Lowe, a press spokesman in the endowment's public affairs section, said yesterday.

"The grants generate $3 or $4 in private funds for each Federal dollar we offer," she said. "That's the history of it, we've found."

The endowment's $17.59-million appropriation includes, besides program funds, a treasury fund of $2.5 million, which may be given out when matched in advance. The orchestra grantees, on the other hand, will have a year to come up with the matching amount.

The orchestra grants are the second fund offer to symphony orchestras by the endowment since Nancy Hanks was appointed chairman last September. On March 10 of this year, the Government granted $706,000 to 12 orchestras and opera companies. The first awards under the new appropriations bill, announced last Friday, went to 20 young painters and sculptors, each of whom received a $7,500 fellowship.

The new grant to the 34 orchestras is only "the first round" in that area, Miss Hanks said yesterday. Others will be announced during the year.

"The basic reason the bill went through Congress with such big votes and so much enthusiasm," Miss Hanks said, "was the change that has taken place in the arts during the last two years in this country. There is a much broader interest throughout the country now, and more vitality. I would never have believed five years ago (when the Endowment came into existence) that interest in the arts could grow as so fast."

TIMES (M)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 859,500

AUG 6 1970

'The Arts in Boston'

Continued from preceding page

concept of Boston as the Athens of America. Apparently what this meant to our eighteenth and nineteenth century city fathers was a kind of warehouse where imported art prized for its rarity and remoteness of origin in time and place would be held in bond. In a very direct way some of the merchant sea captains engaged in the China tea trade declared an extra dividend in art treasures which established the magnificent oriental collection in the Museum of Fine Arts. In fairness, it must be said that the Museum also has a superb collection of native arts including painting, silver and furniture.

In time, as music was added to the visual arts for special patronage, the emphasis was again on foreign imports. The Boston Symphony has been largely middle European in its conductors, musicians and repertoire, entertaining a middle class and middle age audience.

Altogether, the Athens of America seemed to have little resemblance to its namesake where in the 5th century B.C. the arts were the creative contemporary expression of resident genius. Here in training ground, has practically been replaced by the movies. These things concern only a small minority, and I am no more disturbed by their decline than I would be by the demise of polo."

Harold Tovish

In reference to the inadequacy of Boston's facilities for opera, Taper says: "I remember asking John Updike during an intermission of "Tosca" how he was liking the performance." He replied, "It's very restful. I can't hear a thing."

Harold Tovish, the sculptor, explains why he chose to live here instead of New York.

"In general, the quality of life around Boston is better—fewer irritations, fewer demands on your energies. We moved here about a dozen years ago and bought a big house in Brookline, big enough so that my wife, Marianna Pineda, a sculptor too—we both have studios. It would think because he can work more peacefully, more thoughtfully in this part of the country."

Robert Lowell, who was not interviewed in this book and chooses to live most of the time in New York, sums it up in the line: "here in Cambridge, where anyone can be no one."

But having talked more with the managers than the creators of art, Mr. Taper is not fully appreciative of the major thrust in cultural affairs here which has so little to do with the old cultural institutions and attitudes. Much of this activity is gaining momentum in the younger generation that likes to "do their own thing," and that does it with devotion to technical competence, freedom from established traditions, and a renewed sense of community.

This condition has produced at least two new ranks of activity which appear to be more viable in today's environment than the old dinosaurs. Borrowing from the terminology of the Edinborough Festival one might call them "the Fringe" and "Beyond the Fringe." In New York it would be termed "off Broadway" and "Off-Off Broadway" or "underground."

46

First 2 Blacks Join Orchestra in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA (AP) The 70-year-old Philadelphia Orchestra was integrated Tuesday as two blacks—a violinist and a violist—joined 103 other full-time members in the new season's first rehearsal.

"They were chosen entirely because of their musical abilities, not because of race," said conductor Eugene Ormandy during a brief pause in a passage of Beethoven's First Symphony which the orchestra will play in Wednesday's opening.

"There are only good or bad musicians. Color never enters my mind. It's one thing I never talk about."

Only four other major American orchestras have black musicians—a violinist with the New York Philharmonic, a harpist with the Boston Symphony, a cellist with the Cleveland Symphony and a violinist with the Pittsburgh Symphony. The New Jersey Symphony has a black music director-conductor.

Violist Renard Edwards, a 29-year-old bachelor who wears his hair in a modified Afro, said the color breakthrough was "very significant" and should encourage other blacks to try for big orchestra jobs. He had won an audition last year that brought him a performing contract for the 1970-71 season.

"Many black musicians feel they don't have a chance, and thus pass up the auditions," Edwards said. "This should change their attitudes."

Booker T. Rowe, also 29 and married, was hired as an extra violinist on a trainee basis. He expressed "great elation—it's been my lifelong dream."

Several blacks have performed with the Philadelphia Orchestra before, Rowe among them, sitting in when regular musicians were ill or absent.

Vacancies on orchestras like the Philadelphia, where the starting annual pay is more than $15,000, are infrequent, normally one or two a year. The competition for chairs is still among some of the world's new, young and most promising musicians.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

SEP 13 1970

Music

Busy season for concert goers

by Harry Neville

Musically speaking, the first three weeks of September are one of the quietest periods of the year in Boston, as can be seen from this week's concert calendar, which lists only four events. During this dormant time about the only thing to remind us that Boston is one of the country's most active musical centers is the release of fall and winter concert schedules. These have been arriving in the mail at an increasing rate during the past few days, and two of the most interesting announcements have been the brochures of the Boston Symphony and the Handel and Haydn Society.

The latter group, entering its 156th season, is one of Boston's most venerable institutions, and since the advent of Thomas Dunn as its music director a few years ago the Society has also become one of the city's most "with it" organizations. This year it continues its imaginative programming policy by offering five different programs, the content of which ranges from Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas" to Felciano's "Background Music," the latter of which is described as "the most unusual event in the Society's history."

The annual "Messiah" performances will be given Dec. 11 and 13 in Symphony Hall and, as in the past two years, Dunn will use one of the versions conducted by Handel himself—the so called "First London Version" of 1743 in this case. As before, Dunn will seek to present an historically authentic performance, one that puts to use all of our present day knowledge of the musical practices of Handel's time.

Another event of major importance takes place March 20, when the Society honors its other namesake by presenting Haydn's great oratorio "The Seasons." This has been announced as a complete, uncut performance, which will be sung in German with full orchestral accompaniment.

Haydn also figures prominently in the opening concert, Nov. 6, which includes his "Little Organ Mass," as well as Elgar's "Introduction and Allegro for Strings," and Stravinsky's "Pulcinella," the last named in a danced version which will be staged by the Pickwick Puppet Theater.

The 90th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony will get under way Sept. 25, when music director William Steinberg resumes the Symphony Hall podium for the first time since his illness early last year. Steinberg will conduct six different programs on the Friday Saturday series and although he has scheduled only two works of recent origin—one is an as yet unnamed work of Gunther Schuller—he is reviving much that is welcome from the 19th and early 20th century repertory: Holst's "The Planets," Reger's "Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Mozart," Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, the Vaughan Williams Tuba Concerto, and Mahler's Seventh Symphony.

Associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas will also be in charge of six of the Friday-Saturday programs, and as usual he will be responsible for some of the more "far out" events of the season. His program for Jan. 8 and 9 promises to be especially interesting: Stockhausen's "Punkta" sandwiched between Perotin's "Sederunt Principes" and Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony. Thomas will also revive Schoenberg's "Five Pieces," which created much interest last season, and for the third year in a row Webern's "Six Pieces," Op. 6. will be heard.

Guest conductors include Erich Leinsdorf, Rafael Kubelik and Seiji Ozawa, with two programs each, and Claudio Abbado, Rafael Fruebeck de Burgos, Donald Johanos and Bernard Haitink, with one each. Leinsdorf's Feb. 12 and 13 concerts will feature the "Golden Calf" scene from Schoenberg's "Moses and Aaron," with the participation of the Cantata Singers.

Again predominating among the instrumental soloists will be pianists—Maurizio Pollini, Joseph Kalichstein, Christoph Eschenbach and Theodore Lettvin—while the only violinists scheduled are Paul Zukofsky and Joseph Silverstein. Cellists Mstislav Rostropovich and Jacqueline du Pre also appear, but the latter for one concert only, Thursday, Jan. 7, when she plays Tchaikovsky's "Variations on a Rococo Theme."

Other soloists are bassoonist Sherman Walt, trumpeter Armando Ghitalla, tubaist Chester Schmits and—most intriguing of all—saxophonist Harvey Pittel, who will give the first Symphony Hall performance of Ingolf Dahl's Saxophone Concerto. Appropriately enough the podium on that occasion will be occupied by Dahl's most famous pupil, Michael Tilso Thomas.

SUN
LEWISTON, MAINE
(M) 22,600

SEP 16 1970

AMERICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
(E) 42,315

SEP 19 1970

REPUBLICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
(M) 27,040 (S) 56,127

SEP 19 1970

Rowe Gets Philadelphia Music Slot

Former Waterbury Symphony Orchestra concert master Booker T. Rowe, 29, has been named to the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Eugene Ormandy, it has been learned. He is one of the first two blacks to join the 70-year-old musical organization. The other is Renard Edwards, a violinist.

"They were chosen entirely because of their musical ability not because of race," said conductor Ormandy.

Rowe, hired as an extra violinist on a trainee basis, expressed "great elation—it's been my lifelong dream."

Only four other major American orchestras have black musicians—a violinist with the New York Philharmonic, a harpist with the Boston Symphony, a cellist with the Cleveland Symphony and a violinist with the Pittsburgh Symphony. The New Jersey Symphony has a black music director-conductor.

The new face in the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, which begins next weekend, will be Hironaka Sugie, a violinist, who was sent here by the Japan Philharmonic in exchange for BSO violist Yizhak Schotten. Schotten will learn to speak Japanese—with an Israeli accent.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

SEP 19 1970

BOSTON SYMPHONY - Subscription tickets are being sold for the 90th anniversary series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Series A, on Tuesdays, will present 10 concerts at 8:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 29. The Tuesday B Series opens Oct. 6 with six concerts at 7:30 p.m. The Tuesday Cambridge series opens Oct. 13 at 8:30 p.m. Thursday A series will be six concerts at 8:30 p.m. starting Oct. 1. The Thursday B series will be three concerts at 8:30 p.m. starting Jan. 7. Conductors will be William Steinbert, Michael Tilson Thomas, Erich Leinsdorf, Donald Johanos, Seiji Ozawa, Bernard Haitink, Claudio Abbado and Rafael Fruhbeck DeBurgos. A brochure and complete programs available through the ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 0211

TIMES
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
(E) 10,850

SEP 19 1970

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

AUG 4 1970

Unofficial historians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra say that to the best of their recollection Cleveland Orchestra conductor George Szell, who died last week, was invited only once to lead the symphony here during the reign of Serge Koussevitzky. "Szell made a mistake," they say "He conducted too well to please Koussevitzky."

Boston Symphony's Frank Epstein Selects Zildjian Cymbals

FRANK EPSTEIN, cymbalist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and central figure in the above photo, testing cymbals in the world-famous Avedis Zildjian vaults in North Quincy, Mass. At left is Zildjian sales manager, Len Di Muzio and Armand Zildjian. At right is Tom Gauger, also with the Boston Symphony, and Avedis Zildjian.

PTM MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 5,000

OCT 1970

MUSIC TRADES
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 5,500

AUG 1970

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

With Labor Day, 1970, already becoming just a memory and the fall nip in the air foretelling of what is to come, news of events coming up for the months ahead seem timely now instead of "rushing the season" as they did before last weekend.

One of the most active groups on the Boston scene is the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Under their energetic chairmen, first Mrs. Louis Cabot and Mrs. Norman Cahners, and now Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John Grandin, the group has organized a continual stream of interesting events to encourage music lovers to support the orchestra.

Their Pre-Symphony Luncheons at Horticultural Hall have become in the two short years of their duration the top place to meet before the Friday afternoon symphony concerts at Symphony Hall. The only complaint by the guests is that only four of them are held during the year. With the amount of hard work involved planning the menus, decorations, and other touches that make the lunches so special, it would take a committee the size of an army to organize more.

The first luncheon this year will take place on the day of the opening concert of the new Boston Symphony Orchestra season, Sept. 25. The other three will be Dec. 18, Feb. 12 and April 1. The cochairmen, Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson, have planned each luncheon to be unusual and different. An a la carte bar will be available at noon followed by the buffet luncheon.

Last year the Council of Friends of the BSO began a series of Stage Door Lectures at Symphony Hall at which members of the orchestra spoke. Extremely popular, they were a complete sell-out and it became a popular pastime to attend the lectures, enjoy a cocktail with friends at the la carte bar, partake of the box luncheon provided, and then proceed upstairs to the Friday afternoon concert.

Once more the cochairmen of the Stage Door Lectures, Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird, have arranged a second series of lectures by members of the orchestra. The opening one will be Oct. 9 when Armando Ghitalla, trumpet, will speak. Cellist Carol Proctor will lecture on Nov. 13, Leslie Martin, bass, on Jan. 22 and Luis Leguia, also cello, will give the final tak on Feb. 26.

Mrs. George E. Bates

All Friends of the BSO are invited to all the events, and also invited to bring a guest. If you are not yet a Friend, plan to join by calling Mrs. Kay Whitty at the Council of Friends office at Symphony Hall. The loyal support by the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has never been more needed than now for the orchestra to maintain its standards of excellence and its prominent position worldwide.

SYMPHONY FRIENDS

Invitations will be received soon by members of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestras for "Two Series of Friday Morning Events."

These are only the beginning of activities planned for the 1970-71 season by the Council, again under the capable leadership of Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. of Boston.

As a Friend — or join now as a new Friend — plan to attend with a guest the Pre-Symphony Luncheons at Horticultural Hall, Sept. 25, Dec. 18, Feb. 12 and April 1. The co-chairmen, Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson, have planned four unusual luncheon menus and special floral decorations.

The original and informal Stage Door Lectures at Symphony Hall will be followed by an a la carte bar and box luncheon. Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird, co-chairmen, have planned for members of the orchestra to lecture Oct. 9, Nov. 13, Jan. 22 and Feb. 26. Orchestra members lecturing will include Armando Chitalla, trumpet; Carol Procter, cello; Leslie Martin, bass; and Luis Leguia, cello.

As a Friend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, subscribe now and avoid disappointment, as requests will be filled in the order received and the first event is the Pre-Symphony Luncheon, Friday, Sept. 25.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
(E) 9,[illegible]

SEP 16 1970

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

SEP 9 1970

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
(M) 52,185 (S) 108,376

SEP 20 1970

Musica viva to launch new series

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

The comparatively few but ardent disciples of contemporary music will begin reaping their second season's harvest at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday when the Boston Musica Viva opens its new series at the Busch-Reisinger Museum at Harvard University.

Richard Pittman, associate conductor at the New England Conservatory, will conduct the world premiere of Joseph Schwantner's Consortium for flute, violin, viola and cello. The program will be given in the museum's Renaissance Gallery.

Tentative schedule for the remaining concerts is Nov. 11, Feb. 3 and March 3.

Boston Musica Viva comprises musicians recruited from Boston and elsewhere on the East Coast. Pittman organized the group last year under the cosponsorship of the museum and the Institute of Contemporary Art.

Other Works

Other works to be performed during the season are Webern's "Sechs Lieder," Opus 14, and "Drei Lieder," Opus 18; Roman Haubenstock-Ramati's "Interpolation" for flute and tape; Joyce Mekeel's Solo Flute Piece, and Schoneberg's "Serenade," Opus 24.

Tickets are available without charge at the Busch-Reisinger Museum. It is suggested they be reserved as soon as possible because of the limited seating capacity.

IN SPITE OF substantial competition from Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival reports that it "held its own this summer remarkably well as compared to 1969."

Unlike most festivals, there were no cancellations or changes in the schedule announced by artistic director Ted Shawn and executive director John Christian, except for two added attractions.

Les Grands Ballets Canadiens had programmed only their soloists but provided a company of 24. Barton Mumaw, former leading dancer with Shawn and his Men Dancers, made an unexpected guest appearance.

Hospitalized last season and the subject of grim reports, Shawn welcomed every matinee audience with one of his famous curtain talks and taught two mime classes for six weeks.

As for future plans, the word from the Pillow is that "it's a changing world and what will evolve in the coming months is anybody's guess."

NATIONAL SYMPHONY in Washington, D.C. apparently is one of the nation's few orchestras that aren't pressing the panic button for reasons of finance or anything else.

Its 40th season will open Oct. 13 with a Beethoven program under Antal Dorati, who has succeeded Howard Mitchell as conductor.

MUSIC

Raymond Morin

Among the season's soloists is Tchaikovsky Competition winner Vladimir Krainev, performing Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto in his American debut.

Another new but famous name on the American scene is Maxim Shostakovich. The son of the great Soviet composer is among the National Symphony's guest conductors.

BOSTON SYMPHONY associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct more concerts during the orchestra's 90th anniversary season than William Steinberg, the music director.

Of the 88 concerts announced for Boston, Cambridge, Providence and New York City, Thomas will conduct 28 and Steinberg 22.

The 38 remaining concerts will be conducted by the following: Seiji Ozawa (9); Donald Johanos (3); Erich Leinsdorf (10); Reafael Frunbeck de Burgos (4); Claudio Abbado (3); Bernard Haitink (5), and Rafael Kubelik (4).

Steinberg will open the season Friday at 2 p.m. with Holst's "The Planet's," Partos' "Paths," symphonic elegy, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

Thursday, April 1, at 2 p.m. is the final announced date. Steinberg will close the season with Hindemith's "Concert Music for Strings and Brass," Opus 50; Schumann's Cello Concerto in A minor (Mstislav Rostropovich, soloist;, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Four members of the orchestra will appear as soloists, all principal players: Armando Ghitalla, trumpet; Chester Schmitz, tuba; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and Joseph Silverstein, violin.

Other soloists are Maurizio Pollini, Joseph Kalichstein, Christoph Eschenbach and Theodore Lettvin, pianists; Paul Zukowsky, violin; Harvey Pittel, saxophone, and Jacqueline Du Pre, cello.

Choral groups: Harvard Glee Club and Cantato Singers.

Rafael Kubelik

46

Music

First 2 Blacks Join Orchestra in Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA (AP) The 70-year-old Philadelphia Orchestra was integrated Tuesday as two blacks—a violinist and a violist—joined 103 other full-time members in the new season's first rehearsal.

"They were chosen entirely because of their musical abilities, not because of race," said conductor Eugene Ormandy during a brief pause in a passage of Beethoven's First Symphony which the orchestra will play in Wednesday's opening.

"There are only good or bad musicians. Color never enters my mind. It's one thing I never talk about."

Only four other major American orchestras have black musicians—a violinist with the New York Philharmonic, a harpist with the Boston Symphony, a cellist with the Cleveland Symphony and a violinist with the Pittsburgh Symphony. The New Jersey Symphony has a black music director-conductor.

Violist Renard Edwards, a 29-year-old bachelor who wears his hair in a modified Afro, said the color breakthrough was "very significant" and should encourage other blacks to try for big orchestra jobs. He had won an audition last year that brought him a performing contract for the 1970-71 season.

"Many black musicians feel they don't have a chance, and thus pass up the auditions," Edwards said. "This should change their attitudes."

Booker T. Rowe, also 29 and married, was hired as an extra violinist on a trainee basis. He expressed "great elation—it's been my lifelong dream."

Several blacks have performed with the Philadelphia Orchestra before, Rowe among them, sitting in when regular musicians were ill or absent.

Vacancies on orchestras like the Philadelphia, where the starting annual pay is more than $15,000, are infrequent, normally one or two a year. The competition for chairs is still among some of the world's new, young and most promising musicians.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

SEP 13 1970

SUN
LEWISTON, MAINE
(M) 22,600

SEP 16 1970

AMERICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
(E) 42,315

SEP 19 1970

REPUBLICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
(M) 27,040 (S) 56,127

SEP 19 1970

Rowe Gets Philadelphia Music Slot

Former Waterbury Symphony Orchestra concert master Booker T. Rowe, 29, has been named to the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Eugene Ormandy, it has been learned. He is one of the first two blacks to join the 70-year-old musical organization. The other is Renard Edwards, a violinist.

"They were chosen entirely because of their musical ability not because of race," said conductor Ormandy.

Rowe, hired as an extra violinist on a trainee basis, expressed "great elation—it's been my lifelong dream."

Only four other major American orchestras have black musicians—a violinist with the New York Philharmonic, a harpist with the Boston Symphony, a cellist with the Cleveland Symphony and a violinist with the Pittsburgh Symphony. The New Jersey Symphony has a black music director-conductor.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

AUG 4 1970

Busy season for concert goers

by Harry Neville

Musically speaking, the first three weeks of September are one of the quietest periods of the year in Boston, as can be seen from this week's concert calendar, which lists only four events. During this dormant time about the only thing to remind us that Boston is one of the country's most active musical centers is the release of fall and winter concert schedules. These have been arriving in the mail at an increasing rate during the past few days, and two of the most interesting announcements have been the brochures of the Boston Symphony and the Handel and Haydn Society.

The latter group, entering its 156th season, is one of Boston's most venerable institutions, and since the advent of Thomas Dunn as its music director a few years ago the Society has also become one of the city's most "with it" organizations. This year it continues its imaginative programming policy by offering five different programs, the content of which ranges from Purcell's "Dido and Aeneas" to Felciano's "Background Music," the latter of which is described as "the most unusual event in the Society's history."

The annual "Messiah" performances will be given Dec. 11 and 13 in Symphony Hall and, as in the past two years, Dunn will use one of the versions conducted by Handel himself—the so called "First London Version" of 1743 in this case. As before, Dunn will seek to present an historically authentic performance, one that puts to use all of our present day knowledge of the musical practices of Handel's time.

Another event of major importance takes place March 20, when the Society honors its other namesake by presenting Haydn's great oratorio "The Seasons." This has been announced as a complete, uncut performance, which will be sung in German with full orchestral accompaniment.

Haydn also figures prominently in the opening concert, Nov. 6, which includes his "Little Organ Mass," as well as Elgar's "Introduction and Allegro for Strings," and Stravinsky's "Pulcinella," the last named in a danced version which will be staged by the Pickwick Puppet Theater.

The 90th anniversary season of the Boston Symphony will get under way Sept. 25, when music director William Steinberg resumes the Symphony Hall podium for the first time since his illness early last year. Steinberg will conduct six different programs on the Friday Saturday series and although he has scheduled only two works of recent origin—one is an as yet unnamed work of Gunther Schuller—he is reviving much that is welcome from the 19th and early 20th century repertory: Holst's "The Planets," Reger's "Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Mozart," Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, the Vaughan Williams Tuba Concerto, and Mahler's Seventh Symphony.

Associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas will also be in charge of six of the Friday-Saturday programs, and as usual he will be responsible for some of the more "far out" events of the season. His program for Jan. 8 and 9 promises to be especially interesting: Stockhausen's "Punkta" sandwiched between Perotin's "Sederunt Principes" and Schumann's "Rhenish" Symphony. Thomas will also revive Schoenberg's "Five Pieces," which created much interest last season, and for the third year in a row Webern's "Six Pieces," Op. 6. will be heard.

Guest conductors include Erich Leinsdorf, Rafael Kubelik and Seiji Ozawa, with two programs each, and Claudio Abbado, Rafael Fruebeck de Burgos, Donald Johanos and Bernard Haitink, with one each. Leinsdorf's Feb. 12 and 13 concerts will feature the "Golden Calf" scene from Schoenberg's "Moses and Aaron," with the participation of the Cantata Singers.

Again predominating among the instrumental soloists will be pianists—Maurizio Pollini, Joseph Kalichstein, Christoph Eschenbach and Theodore Lettvin—while the only violinists scheduled are Paul Zukofsky and Joseph Silverstein. Cellists Mstislav Rostropovich and Jacqueline du Pre also appear, but the latter for one concert only, Thursday, Jan. 7, when she plays Tchaikovsky's "Variations on a Rococo Theme."

Other soloists are bassoonist Sherman Walt, trumpeter Armando Ghitalla, tubaist Chester Schmits and—most intriguing of all—saxophonist Harvey Pittel, who will give the first Symphony Hall performance of Ingolf Dahl's Saxophone Concerto. Appropriately enough the podium on that occasion will be occupied by Dahl's most famous pupil, Michael Tilso Thomas.

BOSTON SYMPHONY - Subscription tickets are being sold for the 90th anniversary series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Series A, on Tuesdays, will present 10 concerts at 8:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 29. The Tuesday B Series opens Oct. 6 with six concerts at 7:30 p.m. The Tuesday Cambridge series opens Oct. 13 at 8:30 p.m. Thursday A series will be six concerts at 8:30 p.m. starting Oct. 1. The Thursday B series will be three concerts at 8:30 p.m. starting Jan. 7. Conductors will be William Steinbert, Michael Tilson Thomas, Erich Leinsdorf, Donald Johanos, Seiji Ozawa, Bernard Haitink, Claudio Abbado and Rafael Fruhbeck DeBurgos. A brochure and complete programs available through the ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115

TIMES
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
(E) 10,850

SEP 19 1970

The new face in the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, which began next weekend, will be Hironaka Sugie, a violinist, who was sent here by the Japan Philharmonic in exchange for BSO violist Yizhak Schotten. Schotten will learn to speak Japanese—with an Israeli accent.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

SEP 19 1970

Unofficial historians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra say that to the best of their recollection Cleveland Orchestra conductor George Szell, who died last week, was invited only once to lead the symphony here during the reign of Serge Koussevitzky. "Szell made a mistake," they say. "He conducted too well to please Koussevitzky."

PIM MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.
W. 5,000

OCT 1970

MUSIC TRADES
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 5,000

AUG 1970

Boston Symphony's Frank Epstein Selects Zildjian Cymbals

FRANK EPSTEIN, cymbalist for the Boston Symphony Orchestra and central figure in the above photo, testing cymbals in the world-famous Avedis Zildjian vaults in North Quincy, Mass. At left is Zildjian sales manager, Len Di Muzio and Armand Zildjian. At right is Tom Gauger, also with the Boston Symphony, and Avedis Zildjian.

SYMPHONY FRIENDS

Invitations will be received soon by members of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestras for "Two Series of Friday Morning Events."

These are only the beginning of activities planned for the 1970-71 season by the Council, again under the capable leadership of Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. of Boston.

As a Friend — or join now as a new Friend — plan to attend with a guest the Pre-Symphony Luncheons at Horticultural Hall, Sept. 25, Dec. 18, Feb. 12 and April 1. The co-chairmen, Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson, have planned four unusual luncheon menus and special floral decorations.

The original and informal Stage Door Lectures at Symphony Hall will be followed by an a la carte bar and box luncheon. Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird, co-chairmen, have planned for members of the orchestra to lecture Oct. 9, Nov. 13, Jan. 22 and Feb. 26. Orchestra members lecturing will include Armando Chitalla, trumpet; Carol Procter, cello; Leslie Martin, bass; and Luis Leguia, cello.

As a Friend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, subscribe now and avoid disappointment, as requests will be filled in the order received and the first event is the Pre-Symphony Luncheon, Friday, Sept. 25.

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

With Labor Day, 1970, already becoming just a memory and the fall nip in the air foretelling of what is to come, news of events coming up for the months ahead seem timely now instead of "rushing the season" as they did before last weekend.

One of the most active groups on the Boston scene is the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Under their energetic chairmen, first Mrs. Louis Cabot and Mrs. Norman Cahners, and now Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John Grandin, the group has organized a continual stream of interesting events to encourage music lovers to support the orchestra.

Their Pre-Symphony Luncheons at Horticultural Hall have become in the two short years of their duration the top place to meet before the Friday afternoon symphony concerts at Symphony Hall. The only complaint by the guests is that only four of them are held during the year. With the amount of hard work involved planning the menus, decorations, and other touches that make the lunches so special, it would take a committee the size of an army to organize more.

The first luncheon this year will take place on the day of the opening concert of the new Boston Symphony Orchestra season, Sept. 25. The other three will be Dec. 18, Feb. 12 and April 1. The cochairmen, Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson, have planned each luncheon to be unusual and different. An a la carte bar will be available at noon followed by the buffet luncheon.

Last year the Council of Friends of the BSO began a series of Stage Door Lectures at Symphony Hall at which members of the orchestra spoke. Extremely popular, they were a complete sell-out and it became a popular pastime to attend the lectures, enjoy a cocktail with friends at the la carte bar, partake of the box luncheon provided, and then proceed upstairs to the Friday afternoon concert.

Once more the cochairmen of the Stage Door Lectures, Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird, have arranged a second series of lectures by members of the orchestra. The opening one will be Oct. 9 when Armando Ghitalla, trumpet, will speak. Cellist Carol Proctor will lecture on Nov. 13, Leslie Martin, bass, on Jan. 22 and Luis Leguia, also cello, will give the final tak on Feb. 26.

Mrs. George E. Bates

All Friends of the BSO are invited to all the events, and also invited to bring a guest. If you are not yet a Friend, plan to join by calling Mrs. Kay Whitty at the Council of Friends office at Symphony Hall. The loyal support by the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has never been more needed than now for the orchestra to maintain its standards of excellence and its prominent position worldwide.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
(E) [illegible]

SEP 16 1970

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,337

SEP 9 1970

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
(M) 52,185 (S) 108,376

SEP 20 1970

Musica viva to launch new series

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

MUSIC

Raymond Morin

The comparatively few but ardent disciples of contemporary music will begin reaping their second season's harvest at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday when the Boston Musica Viva opens its new series at the Busch-Reisinger Museum at Harvard University.

Richard Pittman, associate conductor at the New England Conservatory, will conduct the world premiere of Joseph Schwantner's Consortium for flute, violin, viola and cello. The program will be given in the museum's Renaissance Gallery.

Tentative schedule for the remaining concerts is Nov. 11, Feb. 3 and March 3.

Boston Musica Viva comprises musicians recruited from Boston and elsewhere on the East Coast. Pittman organized the group last year under the cosponsorship of the museum and the Institute of Contemporary Art.

Other Works

Other works to be performed during the season are Webern's "Sechs Lieder," Opus 14, and "Drei Lieder," Opus 18; Roman Haubenstock-Ramati's "Interpolation" for flute and tape; Joyce Mekeel's Solo Flute Piece, and Schoneberg's "Serenade," Opus 24.

Tickets are available without charge at the Busch-Reisinger Museum. It is suggested they be reserved as soon as possible because of the limited seating capacity.

IN SPITE OF substantial competition from Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival reports that it "held its own this summer remarkably well as compared to 1969."

Unlike most festivals, there were no cancellations or changes in the schedule announced by artistic director Ted Shawn and executive director John Christian, except for two added attractions.

Les Grands Ballets Canadiens had programmed only their soloists but provided a company of 24. Barton Mumaw, former leading dancer with Shawn and his Men Dancers, made an unexpected guest appearance.

Hospitalized last season and the subject of grim reports, Shawn welcomed every matinee audience with one of his famous curtain talks and taught two mime classes for six weeks.

As for future plans, the word from the Pillow is that "it's a changing world and what will evolve in the coming months is anybody's guess."

NATIONAL SYMPHONY in Washington, D.C. apparently is one of the nation's few orchestras that aren't pressing the panic button for reasons of finance or anything else.

Its 40th season will open Oct. 13 with a Beethoven program under Antal Dorati, who has succeeded Howard Mitchell as conductor.

Among the season's soloists is Tchaikovsky Competition winner Vladimir Krainev, performing Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto in his American debut.

Another new but famous name on the American scene is Maxim Shostakovich. The son of the great Soviet composer is among the National Symphony's guest conductors.

BOSTON SYMPHONY associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct more concerts during the orchestra's 90th anniversary season than William Steinberg, the music director.

Of the 88 concerts announced for Boston, Cambridge, Providence and New York City, Thomas will conduct 28 and Steinberg 22.

The 38 remaining concerts will be conducted by the following: Seiji Ozawa (9); Donald Johanos (3); Erich Leinsdorf (10); Reafael Frunbeck de Burgos (4); Claudio Abbado (3); Bernard Haitink (5), and Rafael Kubelik (4).

Steinberg will open the season Friday at 2 p.m. with Holst's "The Planet's," Partos' "Paths," symphonic elegy, and Beethoven's Seventh Symphony.

Thursday, April 1, at 2 p.m. is the final announced date. Steinberg will close the season with Hindemith's "Concert Music for Strings and Brass," Opus 50; Schumann's Cello Concerto in A minor (Mstislav Rostropovich, soloist;, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony.

Four members of the orchestra will appear as soloists, all principal players: Armando Ghitalla, trumpet; Chester Schmitz, tuba; Sherman Walt, bassoon, and Joseph Silverstein, violin.

Other soloists are Maurizio Pollini, Joseph Kalichstein, Christoph Eschenbach and Theodore Lettvin, pianists; Paul Zukowsky, violin; Harvey Pittel, saxophone, and Jacqueline Du Pre, cello.

Choral groups: Harvard Glee Club and Cantato Singers.

Rafael Kubelik

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 917,082 SUN. 1,219,382

SEP 20 1970

INGOLF DAHL 1912-1970

Ingolf Dahl, composer, conductor, pianist and long-time professor at USC, died in Switzerland on Aug. 7. A musical tribute to his memory will be held at Bovard Auditorium, USC, Monday at 8 p.m., under the joint auspices of the university and the Monday Evening Concerts. Among the participants in the program will be Michael Tilson Thomas, formerly a student of Dahl's and now associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

BY MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

INGOLF DAHL
. . . "humor, conviction and love."

● I first met Ingolf Dahl during registration at USC. He was conducting the orchestra that semester and bustled with his endless curiosity among the offices of the instrumental departments, to see in person what kind of students were coming in.

During our first 10-minute encounter, he asked me about my familiarity with the Webern Six Pieces, in which I was to play, and simultaneously advised other waiting students about performance practice in Polish Rennaissance music, notation paradoxes in serial writing, and the importance of rubato as a device of delineating form in Beethoven and Webern.

Having charged all of us up with these spontaneous pyrotechnics, he rushed off to meet with other students and faculty. His greetings and distinctive high-pitched laugh seemed to be coming from every office of the building at once.

Vast Reserves

The six years I spent at USC were in no way to diminish this spectacular first impression, but rather to increase its effect as I began to perceive the vast reserves of knowledge, inspiration and humanity which lay behind it.

The great inspiration for us at the university was that Ingolf was there. Physically there, in his classes, his rehearsals, on his days "off" spent in the library, or research sessions, his lunch hours with the inevitable sack lunch gobbled during yet another conference with a deserving student. Spiritually there in his lessons and rehearsals, constantly alert, watching, criticizing, suggesting, encouraging, bringing us all up to the level where inspiration and interpretation are the beautifully simple result of total understanding.

His effectiveness in teaching was the product of great insight, enormously thorough preparation, and devotion to his subject and students.

Rehearsals and collegium sessions were illuminating events in which he transmitted much of his total view and method of working in music as well as his love and understanding of it. All of us remember his habit of singling out things about music which he thought especially great, explaining why he thought so, and then repeating the passage until he could sense we felt it too.

Then there were the mischievous glances, raised eyebrows and "speak no evil" hand gesture which he would exchange with the class to see if everyone had caught some unexpected cadence or formal curve.

Other Parts

Perhaps the greatest strength of his teaching was his appreciation of the great and important in music, whether or not it was his own personal position, and his fidelity in transmitting this information to his students. It is amazing that, considering this formidable schedule and intensity of activity, that teaching constituted only a part of his life. There were many other parts.

Ingolf was above all a real composer. His output of more than 30 compositions includes masterworks, among which especially the "Sonata Seria," "Concerto a Tre," Trio, Concerto for Saxophone, and Music for Brass Instruments stand as some of the finest pieces of the last 30 years. He never took the easy or fashionable way out in his works and would revise them until, like the works of Bach and Ockeghem he much admired, they had a sense of oneness, of tension and balance and hidden craft like a work of architecture.

At the same time he delighted in expression, and in fashioning a piece for a specific player. This balance between the abstract and the personal is a perfect portrait of himself.

In addition to his own composing, he worked on the orchestration and reduction of Stravinsky's "Scenes de Ballet" and "Danses Concertantes," reconstructed Bach concerti, edited Ives violin sonatas, transcribed, edited and revivified great amounts of early music, and ran Tanglewood's Collegium Musicum as Hindemith's successor.

Amazing Past

He conducted the first L.A. performances of "Pierrot Lunaire," "Persephone," and was L.A.'s champion of American music and good music in general. He was the savior of many a last-minute disaster, as he would step in with an hour's notice to brilliantly perform a brother composer's composition or to sight-read in performance the canonic solo part of a Stravinsky work.

As one knew Ingolf, one discovered more and more of his amazing past. One remembers his job learning and playing a different Haydn sonata on the radio each day, his playing with Benny Goodman, his long partnership with Gracie Fields, his enacting the part of the on-stage clown in the premiere of "Lulu" and, of course, the accomplishment of which he was the most proud: climbing the Matterhorn.

As I think of Ingolf now I feel immensely grateful to have known him as my teacher, colleague, and friend. I know too that for the rest of my life, whenever I ponder an artistic decision or think of what would be the most exciting, important and courageous thing to do, his voice will be there giving with humor, conviction and love his always sage advice.

He was a great man who cared enough about us all to alter our directions and transmit to us through his work and life the lasting joy and wonder of our art. We thank him.

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 917,082 SUN. 1,219,382

SEP 20 1970

"A Musical Tribute to the Memory of Ingolf Dahl," the late composer and professor of music at USC, will be presented Monday at 8 p.m. in USC's Bovard Auditorium. Student, faculty and professional musicians will join in a program of music by Dahl himself, Schuetz, Bach (arranged by Dahl), Purcell and Stravinsky. A concert devoted entirely to Dahl's music will be presented at USC at a later date. Performers for Monday's tribute, which is open free to the public, include Eudice Shapiro, violinist, and Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose reminiscenses of his former teacher appear on page 49 of today's Calendar.

ADVERTISING AGE
CHICAGO, ILL.

SEP 21 1970

MediaRep Adds Symphony

MediaRep Center Inc., Boston, has been named advertising sales representative for Boston Symphony Orchestra programs, succeeding Don Gammons, a symphony employe, who has retired.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) [illegible] (S) 194,[illegible]

SEP [illegible] 1970

Symphony ahead

Three of Boston's most-wanted men will be competing with the Mounted Police's finest on Friday for the shoulder-pats at the first of the season's super Symphony luncheons at Hort. Hall.

Byronic-profiled Michael Tilson Thomas, wielder of the second baton at Symphony (he won't be 26 until Dec. 21) will share the oohs and aahs with dynamo composer-conductor-teacher Gunther Schuller and the BSO's prize president of the trustees, Ted Banks.

These are the most lustrous win-and-dines round town thanks to the BSO's canny Council of Friends. And the jingling and clattering hoofbeats that get the girls across Mass. av. to Symphony Hall could be the Queen's Own Household Cavalry. Four Fridays — so get in if you can.

— Arts Council Corner —

Mary Sullivan, Chairman
BOX 155 — TEL. 236-2451

There are a few days left until the Granite Show at Maine Coast Artists closes Sunday at 6 p.m. Of special interest is the colored slide and sound production by Doug Hall and Gordon Bok. Detailed information is given on how the granite blocks were cut out of the ground and hoisted aboard the coasters in the harbor, and details of how more complex columns and sculptures were cut, in the 20 minute showing which runs continuously while the exhibit is open from 10 to 6; 1 to 6 Sunday.

The final showing of works by Maine artists is now in progress at Stell and Shevis Gallery until October 1.

Paul Shirley of Islesboro, a world authority on the Viola d'Amore, recently had a recording of his song, "Hail To Maine," made for WRKD in Rockland. A German native, Shirley was a member of the Boston Symphony from 1912-1929, a viola d'amore virtuoso and lecturer. The song was performed by the Lincoln County Orchestra under Ernest Lippman in 1958 in Rockland under the Knox County Music Association's Fourth Pops Concert. Profits from the song Shirley directed should benefit the students of the Islesboro school.

The University of Maine is opening its Orono concert series with the New York Pro Musica in "An Entertainment for Elizabeth," a Renaissance costume spectacle that presents the genuine form of a 16th century masque. The Pro Musica will appear October 15, Thursday. On October 30 the University will present Ravi Shankar, accompanied by tabla expert Alla Rakha. Subscription tickets are now on sale at 123 Lord Hall. Seven events are included in all.

The television presentation of Kenneth Clark's "Civilization" has been set for Wednesday nights on Channel 10, starting October 7. The series contains 13 broadcasts and covers Sir Kenneth's exposition of European civilization through its art and architecture and music from the fall of the Roman Empire to the present. The book can be ordered through the Owl and the Turtle.

Nancy Hanks, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, recently spoke optimistically before the American Symphony Orchestra League in Denver, stating, "It won't be long before museums, orchestras and theatres will be considered just as essential to a community as its schools and hospitals." According to an editorial following in the Denver Post, Miss Hanks maintained that performing and visual arts must take on the responsibility of presenting their cases as equally well with other priority grabbing causes if they wish comprehensive support. This includes competing with ecology education and urban problems. She maintains, "This doesn't mean cheapening culture or pandering to lowest common denominators or scrambling around for such external justifications as a winter Olympics. It means relating directly to ghetto dwellers and legislators as well as traditional supporters, leaving elitism behind and confronting the broad spectrum of community life." This, she said, "could produce new vitality for the arts along with a healthier budget."

Janet Lamont is exhibiting her "Brass Rubbings" which were made from the brass tombstones at Westminster Abbey and verious other metal objects such as manhole covers in England, at the Sugarloaf Base Lodge as part of the Annual Fall Festival there.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

SEP 23 1970

BSO Luncheon to Fete Two

GUESTS OF HONOR at the first Symphony Luncheon of the season, Friday Sept. 25, before the opening of the Symphony concerts at Symphony Hall will be the talented 25-year-old assistant conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, and the New England Conservatory's famous conductor teacher Gunther Schuller. These popular luncheons are held at nearby Horticultural Hall by the Friends of Symphony.

HERALD
CAMDEN, ME.
WEEKLY 2,770

SEP 24 1970

TIMES
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
(E) 10,850

SEP 26 1970

BOSTON SYMPHONY - Subscription tickets are being sold for the 90th anniversary series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Series A, on Tuesdays, will present 10 concerts at 8:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 29. The Tuesday B Series opens Oct. 6 with six concerts at 7:30 p.m. The Tuesday Cambridge series opens Oct. 13 at 8:30 p.m. Thursday A series will be six concerts at 8:30 p.m. starting Oct. 1. The Thursday B series will be three concerts at 8:30 p.m. starting Jan. 7. Conductors will be William Steinbert, Michael Tilson Thomas, Erich Leinsdorf, Donald Johanos, Seiji Ozawa, Bernard Haitink, Claudio Abbado and Rafael Fruhbeck DeBurgos. A brochure and complete programs available through the ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

MARJORIE SHERMAN

Midis go to BSO

Oh, all you mini-mums—the gong has rung! In of all places, Symphony Hall, where the midi sashayed up those hollowed and hallowed marble steps yesterday for the first down of the 90th year. And this most Brahmin of bailiwicks saw it for sure.

Yes, there were still some shorties around, but as Radcliffe's Susie Coons said: "Wait till the cold weather blows in."

Meanwhile, a lot of those soignee stalwarts who dreamed up the pre-Symphony Hort Hall luncheons dressed the new part.

Mrs. Harold Hodgkinson of the Back Bay, was in a super shinboner, likewise for Mrs. George Bates of eBacon Hill. There was a gorgeous navy original for Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Fiandaca's new black for trustee Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, who's moving in from Concord to the city.

Of course, there are all those dear old Davidows that never were hemmed up so thy'll never have to come back down—Mrs. Gorge Lewis and hordes of Higginsons and such are right in fashion's eye at last—although they've ignored it for 50 years and not about to change now.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,96[illegible]
(S) 566,[illegible]

SEP 26 1970

Social Chatter
by Alison Arnold

Temperatures in Nineties Mark Season's 1st Symphony Luncheon

FALL IS HERE, but no one would have known it yesterday at the opening of Symphony! The midsummer temperature soared up into the 90s and summer silks and cottons were everywhere. But Symphony Hall was filled for the first concert of the 90th season, conducted by William Steinberg. It began with Holst's opus on The Planets with the women of the New England Conservatory Chorus, directed by Lora Cooke de Varon. This was followed by the first performance in America of Partos, a symphonic elegy, and the program ended with Boston's beloved Beethoven.

Before the concert, the first Symphony Luncheon of the season was held in Horticultural Hall across the street. Co-chairmen of these popular luncheons are Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson. Yesterday's luncheon was under the auspices of the members of the Marblehead and North Shore areas of the Council of Friends.

They used pots of golden chrysanthemums as decorations and bouquets of the same flowers on the tables. As a "back-to-school" motif, yellow pencils were added to each bouquet. One of them was given to each person at each table as a souvenir or you could buy a cluster of six for a dollar.

There were few of the longer skirts as nearly everyone wore summer clothes. Mrs. Albert Goodhue, co-chairman of The Council of Friends with Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr., wore her skirt discreetly just below the knee—a becoming length. Mrs. George Bates, however, always a devoted follower of fashion, wore a black taffeta dress of midi length.

Guests of honor at the luncheon were young Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Symphony, Talcott M. Banks, president of the Board of Trustees, Gunther Schuller of the New England Conservatory of Music, and Mrs. John T. G. Nichols of the Friends of the Conservatory.

Mrs. James H. Perkins and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, the only two women trustees of the Symphony Orchestra, were there, and Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, who was with Mrs. Miles N. Clair, was being welcomed after her many months in the hospital.

With Mrs. Alfred Willmann was her sister, Mrs. Robert J. Fletcher of Montserrat, British West Indies, formerly of Winchester. She found Boston much hotter than Montserrat, which was only 72 when she left.

Among the many others were Mrs. Donald Sinclair, Mrs. Howard Davis, Mrs. John H. Cunningham, Mrs. William Amory, Mrs. Lewis H. Clark, Mrs. A. Turner Wells, Mrs. William J. Mixter Jr., Mrs. Harold Keller, Mrs. Victor Jones and Mrs. C. Russell Eddy.

The Council of Friends' first Stage-Door Lecture of the season will take place Friday morning, Oct. 9, at 11:30, in the basement of Symphony Hall. Armando Ghitalla will discuss the trumpet.

* * *

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) [illegible] (S) 298,557

SEP 26 1970

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 917,032 SUN. 1,219,382

SEP 20 1970

INGOLF DAHL 1912-1970

Ingolf Dahl, composer, conductor, pianist and long-time professor at USC, died in Switzerland on Aug. 7. A musical tribute to his memory will be held at Bovard Auditorium, USC, Monday at 8 p.m., under the joint auspices of the university and the Monday Evening Concerts. Among the participants in the program will be Michael Tilson Thomas, formerly a student of Dahl's and now associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

BY MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

● I first met Ingolf Dahl during registration at USC. He was conducting the orchestra that semester and bustled with his endless curiosity among the offices of the instrumental departments, to see in person what kind of students were coming in

During our first 10-minute encounter, he asked me about my familiarity with the Webern Six Pieces, in which I was to play, and simultaneously advised other waiting students about performance practice in Polish Rennaissance music, notation paradoxes in serial writing, and the importance of rubato as a device of delineating form in Beethoven and Webern.

Having charged all of us up with these spontaneous pyrotechnics, he rushed off to meet with other students and faculty. His greetings and distinctive high-pitched laugh seemed to be coming from every office of the building at once.

Vast Reserves

The six years I spent at USC were in no way to diminish this spectacular first impression, but rather to increase its effect as I began to perceive the vast reserves of knowledge, inspiration and humanity which lay behind it.

The great inspiration for us at the university was that Ingolf was there. Physically there, in his classes, his rehearsals, on his days "off" spent in the library, or research sessions, his lunch hours with the inevitable sack lunch gobbled during yet another conference with a deserving student. Spiritually there in his lessons and rehearsals, constantly alert, watching, criticizing, suggesting, encouraging, bringing us all up to the level where inspiration and interpretation are the beautifully simple result of total understanding.

His effectiveness in teaching was the product of great insight, enormously thorough preparation, and devotion to his subject and students.

Rehearsals and collegium sessions were illuminating events in which he transmitted much of his total view and method of working in music as well as his love and understanding of it. All of us remember his habit of singling out things about music which he thought especially great, explaining why he thought so, and then repeating the passage until he could sense we felt it too.

Then there were the mischievous glances, raised eyebrows and "speak no evil" hand gesture which he would exchange with the class to see if everyone had caught some unexpected cadence or tonal curve.

Other Parts

Perhaps the greatest strength of his teaching was his appreciation of the great and important in music, whether or not it was his own personal position, and his fidelity in transmitting this information to his students. It is amazing that, considering this formidable schedule and intensity of activity, that teaching constituted only a part of his life. There were many other parts.

Ingolf was above all a real composer.

INGOLF DAHL
. . . "humor, conviction and love."

His output of more than 30 compositions includes masterworks, among which especially the "Sonata Seria," "Concerto a Tre," Trio, Concerto for Saxophone, and Music for Brass Instruments stand as some of the finest pieces of the last 30 years. He never took the easy or fashionable way out in his works and would revise them until, like the works of Bach and Ockeghem he much admired, they had a sense of oneness, of tension and balance and hidden craft like a work of architecture.

At the same time he delighted in expression, and in fashioning a piece for a specific player. This balance between the abstract and the personal is a perfect portrait of himself.

In addition to his own composing, he worked on the orchestration and reduction of Stravinsky's "Scenes de Ballet" and "Danses Concertantes," reconstructed Bach concerti, edited Ives violin sonatas, transcribed, edited and revivified great amounts of early music, and ran Tanglewood's Collegium Musicum as Hindemith's successor.

Amazing Past

He conducted the first L.A. performances of "Pierrot Lunaire," "Persephone," and was L.A.'s champion of American music and good music in general. He was the savior of many a last-minute disaster, as he would step in with an hour's notice to brilliantly perform a brother composer's composition or to sight-read in performance the canonic solo part of a Stravinsky work.

As one knew Ingolf, one discovered more and more of his amazing past. One remembers his job learning and playing a different Haydn sonata on the radio each day, his playing with Benny Goodman, his long partnership with Gracie Fields, his enacting the part of the on-stage clown in the premiere of "Lulu" and, of course, the accomplishment of which he was the most proud: climbing the Matterhorn.

As I think of Ingolf now I feel immensely grateful to have known him as my teacher, colleague, and friend. I know too that for the rest of my life, whenever I ponder an artistic decision or think of what would be the most exciting, important and courageous thing to do, his voice will be there giving with humor, conviction and love his always sage advice.

He was a great man who cared enough about us all to alter our directions and transmit to us through his work and life the lasting joy and wonder of our art. We thank him.

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 917,032 SUN. 1,219,382

SEP 20 1970

"A Musical Tribute to the Memory of Ingolf Dahl," the late composer and professor of music at USC, will be presented Monday at 8 p.m. in USC's Bovard Auditorium. Student, faculty and professional musicians will join in a program of music by Dahl himself, Schuetz, Bach (arranged by Dahl), Purcell and Stravinsky. A concert devoted entirely to Dahl's music will be presented at USC at a later date. Performers for Monday's tribute, which is open free to the public, include Eudice Shapiro, violinist, and Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose reminiscenses of his former teacher appear on page 49 of today's Calendar.

SEP 20 1970

MediaRep Adds Symphony

MediaRep Center Inc., Boston, has been named advertising sales representative for Boston Symphony Orchestra programs, succeeding Don Gammons, a symphony employe, who has retired.

Symphony ahead

Three of Boston's most-wanted men will be competing with the Mounted Police's finest on Friday for the shoulder-pats at the first of the season's super Symphony luncheons at Hort. Hall.

Byronic-profiled Michael Tilson Thomas, wielder of the second baton at Symphony (he won't be 26 until Dec. 21) will share the oohs and aahs with dynamo composer-conductor-teacher Gunther Schuller and the BSO's prize president of the trustees, Ted Banks.

These are the most lustrous win-and-dines round town thanks to the BSO's canny Council of Friends. And the jingling and clattering hoofbeats that get the girls across Mass. av. to Symphony Hall could be the Queen's Own Household Cavalry. Four Fridays — so get in if you can.

— Arts Council Corner —

Mary Sullivan, Chairman
BOX 155 — TEL. 236-2451

There are a few days left until the Granite Show at Maine Coast Artists closes Sunday at 6 p.m. Of special interest is the colored slide and sound production by Doug Hall and Gordon Bok. Detailed information is given on how the granite blocks were cut out of the ground and hoisted aboard the coasters in the harbor, and details of how more complex columns and sculptures were cut, in the 20 minute showing which runs continuously while the exhibit is open from 10 to 6; 1 to 6 Sunday.

The final showing of works by Maine artists is now in progress at Stell and Shevis Gallery until October 1.

Paul Shirley of Islesboro, a world authority on the Viola d'Amore, recently had a recording of his song, "Hail To Maine," made for WRKD in Rockland. A German native, Shirley was a member of the Boston Symphony from 1912-1929, a viola d'amore virtuoso and lecturer. The song was performed by the Lincoln County Orchestra under Ernest Lippman in 1958 in Rockland under the Knox County Music Association's Fourth Pops Concert. Profits from the song Shirley directed should benefit the students of the Islesboro school.

The University of Maine is opening its Orono concert series with the New York Pro Musica in "An Entertainment for Elizabeth," a Renaissance costume spectacle that presents the genuine form of a 16th century masque. The Pro Musica will appear October 15, Thursday. On October 30 the University will present Ravi Shankar, accompanied by tabla expert Alla Rakha. Subscription tickets are now on sale at 123 Lord Hall. Seven events are included in all.

The television presentation of Kenneth Clark's "Civilization" has been set for Wednesday nights on Channel 10, starting October 7. The series contains 13 broadcasts and covers Sir Kenneth's exposition of European civilization through its art and architecture and music from the fall of the Roman Empire to the present. The book can be ordered through the Owl and the Turtle.

Nancy Hanks, chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts, recently spoke optimistically before the American Symphony Orchestra League in Denver, stating, "It won't be long before museums, orchestras and theatres will be considered just as essential to a community as its schools and hospitals." According to an editorial following in the Denver Post, Miss Hanks maintained that performing and visual arts must take on the responsibility of presenting their cases as equally well with other priority grabbing causes if they wish comprehensive support. This includes competing with ecology education and urban problems. She maintains, "This doesn't mean cheapening culture or pandering to lowest common denominators or scrambling around for such external justifications as a winter Olympics. It means relating directly to ghetto dwellers and legislators as well as traditional supporters, leaving elitism behind and confronting the broad spectrum of community life." This, she said, "could produce new vitality for the arts along with a healthier budget."

Janet Lamont is exhibiting her "Brass Rubbings" which were made from the brass tombstones at Westminster Abbey and verious other metal objects such as manhole covers in England, at the Sugarloaf Base Lodge as part of the Annual Fall Festival there.

BSO Luncheon to Fete Two

GUESTS OF HONOR at the first Symphony Luncheon of the season, Friday Sept. 25, before the opening of the Symphony concerts at Symphony Hall will be the talented 25-year-old assistant conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, and the New England Conservatory's famous conductor teacher Gunther Schuller. These popular luncheons are held at nearby Horticultural Hall by the Friends of Symphony.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

SEP 23 1970

HERALD
CAMDEN, ME.
WEEKLY 2,770

SEP 24 1970

TIMES
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
(E) 10,850

SEP 26 1970

BOSTON SYMPHONY - Subscription tickets are being sold for the 90th anniversary series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Series A, on Tuesdays, will present 10 concerts at 8:30 p.m. beginning Sept. 29. The Tuesday B Series opens Oct. 6 with six concerts at 7:30 p.m. The Tuesday Cambridge series opens Oct. 13 at 8:30 p.m. Thursday A series will be six concerts at 8:30 p.m. starting Oct. 1. The Thursday B series will be three concerts at 8:30 p.m. starting Jan. 7. Conductors will be William Steinbert, Michael Tilson Thomas, Erich Leinsdorf, Donald Johanos, Seiji Ozawa, Bernard Haitink, Claudio Abbado and Rafael Fruhbeck DeBurgos. A brochure and complete programs available through the ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

MARJORIE SHERMAN

Midis go to BSO

Oh, all you mini-mums—the gong has rung! In of all places, Symphony Hall, where the midi sashayed up those hollowed and hallowed marble steps yesterday for the first down of the 90th year. And this most Brahmin of bailiwicks saw it for sure.

Yes, there were still some shorties around, but as Radcliffe's Susie Coons said: "Wait till the cold weather blows in."

Meanwhile, a lot of those soignee stalwarts who dreamed up the pre-Symphony Hort Hall luncheons dressed the new part.

Mrs. Harold Hodgkinson of the Back Bay, was in a super shinboner, likewise for Mrs. George Bates of eBacon Hill. There was a gorgeous navy original for Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Fiandaca's new black for trustee Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, who's moving in from Concord to the city.

Of course, there are all those dear old Davidows that never were hemmed up so thy'll never have to come back down—Mrs. Gorge Lewis and hordes of Higginsons and such are right in fashion's eye at last—although they've ignored it for 50 years and not about to change now.

Social Chatter
by Alison Arnold

Temperatures in Nineties Mark Season's 1st Symphony Luncheon

FALL IS HERE, but no one would have known it yesterday at the opening of Symphony! The midsummer temperature soared up into the 90s and summer silks and cottons were everywhere. But Symphony Hall was filled for the first concert of the 90th season, conducted by William Steinberg. It began with Holst's opus on The Planets with the women of the New England Conservatory Chorus, directed by Lora Cooke de Varon. This was followed by the first performance in America of Partos, a symphonic elegy, and the program ended with Boston's beloved Beethoven.

Before the concert, the first Symphony Luncheon of the season was held in Horticultural Hall across the street. Co-chairmen of these popular luncheons are Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson. Yesterday's luncheon was under the auspices of the members of the Marblehead and North Shore areas of the Council of Friends.

They used pots of golden chrysanthemums as decorations and bouquets of the same flowers on the tables. As a "back-to-school" motif, yellow pencils were added to each bouquet. One of them was given to each person at each table as a souvenir or you could buy a cluster of six for a dollar.

There were few of the longer skirts as nearly everyone wore summer clothes. Mrs. Albert Goodhue, co-chairman of The Council of Friends with Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr., wore her skirt discreetly just below the knee—a becoming length. Mrs. George Bates, however, always a devoted follower of fashion, wore a black taffeta dress of midi length.

Guests of honor at the luncheon were young Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Symphony, Talcott M. Banks, president of the Board of Trustees, Gunther Schuller of the New England Conservatory of Music, and Mrs. John T. G. Nichols of the Friends of the Conservatory.

Mrs. James H. Perkins and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, the only two women trustees of the Symphony Orchestra, were there, and Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, who was with Mrs. Miles N. Clair, was being welcomed after her many months in the hospital.

With Mrs. Alfred Willmann was her sister, Mrs. Robert J. Fletcher of Montserrat, British West Indies, formerly of Winchester. She found Boston much hotter than Montserrat, which was only 72 when she left.

Among the many others were Mrs. Donald Sinclair, Mrs. Howard Davis, Mrs. John H. Cunningham, Mrs. William Amory, Mrs. Lewis H. Clark, Mrs. A. Turner Wells, Mrs. William J. Mixter Jr., Mrs. Harold Keller, Mrs. Victor Jones and Mrs. C. Russell Eddy.

The Council of Friends' first Stage-Door Lecture of the season will take place Friday morning, Oct. 9, at 11:30, in the basement of Symphony Hall. Armando Ghitalla will discuss the trumpet.

* * *

48

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 449,000

SEP 26 1970

The Symphonic Strike Season

complaints of the players over discomfort and inconvenience; in other instances, the players merely want more time in their home cities to teach and to play free-lance jobs. But the alleviation of genuine complaints has not always been accomplished with mutual good wi players tions ta tions ir sequent to pro tours a other c serious Tradi have ha for the or rec makes the pro ical in Federat ades gc for the for suc
in any of these econom mercial
TV is n
"educat these c the op provide promot casts; o ishing r local "p of "live Until permitt mercial
al scale of the c it possi phony record orchest themsel Howeve recordi revoked record all but chestras fered a Europe ferior t counter
A nun arrange for dist compen
the orc years ag
Philharr
tion of t tras are striction

country have yet shown a concern for artistic quality at the expense either of personal convenience or of financial of symphonic labor relations must be eliminated if continued public support is to be warranted. In the past decade been all nandify ettle t of erv-rm-

fear that such broadcasts will reduce recording sales; other players are believed to advocate such prohibition in the hope of obtaining extra payment in exchange for granting permission to record broadcast tapes. As usual, the primary loser is the public: The the forced retention of aging and inferior musicians can seriously hamper their efforts. When such orchestras can muster increased support from their communities for better musicians' pay and longer seasons, they are entitled to seek commensurate improvement in

SR: RECORDINGS

47 The Symphonic Strike Season by Philip Hart

50 My George Szell by Henri Temianka

52 Recordings in Review by Irving Kolodin

54 Recordings Reports I: Orchestral LPs

56 Recordings Reports II: Miscellaneous LPs

57 The Hi-Fi Convenience Revolution by Ivan Berger

59 Dvořák's "Requiem" by Kertész by George Louis Mayer

60 Letters to the Recordings Editor

—Karl J. Rauschkolb

The new symphonic quartet—Cleveland Orchestra personnel picketing Severance Hall, September 1970.

The Symphonic Strike Season

by PHILIP HART

As in the world of ready-to-wear, it is becoming increasingly apparent, year by year, that the world of music, too, has its fifth season—fall, winter, spring, summer, and the symphonic strike season. It opened in earnest on September 12 when representatives of the Cleveland Orchestra rejected management's offer on a contract renewal, and settled in for a prolonged negotiation. A few days later management of the Minnesota Orchestra, as the Minneapolis Symphony is now known, cancelled the first week of its season in similar circumstances.

It was all foreshadowed months ago when a musician of the New York Philharmonic told a reporter from The New York Times: "We see that plumbers are making $19,000 a year. That looks pretty good to us." As between greasy overalls and immaculate tails, there is no question which looks better to an audience. But if the "plumber" parallel holds, perhaps it would be better to revise all concert garb—downward.

Blunt as they are and crude as they are, the quoted words summarize the militance of the musicians in American symphony and opera orchestras. They also intensify the basic economic dilemma facing the organizations that sponsor these enterprises, and those public-spirited citizens who must raise from private and public donors sums ranging well upward from half their operating expenses. Nor is the economic factor, important as it is, all that is harassing them. There are other questions covered by the inclusive term "working conditions" that carry with them serious implications of an artistic nature.

Well before the opening of the symphonic strike season, nine out of twenty-nine major professional symphony orchestras in the United States and Canada were bargaining with their players for the renewal of contracts that usually run for three years: These include the orchestras of New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Minnesota, Milwaukee, Toronto, Montreal, Buffalo, and Utah; the Boston Symphony is negotiating pay scale only under an overall contract expiring next season. Although only nine orchestras are discussing economic issues and working conditions, many items under consideration are often based on agreements previously reached by other important orchestras. This means that concessions granted now will recur in bargaining on other fronts in the future.

Over the past decade, there has been a substantial improvement in the economic status of professional symphony orchestra musicians, both in length of season and in increased salaries. As of the end of the 1969-70 season, no less than five orchestras employed their musicians for fifty-two weeks a year; another seven were rapidly approaching that goal; and one, that of San

PHILIP HART, whose career in music has included managerial responsibility with the Portland (Oregon) Symphony, the Chicago Symphony, and other orchestras, is presently writing a book on the subject, to be published by W. W. Norton.

MARJORIE SHERMAN

Midi winning great debate

On or off the White House steps, the midi is still the bone of contention, from what Webster's likes to call "the femoral region" (thigh-high mini to us) right down to the shin shank.

And moral indignation is running even higher than the skirts, pollution issues or the political candidates.

"We don't want to wear the midis, we just feel they're something we have to see for ourselves," explained Hingham's Mrs. John Barnes.

She and a town-wide committee are celebrating on Oct. 7 the centennial year of this beautiful Colonial town's Public Library — one of the oldest and nicest for miles around.

The elms and maples of a famous Main street look down on some of the choicest 18th century houses in the nation, but precious few midis, though they're in the windows of the town's sleek shops, judiciously spaced with the ubiquitous pantsuit.

But Hingham wants the best, mind you, and on Wednesday, Oct. 7 at three o'clock, the midi will waltz down the runway in all its glory.

Alfred Fiandaca dresses Boston's Cabots, both Mrs. Louis and Mrs. Lewis, and yes, they've a midi wardrobe already in hand, and best-dressed Betsy (Mrs. Albert) Goodhue, who wore Fiandaca's beautifully tailored gold wool midi to Channel 2's founding of the fans this week; and the Gardner family (of the Fenway Court clan). All live up to the late great Mrs. Jack Gardner's avante garde billing — she didn't dream up that palace for dullards.

Says modest but lightning-eyed Fiandaca, who shook all of the dear old Boston Symphony contingent by using its hallowed calligraphy as a motif for longtime client Fran Fahnestock's elegant turnout for the first (and best) Symphony Ball: "A good midi suits most figures much better than the mini — we're in for a really feminine image."

When asked to do the shows for the Sargent campaign, Alfred was told that some of his constituents, politically speaking, thought the mini would be more suitable."

Said Fiandaca, "If this were a benefit at the White House would you expect me to ask Mrs. Nixon to play 'Hello, Dolly'?"

The midi is being worn.

Nothing else showed up this week at the top-level ambassadorial conference in New York for the English-Speaking Union's Jubilee Year. Van Burens and such took time off from their Newport cup-race sailing parties to be there. The next VIP go-round will be in Washington in November, with Boston-via-London Bidi Budd no. 1 delegate at the black-tie circuit from the Smithsonian to Ambassador John Freeman's.

For the Manhattan merry-go-round she wore a Hartnell midi ordered in London earlier this fall when she renewed family ties with the Queen's Hussars (the slogan is "better by far a tenth Hussar").

London is rampant with the midi, at all the smart parties, and New York a close second, with international luminaries like Princess Irene doing her piano-practicing in streamlined mid-leg navy silk rep.

Also Lincoln-Centering it were the Baron and Baroness Gaufites, her midi a Givency, sleek and slim and lustered with a hoop of diamonds that would light up most of the Place Vendome. It really is "Vive la midi," girls.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) [illegible]
(S) [illegible]

SEP 27 1970

Boston Symphony finds young genius at the helm

By ALFRED W. BURKE

Music

LOWELL — With his baton filled with musical magic, Hollywood born Michael Tilson Thomas came riding out of the west to assume the position of assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Young Mr. Thomas has been the latest of a long line of "youngsters" who have filled the pages of musical history since before Mozart's time. There have always been child and youthful proteges. Many disappeared early in their brief careers. Others did fairly well. One did it completely — this was Arturo Toscanini.

Toscanini started asserting his genius at the age of 26. Thomas had his opportunity even earlier. He was well trained. He applied himself well, and it is apparant that he did his homework, plus practice very well.

He is a graduate of the University of Southern California. He has received both Bachelor and Master degrees in Music from there. His greatest opportunity came through the award of a Conducting Fellowship to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. Naturally, there were other times during his career that he has been recognized for his scholarship. However it remained for the Festival scene to allow his swift advancement to what could prove to be but a step from the top.

It is expected that he possess the technical skill as well as the inner feeling for his work, but the fact that he is accepted by his associates is the crowning point. Many of these instrumentalists are many years his senior both on the calendar as well as in experience. Their stamp of approval makes him qualified in our mind

THOMAS HAS done a great deal of work during his few years in the field. He has had a variety of experiences. He has conducted the Youth Concerts presented by the Los Angeles Philharmonic; premieres of works by and with composers — Igor Stravinsky, Pierre Boulez, Karlheinz Stockhausen, Lukas Foss, Ingolf Dahl, William Dahl, William Kraft and Stanley Silverman, to mention only a few. He even appeared in the role of pianist in a Town Hall recital. On that occasion he joined Laurence Lesser, the well known cellist. At Hunter College he performed, again as pianist, in "New Image of Sound", a program that enabled him to gain further recognition. While in Los Angeles he was pianist in the master classes of Gregor Piatorgorsky.

Michael Tilson Thomas came to the Boston Symphony during September of last year. He replaced the Orchestra's musical director, William Steinberg at the mid-point of a Philharmonic Hall concert at Lincoln Center. The day was his, and his moment of success was relived the following Saturday evening. Young Mr. Thomas had arrived.

For the remainder of the Boston Symphony's season he conducted more than 30 concerts. His appointment to the assistant conductorship came at the close of the season. He is the first conductor to hold this position since Richard Burgin.

MICHAEL THOMAS
. . . assistant conductor Boston Symphony orchestra

In May of this year he made his London debut. He led the London Symphony in a program presented in Festival Hall. During the past summer he was active at Tanglewood, the Ravinia Festival in Chicago, and the Lincoln Center Festival in New York. During the current season he will direct the Boston Symphony in both Boston, New York, and on the European tour. He will perform both as conductor and pianist on some of the Orchestra's first recordings for its new series on Deutsche Grammophon.

Top 20 discs

NEW YORK (UPI) — The top 20 songs in the popfield this week based on Billboard's survey of sales and broadcast play are:

1. "Ain't No Mountain High Enough" Diana Ross.
2. "Lookin' Out My Back Door" Creedence Clearwater Revival
3. "Candida" Dawn
4. "Craclin Rosie" Neil Diamond
5. "Julie, Do You Love Me?" Bobby Sherman
6. "Star I'll Be There" Jack son Five.
7. "I Know I'm Losing You" Rare Earth.
8. "Snow Bird" Anne Murray.
9. "War" Edwin Starr.
10. "All Right Now" Free.
11. "Patches" Clarence Carter.
12. "Groovy Situation" Gene Chandler.
13. "Don't Play That Song" Aretha Franklin.
14. "Express Yourself" Charles Wright & The 101st St. Rythm Band.
15. It's A Shame" Spinners.
16. "Green-Eyed Lady" Sugarloaf.
17. "Twenty-Five or 6 to 4" Chicago.
18. "We've Only Just Begun" Carpenters.
19. "I Who Have Nothing" Tom Jones.
20. "Still Water Love" Four Tops.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 44,000

SEP 26 1970

The Symphonic Strike Season

complaints of the players over discomfort and inconvenience; in other instances, the players merely want more time in their home cities to teach and to play free-lance jobs. But the alleviation of genuine complaints has not always been accomplished with mutual good will between management and the players, nor do these resulting restrictions take into account changing conditions in transportation facilities. Consequently, the ability of management to promote maximum income from tours and to provide musical service to other communities on tour has been seriously limited.

Traditionally, professional musicians have had a great reluctance to perform for the electronic media of radio, TV, or recording without high pay that makes it possible for them to share the productivity benefits of technological improvements. The American Federation of Musicians has for decades governed the national pay scales for these media, and American scale for such services is vastly higher than in any other country. Partly because of these costs, but largely due to the economics of audience-oriented commercial television, symphonic music on TV is nationally largely limited to a few "educational" outlets. On the local level these costly requirements have limited the opportunity for an orchestra to provide community service and obtain promotion through live TV broadcasts; only a few orchestras, in diminishing number, are permitted to make local "public service" radio broadcasts of "live" concerts.

Until recently, however, the AFM permitted orchestras to make commercial recordings at less than national scale, providing that all members of the orchestra so agreed; this made it possible for the Utah State Symphony under Maurice Abravanel to record extensively, and a few other orchestras have occasionally availed themselves of this same opportunity. However, as a result of the 1969 master recording contract, this provision was revoked, thus depriving the American record buyer of hearing on records all but a handful of top American orchestras. At the same time, he is offered a vast variety of recordings by European orchestras substantially inferior to many nonrecording American counterparts.

A number of our top orchestras have arranged to make tapes of concerts for distribution to FM stations for a compensation that frequently goes to the orchestras' pension funds. A few years ago the players of the New York Philharmonic forced the discontinuation of this service, and other orchestras are now faced with similar restrictions. It is said that some players fear that such broadcasts will reduce recording sales; other players are believed to advocate such prohibition in the hope of obtaining extra payment in exchange for granting permission to record broadcast tapes. As usual, the primary loser is the public: The orchestra plays the concert anyway, and the by-product is wasted.

Possibly the greatest danger to the maintenance and improvement of orchestra quality lies in efforts of musicians to play a greater, and frequently predominant, role in basic personnel decisions. The long-time authority of the conductor as final arbiter of a player's ability to enter an orchestra and remain there has been increasingly restricted. Legitimate protections against the arbitrary or capricious dictatorship of the conductor have long been in effect. But they are being made increasingly rigid to the point where it is now virtually impossible to discharge a player once he has served a brief trial period.

Auditions for replacements or promotions must, increasingly, be held under complicated rules, with committees in which the players play a major role, and strong preference must be given to present members of the orchestra in filling important positions and to local union members in filling vacancies. The introduction of orchestral musicians themselves into the audition committee places them in the position of passing judgment on their friends, their own pupils, and the pupils of their colleagues. Some of our best-established orchestras, such as those of Philadelphia, New York, and Chicago, take pride in the continuity of their musical personnel and in the fact that so many of their players were students of older musicians; such continuity can be an artistic asset when it results in quality, but not all communities enjoy a Curtis Institute, a Juilliard, a New England Conservatory, or a Chicago Civic Orchestra. Teacher-pupil relationships, factional cliques, and outright nepotism are always a danger, especially when they lead to the perpetuation of mediocrity.

Finally, there is the agonizing problem of the aging player, who regrettably may be the last to admit his declining powers. When their cases come before a committee of colleagues, the latter are all too tempted to take an indulgent view of their friends' plight, a plight that they themselves may face in a few years.

In the older and better established orchestras these dangers are not so great, since they can readily draw upon the best available players, but smaller cities desiring to upgrade their orchestras find that restrictions on the "importation" of out-of-town players and the forced retention of aging and inferior musicians can seriously hamper their efforts. When such orchestras can muster increased support from their communities for better musicians' pay and longer seasons, they are entitled to seek commensurate improvement in personnel. This does not necessarily call for an inhumanely callous pursuit of artistic quality, but rather for a sympathetic exploration of personnel procedures based on a balanced view of individual problems rather than an inflexible set of rules and regulations.

As these primarily noneconomic issues have become more critical in the past decade, some managements and orchestra associations have tended to sacrifice artistic considerations to the far more dramatic pressures of primary economic problems. All too often, under pressure of deadlines to begin a season, these associations have bargained away artistic positions to achieve more favorable economic terms, only to learn later that they must pay a price both in secondary costs and in musical potential.

This becomes all the more serious when one contemplates the decline of the resident conductor in this country. No small share of the glory of American orchestras derives from the close relation of conductor and orchestra. Even when management may agree to limitations of artistic authority, the conductor by his own personal power can nonetheless maintain artistic quality. However, this close association of conductor and orchestra may no longer characterize the symphonic institution: Of the six top orchestras in this country, only one, that of Philadelphia, is led by a truly full-time director; Solti in Chicago and Mehta in Los Angeles have extensive international commitments and interests that can modify close involvement with their respective orchestras; in 1971 New York, after a two-year hiatus, will have in Boulez a director with similar distractions; Boston's musical adviser is also in charge of the Pittsburgh Symphony, a dual task that strains the resources of William Steinberg; and the death of George Szell now places Cleveland in the position of finding the major, full-time leadership that has evaded four other comparable orchestras.

With less internationally glamorous leadership, the second echelon of our major orchestras actually now enjoys a higher degree of full-time leadership than do the handful of top orchestras: To Skrowaczewski in Minnesota, Ehrling in Detroit, Schwieger in Kansas City, Abravanel in Utah, and Katims in Seattle are now hopefully added Dorati in Washington, Susskind in St. Louis,

(Continued on page 55)

MARJORIE SHERMAN

Midi winning great debate

On or off the White House steps, the midi is still the bone of contention, from what Webster's likes to call "the femoral region" (thigh-high mini to us) right down to the shin shank.

Francisco, shares its personnel with the local Opera Association in a way that provides them with year-round employment. In 1963-64, Professors Baumol and Bowen, in their monumental study The Performing Arts: The Economic Dilemma, reported that the average annual pay of symphonic musicians in the major professional orchestras was $4,750; the most recent figures on the season just past indicate that for these same orchestras a comparable figure is now close to $10,000.

Although a disproportionate amount of this increase centers in the wealthier and larger cities, with the smaller ones in some instances still offering substandard orchestra pay, it can certainly be stated that major progress has been made in alleviating the adverse economic status of orchestra players that caused so much concern in the early 1960s. However, not content with the attainment of major economic goals, the increasingly militant orchestra players are now making demands at the bargaining table that can seriously impair the high artistic quality that American orchestras have achieved.

In the past century, American orchestras have developed a standard of artistic quality unexcelled anywhere. Historically, these orchestras have operated as a benevolent autocracy: Contrary to European experience, the stature of American orchestras has depended upon the close identification of a major conductor with an orchestra over a period of years. Theodore Thomas with his own orchestra and that of Chicago, Stock after him in Chicago, Stokowski and Ormandy in Philadelphia, Reiner in Pittsburgh and Chicago, Toscanini and Bernstein in New York, Koussevitzky in Boston, and George Szell in Cleveland all represent the highest virtues of such an association of conductor and orchestra, and have established the goal to which other American communities have aspired. The autocratic role of such conductors has contributed substantially to the artistic quality of our orchestras and to the long-range welfare of the players. For their part, orchestra players have become highly organized, bargaining more effectively through their own committees than by union representation, to protect their individual interests and advance their common economic objectives.

In recent years, moreover, orchestra musicians have become increasingly militant in the promotion of such interests. Whereas, between 1922 and 1953 there were but two work stoppages of short duration among American orchestras, there have been, beginning with the Philadelphia stoppage in 1954, a total of eighteen, through the 1969-70 season, seven in the past four seasons, involving as many as seven weeks of nonperformance. Though all of these stoppages were primarily related to economic issues, an increasing number were aggravated by noneconomic differences.

These noneconomic issues involve a wide range of prerogatives hitherto reserved to orchestra management—the hiring and firing of players, the scheduling of rehearsals and concerts, conditions for touring, and performance on radio, TV, and for records. Although there are frequently economic implications in such questions, these remarks will be confined to the artistic and performance consequences of concern to the audience. This by no means should lead one to ignore the economic element, although here it is essential to emphasize other concerns.

It would seem reasonable to assume that, once our orchestra musicians have attained year-round employment at decent compensation, they would allow orchestras' managements and conductors to use their services with a reasonable degree of flexibility in presenting new repertory and in developing new audiences. There is no reason, for instance, why all concerts must be based on the nineteenth-century concept of the 100-piece symphony orchestra: Music of prior and more recent origin deserves more than an occasional place on our programs. Similarly, there are many opportunities to play for smaller audiences in outlying halls without confining an orchestra's activity to one, centrally located auditorium. From the sponsoring associations' point of view, flexibility in repertory and dispersion of concert presentation offer opportunities to utilize the manpower available under extended seasons. Yet, by contractual provisions, the players are restricting such managerial prerogatives.

William Steinberg — "Boston's musical adviser is also in charge of the Pittsburgh Symphony."

As an example: It is generally known that orchestral contracts are based on a stipulated number of services per week—a "service" representing either a concert or a rehearsal. All players are compensated whether or not they participate in the rehearsals and concerts of a specific week. However, when circumstances require a Mozart or Haydn symphony to be prepared in an extra rehearsal not covered by the specified number of services, most orchestras find they must pay the total personnel, whether they participate or not. Moreover, the basic number of players may not be split into separate ensembles, with one rehearsing under an associate conductor a program to be performed in a suburban hall. A few major orchestras are now permitted to divide into two or more smaller groups, but such permission is usually limited to free concerts in the schools under such stringent limitations that some orchestras who have this right have been unable to exercise it. For public, paid concerts, however, no orchestra with 90 to 105 musicians (under a contract requiring paying all when only a few are working) can undertake a supplementary series of programs devoted to baroque, eighteenth-century, or modern works for smaller forces.

Another major scheduling limitation is the requirement that orchestra managements post schedules of rehearsals, including specific works to be rehearsed, several weeks in advance. This makes it possible for players not required for a given piece to know when they will have time off, frequently for other employment in teaching or in free-lance performance. However, it is occasionally difficult for a conductor to know in advance precisely how much time he will need to prepare each piece; this is especially the case with guest conductors unfamiliar with the orchestra, or when new music is programed. Thus, our orchestra players are demanding increasingly inflexible work schedules and limitations on the length of rehearsals and permissible overtime, all of which can and actually does impair the quality of the final performance, without offering any quo for this quid.

As our orchestras have increased the length of their seasons in a commendable effort to provide full-time employment for their players, they must seek new performance opportunities not only in their home auditoriums but in the suburban areas and on tour. Yet, restrictive contractual provisions limit the flexibility of management in scheduling "run outs" (involving no overnight stay) and tours. To some degree these restrictions arise from legitimate

Boston Symphony finds young genius at the helm

By ALFRED W. BURKE

Music

THOMAS conductor
ony orchestra

LOWELL — With his baton filled with musical magic, Hollywood born Michael Tilson Thomas came riding out of the west to assume the position of assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Young Mr. Thomas has been the latest of a long line of "youngsters" who have filled the pages of musical history since before Mozart's time. There have always been child and youthful proteges. Many disappeared early in their brief careers. Others did fairly well. One did it completely — this was Arturo Toscanini.

Toscanini started asserting his genius at the age of 26. Thomas had his opportunity d this position argin.

year he made
it. He led the y in a program
tival Hall. Dur-mer he was ac-
od, the Ravinia
cago, and the 'estival in New e current seaect the Boston
h Boston, New the European rform both as ianist on some
's first record-
ew series on nophon.

) discs

PI) — The top popfield this Billboard's sur-broadcast play

Mountain High
Ross.
Out My Back
e Clearwater

Dawn
sie" Neil Dia-

'ou Love Me?"

e There" Jack

n Losing You"

Anne Murray.
n Starr.
Now" Free.
Clarence

ituation" Gene

y That Song"

Yourself"
& The 101st St.

me" Spinners.
ed Lady" Su-

ive or 6 to 4"

ly Just Begun"

Have Nothing"

er Love" Four

SEP 27 1970

My George Szell

by HENRI TEMIANKA

For a number of years, George Szell was one of my most intimate friends. When I learned the sorrowful news of his death, I looked up our old correspondence. Every page of these letters is aglow with Szell's rich, three-dimensional personality, full of wit, earthy humor, affectionate concern, sparkling intelligence, joie de vivre, and intense vitality. He was a man with a tremendous cultural background, in command of half-a-dozen languages, who absorbed and enjoyed all the good things of life. (He once gave me a lucid lecture, complete with drawings, on the principles of automotive engineering.)

I first met Szell when Stefan Zweig, the Austrian novelist whose protégé and close friend I had become, brought him to a little apartment in St. John's Wood in London where I was living in 1937. Szell was then forty years old, already on his way toward a brilliant career, but still with enough youthful eagerness to display his recent rave reviews at the drop of a hat.

He sat down at the piano, and we played a couple of violin and piano sonatas. Our rapport was immediate. Szell was a splendid pianist, although he had the tendency of so many conductors to attack the keys of the piano as if each of the eighty-eight were a recalcitrant orchestra player, to be subdued by sheer physical energy if necessary. Although he was not German, there was something of the German Kapellmeister about him.

The real purpose of Szell's visit soon emerged. He had just been appointed conductor of the Scottish Orchestra in Glasgow, succeeding Barbirolli who was on his way to the New York Philharmonic. He wanted me as his concertmaster and assistant conductor. He offered me all kinds of blandishments: I would have to stay only three-and-a-half months, leaving plenty of time for my budding solo career; also, Szell and I would form a sonata duo.

I accepted, and with this began a personal and musical association of extraordinary closeness. For more than three months we lived in adjoining rooms at the old Moore Hotel, a stone's throw from St. Andrews Hall, where we gave our concerts. Each day the two of us, both bachelors then, shared breakfast, lunch, and dinner. We walked to St. Andrews Hall together, rehearsed with the orchestra morning and afternoon, and frequently spent the evenings playing sonatas. We went on vacations together in Switzerland and Italy. We gave concerts in England and Holland. And when Szell was married, my sister and I were the sole witnesses at the ceremony.

In those days Szell strenuously objected to being called "Zell." He would correct anyone who mispronounced his name, adding for greater emphasis: "Sell—like something you sell." During our first winter in Scotland, we sometimes played bridge at the home of two charming, Scottish spinster sisters who had a well-stocked liquor cabinet, a splendid cook, and an inexhaustible, uninhibited fund of stories. Anyone who could have observed Szell on those occasions would have realized that his Germanic posture was largely an accident of bone structure and myopia.

It would be idle to speculate whether Szell's personality might have developed differently had it been matched by a less powerful physique. Who knows? All I can say is that, knowing him as well as I did, I found nothing oppressive about him. If he was often aggressive and abrasive, these really were the faults of the virtues of candor and integrity. He expected his friends to treat him with equal candor. When, before our first sonata recital, I diplomatically suggested that the balance was less than perfect, he countered: "You mean I'm too loud—why don't you say so?"

The oft-repeated myth that Szell as a person was "cold" is squarely contradicted by some of his written messages to me. When I apprised him of my marriage (by this time we were living at opposite ends of the United States), he wrote:

Dearest Temi [a term of endearment he often used]:
First of all let me congratulate you most heartily on your marriage. We are both happy to know that you have found a comrade for life and wish you all conceivable harmony, happiness, and contentment. It is too unfortunate that we are living so far from each other, and it will be some time until we shall meet your wife. Let us meanwhile have a snapshot if you have one to spare so we can visualize her too when we think of you.

Nor was Szell always the authoritarian bent on having his own way. In one of our duo programs we had included a sonata by Pugnani. Some time before the performance it had occurred to me that it was an inappropriate choice inasmuch as it was a virtuoso piece for the violin, relegating the pianist to a secondary position. When I wrote to Szell proposing to replace the piece by another, he answered (I translate from the German, the language in which we most frequently communicated): "Entirely in agreement. I did not propose it myself, because I was reluctant to deprive you of a display piece in which you could shine."

A few years later Szell made another comment that I have always cherished. Columbia Artists Management, had offered me an exclusive contract.

"Szell was a splendid pianist."
—Epic Records

HENRI TEMIANKA, now resident in Los Angeles and active in its musical life, was first violinist of the Paganini Quartet for many years and a solo violinist of note.

The Symphonic Strike Season

Continued from page 49

and Schippers in Cincinnati. But the attraction of a far-flung international career as guest conductor with many orchestras will always prove a tempting alternative to the intense concentration and community identification required of a resident director.

If, in fact, the day of the full-time resident conductor is fading, it becomes all the more incumbent upon management and sponsors of orchestras to hold the line against the infringement upon artistic policy by the personnel of the orchestras. The latter can, of course, point to a number of highly successful European orchestras that operate as cooperatives, both artistically and economically. These orchestras frequently select prominent conductors as music directors or advisers who are not, however, resident conductors in the American sense. When American players point to the self-governing operation of these orchestras, they forget that they enjoy a vastly greater guaranteed income and that they work in a tradition in which artistic responsibility has been centered in the conductor. Their European colleagues not only have developed a high degree of artistic responsibility in the best orchestras, but also take considerable financial risks that are possible only because American recording scales have driven producers to Europe. None of these players in the European cooperative orchestras enjoys anything like the comparative economic status of the American orchestra player. Moreover, in their militant expressions in the advancement of their interests, few musicians in this country have yet shown a concern for artistic quality at the expense either of personal convenience or of financial security.

In the broader long-range perspective, the possible erosion of our orchestras' artistic quality has serious practical consequences. Faced with a widening of the "income gap" in financing our orchestras, their sponsors now turn to government—local and national—for substantial subsidy to supplement private contributions. If such subsidy is to be justified, our orchestras must not only maintain their present quality but also expand their community service. Moreover, the bitter acrimony that characterizes so much of symphonic labor relations must be eliminated if continued public support is to be warranted. In the past decade much economic progress has been made, and the time has come for all parties—boards of directors, managers, and players alike—to modify their "adversary" positions and settle their differences in a wider context of artistic quality and community service. Thus could the new nonperforming fifth season be eliminated, and proper concentration be put once again on the four performing seasons.

Answer to Wit Twister, page 41: warder, drawer, warred, reward.

A TRIBUTE AS MONUMENTAL AS HIS WORKS

BEETHOVEN EDITION 1970

Deutsche Grammophon strikes the match to 200 blazing lights on the Beethoven birthday cake.

Deutsche Grammophon's matchless 12-volume, 75-record Beethoven Edition 1970 captures the genius of Beethoven in every period of his musical life. The fiery heroics and the lyricism. The virility and the tenderness. The brilliance and the poetry. His growth and development can be traced through the nine symphonies, the mighty concertos, the extraordinary string quartets, the vast array of chamber music and sonatas, and his lofty, heaven-storming choral music.

The superior engineering and technical quality of Deutsche Grammophon's recordings is matched only by the vitally perceptive interpretations of its artists. Herbert von Karajan and the Berlin Philharmonic, Karl Böhm and the Dresden State Opera and Karl Richter. The Amadeus Quartet. Pianists Kempff, Anda, Eschenbach and Demus. Violinists Menuhin, Oistrakh, Ferras, Szeryng. Cellist Fournier. Singers Janowitz, Jones, Mathis, Ludwig, King, Wunderlich, Berry, Fischer-Dieskau. And many more.

Each volume is handsomely boxed in red linen-type binding in the best European tradition. Informative descriptive material is included with each volume. This unprecedented Beethoven Edition 1970 is being issued three volumes per month from August through November, in time for the Beethoven bicentenary. The first three albums are available now.

As a limited offer, the entire 12-volume, 75-record Beethoven Edition 1970 is being issued at the special price of $299.50—a savings of $149.00 over the individual-volume price. As an additional bonus to buyers of the total 12-volume Edition package, a 275 page, splendidly illustrated biography, "Ludwig van Beethoven," accompanies the Edition, at no extra cost.

These volumes may be purchased individually at your local record shop. (The book is not available to those who wish to buy single or all volumes on an individual basis).

BEETHOVEN EDITION 1970
Imported and Unabridged

August	Volume	Discs	Album No.
Nine Symphonies	I	8	2720 007
Chamber Music for Wind Instruments	III	4	2720 015
Masses	IX	3	2720 013
September
Concertos	II	6	2720 008
String Quartets & Quintet	IV	11	2720 010
Music for the Stage	XI	3	2720 011
October
String Trios & Serenade	V	3	2720 014
Piano Works: 32 Sonatas; Diabelli Variations; Piano Pieces; Piano Duets	VIII	14	2720 012
Fidelio	X	3	2720 009
November
Piano Trios; Quartets; Clarinet Trio	VI	6	2720 016
Violin Sonatas; Cello Sonatas & Variations	VII	7	2720 018
Songs and Choral Music	XII	7	2707 017

The entire prepacked version with the bonus book is available only by order now through your local record dealer.* As a convenience, they will be shipped directly to you, at no extra cost, in mailing containers sealed in Europe. Delivery will be in November 1970.

If you cannot order Beethoven Edition 1970 through your local record shop, you may have the entire set, plus the bonus book, sent to you by mailing your check or money order for $299.50 to:
DEPT. BE-SAT, Polydor Incorporated, 1700 Broadway, New York 10019.

Deutsche Grammophon

Deutsche Grammophon Records are distributed in the USA by Polydor Incorporated; in Canada by Polydor Records Canada Ltd.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 44,000
SEP 26 1970

MARJORIE SHERMAN

Midi winni great deba

On or off the White House steps, the bone of contention, from what Webster's femoral region" (thigh-high mini to us) r shin shank.

Francisco, shares its personnel with the local Opera Association in a way that provides them with year-round employment. In 1963-64, Professors Baumol and Bowen, in their monumental study The Performing Arts: The Economic Dilemma, reported that the average annual pay of symphonic musicians in the major professional orchestras was $4,750; the most recent figures on the season just past indicate that for these same orchestras a comparable figure is now close to $10,000.

Although a disproportionate amount of this increase centers in the wealthier and larger cities, with the smaller ones in some instances still offering substandard orchestra pay, it can certainly be stated that major progress has been made in alleviating the adverse economic status of orchestra players that caused so much concern in the early 1960s. However, not content with the attainment of major economic goals, the increasingly militant orchestra players are now making demands at the bargaining table that can seriously impair the high artistic quality that American orchestras have achieved.

In the past century, American orchestras have developed a standard of artistic quality unexcelled anywhere. Historically, these orchestras have operated as a benevolent autocracy: Contrary to European experience, the stature of American orchestras has depended upon the close identification of a major conductor with an orchestra over a period of years. Theodore Thomas with his own orchestra and that of Chicago, Stock after him in Chicago, Stokowski and Ormandy in Philadelphia, Reiner in Pittsburgh and Chicago, Toscanini and Bernstein in New York, Koussevitzky in Boston, and George Szell in Cleveland all represent the highest virtues of such an association of conductor and orchestra, and have established the goal to which other American communities have aspired. The autocratic role of such conductors has contributed substantially to the artistic quality of our orchestras and to the long-range welfare of the players. For their part, orchestra players have become highly organized, bargaining more effectively through their own committees than by union representation, to protect their individual interests and advance their common economic objectives.

In recent years, moreover, orchestra musicians have become increasingly militant in the promotion of such interests. Whereas, between 1922 and 1953 there were but two work stoppages of short duration among American orchestras, there have been, beginning with the Philadelphia stoppage in 1954, a total of e season, sev involving a nonperforr stoppages economic ber were a differences

These no wide range served to hiring and uling of re ditions for on radio, T there are f tions in su will be con formance the audien lead one t ment, alth emphasize

It would that, or have attai at decent allow orc conductors reasonable senting ne ing new au for instanc based on cept of t chestra: M cent origi occasional Similarly, ties to play lying halls tra's activ auditorium ciations' repertory presentati utilize the extended

Willia music of th

SEP

48

My George Szell

by HENRI TEMIANKA

For a number of years, George Szell was one of my most intimate friends. When I learned the sorrowful news of his death, I looked up our old correspondence. Every page of these letters is aglow with Szell's rich, three-dimensional personality, full of wit, earthy humor, affectionate concern, sparkling intelligence, joie de vivre, and intense vitality. He was a man with a tremendous cultural background, in command of half-a-dozen languages, who absorbed and enjoyed all the good things of life. (He once gave me a lucid lecture, complete with drawings, on the principles of automotive engineering.)

I first met Szell when Stefan Zweig, the Austrian novelist whose protégé and close friend I had become, brought him to a little apartment in St. John's Wood in London where I was living in 1937. Szell was then forty years old, already on his way toward a brilliant career, but still with enough youthful eagerness to display his recent rave reviews at the drop of a hat.

He sat down at the piano, and we played a couple of violin and piano sonatas. Our rapport was immediate. Szell was a splendid pianist, although he had the tendency of so many conductors to attack the keys of the piano as if each of the eighty-eight were a recalcitrant orchestra player, to be subdued by sheer physical energy if necessary. Although he was not German, there was something of the German Kapellmeister about him.

The real purpose of Szell's visit soon emerged. He had just been appointed conductor of the Scottish Orchestra in Glasgow, succeeding Barbirolli who was on his way to the New York Philharmonic. He wanted me as his concertmaster and assistant conductor. He offered me all kinds of blandishments: I would have to stay only three-and-a-half months, leaving plenty of time for my budding solo career; also, Szell and I would form a sonata duo.

I accepted, and with this began a personal and musical association of extraordinary closeness. For more than three months we lived in adjoining rooms at the old Moore Hotel, a stone's throw from St. Andrews Hall, where we gave our concerts. Each day the two of us, both bachelors then, shared breakfast, lunch, and dinner. We walked to St. Andrews Hall together, rehearsed with the orchestra morning and afternoon, and frequently spent the evenings playing sonatas. We went on vacations together in Switzerland and Italy. We gave concerts in England and Holland. And when Szell was married, my sister and I were the sole witnesses at the ceremony.

In those days Szell strenuously objected to being called "Zell." He would correct anyone who mispronounced his name, adding for greater emphasis: "Sell—like something you sell." During our first winter in Scotland, we sometimes played bridge at the home of two charming, Scottish spinster sisters who had a well-stocked liquor cabinet, a splendid cook, and an inexhaustible, uninhibited fund of stories. Anyone who could have observed Szell on those occasions would have realized that his Germanic posture was largely an accident of bone structure and myopia.

It would be idle to speculate whether Szell's personality might have developed differently had it been matched by a less powerful physique. Who knows? All I can say is that, knowing him as well as I did, I found nothing oppressive about him. If he was often aggressive and abrasive, these really were the faults of the virtues of candor and integrity. He expected his friends to treat him with equal candor. When, before our first sonata recital, I diplomatically suggested that the balance was less than perfect, he countered: "You mean I'm too loud—why don't you say so?"

The oft-repeated myth that Szell as a person was "cold" is squarely contradicted by some of his written messages to me. When I apprised him of my marriage (by this time we were living at opposite ends of the United States), he wrote:

Dearest Temi [a term of endearment he often used]:
First of all let me congratulate you most heartily on your marriage. We are both happy to know that you have found a comrade for life and wish you all conceivable harmony, happiness, and contentment. It is too unfortunate that we are living so far from each other, and it will be some time until we shall meet your wife. Let us meanwhile have a snapshot if you have one to spare so we can visualize her too when we think of you.

Nor was Szell always the authoritarian bent on having his own way. In one of our duo programs we had included a sonata by Pugnani. Some time before the performance it had occurred to me that it was an inappropriate choice inasmuch as it was a virtuoso piece for the violin, relegating the pianist to a secondary position. When I wrote to Szell proposing to replace the piece by another, he answered (I translate from the German, the language in which we most frequently communicated): "Entirely in agreement. I did not propose it myself, because I was reluctant to deprive you of a display piece in which you could shine."

A few years later Szell made another comment that I have always cherished. Columbia Artists Management, had offered me an exclusive contract.

"Szell was a splendid pianist."
—Epic Records

HENRI TEMIANKA, now resident in Los Angeles and active in its musical life, was first violinist of the Paganini Quartet for many years and a solo violinist of note.

The Symphonic Strike Season

Continued from page 49

and Schippers in Cincinnati. But the attraction of a far-flung international career as guest conductor with many orchestras will always prove a tempting alternative to the intense concentration and community identification required of a resident director.

If, in fact, the day of the full-time resident conductor is fading, it becomes all the more incumbent upon management and sponsors of orchestras to hold the line against the infringement upon artistic policy by the personnel of the orchestras. The latter can, of course, point to a number of highly successful European orchestras that operate as cooperatives, both artistically and economically. These orchestras frequently select prominent conductors as music directors or advisers who are not, however, resident conductors in the American sense. When American players point to the self-governing operation of these orchestras, they forget that they enjoy a vastly greater guaranteed income and that they work in a tradition in which artistic responsibility has been centered in the conductor. Their European colleagues not only have developed a high degree of artistic responsibility in the best orchestras, but also take considerable financial risks that are possible only because American recording scales have driven producers to Europe. None of these players in the European cooperative orchestras enjoys anything like the comparative economic status of the American orchestra player. Moreover, in their militant expressions in the advancement of their interests, few musicians in this country have yet shown a concern for artistic quality at the expense either of personal convenience or of financial security.

In the broader long-range perspective, the possible erosion of our orchestras' artistic quality has serious practical consequences. Faced with a widening of the "income gap" in financing our orchestras, their sponsors now turn to government—local and national—for substantial subsidy to supplement private contributions. If such subsidy is to be justified, our orchestras must not only maintain their present quality but also expand their community service. Moreover, the bitter acrimony that characterizes so much of symphonic labor relations must be eliminated if continued public support is to be warranted. In the past decade much economic progress has been made, and the time has come for all parties—boards of directors, managers, and players alike—to modify their "adversary" positions and settle their differences in a wider context of artistic quality and community service. Thus could the new nonperforming fifth season be eliminated, and proper concentration be put once again on the four performing seasons.

Answer to Wit Twister, page 41: warder, drawer, warred, reward.

A TRIBUTE AS MONUMENTAL AS HIS WORKS

BEETHOVEN EDITION 1970

Deutsche Grammophon strikes the match to 200 blazing lights on the Beethoven birthday cake.

Deutsche Grammophon's matchless 12-volume, 75-record Beethoven Edition 1970 captures the genius of Beethoven in every period of his musical life. The fiery heroics and the lyricism. The virility and the tenderness. The brilliance and the poetry. His growth and development can be traced through the nine symphonies, the mighty concertos, the extraordinary string quartets, the vast array of chamber music and sonatas, and his lofty, heaven-storming choral music.

The superior engineering and technical quality of Deutsche Grammophon's recordings is matched only by the vitally perceptive interpretations of its artists. Herbert von Karajan and the Berlin Philharmonic, Karl Böhm and the Dresden State Opera and Karl Richter. The Amadeus Quartet. Pianists Kempff, Anda, Eschenbach and Demus. Violinists Menuhin, Oistrakh, Ferras, Szeryng. Cellist Fournier. Singers Janowitz, Jones, Mathis, Ludwig, King, Wunderlich, Berry, Fischer-Dieskau. And many more.

Each volume is handsomely boxed in red linen-type binding in the best European tradition. Informative descriptive material is included with each volume. This unprecedented Beethoven Edition 1970 is being issued three volumes per month from August through November, in time for the Beethoven bicentenary. The first three albums are available now.

As a limited offer, the entire 12-volume, 75-record Beethoven Edition 1970 is being issued at the special price of $299.50—a savings of $149.00 over the individual-volume price. As an additional bonus to buyers of the total 12-volume Edition package, a 275 page, splendidly illustrated biography, "Ludwig van Beethoven," accompanies the Edition, at no extra cost.

These volumes may be purchased individually at your local record shop. (The book is not available to those who wish to buy single or all volumes on an individual basis).

BEETHOVEN EDITION 1970
Imported and Unabridged

	Volume	Discs	Album No.
August
Nine Symphonies	I	8	2720 007
Chamber Music for Wind Instruments	III	4	2720 015
Masses	IX	3	2720 013
September
Concertos	II	6	2720 008
String Quartets & Quintet	IV	11	2720 010
Music for the Stage	XI	3	2720 011
October
String Trios & Serenade	V	3	2720 014
Piano Works: 32 Sonatas; Diabelli Variations; Piano Pieces; Piano Duets	VIII	14	2720 012
Fidelio	X	3	2720 009
November
Piano Trios; Quartets; Clarinet Trio	VI	6	2720 016
Violin Sonatas; Cello Sonatas & Variations	VII	7	2720 018
Songs and Choral Music	XII	7	2707 017

The entire prepacked version with the bonus book is available only by order now through your local record dealer.* As a convenience, they will be shipped directly to you, at no extra cost, in mailing containers sealed in Europe. Delivery will be in November 1970.

If you cannot order Beethoven Edition 1970 through your local record shop, you may have the entire set, plus the bonus book, sent to you by mailing your check or money order for $299.50 to:
DEPT. BE-SAT, Polydor Incorporated, 1700 Broadway, New York 10019.

Deutsche Grammophon

Deutsche Grammophon Records are distributed in the USA by Polydor Incorporated; in Canada by Polydor Records Canada Ltd.

MARJORIE SHERMAN

Midi winni great deba

On or off the White House steps, the bone of contention, from what Webster's "femoral region" (thigh-high mini to us) r shin shank.

Francisco, shares its personnel with the local Opera Association in a way that provides them with year-round employment. In 1963-64, Professors Baumol and Bowen, in their monumental study The Performing Arts: The Economic Dilemma, reported that the average annual pay of symphonic musicians in the major professional orchestras was $4,750; the most recent figures on the season just past indicate that for these same orchestras a comparable figure is now close to $10,000.

Although a disproportionate amount of this increase centers in the wealthier and larger cities, with the smaller ones in some instances still offering substandard orchestra pay, it can certainly be stated that major progress has been made in alleviating the adverse economic status of orchestra players that caused so much concern in the early 1960s. However, not content with the attainment of major economic goals, the increasingly militant orchestra players are now making demands at the bargaining table that can seriously impair the high artistic quality that American orchestras have achieved.

In the past century, American orchestras have developed a standard of artistic quality unexcelled anywhere. Historically, these orchestras have operated as a benevolent autocracy: Contrary to European experience, the stature of American orchestras has depended upon the close identification of a major conductor with an orchestra over a period of years. Theodore Thomas with his own orchestra and that of Chicago, Stock after him in Chicago, Stokowski and Ormandy in Philadelphia, Reiner in Pittsburgh and Chicago, Toscanini and Bernstein in New York, Koussevitzky in Boston, and George Szell in Cleveland all represent the highest virtues of such an association of conductor and orchestra, and have established the goal to which other American communities have aspired. The autocratic role of such conductors has contributed substantially to the artistic quality of our orchestras and to the long-range welfare of the players. For their part, orchestra players have become highly organized, bargaining more effectively through their own committees than by union representation, to protect their individual interests and advance their common economic objectives.

In recent years, moreover, orchestra musicians have become increasingly militant in the promotion of such interests. Whereas, between 1922 and 1953 there were but two work stoppages of short duration among American orchestras, there have been, beginning with the Philadelphia stoppage in 1954, a total of e season, sev involving a nonperforn stoppages economic ber were a differences

These no wide range served to hiring and uling of re ditions for on radio, T there are f tions in su will be con formance the audien lead one t ment, alth emphasize

It would that, or have attai at decent allow orc conductors reasonable senting ne ing new au for instanc based on cept of t chestra: M cent origi occasional Similarly, ties to play lying halls tra's activ auditorium ciations' p repertory presentati utilize the extended

Willia music of th

48

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 26 1970

The Symphonic Strike Season

com[illegible]s of the players over discomfort [illegible] inconvenience; in other instan[illegible] the players merely want more tim[illegible] their home cities to teach and to p[illegible] free-lance jobs. But the alleviation [illegible] genuine complaints has not always [illegible]en accomplished with mutual good [illegible] between management and the country have yet shown a concern for artistic quality at the expense either of personal conveniences or of financial fear that such broadcasts will reduce recording sales; other players are believed to advocate such prohibition in the hope of obtaining extra payment in exchange for granting permission to record broadcast tapes. As usual, the primary loser is the public: The

the forced retention of aging and inferior musicians can seriously hamper their efforts. When such orchestras can muster increased support from their communities for better musicians' pay and longer seasons, they are entitled to seek commensurate improvement in of symphonic labor relations must be eliminated if continued public support is to be warranted. In the past decade

been r all man-odify settle xt of servorm-

SR: RECORDINGS

47 The Symphonic Strike Season
by Philip Hart

50 My George Szell
by Henri Temianka

52 Recordings in Review
by Irving Kolodin

54 Recordings Reports I:
Orchestral LPs

56 Recordings Reports II:
Miscellaneous LPs

57 The Hi-Fi Convenience Revolution
by Ivan Berger

59 Dvořák's "Requiem" by Kertész
by George Louis Mayer

60 Letters to the Recordings Editor

—Karl J. Rauschkolb

The new symphonic quartet—Cleveland Orchestra personnel picketing Severance Hall, September 1970.

The Symphonic Strike Season

by PHILIP HART

As in the world of ready-to-wear, it is becoming increasingly apparent, year by year, that the world of music, too, has its fifth season—fall, winter, spring, summer, and the symphonic strike season. It opened in earnest on September 12 when representatives of the Cleveland Orchestra rejected management's offer on a contract renewal, and settled in for a prolonged negotiation. A few days later management of the Minnesota Orchestra, as the Minneapolis Symphony is now known, cancelled the first week of its season in similar circumstances.

It was all foreshadowed months ago when a musician of the New York Philharmonic told a reporter from The New York Times: "We see that plumbers are making $19,000 a year. That looks pretty good to us." As between greasy overalls and immaculate tails, there is no question which looks better to an audience. But if the "plumber" parallel holds, perhaps it would be better to revise all concert garb—downward.

Blunt as they are and crude as they are, the quoted words summarize the militance of the musicians in American symphony and opera orchestras. They also intensify the basic economic dilemma facing the organizations that sponsor these enterprises, and those public-spirited citizens who must raise from private and public donors sums ranging well upward from half their operating expenses. Nor is the economic factor, important as it is, all that is harassing them. There are other questions covered by the inclusive term "working conditions" that carry with them serious implications of an artistic nature.

Well before the opening of the symphonic strike season, nine out of twenty-nine major professional symphony orchestras in the United States and Canada were bargaining with their players for the renewal of contracts that usually run for three years: These include the orchestras of New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Minnesota, Milwaukee, Toronto, Montreal, Buffalo, and Utah; the Boston Symphony is negotiating pay scale only under an overall contract expiring next season. Although only nine orchestras are discussing economic issues and working conditions, many items under consideration are often based on agreement previously reached by other important orchestras. This means that concessions granted now will recur in bargaining on other fronts in the future.

Over the past decade, there has been a substantial improvement in the economic status of professional symphony orchestra musicians, both in length of season and in increased salaries. As of the end of the 1969-70 season, no more than five orchestras employed their musicians for fifty-two weeks a year; another seven were rapidly approaching that goal; and one, that of San

PHILIP HART, whose career in music has included managerial responsibility with the Portland (Oregon) Symphony, the Chicago Symphony, and other orchestras, is presently writing a book on the subject, to be published by W. W. Norton.

MARJORIE SHERMAN

Midi winning great debate

On or off the White House steps, the midi is still the bone of contention, from what Webster's likes to call "the femoral region" (thigh-high mini to us) right down to the shin shank.

And moral indignation is running even higher than the skirts, pollution issues or the political candidates.

"We don't want to wear the midis, we just feel they're something we have to see for ourselves," explained Hingham's Mrs. John Barnes.

She and a town-wide committee are celebrating on Oct. 7 the centennial year of this beautiful Colonial town's Public Library — one of the oldest and nicest for miles around.

The elms and maples of a famous Main street look down on some of the choicest 18th century houses in the nation, but precious few midis, though they're in the windows of the town's sleek shops, judiciously spaced with the ubiquitous pantsuit.

But Hingham wants the best, mind you, and on Wednesday, Oct. 7 at three o'clock, the midi will waltz down the runway in all its glory.

Alfred Fiandaca dresses Boston's Cabots, both Mrs. Louis and Mrs. Lewis, and yes, they've a midi wardrobe already in hand, and best-dressed Betsy (Mrs. Albert) Goodhue, who wore Fiandaca's beautifully tailored gold wool midi to Channel 2's founding of the fans this week; and the Gardner family (of the Fenway Court clan). All live up to the late great Mrs. Jack Gardner's avante garde billing — she didn't dream up that palace for dullards.

Says modest but lightning-eyed Fiandaca, who shook all of the dear old Boston Symphony contingent by using its hallowed calligraphy as a motif for longtime client Fran Fahnestock's elegant turnout for the first (and best) Symphony Ball: "A good midi suits most figures much better than the mini — we're in for a really feminine image."

When asked to do the shows for the Sargent campaign, Alfred was told that some of his constituents, politically speaking, thought the mini would be more suitable."

Said Fiandaca, "If this were a benefit at the White House would you expect me to ask Mrs. Nixon to play 'Hello, Dolly'?"

The midi is being worn.

Nothing else showed up this week at the top-level ambassadorial conference in New York for the English-Speaking Union's Jubilee Year. Van Burens and such took time off from their Newport cup-race sailing parties to be there. The next VIP go-round will be in Washington in November, with Boston-via-London Bidi Budd no. 1 delegate at the black-tie circuit from the Smithsonian to Ambassador John Freeman's.

For the Manhattan merry-go-round she wore a Hartnell midi ordered in London earlier this fall when she renewed family ties with the Queen's Hussars (the slogan is "better by far a tenth Hussar").

London is rampant with the midi, at all the smart parties, and New York a close second, with international luminaries like Princess Irene doing her piano-practicing in streamlined mid-leg navy silk rep.

Also Lincoln-Centering it were the Baron and Baroness Gaufites, her midi a Givency, sleek and slim and lustered with a hoop of diamonds that would light up most of the Place Vendome. It really is "Vive la midi," girls.

Boston Symphony finds young genius at the helm

By ALFRED W. BURKE

Music

LOWELL — With his baton filled with musical magic, Hollywood born Michael Tilson Thomas came riding out of the west to assume the position of assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Young Mr. Thomas has been the latest of a long line of "youngsters" who have filled the pages of musical history since before Mozart's time. There have always been child and youthful proteges. Many disappeared early in their brief careers. Others did fairly well. One did it completely — this was Arturo Toscanini.

Toscanini started asserting his genius at the age of 26. Thomas had his opportunity even earlier. He was well trained. He applied himself well, and it is apparant that he did his homework, plus practice very well.

He is a graduate of the University of Southern California. He has received both Bachelor and Master degrees in Music from there. His greatest opportunity came through the award of a Conducting Fellowship to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. Naturally, there were other times during his career that he has been recognized for his scholarship. However it remained for the Festival scene to allow his swift advancement to what could prove to be but a step from the top.

It is expected that he possess the technical skill as well as the inner feeling for his work, but the fact that he is accepted by his associates is the crowning point. Many of these instrumentalists are many years his senior both on the calendar as well as in experience. Their stamp of approval makes him qualified in our mind

THOMAS HAS done a great deal of work during his few years in the field. He has had a variety of experiences. He has conducted the Youth Concerts presented by the Los Angeles Philharmonic; premieres of works by and with composers — Igor Stravinsky, Pierre Boulez, Karlheinz Stockhausen, Lukas Foss, Ingolf Dahl, William Dahl, William Kraft and Stanley Silverman, to mention only a few. He even appeared in the role of pianist in a Town Hall recital. On that occasion he joined Laurence Lesser, the well known cellist. At Hunter College he performed, again as pianist, in "New Image of Sound", a program that enabled him to gain further recognition. While in Los Angeles he was pianist in the master classes of Gregor Piatorgorsky.

Michael Tilson Thomas came to the Boston Symphony during September of last year. He replaced the Orchestra's musical director, William Steinberg at the mid-point of a Philharmonic Hall concert at Lincoln Center. The day was his, and his moment of success was relived the following Saturday evening. Young Mr. Thomas had arrived.

For the remainder of the Boston Symphony's season he conducted more than 30 concerts. His appointment to the assistant conductorship came at the close of the season. He is the first conductor to hold this position since Richard Burgin.

MICHAEL THOMAS
. . . assistant conductor Boston Symphony orchestra

In May of this year he made his London debut. He led the London Symphony in a program presented in Festival Hall. During the past summer he was active at Tanglewood, the Ravinia Festival in Chicago, and the Lincoln Center Festival in New York. During the current season he will direct the Boston Symphony in both Boston, New York, and on the European tour. He will perform both as conductor and pianist on some of the Orchestra's first recordings for its new series on Deutsche Grammophon.

Top 20 discs

NEW YORK (UPI) — The top 20 songs in the popfield this week based on Billboard's survey of sales and broadcast play are:

1. "Ain't No Mountain High Enough" Diana Ross.
2. "Lookin' Out My Back Door" Creedence Clearwater Revival
3. "Candida" Dawn
4. "Craclin Rosie" Neil Diamond
5. "Julie, Do You Love Me?" Bobby Sherman
6. "Star I'll Be There" Jackson Five.
7. "I Know I'm Losing You" Rare Earth.
8. "Snow Bird" Anne Murray.
9. "War" Edwin Starr.
10. "All Right Now" Free.
11. "Patches" Clarence Carter.
12. "Groovy Situation" Gene Chandler.
13. "Don't Play That Song" Aretha Franklin.
14. "Express Yourself" Charles Wright & The 101st St. Rythm Band.
15. It's A Shame" Spinners.
16. "Green-Eyed Lady" Sugarloaf.
17. "Twenty-Five or 6 to 4" Chicago.
18. "We've Only Just Begun" Carpenters.
19. "I Who Have Nothing" Tom Jones.
20. "Still Water Love" Four Tops.

'Things must change in music . . .

Story by Robert Taylor Photos by Gilbert Friedberg

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

SEP 27 1970 Ne Engl

LONG ago, in days of wine and roses, lived a man called Serge Koussevitzky, a conductor of symphony orchestras treated as a king in Boston. To his players he was an absolute monarch. To his court he was gracious. Where now are those social gatherings at which the gentry kowtowed to Serge I, the muses smiling serene and sly, above the Back Bay? It all has a remote Ruritanian air as though it never happened.

Since Koussevitzky the politics of music and musical life have changed. Kings are commoners, the tradition of the virtuoso conductor is dead, the period of the all-white, all-male symphony orchestra is over, the cleavage between "pop" and "classical" is void: indeed, the concert hall orchestra itself seems on the verge of extinction.

Nevertheless, behind the ferment characteristic of music, many issues remain constant. Take the issue of musical literacy. Often enough, people who hear a performance and feel moved by it, don't know what's going on. True, it isn't necessary to parse an English sentence to enjoy English literature: but misplaced accents, sloven phrases, playing out of tune are matters of high musical importance, not tacky critical nit-picking. General musical culture, however, is rare. It has always been the exception rather than the rule. The role of the professional critic over the past century has been to educate the swelling population to the standards of music as an art opposed to the treatment of music as a pastime.

DURING the years when concert hall managements resisted the unionization of orchestras, a favorite device was to purge virtuoso players who rocked the boat and replace them with green conservatory students. Performance suffered. While the orchestras were eventually unionized anyway, it is interesting to speculate from a purely artistic standpoint how this practice affected the structure of American music. For the issue of musical literacy relates to the packaging of art. How w music tomorrow be pr sented? In an age of exp sive change do the old form las apply? And how will m sicians adjust?

The politics of the ne music—that is to say, the a into which we are movin where no man really know what may happen — fas nate Buell Neidlinger, who planning to write a bo about the system of music presentation in this count A protean musician, succes ful in jazz, rock and sympl ny, Neidlinger has absorbe multitude of professional e periences. He has perform under international famous conductors and squalid dives. The gro which he leads, Luny Too has established new dime sions in rock. Neidling meanwhile, played in t double-bass section of T Boston Symphony Orchest He was once a drug addi hardly an occupational c dential but a condition th came about because of exposure to drugs throu other musicians. Neidlin is 34, has been a working m sician more than half his l and is critical of what he witnessed. History, as it we is a nightmare from which is trying to awake. He glim es hope for symphony orch tras — if the system is revis so that artists rather th non-artists control the d ision-making processes. O erwise, he feels, the wh ritual of concert hall p formance, woefully antiqu ed and out of touch with c temporary creative forces doomed to pass with the g eration that barely keeps torch flickering.

"DO YOU want a desc tion of musical life in Am ca today?" Neidlinger as "A kid spends years learn how to play the fiddle.

Robert Taylor and Gilbert Friedberg are on the staff of Globe Magazine.

'. . . otherwise, within a generation, they'll be playing hockey in Symphony Hall'

'The music of the next generation is going to be fantastic . . . and it's all happening so fast'

Berlioz Requiem before he severs his three-year association with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

He and his wife have taken the cottage for the summer. A lovely Berkshire setting. One follows a footpath across a brook then ascends a sequence of terraced stairs where, at the top, Neidlinger stands, a tall, somewhat Bohemian figure wearing a rakishly-angled cap, the sun at his back. Long hair and a high forehead lend him a Shakespearean appearance —a younger version of the Droeshut portrait of the bard. He has a dark beard and horn-rimmed glasses. During symphony concerts his hair is pulled back and neatly cinched, like the pigtail of a torero.

In the kitchen he flings the beret aside, rustles among kitchen utensils and presently serves the fragrant brew to which he adds a heaping spoonful of honey. Neidlinger is brisk and direct, his language unvarnished: he smiles frequently: makes points with mordant wit: and he has a mannerism, when interested in some particular subject, of tugging at the mane down the nape of his neck. His opinions and attitudes can be caustic, occasionally unprintable; but disclose the brusque charm of candor. The vehemence of his style suggests the stormy petrel—one is reminded of the unhappy fact that stormy petrels seldom make pet songbirds.

—Now that you're leaving the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Buell, what do you plan to do?

NEIDLINGER: Teach at the California Institute of the Arts. It's an exciting challenge. The Institute's going to be—we hope—a means of freeing students from the structure of the historical art school in America.

—In what sense?

NEIDLINGER: Transmitting ideas about the art in terms of life situations. Instead of having a lot of formal instructions, or even private lessons which are sort of unbalanced, faculty and students will make music together. For instance, I do a lot of chamber music, and I'll perform in ensembles with my students and other faculty, exploring a corpus of chamber music composed since 1900.

—Any other performances?

NEIDLINGER With Frank Zappa.

—Have you always worked on both sides of the fence?

NEIDLINGER: When I was 16, going to high school in Connecticut, I had my own band. We played Dixieland. It was the only brand of music I knew other than concert hall forms. Then one day I was with my father when he stopped for gas in Westport, Connecticut. A couple of black guys had a hi-fi rigged up and they were listening to Charley Parker. I flipped: right away, I knew this was a music I had to play.

—Did you?

NEIDLINGER: Well, my first job was Eddie Condon's band. Walter Page, who had played with Count Basie, was Condon's bassist. Walter was arthritic, consequently he was out a great deal, so I sat in for him. After that, I worked with Cecil Taylor. I learned a lot from him and played with him seven years.

—Had you been studying at a conservatory?

NEIDLINGER: Yes, I started out as a 'cellist, and then for several reasons, health mostly, I switched to bass. I never regretted it.

—What orchestras have you been with?

NEIDLINGER: Houston, under Barbirolli: Stokes's—I mean Stokowski's American Symphony Orchestra, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

—You were picked for Boston by— ?

NEIDLINGER: By Leinsdorf. I auditioned against 37 hand-picked applicants.

—Behind a barrier?

NEIDLINGER: Yes.

—I've often wondered if that curtain makes it an unbiased test for women, say, or blacks.

NEIDLINGER: In theory. In fact, it's common knowledge who's auditioning. Everyone knows.

— What is a seat in the Boston Symphony Orchestra worth?

NEIDLINGER: I was paid in my final year $16,000 a year including a $1000 recording fee. By the time I'd kicked in to the Pension Fund — which isn't funded, by the way — plus taxes and everything else, it was worth about $11 thousand. Of course that figure is considerably better than player' salaries in the past.

continued

Neidlinger continued

to get your fingers around those strings. Which is, of course, one reason why we have a shortage of string players. However after you've arrived, assuming you've resisted the temptation of Nashville, you spend all your time perfecting your technique! It's so bland.

— Didn't the Pops trot out a Moog quarter for one concert?

NEIDLINGER. To play diatonic music. Of all things. (Shaking his head) But you're right. It's all coming together, rock, jazz, chamber music, concert hall. The music of the next generation is going to be fantastic, and it's all happening so fast. Managements don't realize how fast it's happening: but you've got a bureaucracy of non-artists to administer to the needs of all musicians.

— Yes: but who's minding the store at Luny Toons?

NEIDLINGER: Well, it's a matter of keeping the necessary business and artistic distinctions. Luny Toons has a recording manager, and incidentally, after our Loeb concert the other night, we got offers from four record companies. But I'm speaking of a wholly unnecessary bureaucracy. These people can't release the energy in music — it's up to the performers. How long has it been since you've had a musical experience?

— Scenes from Faust Schumann. Leinsdorf.

NEIDLINGER: Performers could release that energy. Did you go to the Gershwin concert at Tanglewood this season?

— No.

NEIDLINGER: It reminded me that 17,000 kids turned out in Los Angeles for a program of Schoenberg, Mel Powell, Frank Zappa. Symphony orchestras are, in general, closed against dynamic change, like Zappa's music.

—How does that relate to Gershwin?

NEIDLINGER: Only this. I notice at Gershwin Night hardly anyone under 25. Those who were there didn't respond. If we continue to operate in the same limited musical tradition, the commercially viable music of the past is going to become less and less commercially viable. You can see it happening now.

— Is the younger audience musically hip?

NEIDLINGER: They're hip to change, and know when a tradition is exhausted, and they understand energy.

—Instinctively?

NEIDLINGER: Things will have to change as the crossovers spread between styles. The energy must be tapped. Otherwise, within a generation they'll be playing hockey in Symphony Hall.

'Things must change in music . . .

Story by Robert Taylor Photos by Gilbert Friedberg

soon as he gets to the point where he can perform the Mendelssohn Concerto well, he can audition for a symphony orchestra where he might clear ten thousand a year, or go to Nashville, where they'll give him forty-five thousand to play jingles."

Ex-BSO player, ex-junkie, ex-'cellist Neidlinger in the kitchen of his cottage at Tyringham, near Tanglewood, brews a pot of herb tea ("twenty-seven herbs; you'll find it delicious") for himself and his visitor. Actually, it is premature to describe Neidlinger as "ex-BSO," for he still has a pair of weekend concerts culminating in the

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377
SEP 27 1970 New Engl

Neidlinger continued

to get your fingers around those strings. Which is, of course, one reason why we have a shortage of string players. However after you've arrived, assuming you've resisted the temptation of Nashville, you spend all

'Not every BSO chamber musician also wants to play, or is capable of playing, Luny Toons'

Neidlinger continued

– But you can augment an income, can't you, by teaching or playing in smaller ensembles?

NEIDLINGER: The Boston Symphony is a hierarchy; younger members aren't expected to earn the extra income. That derives from seniority.

– How about yourself?

NEIDLINGER: A special case. Not every BSO performer also wants to play, or is capable of playing Luny Toons.

– About your personal drug problem, what kind did you take?

NEIDLINGER: Everything.

– Heroin?

NEIDLINGER: I went out on the road with a band in which all were addicts. I was clean. Had never taken heroin before. Within three days I was using heroin, too.

– It was pure environment?

NEIDLINGER: Environment is the source of most drug problems. Put a junkie from the barrio on a Kansas farm and he won't want to go back to drugs. It was environment all right with me.

– How did you stop?

NEIDLINGER: I woke up one day with a shred of willpower left.

– Were you performing?

NEIDLINGER: Yes. They still had mixed bands then. I have a good ear, and I was one of the rare white players who could go out with a black band. And this led to trouble. I'd be playing with Ben Webster, say, for an all-black affair, and he'd catch hell because he didn't have a black performer in my shoes.

– Who else did you play with?

NEIDLINGER: Oh, let's see; so many – I played with Prez on his last date. Sonny Stitt. Sonny Rollins. I even played Dixieland here in Boston. In Boston suburbs you know, there's a bunch of rich people nuts about the New Orleans style, and I played a few genuinely weird parties. At one I was with old Jo Jones, Old Jo, not Philly Joe Jones. Bix's sister was at the party.

– What did she play?

NEIDLINGER: One of the finest musicians perhaps – at least the one who moved me most as a musical artist, was Coleman Hawkins. The Hawk was just as sound at 50 as he was as a kid. His style told me a great deal about the artist growing old, about life in general. I admired him, and still do.

– Do you have any favorites among conductors?

NEIDLINGER: Barbirolli definitely. A wonderful human being and a superb musician. He got a raw deal in America. He was too involved with music and musicians to succeed at the politics of conductorship. Too independent, I suspect, that's why he never made it in Boston after those two magnificent concerts when the BSO management was looking for a successor to Munch. Barbirolli conducted a Mahler Ninth in Houston that belongs among the outstanding experiences – for me in the orchestra – of my life. Yes, we did it last season here – a competent, tidy performance that simply wasn't the same.

– When you were with the Houston Orchestra did you also do your other thing?

NEIDLINGER: Yes, I had my own band and worked with Arnette Cobb and Bobby Blue Bland.

– Bobby Blue Bland?

NEIDLINGER: A blues master. I'd never heard him till I got to Texas.

– Here's a leading question, especially since you're leaving Boston. What's your opinion of some of our recent conductors, Munch, say, or Leinsdorf?

NEIDLINGER: Munch was a good man as well as a musician of extraordinary stature.

– I guess you've answered that question.

NEIDLINGER: Leinsdorf has a staggering capacity for musical detail. When I was a student, we played Ravel's "L'Enfant et les sortileges." The opening required the solo bass to play extremely high harmonics on the string. The higher you go – and in the Ravel (Humming falsetto) it sounds like a cat almost – the flatter you get. Leinsdorf called me in to discuss the score. He has a habit of retaining your hand in his when you've been introduced or when you've shaken hands; and after I came in he held me there and said, "Mr. Neidlinger, I don't like the harmonics in the Ravel." I explained the obvious, and he shrugged and said, dropping my hand, "Do something about the harmonics."

Nearly three years later I was waiting for an elevator. Along came Leinsdorf. We shook hands. The elevator arrived. "It's good to see you," said Leinsdorf. "And by the way, stick a match under the G string. Then you'll be able to play those harmonics in tune." And he got on the elevator.

– It illustrates a specific type of mind.

NEIDLINGER: Details of performance –

– This is also unfair, but do you think the performing standards of The Boston Symphony Orchestra have deteriorated?

NEIDLINGER: Criticisms of a specific orchestra might be construed as sour grapes. I will say this: I've been at rehearsals in Tanglewood and heard the brass section at The Berkshire Music Center. There really is a difference between musicians on routine professional assignment and musicians who are playing with everything they've got. To me, players today in the symphony orchestras of the West sound tired, tired. The tradition has to change.

– How?

NEIDLINGER: No kids, however passionate, can compete with the strings of the BSO. It takes a few years

continued

VARIETY!
OVER 1000 DINETTE SET COMBINATIONS
OVER 1000 LAMP STYLES
Revere WAYSIDE
DINETTE & LIGHTING CENTERS
372 SQUIRE RD
Rte C1 & 60 REVERE
235 WORCESTER RD
Rte 9 FRAMINGHAM
OPEN MON thru FRI 9 to 9
SAT 9-6 P.M. BUDGET TERMS

YANKEE CHOPPER
YOU CAN OWN A 56'x12' MOBILE HOME, 75'x125' LOT READY TO OCCUPY—ALL FOR ONLY $7995 FULL PRICE
Financing Available
AD1625(A)
60' x 12' & 64' x 12' Models Also Available
Located In The Heart Of The Citrus And Lake Section Of Florida, On Four Lane U.S. #441-27.
Why pay rent when you can immediately move into a brand new two bedroom Home beautifully furnished all in readiness to enjoy leisure Florida living at its best. Lot survey, permanent foundation with tie-downs & electric service pole included. Original offering 480 units completely sold out. New addition 50% sold. Investigate before its too late! For free booklet "Mobile Home Living in Florida", photos and information write:
ORANGE BLOSSOM HILLS, Dept. 321-A
2148 N.E. 164th Street, Miami, Florida 33162

tion they'll be playing hockey in Symphony Hall.

'Things must change in music . . .'

Story by Robert Taylor Photos by Gilbert Friedberg

LONG ago, in days of wine and roses, lived a man called Serge Koussevitzky, a conductor of symphony orchestras treated as a king in Boston. To his players he was an absolute monarch. To his court he was gracious. Where now are those social gatherings at which the gentry kowtowed to Serge I, the muses smiling serene and sly, above the Back Bay? It all has a remote Ruritanian air as though it never happened.

Since Koussevitzky the politics of music and musical life have changed. Kings are commoners, the tradition of the virtuoso conductor is dead, the period of the all-white, all-male symphony orchestra is over, the cleavage between "pop" and "classical" is void: indeed, the concert hall orchestra itself seems on the verge of extinction.

Nevertheless, behind the ferment characteristic of music, many issues remain constant. Take the issue of musical literacy. Often enough, people who hear a performance and feel moved by it, don't know what's going on. True, it isn't necessary to parse an English sentence to enjoy English literature: but misplaced accents, sloven phrases, playing out of tune are matters of high musical importance, not tacky critical nit-picking. General musical culture, however, is rare. It has always been the exception rather than the rule. The role of the professional critic over the past century has been to educate the swelling population to the standards of music as an art opposed to the treatment of music as a pastime.

DURING the years when concert hall managements resisted the unionization of orchestras, a favorite device was to purge virtuoso players who rocked the boat and replace them with green conservatory students. Performance suffered. While the orchestras were eventually unionized anyway, it is interesting to speculate from a purely artistic standpoint how this practice affected the structure of American music. For the issue of musical literacy relates to the packaging of art. How will music tomorrow be presented? In an age of explosive change do the old formulas apply? And how will musicians adjust?

The politics of the new music—that is to say, the age into which we are moving, where no man really knows what may happen — fascinate Buell Neidlinger, who is planning to write a book about the system of musical presentation in this country. A protean musician, successful in jazz, rock and symphony, Neidlinger has absorbed a multitude of professional experiences. He has performed under internationally-famous conductors and in squalid dives. The group which he leads, Luny Toons, has established new dimensions in rock. Neidlinger, meanwhile, played in the double-bass section of The ~~Boston Symphony~~ Orchestra. He was once a drug addict, hardly an occupational credential but a condition that came about because of his exposure to drugs through other musicians. Neidlinger is 34, has been a working musician more than half his life and is critical of what he has witnessed. History, as it were, is a nightmare from which he is trying to awake. He glimpses hope for symphony orchestras — if the system is revised so that artists rather than non-artists control the decision-making processes. Otherwise, he feels, the whole ritual of concert hall performance, woefully antiquated and out of touch with contemporary creative forces, is doomed to pass with the generation that barely keeps the torch flickering.

"DO YOU want a description of musical life in America today?" Neidlinger asks. "A kid spends years learning how to play the fiddle. As soon as he gets to the point where he can perform the Mendelssohn Concerto well, he can audition for a symphony orchestra where he might clear ten thousand a year, or go to Nashville, where they'll give him forty-five thousand to play jingles."

Ex-BSO player, ex-junkie, ex-'cellist Neidlinger in the kitchen of his cottage at Tyringham, near Tanglewood, brews a pot of herb tea ("twenty-seven herbs: you'll find it delicious") for himself and his visitor. Actually, it is premature to describe Neidlinger as "ex-BSO," for he still has a pair of weekend concerts culminating in the

Robert Taylor and Gilbert Friedberg are on the staff of Globe Magazine.

'The music of the next generation is going to be fantastic . . . and it's all happening so fast'

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377
SEP 27 1970 New Engl

Neidlinger continued

to get your fingers around those strings. Which is, of course, one reason why we have a shortage of string players. However after you've arrived, assuming you've resisted the temptation of Nashville, you spend all

'Not every BSO chamber musician also wants to play, or is capable of playing, Luny Toons'

Neidlinger continued

— But you can augment an income, can't you, by teaching or playing in smaller ensembles?

NEIDLINGER: The Boston Symphony is a hierarchy; younger members aren't expected to earn the extra income. That derives from seniority.

— How about yourself?

NEIDLINGER: A special case. Not every BSO performer also wants to play, or is capable of playing Luny Toons.

— About your personal drug problem, what kind did you take?

NEIDLINGER: Everything.

— Heroin?

NEIDLINGER: I went out on the road with a band in which all were addicts. I was clean. Had never taken heroin before. Within three days I was using heroin, too.

— It was pure environment?

NEIDLINGER: Environment is the source of most drug problems. Put a junkie from the barrio on a Kansas farm and he won't want to go back to drugs. It was environment all right with me.

— How did you stop?

NEIDLINGER: I woke up one day with a shred of willpower left.

— Were you performing?

NEIDLINGER: Yes. They still had mixed bands then. I have a good ear, and I was one of the rare white players who could go out with a black band. And this led to trouble. I'd be playing with Ben Webster, say, for an all-black affair, and he'd catch hell because he didn't have a black performer in my shoes.

— Who else did you play with?

NEIDLINGER: Oh, let's see; so many — I played with Prez on his last date. Sonny Stitt. Sonny Rollins. I even played Dixieland here in Boston. In Boston suburbs you know, there's a bunch of rich people nuts about the New Orleans style, and I played a few genuinely weird parties. At one I was with old Jo Jones, Old Jo, not Philly Joe Jones. Bix's sister was at the party.

—What did she play?

NEIDLINGER: One of the finest musicians perhaps — at least the one who moved me most as a musical artist, was Coleman Hawkins. The Hawk was just as sound at 50 as he was as a kid. His style told me a great deal about the artist growing old, about life in general. I admired him, and still do.

— Do you have any favorites among conductors?

NEIDLINGER: Barbirolli definitely. A wonderful human being and a superb musician. He got a raw deal in America. He was too involved with music and musicians to succeed at the politics of conductorship. Too independent, I suspect, that's why he never made it in Boston after those two magnificent concerts when the BSO management was looking for a successor to Munch. Barbirolli conducted a Mahler Ninth in Houston that belongs among the outstanding experiences — for me in the orchestra — of my life. Yes, we did it last season here — a competent, tidy performance that simply wasn't the same.

— When you were with the Houston Orchestra did you also do your other thing?

NEIDLINGER: Yes, I had my own band and worked with Arnette Cobb and Bobby Blue Bland.

—Bobby Blue Bland?

NEIDLINGER: A blues master. I'd never heard him till I got to Texas.

— Here's a leading question, especially since you're leaving Boston. What's your opinion of some of our recent conductors, Munch, say, or Leinsdorf?

NEIDLINGER: Munch was a good man as well as a musician of extraordinary stature.

— I guess you've answered that question.

NEIDLINGER: Leinsdorf has a staggering capacity for musical detail. When I was a student, we played Ravel's "L'Enfant et les sortileges." The opening required the solo bass to play extremely high harmonics on the string. The higher you go — and in the Ravel (Humming falsetto) it sounds like a cat almost — the flatter you get. Leinsdorf called me in to discuss the score. He has a habit of retaining your hand in his when you've been introduced or when you've shaken hands; and after I came in he held me there and said, "Mr. Neidlinger, I don't like the harmonics in the Ravel." I explained the obvious, and he shrugged and said, dropping my hand, "Do something about the harmonics."

VARIETY!
OVER 1000 DINETTE SET COMBINATIONS
OVER 1000 LAMP STYLES
Revere WAYSIDE
DINETTE & LIGHTING CENTERS
372 SQUIRE RD
Rte C1 & 60 REVERE
235 WORCESTER RD
Rte 9 FRAMINGHAM
OPEN MON thru FRI 9 to 9
SAT 9-6 P.M. BUDGET TERMS

tion they'll be playing hockey in Symphony Hall.

50

'It Is Easy To Bemoan Rock and Pot'

By ERICH LEINSDORF

A YOUNG man, aged 20, told me about his going to a record store during the Christmas rush and selecting two LP's of Beethoven's music and two of the Beatles's. The salesman to whom he handed his purchase, assuming that they represented two separate gifts, proceeded to wrap them separately, until my young friend interrupted these labors to say that all four records could go into one parcel and never mind the gift wrap since it was for himself that he had bought the two B's.

In the summer of 1967, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's cello section received an offer to become principal in a Midwestern orchestra. Neither the management nor I wanted to stand in the way of such an opportunity although the deadline for resignations was six months past and replacements hard to come by. The personnel manager made a lot of phone calls to round up candidates and when audition day arrived we had five cellists to judge. Among them was an extraordinary 18-year-old who had come just for kicks, since he was spending the summer in a nearby music camp. All of us, the orchestra's audition committee and I, felt that this lad was still too inexperienced to last very long in an orchestra's section, but we felt that "the best man should win" and "damn the torpedoes" and he joined the orchestra. One year later he left, having been asked to take a principal position with another orchestra, and another 12 months later—aged 20 by then—he quit orchestra work altogether to accept a professorship in a university. The university also encouraged him to organize a quartet so that he might be certain of continued music-making and exposure to audiences.

*

These two stories suggest the outline of the two fields where we are having trouble: youth as listeners and as professionals. There seems to be a shortage of both. The record salesman took it for granted that no young man fancying the Beatles could possibly want to listen to Beethoven. And the young cellist, talented though he be, shows by his far too rapid rise that our replacement channels are not exactly overcrowded.

If youth today seems largely to choose rock, it is at least partly due to the defeatist attitude of our traditional organizations: symphony and opera, conservatory and music department. What exactly has the "establishment" done to attract young people and make them welcome?

I can just see, as if it were unrolled before my eyes on a screen, how every worthy who ever sat on a music committee or on any board concerned with educational policy, rises up in righteous indignation at my loaded and wholly irreverent question. "What haven't we done! We have: organized children's concerts — sponsored student matinees at the opera — sent players into school auditoriums — given prizes to gifted youngsters and presented them as soloists in youth concerts — written appreciation material to be taught in preparation for the actual performance." It does sound impressive and I am quite sure that the intentions were always good and honorable.

*

Thus it may seem churlish if I pick this lovely recital of good deeds to pieces. But it must be said that something is quite wrong with all these efforts — or the results would be different. Except for the notable work at the New York Philharmonic by Leonard Bernstein —who recognized the crucial importance of youth — our symphony and opera associations have entrusted the entire program for young people to their second and third echelons of performers. For all the years of their existence, youth events have been the arena where, under the guise of education, assistants try their hands at conducting works they are not permitted to approach for the regular customers; where worn-out retainers babble some music appreciation hash of clichés, where the understudies who sat on the sidelines all season get their day of glory in lead parts; where promises to malcontents are paid off — since according to officials, "the kids don't know the difference."

I suggest that the young people should be — and should have been all along— treated only to the top names on the orchestral roster, the principal conductors and guest conductors, and, at the opera, the first cast rather than the unknown doubles. Managements, directors and board members will perhaps consider me at best "idealistic" and, at worst, totally off my rocker to suggest this since they obviously cannot afford to present their most costly talent at such highly non-lucrative events. To which I submit that they can't afford anything else. Every other branch of modern entertainment has learned from commerce that youth must be considered a significant portion of the public and be treated accordingly. Only in our rarefied precincts do they still speak of young people as "the public of the future" and always with that indulgent, smiling countenance of ancient superiority.

I am convinced that the same degree of musical interest exists among young people today as always. Our sponsors and administrators have only missed the implications of the many social changes that have taken place. Boards of directors and committees in general need new blood; this is known and accepted and indeed there has been constant renewal of board members. Yet the new blood invariably means young executives who are making their way and wish to impress us with their interest in doing good work for the community. This is all very nice and laudable and virtuous and, for the young executive, not without advantages. But it does not tell the committees what it is that keeps the young away and why all the efforts of the good ladies for musical education are bearing such meager fruit. Let the boards elect some youngsters under 25 and some students under 20 and then see if that kind of young new blood does not come up with a few questions — and the answers.

*

It is easy to bemoan rock and pot. Yet the loudest bemoaners fail to see that the enormous response to every popular fad, musical or otherwise, is not as spontaneous or inevitable as we are made to believe. There is a well-oiled sales machine behind every popular success and when the managers of traditional organizations examine this, they will discover that our great masters of composition — the whole galaxy from Bach to Stravinsky — are still the great successes. The stars among pianists, violinists, singers and conductors are quite aware of this. Specifically, I would do away with the institution of "youth" performances. It seems more effective, much easier for all concerned and less patronizing to simply reserve 10 to 20 per

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 895,505 SUN. 1,445,507
SEP 27 1970

cent of the available places at every public performance for people under 25. They would, upon showing of a card, buy their seat or admission at a reduced, a vastly reduced, price. I believe that the young want to be treated like regular patrons; anything else smacks of school or an extension thereof and won't do.

*

I think that the side effects will be just as significant as the main purpose of attracting young listeners; under the merciless scrutiny of the untraditional youth, some of the more quaint and less meaningful folkways will come to a belated demise. Concerts will become more relaxed and less stuffy; the don'ts of 19th-century origin will disappear. There will be applause after movements of symphonies if such is the mood, there will be encores and repeats, there won't be the clothing reminiscent of the maitre d' at the Plaza Hotel. There may not even be printed programs, since there may be a more spontaneous, more inspirational way of selecting repertoire. (And while I hope for the end to false reverence, I also wish for an effective muffler for the chronic catarrhists.) As an already living example of such freedom, I cite the Kabuki Theater, where people wander in and out, encourage and call out to the performer when a turn has been particularly well done; a truly "popular" entertainment.

To achieve some of this, my fellow professionals will also need to reconsider the whole question of when they ought to work and when they can be off. We who perform can retain the status of artist only if we don't get mixed up with the middle-class existence of time clock punching and ending the work week with Tom, Dick and Harry. As long as the professional musician opts for a bourgeois pattern of work, he will go the way of all the middle class. That, at this moment, is not going to be very attractive to youth.

Continued on Page 16

'It Is Easy to Bemoan Rock and Pot'

Continued from Page 15

Why do the pop groups look so different from the Gewandhaus Orchester? Why can one spot an actor in the street by the way he is dressed? Young people are hero worshipers, no less than their parents; and what we call the star system as far as the regular subscriber and patron is concerned becomes hero worship for the kids. Our music world has erred wildly in becoming more and more like that of all other working people. No Sunday concerts, and overtime pay after 10:30 P.M. — glamour and glory cannot be built out of these props. All this may have been inevitable in the struggle for a more equitable existence, but success with the young, the uncommitted, is not won in this way.

This leads me almost inevitably to the even more vexing question of what we can do about the shortage of professionals. I plead first that leading artists of renown devote more of their time to working with youth. The internationally known virtuosos in the U.S.S.R. are required to teach a fair portion of the year. There is no reason why artists in America cannot do voluntarily what the Russians do by ukase. While a great performer is not always a teacher of equal skill, the mere contact with top-flight musicians and performers is vital for the youngster: it can be both inspirational and illusion-shattering. For the simple fact is that youth instinctively recognizes the false and phoney and much more quickly than older people.

The desperate difficulty of finding instrumentalists for ensembles has plagued the music world for at least 30 years. Things might not have come to such a crisis over string players if, in the United States, a lesson had been learned from the history of Poland and Czarist Russia. The musical talent of a child can serve as a stepping-stone for economic and social advancement for an underprivileged group. This is exactly what happened to many of the Eastern European Jews, who could leave the ghetto for one of the big cities if a child "made" it by winning admission to one of the great conservatories. Energetic and ambitious mothers, aware of this remarkable chance to leave the "pale," would sit behind their sons — who were surely no more eager to practice for hours than their American counterparts — and would not relent until aptitude, industry and talent had lifted the whole clan from the confines of the ghetto.

A similar premium—with the appropriate substitution of American detail in place of the Russian — would encourage the blacks to vie for places and scholarships in the big-city music schools, with beneficial results to them and to the musical supply lines. Mothers of their race are surely as ambitious for their children as those of any other group. The blithe assumption that the specific talent of the blacks is confined to and limited by the jazz and blues does not hold up. Talent, according to a German research scientist named Leuckert, is a plastic, changeable ability which can be cultivated. We have missed the chance to offer music as a ladder of general advancement to American Negro youth. If our traditional ensembles are to continue without serious decline, the whole topic of what motivates people to study music must be not only examined, but the findings and recommendations publicized and acted upon.

•

There are already a few things which we do know. Parents wishing their children to study music must give of their own time and be physically present while practice goes on. The old command, "Go to your room and practice," won't do. If it is so important for a child to master an instrument, the parent must demonstrate that he himself is involved and committed.

Music schools and individual teachers should try and tell the truth to their pupils about their career potential and possibilities. Too many hopes for brilliant careers are being raised without justification and the inevitable disappointments are disastrous not only for the individual involved; whole groups of friends and colleagues get shocks of fright and disillusionment.

Instead of a merely pragmatic approach to music instruction, the element of "play" and "playing" should be stressed and made the basis of all exercise and communication. In playing music, one amuses and entertains oneself. Perhaps, if one is lucky, one may amuse and entertain others.

There is at least one very grave shortcoming to what I have written up to this point. Following a fine liberal tradition, I have tried to point out what's wrong and how one might improve the situation. But whom have I addressed? Who will feel responsible, even if he agrees with every thought, to "do something"?

So let me then quit being emphatic in a general way while avoiding the personal "you." We have leaders in the United States, although they have not been appointed to government positions as Ekaterina Furtseva has been in the Soviet Union, to assume the responsibility of looking after "culture." I am quite sure that the several people of whom I am thinking and to whom my appeal is directed are quite as interested in the musical future of the United States as any government appointee anywhere. They just have to become keenly aware that it is for them to instigate and to change.

I dedicate the above suggestions to you, the chairmen, presidents and general managers of the twenty-six major symphonies; to the same officers of the opera companies of Chicago, New York, San Francisco (in alphabetical order) and to the board chairmen, presidents and deans of the following music schools: Bloomington, Indiana; Curtis in Philadelphia; Eastman in Rochester; Juilliard in New York; New England in Boston; and Peabody in Baltimore.

There are others who can be helpful and influential but this is in essence the list of our music establishment. Twenty-six orchestras, four opera companies and six music schools, or a total of about one hundred individuals. Do not reply that there is an economic crisis. The fiscal woes are only the rash on the surface, as the cause lies much deeper. Money is a symptom. Disaffection is a cause.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300
SEP 28 1970

Rose Walsh – Symphony Friends Mull Next Season

Happy to continue their loyal support of the world-renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra, members of its Council of Friends discussed summer activities and planned for the season ahead at the first of their popular pre-Symphony Luncheons yesterday.

New members were warmly welcomed by founding members at the cocktail hour in the foyer of Horticultural Hall before lining up for the delicious buffet luncheon.

Marblehead and North Shore area members designed the table decor of bright yellow mums and matching pencils marked "Friend of the Boston Symphony," plus a bottle of wine.

Co-chairmen of the council, Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin and luncheon co-chairmen, Mrs. Nelson Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson sat with honor guests, Talcott M. Banks, president of the board of trustees; Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the BSO; Msgr. Edward G. Murray, a trustee; Mrs. John T. G. Nichols of the Friends of the N. E. Conservatory of Music, and Mrs. James H. Perkins, trustee advisor.

The chapel of the Campion Hall Retreat House, North Andover, was the setting for the Thursday afternoon wedding of Miss Mary A. Ford, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs James J. Ford of Lawrence, to John J. Costello, Essex County Register of Probate.

Msgr. Joseph A. Burke, pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Lawrence, performed the ceremony at which Msgr. William A. Long, pastor of St. Michael's Church, North Andover, assisted.

Mrs. John Fallon of Chelmsford, attended her sister, and Philip A. Costello, was best man for his brother. A reception followed at Andover Inn.

Mrs. Costello attended St. Patrick's High School, Lawrence; Merrimack College and Suffolk University. She is employed at the Probate Office in Salem.

• • •

The bridegroom, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John J. Costello of North Andover, attended St. John's Preparatory School, Danvers, was graduated from Harvard College, class of '40, and holds a master's degree from Boston College Graduate School.

After a wedding trip through northern New England the couple will make its home in North Andover.

A January wedding in Houston, Tex., is planned by Miss Dianne Ward and John Miguel Martinez, II. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Jefferson Ward of Houston, have announced the engagement of their daughter to the son of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Louis Martinez, Jr., of Dedham.

The bride-to-be studied at Greenbrier Junior College, the University of Texas, the University of Madrid, Spain and the Katharine Gibbs School, Boston, and spent a summer studying at Universidad in Las Americas, Mexico City.

Mr. Martinez prepared for college at Noble & Greenough School, Dedham, and was graduated last June from the University of Virginia, where he will continue with graduate studies.

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

There seems to be only one subject of real concern at the moment when ladies gather at luncheon or at a party. This, needless to say, is the battle of the midi, and a real battle it seems to be turning into, with the fashion designers and stores ranged on one side and women in general on the other.

At the first of the season's pre-symphony luncheons held on Friday at Horticultural Hall almost nothing else was discussed. Apparently everyone came with their eyes lowered to that area of their fellow guests between knee and ankle and every lady who came through the doors was quickly scrutinized to see if "she had one on". Depending on the point of view the results were either elating or disappointing for, possibly due to the extremely unseasonable 90 degree heat, there were few longer skirts to be seen, and those few there looked hot and uncomfortable in the stuffy heat of the building.

Of course, as the sacred Friday afternoon Symphony concert is the very heart of Proper Bostonianism, there were many ladies at the luncheon who had never changed the length of their skirts anyway, and who had worn them at least two inches below the knee through every up and down of fashion since time immemorial. These were the ones, admittedly dwindling with every year as even in Old Boston circles the old order changeth, whose somewhat shapeless suits and sensible shoes mark them as belonging to the older faction of the Forbes, Parkman or Cabot clans, and whose seat in Symphony Hall is a much of a family heirloom as the portraits of early merchant-sea captains who founded their dynasties two centuries ago.

Everyone agreed at the luncheon sponsored by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, that the new length looks best on the tall and very slender woman. Of those seen on Friday two of them were worn by just such women. Mrs. George Bates of Boston chose a midi in black silk taffeta, the bodice tucked and pleated, the skirt slender and falling into low pleats around the mid-calf. Mrs. Harold Hodgkinson, whose husband is chairman of the board of Filene's wore a similar style in navy silk, although her daughter, Charlotte, was in the exact opposite, an extremely brief mini dress of navy wool which she said she had bought last spring and intended to keep on wearing. Mrs. Albert Goodhue, the cochairman with Mrs. John Grandin of the Council of Friends, was another in the new style although her light-navy silk and worsted dress and jacket was more of a compromise and came only an inch or so below her knee. Almost without exception all the other several hundred women were in summery linens or cotton brocades, the length never more than mid-knee.

As is always the case of the first symphony concert of the season the occasion tends to turn into a big reunion as fellow seat holders spy each other across the room and hurry over to catch up on news of the summer. This went on all over Horticultural Hall during the pre-luncheon cocktail hour and again across the street as the hundreds of faithful poured through the doors of Symphony Hall in plenty of time for the 2 p.m. curtain.

The members of the North Shore and Marblehead areas of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra responsible for the luncheon were fortunate to find that the date followed right on the heels of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society's Japan Day and that all the beautiful Japanese decorations were still in place. A lifesize figure of a kimono-clad Japanese lady set in a facsimile of a Japanese room greeted the guests as they arrived and evidence of Japanese culture, such as bamboo trees, were on every side. The committee had decorated every table with a centerpiece of golden chrysanthemums and lemon leaves, and projecting from the arrangement like the quills of a porcupine were yellow pencils bearing the words "Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

There were several men to be seen at this all-female affair. They were members of the trustees of the orchestra, among them Edward Taft and Edward G. Murray who were sitting with the only two lady trustees of the group, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord and Mrs. James Perkins of Westwood. Also there as guests of honor were the young Associate Conductor of the orchestra, Michael Tilson Thomas, and the president of the New England Conservatory of Music, Gunther Schuller.

Among the many glimpsed at the luncheon or later at Symphony Hall were Mrs. Thomas Morris and Mrs. Robert Slasby of Wellesley, Mrs. Alfred Willmann of Belmont, Mrs. Henry Ingram of Hingham, Mrs. J. Holland Cotter of Weston, Mrs. James Sampson of Hingham, Mrs. William J. Mixter, Jr. of Dedham who is chairman of the area chairmen of the Friends; Mrs. C. Russell Eddy of Duxbury, Mrs. Fredrick Stare of Wellesley and the Joseph Ballards, just back from the Cup Races at Newport which they watched from their beautiful yacht, "Ellita".

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

SEP 28 1970

Pop Scene

We Beg To Differ

By PAUL GIONFRIDDO

Certainly not even I would dare to confront such a musical figure as Erich Leinsdorf with the problems that continue to plague the American musical scene — he's probably more aware of that than I am. But when the eminent conductor-emeritus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra decided that he would venture out of the classical field and become arbiter of the current rock scene, than I had to take exception and come out swinging. Mind you, I'm not swinging at the man, per se but rather at a philosophy — at least as it concerns rock — which is, at best, superficial, lacking any understanding.

Mr. Leinsdorf in The New York Times last Sunday spoke of the reasons why youth today largely choose rock over Bach. A reason, he said, is due to the defeatist attitude of our traditional organizations: symphony and opera. conservatory and music department. He asks, "What exactly has the establishment done to attract young people .and make them welcome?" Good question wrong answer. The attractiveness of establishment principles be hanged — it has nothing to do with the question, Mr. Leinsdorf, the answer is really unrelated to establishment motives, rather to the ability of rock to be relevant to the issues! Relevance, Mr. Leinsdorf, is the key. The Beatles reach the issues, hence are relevant to the youth mind. Bach is now simply technique and irrelevant to the times! Now before your classicists throw rocks at me, understand that the fundamental techniques employed in a Bach fugue are not a waste of time, but the employment of the Bach fugue as a choice is!

ERICH LE INSDORF
Bach, Si; Beatles, No!

Youth Events

The kids don't give a hoot about establishment youth events, especially symphony orchestra performances by second rate straights who don't know the difference between "Tommy" by the Who and "Arthur" by the Kinks—both fundamentally operatic and longhair. The kids know the straights don't know, hence they rebel even more, lured back to their own kind of style.

And when you speak of the degree of musical interest today among young people, you're only partly right — it's by far greater than it's ever been, because rock is not merely a musical form anymore, it's the national anthem and liturgy of a life style!

I can remember the years as a boy sitting on the lawn at Tanglewood trying to let the symphonic works of the Boston Symphony give me some kind of high, finding it tedious and, somehow, without meaning. I'm sorry, maybe I just didn't understand what you were trying to do up there on the podium. But when I first heard the Beatles I did understand and I did identify with the melody and the lyric.

Yo usay it is easy to bemoan rock and pot. There really is no reason to bemoan anything, however. The youth of America — indeed, the world — refuse to look back on what they missed,

See POP SCENE Page 7D

★

Mrs. Carlyle H. Holt of Swampscott reports what she says is a first for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mrs. Holt, who has taken an interest in cultural pursuits for many years, says she received a call from a friend after the orchestra's opening concert, Sept. 25.

Those who attended the concert report that the temperature inside Symphony Hall had reached a point of being nearly unbearable and many of the spectators could see that the orchestra members were most uncomfortable during the first portion of the performance.

Following the intermission, the orchestra members returned to their instruments, minus their jackets.

Followers of classical music in Boston say this is the first time in the long history of the orchestra that its members have performed when not formally attired.

In view of the oppressive heat, however, none of the audience objected to the break with tradition.

NEWS
SALEM, MASS.
(E) 28,099

SEP 30 1970

BSO Season Begins

LINCOLN - Lincoln subscribers to the Friday afternoon series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts left at 11:30 a.m. in their chartered limousine for the first concert of the 1970-71 season, Friday, September 25.

This is the second year for this highly successful car-pool, organized by the Council of Friends of the B.S.O., Lincoln Area. Mrs. Edwin M. Cole is Chairman for Lincoln; Mrs. John Haartz is her Transportation Chairman.

All Lincoln subscribers to the concerts are urged to write, or telephone to Mrs. Cole (Beaver Pond Road, 259-8312) and give her their names, and let her know to which series they subscribe.

On Fridays there has been a long tradition of four luncheons before Symphony, at Horticultural Hall. This year's dates are as follows: September 25, December 18, February 12, April 1.

Last year, for the first time, four "Stage-Door" Lecture-Luncheons, provided an interesting and informally intimate behind-the-scenes view of the Orchestra. The dates for this year's luncheons are: October 9 (Armando Ghitalla), November 13 (Carol Procter), January 22 (Leslie Martin), February 26 (Luis Leguai).

Friends of the Symphony who subscribe to any of the evening concerts may be offered a similar opportunity to dine together and meet with members of the Orchestra.

Concert-goers interested in limousine service for evening concerts are also invited to contact Mrs. Cole.

WITH FINANCES YANKING at the purse strings of most symphony orchestras, the subject of audiences was a lively one at the American Symphony Orchestra League's 25th annual conference at Denver, Colo., in June.

The traditional question, "who is the audience and how to get it into the hall," was asked by Marshall Turkin who has just succeeded Howard Harrington as manager of the Detroit Symphony.

Turkin answered his own question, stating that "every citizen is a potential, occasional member of the audience."

"Fun does not take away from quality," he said, "nor is the symphony an entertainment form for a large audience."

Turkin received a rebuttal from composer-conductor Morton Gould. He linked entertainment and gratification and stated that all people should have an experience at the symphony.

"The orchestra should be made part of the community," Gould declared. "It should be a solid part that is not dependent upon a particular conductor or star performer."

More to the point were comments by M. Robert Rogers, former managing director of the Washington National Symphony.

He stressed that it is important to analyze who isn't in the audience because it is necessary to bring in new people, not just to satisfy the people who are already there. The forthcoming Worcester Festival's policy of providing student tickets at reduced prices should help in the solution of its problem.

Erich Leinsdorf

SINCE ERICH LEINSDORF'S resignation as music director of the Boston Symphony, in December 1967, because of overwork, the heavy workload apparently has been shifted to the assistant conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas.

As we reported a couple of weeks ago, Thomas will conduct the Boston Symphony in 28 concerts this season, or six more than the orchestra's music director, William Steinberg.

From Oct. 14 through March 20, the Boston Symphony will play 15 prestigious concerts in New York City, 10 of them in Philharmonic Hall and five in Carnegie.

Steinberg, Leinsdorf and Seiji Ozawa will each conduct three. Thomas has been given the responsibility of directing six.

A TOTAL OF $15,000 is available to young composers in the 19th annual BMI Awards to Student Composers competition sponsored by Broadcast Music, Inc., a performing rights licensing organization.

The BMI project annually gives cash prizes to encourage the creation of concert music by student composers (under the age of 26; of the Western Hemisphere to help them finance their musical education.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
(E) 107,575 (S) 125,175

OCT 4 1970

The BSO 50 years ago

50 Years Ago at Symphony—Pierre Monteux conducted the second pair of concerts in the 1920-21 season on Oct. 15 and 16. For his program, he chose Enesco's Symphony in E-flat, Op. 13; Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 with Harold Bauer as soloist; and Berlioz' Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini." The program book, on this occasion, "earnestly requested the ladies of the audience not to put on hats before the end of a number."

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

OCT 2 1970

Pop Scene: Leinsdorf Debated

(Continued from Page 2D)

instead prefer to view the new horizon where they have taken a slice of the past, re-molded it and given it new life and meaning. Taking a first grade class to see and hear a first class symphony will not make the kids lean more toward the classics, they will simply come away with a whole lot of misunderstanding and probably a splitting headache. And when they're back in their classroom the first smart kid will turn on the portable phonograph and swing with the newest Beatle single! It can't be helped, Mr. Leinsdorf, the old is really old, irrelevant at a time when the new culture has taken root in every classroom in the land. The problems of the orchestra playing the traditional masters lie with declining attendance and union strangleholds, not with kids who refuse to take the cello instead of the guitar.

I am gratified to learn that you, like most of the new idealists in music, refuse to give up and let "Let It Be." In time, perhaps, the gifted kid who digs the Grateful Dead instead of some classic master, will change his mind and re-seek the fine technique in that lost age. But right now his mind revolves around the relevance of the Dead and their meaning is total and enveloping and important. So, Mr. Leinsdorf, while I cannot agree with your basic argument that the kids turn off the classics because of being exposed to second rate performances, I must agree that your side of the musical coin is too riddled with classroom rigidity and stuffy principles. On the other hand, liberalizing the atmosphere will only help to open the door a crack, which might admit a few kids who still find meaning in those fugues. But don't count on any kind of mass response, because the majority of the hip crowd long ago swore allegiance to their own life style after years of being treated to musical lectures.

Rock is now far too important to the new youth to go back to principles. Rock does not smack of the classical age, in spite of the numbers of rock performers trained within the sphere of the classics. Rock has taken youth away from the "indulgent, smiling countenance of ancient superiority," and given them a new freedom of expression. They're determined to protect that freedom, Mr. Leinsdorf, and only a revolution can cause them to go back to your side which by then we all hope, will end up as some mystical assimilation of the rock life style.

BROOKLINE SYMPHONY BENEFIT — Discussing plans for "Julius Caesar" Theater Party to be held Wednesday evening, October 14, at the Abbey 2 Cinema, for the benefit of the Brookline Symphony Orchestra, are (left to right) A. Fred Prager, orchestra president; Mrs. Richard A. Ehrlich, general chairman and Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who has appeared in the past as soloist with the Brookline Symphony. The Premiere, preceded by a Champagne Party, is the first major fund raising event in the thirteen year history of the Orchestra. Proceeds will be used to expand the organization's concert programs and to establish scholarships for promising young musicians in the Brookline area.

FENCE VIEWER
SUDBURY, MASS.
WEEKLY 3,516

OCT 1 1970

CHRONICLE-CITIZEN
BROOKLINE, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 8,450

OCT 1 1970

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

OCT 1 1970

52

MARJORIE SHERMAN

Pete noses into BSO scene

Genius of the baton, delight of musicians and ladies committee, and the youngest and most exciting associate conductor the Boston Symphony ever had, has a rival.

Michael Tilson Thomas wore an admirer's laurel wreath twined in his dark curls for the Symphony Ball, but his rival has a leather headband and a forelock that's the kind you love to touch.

His name is Pete and you can find him outside Symphony Hall just before the Friday concerts begin, and he makes life safer and more fun for the girls of every age crossing Massachusetts avenue on their way to Boston Brahmin's most peerless preserve, the BSO.

Pete gets the white-glove pats, the oohs and the aahs and not even a Royal Lippizan could cover the distance from curb to curb with Pete's flair. Even the truck drivers whistle as they grind to a stop. Policeman Emil Ciriello is thinking of renaming Pete "Beethoven."

Some of the other things you won't want to miss 'round town — the "Evening in Monaco" for the Cystic Fibrosis Teaching and Research Center at Children's Hospital. This very special gala for a tremendous cause has the blessing of Princess Grace of Monaco, and everybody else who ever has known the tragedy of a family decimated by this disease for which there is no cure. Oct. 23 at the Sheraton Plaza: drinks at 7:30, dinner at 8:30, black tie.

It's just one thing right after another as a matter of fact — tomorrow night the name boys in the US Senate are printed in red as honorary chairmen for the Peru Earthquake Relief Committee. Both Edward Brooke and Ted Kennedy already have shuttled to Boston to advance-plug the human need. These are close to total disaster for thousands of men, women and children. This event is at the Sheraton Plaza, too, drinks at 7, dinner at 8.

These generous people have literally fed and welcomed so many homesick students and far-from-home teachers that a book should record the Shattuck "venture" for State Department as well as Boston history.

That fun-first, Aquafest, the big splash for the Aquarium's friends, will be smooth as the seals. Even the two boats that will take you down-harbor with famous-name guides are having a dry-run, or should we say damp dry so that there will be time to play with mermen who look like seagods as they flipper through the sharks and such in the big, big tank three glass inches from your nose.

Thursday is Pan American's once-a-year turnout of the lovelies. Boston beauties two generations strong, like Mrs. Sewall Fessenden and her two daughters, Mrs. David Ferguson and Mrs. Karl Riemer, for instance, carry on the tradition of making this one of the glossiest of the fashion shows for runways round.

This year's intercontinental goings-on will be at Mrs. George Cheever Shattuck's wonderful place in Brookline which has been, like its owners, at the heart of the whole Pan American policy as well as a focal point for young doctors and educators from every South American country.

In Brookline, most of the day, and Mrs. Shattuck at the center of it all, as always.

CEREMONIAL PAT—Best fun on way to Symphony is stopping to pat Pete and say "Hello" to Police Officer Emil Ciriello, before crossing busy avenue. Mrs. Harold Keller of West Newton keeps tradition going, as BSO opens its 90th season.

(Globe photo by Philip Preston)

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377
OCT 4 1970 Ne Engl

Music / intriguing prospects

By Ellen Pfeifer, Globe Staff

From flamenco guitarist to organist, from puppet-staged ballet with song to Renaissance pageant, from solo recital to choral-orchestral concert, and from Bach to Ligete, the 1970-71 musical season holds some intriguing prospects for listeners of all tastes.

Today's Symphony Hall appearance of the Orchestre National Francais conducted by Jean Martinon marks the first visit by orchestras as diverse as the Los Angeles Philharmonic with Zubin Mehta (Oct. 25), the Menuhin Festival Orchestra with Yehudi Menuhin (March 5), the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra (Nov. 8), Virtuosi de Roma (Nov. 4), the Czech Chamber Orchestra (Feb. 17), and I Solisti di Zagreb with Henryk Szeryng (Oct. 23).

On the local scene, Music Director William Steinberg and Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas have devised some interesting BSO programs highlighted by guest conductors Seiji Ozawa, Erich Leinsdorf, Donald Johanos, Rafael Fruehbeck de Burgos, Claudio Abbado, Bernard Haitink, and Rafael Kubelick, and soloists Maurizio Pollini, Joseph Kalichstein, and Mstislav Rostropovich. Some of the more attractive programming includes a concert of works by Perotin, Stockhausen, and Schumann with the Harvard Glee Club (Thomas); the Boston premiere of Ligeti's "Atmospheres" (Ozawa); the "Golden Calf Scene" from Schoenberg's "Moses und Aron" (Leinsdorf); the complete "Ma Vlast" of Smetana (Kubelik); and the premiere of Birtwistle's "Tragoedia" (Thomas).

The Boston Philharmonia concerts will feature Leon Fleischer in his first Boston appearance as a conductor (March 28) and the return of Alexander Schneider as guest conductor (Nov. 22).

On the university level, the New England Conservatory will present its first concert Nov. 18 with Gunther Schuller conducting.

Opera buffs will be able to select from Gustave Charpentier's naturalism, Verdi's grand spectacle, and Bellini's bel canto as Sarah Caldwell's Opera Company of Boston presents "Louise," "Aida," and "Norma." Benita Valente, John Alexander, and Eunice Alberts will sing the leads in "Louise," scheduled for Feb. 24 and 26 while Elinor Ross, James McCracken, and Vern Shinall will recreate the roles of Aida, Rhadames, and Amonasro, March 31 and April 2.

In the latest round of an undeclared I - can - do - anything - Sutherland - can - do - better match, Beverly Sills will peform her first "Norma" with John Alexander as Pollione and Donald Gramm as Oroveso. Director Caldwell, at this point, is not telling who will perform the taxing mezzo soprano roles of Aalgisa or Amneris.

At MIT, the Gilbert and Sullivan Society will present the Brecht-Weill "Three Penny Opera," Nov. 9-14.

The Metropolitan Opera Company will return for a week of performances April 19-24. Program details are still indefinite.

MUSIC, Page A-44

10

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377
OCT 4 1970 Ne Engl

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000
OCT 8 1970

Civic Symphony to Resume Rehearsals

The Civic Symphony of Boston is beginning rehearsals for its 1970-71 season, Michel Sasson, Music Director. On Wednesday, Nov. 11, at Jordan Hall, the orchestra will perform Symphony #8 in G. Major by Dvorak, Piano Concert K. #467 by Mozart with Robert D. Levin soloist and William Walton's Facade Suite #1.

The volunteer musicians of all occupations and ages meet each Wednesday evening, at Boston Latin School on Avenue Louis Pasteur, to rehearse.

Max Hobart, first violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is concertmaster and string coach. Those who play violin, viola, cellor or string bass, are invited to participate. For information call Michel Sasson in Newton or assistant conductor, Michael E. Cooney, Jr. in Lynnfield.

Trumpet Player Stage Door Lecturer

BOX LUNCHEONS IN THE BASEMENT of Symphony Hall have become so popular that yesterday's was sold out. It was the first in this season's series of Stage Door Lectures and Armando Chitalla, principal trumpet player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave the talk. Bostonians love to go behind-the-scenes with members of the orchestra and to go in the stage door and down the stairs to the basement seems to add an extra thrill.

Mr. Chitalla, who has been a member of the orchestra since 1951, began to play the trumpet when he was eight years old. Born in Alpha, Ill., he went to Illinois Wesleyan University and New York University and then continued his musical studies at the Julliard School. He's on the faculties of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Boston University, and the New England Conservatory of Music.

His listeners were most enthusiastic and clapped delightedly when he was urged to "play something." They also asked him many questions, among them "What happens when you get a head cold?" and "What is most likely to cause damage to a trumpet?" He patiently answered all questions in such a satisfactory manner that we heard several women agree that "He's terribly good!"

Mrs. George Bates, co-chairman of the committee with Mrs. David Bird, introduced the speaker. She has been completely converted to the midi and wore a gray dress with a long skirt and gold jewelry. Also a midi convert is Mrs. Cecil Rose.

Mrs. Alfred Willmann was bubbling over with enthusiasm even after being at the Ballgivers' Ball at the Sheraton-Boston till all hours the night before and at the Pan American fashion luncheon at Mrs. George Cheever Shattuck's in Brookline the same afternoon. Who said women are the weaker sex?

Mrs. Reginald Foster was bemoaning the fact that her daughter, Nancy, who is now Mrs. Roberto Zucconi, lives in Italy. "But," she added, "Florence is a wonderful place to visit, and after all, it takes only eight hours to get there."

Mrs. Harold Blanchard missed most of the lecture, but arrived in time for the box luncheon. She has been racing back and forth from Winchester to her summer place, "Skymeadows," in Lisbon, N. H., and her native home in Virginia.

The energetic committee in charge of the lectures includes Mrs. Frank G. Allen, Mrs. Norman L. Cahners, Mrs. Charles A. Coolidge Jr., Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow Jr., Mrs. William V. Ellis, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Donald B. Sinclair, Mrs. Robert Saltonstall, Mrs. Sherman Thayer and Mrs. Roger Voisin.

Yesterday's hostesses included Mrs. Philip K. Allen, Mrs. James H. Grew, Mrs. Frederic A. Worthen, Mrs. Charles M. Bartlett, Mrs. Marshall K. Bartlett, Mrs. Alexander H. Bright, Mrs. Richard P. Higgins and Mrs. A. Osborn Willauer.

Among the many others were Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Mrs. Nelson Aldrich, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Freeman Davison, Mrs. Walter Amory, Mrs. Richard Ely, Mrs. Charles P. Howard and Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray.

Youth Concerts Lists Dates For Programs

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall has announced that its 1970-71 season will consist of two series of three concerts each, which will take place Saturday mornings at 11 a.m. Music Director Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three programs entitled "Beethoven is Brotherhood," "A Tribute to Abraham Lincoln" and "The Story of Carmen."

The programs are designed for students in grades 5-12. Dates for the first series are: Nov. 7, Jan. 30, March 6; for the second series, Nov. 14, Feb. 6, March 13. Highlighting the first program will be the finale from Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, with the Boston English and Jeremiah Burke High School Glee Clubs. Baritone Mac Morgan will narrate Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" at the second program, and a cast of singers to be announced will present excerpts from Bizet's opera at the third program. Only series tickets are available, and further information may be obtained from Mrs. Manuel Kurland at 469-0656.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557
OCT 8 1970 En

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557
OCT 10 1970 En

Times-Picayune
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
D. 196,345 SUN. 308,949
OCT 11 1970

'Symphony Night' at Symphony

A 19th-century classic and a highly-regarded American work of this century will be paried on the New Orleans Philharmonic-Symphony's third subscription concert.

To be performed Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. at Municipal Auditorium are Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, and the American Roy Harris' Third Symphony. Conductor Werner Torkanowsky will open the program with Reznicek's Overture to "Donna Diana."

The Harris Symphony was introduced by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony in 1939. At that time Koussevitzky called the symphony "the greatest orchestral work yet written in America.

It was played on a Philharmonic-Symphony "Connoisseur Concert" in 1961, and is having its first performance on a subscription program.

Club Birthday Recalls 80 Years Of History

785

CANAAN — The Hawthorne Club, founded in the days when young unmarried women were called "maiden ladies," celebrated its 80th birthday Thursday with Mrs. Lyles, some going on snowshoes."

REPUBLICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
(M) 27,040 (S) 56,127
OCT 11 1970

In 1926-27: Two dolls were dressed for the Japanese Friendship Scheme, two of 4,000 close- Mrs. Charles A. Beaujon. Weeks had been spent by these ladies in making the puppets and costumes, requiring much skill and ingenuity. The voice parts were well taken." Several performances were given for school children.

Further reports on Dec. 6, 1911: A banquet was given to the husbands, brothers, and others at the Canfield Inn. "And that's how it came about that on April 15, 1912, the 'Husbands, Brothers and Others Club' paid off an installment of their indebtedness to the ladies by journeying to Pittsfield to attend the concert of the Boston Symphony. All took possession of the second coach on the 6:41 express, and at the close, in a drenching rainstorm, boarded a special trolley car chartered for the occasion, and after being shunted back and forth and gee-hawed around the central part of the city several times, started for home at exactly 11 o'clock." They got home around 1 a.m.

Over the years (the history goes on to relate), meetings were held at The Maples Con-

In 1947-48 the club voted to send its set of Hawthorne books (gift of the late Mrs. William Smart) to the Hawthorne Memorial.

Mrs. Ambler Travis, club chairman, and Mrs. Lillian P. Keener, vice chairman of the club, were hostesses at the Thursday Club anniversary event, a large decorated birthday cake being a feature and cut by Mrs. Robert C. Sellew Sr., who has belonged to the club the greater number of years, and Mrs. Robert Loesch, the youngest member. Poems were read by Mrs. Travis during the program.

52

MARJORIE SHERMAN

Pete noses into BSO scene

Genius of the baton, delight of musicians and ladies committee, and the youngest and most exciting associate conductor the Boston Symphony ever had, has a rival.

Michael Tilson Thomas wore an admirer's laurel wreath twined in his dark curls for the Symphony Ball, but his rival has a leather headband and a forelock that's the kind you love to touch.

His name is Pete and you can find him outside Symphony Hall just before the Friday concerts begin, and he makes life safer and more fun for the girls of every age crossing Massachusetts avenue on their way to Boston Brahmin's most peerless preserve, the BSO.

Pete gets the white-glove pats, the oohs and the aahs and not even a Royal Lippizan could cover the distance from curb to curb with Pete's flair. Even the truck drivers whistle as they grind to a stop. Policeman Emil Ciriello is thinking of renaming Pete "Beethoven."

Some of the other things you won't want to miss 'round town — the "Evening in Monaco" for the Cystic Fibrosis Teaching and Research Center at Children's Hospital. This very special gala for a tremendous cause has the blessing of Princess Grace of Monaco, and everybody else who ever has known the tragedy of a family decimated by this disease for which there is no cure. Oct. 23 at the Sheraton Plaza: drinks at 7:30, dinner at 8:30, black tie.

It's just one thing right after another as a matter of fact — tomorrow night the name boys in the US Senate are printed in red as honorary chairmen for the Peru Earthquake Relief Committee. Both Edward Brooke and Ted Kennedy already have shuttled to Boston to advance-plug the human need. These are close to total disaster for thousands of men, women and children. This event is at the Sheraton Plaza, too, drinks at 7, dinner at 8.

These generous people have literally fed and welcomed so many homesick students and far-from-home teachers that a book should record the Shattuck "venture" for State Department as well as Boston history.

That fun-first, Aquafest, the big splash for the Aquarium's friends, will be smooth as the seals. Even the two boats that will take you down-harbor with famous-name guides are having a dry-run, or should we say damp dry so that there will be time to play with mermen who look like seagods as they flipper through the sharks and such in the big, big tank three glass inches from your nose.

Thursday is Pan American's once-a-year turnout of the lovelies. Boston beauties two generations strong, like Mrs. Sewall Fessenden and her two daughters, Mrs. David Ferguson and Mrs. Karl Riemer, for instance, carry on the tradition of making this one of the glossiest of the fashion shows for runways round.

This year's intercontinental goings-on will be at Mrs. George Cheever Shattuck's wonderful place in Brookline which has been, like its owners, at the heart of the whole Pan American policy as well as a focal point for young doctors and educators from every South American country.

In Brookline, most of the day, and Mrs. Shattuck at the center of it all, as always.

CEREMONIAL PAT— Best fun on way to Symphony is stopping to pat Pete and say "Hello" to Police Officer Emil Ciriello, before crossing busy avenue. Mrs. Harold Keller of West Newton keeps tradition going, as BSO opens its 90th season.

(Globe photo by Philip Preston)

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

OCT 4 1970 Ne Engl

Times-Picayune
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
D. 196,345 SUN. 308,949

OCT 11 1970

'Symphony Night' at Symphony

A 19th-century classic and a highly-regarded American work of this century will be paried on the New Orleans Philharmonic-Symphony's third subscription concert.

To be performed Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. at Municipal Auditorium are Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F Minor, and the American Roy Harris' Third Symphony. Conductor Werner Torkanowsky will open the program with Reznicek's Overture to "Donna Diana."

The Harris Symphony was introduced by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony in 1939. At that time Koussevitzky called the symphony "the greatest orchestral work yet written in America.

It was played on a Philharmonic-Symphony "Connoisseur Concert" in 1961, and is having its first performance on a subscription program.

Music / intriguing prospects

By Ellen Pfeifer, Globe Staff

From flamenco guitarist to organist, from puppet-staged ballet with song to Renaissance pageant, from solo recital to choral-orchestral concert, and from Bach to Ligete, the 1970-71 musical season holds some intriguing prospects for listeners of all tastes.

Today's Symphony Hall appearance of the Orchestre National Francais conducted by Jean Martinon marks the first visit by orchestras as diverse as the Los Angeles Philharmonic with Zubin Mehta (Oct. 25), the Menuhin Festival Orchestra with Yehudi Menuhin (March 5), the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra (Nov. 8), Virtuosi de Roma (Nov. 4), the Czech Chamber Orchestra (Feb. 17), and I Solisti di Zagreb with Henryk Szeryng (Oct. 23).

On the local scene, Music Director William Steinberg and Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas have devised some interesting BSO programs highlighted by guest conductors Seiji Ozawa, Erich Leinsdorf, Donald Johanos, Rafael Fruehbeck de Burgos, Claudio Abbado, Bernard Haitink, and Rafael Kubelick, and soloists Maurizio Pollini, Joseph Kalichstein, and Mstislav Rostropovich. Some of the more attractive programming includes a concert of works by Perotin, Stockhausen, and Schumann with the Harvard Glee Club (Thomas); the Boston premiere of Ligeti's "Atmospheres" (Ozawa); the "Golden Calf Scene" from Schoenberg's "Moses und Aron" (Leinsdorf); the complete "Ma Vlast" of Smetana (Kubelik); and the premiere of Birtwistle's "Tragoedia" (Thomas).

The Boston Philharmonia concerts will feature Leon Fleischer in his first Boston appearance as a conductor (March 28) and the return of Alexander Schneider as guest conductor (Nov. 22).

On the university level, the New England Conservatory will present its first concert Nov. 18 with Gunther Schuller conducting.

Opera buffs will be able to select from Gustave Charpentier's naturalism, Verdi's grand spectacle, and Bellini's bel canto as Sarah Caldwell's Opera Company of Boston presents "Louise," "Aida," and "Norma." Benita Valente, John Alexander, and Eunice Alberts will sing the leads in "Louise," scheduled for Feb. 24 and 26 while Elinor Ross, James McCracken, and Vern Shinall will recreate the roles of Aida, Rhadames, and Amonasro, March 31 and April 2.

In the latest round of an undeclared I - can - do - anything - Sutherland - can - do - better match, Beverly Sills will peform her first "Norma" with John Alexander as Pollione and Donald Gramm as Oroveso. Director Caldwell, at this point, is not telling who will perform the taxing mezzo soprano roles of Aalgisa or Amneris.

At MIT, the Gilbert and Sullivan Society will present the Brecht-Weill "Three Penny Opera," Nov. 9-14.

The Metropolitan Opera Company will return for a week of performances April 19-24. Program details are still indefinite.

MUSIC, Page A-4

10

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

OCT 4 1970 Ne Engl

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

OCT 8 1970

Civic Symphony to Resume Rehearsals

The Civic Symphony of Boston is beginning rehearsals for its 1970-71 season, Michel Sasson, Music Director. On Wednesday, Nov. 11, at Jordan Hall, the orchestra will perform Symphony #8 in G. Major by Dvorak, Piano Concert K. #467 by Mozart with Robert D. Levin soloist and William Walton's Facade Suite #1.

The volunteer musicians of all occupations and ages meet each Wednesday evening, at Boston Latin School on Avenue Louis Pasteur, to rehearse.

Max Hobart, first violinist, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is concertmaster and string coach. Those who play violin, viola, cellor or string bass, are invited to participate. For information call Michel Sasson in Newton or assistant conductor, Michael E. Cooney, Jr. in Lynnfield.

Trumpet Player Stage Door Lecturer

BOX LUNCHEONS IN THE BASEMENT of Symphony Hall have become so popular that yesterday's was sold out. It was the first in this season's series of Stage Door Lectures and Armando Chitalla, principal trumpet player of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, gave the talk. Bostonians love to go behind-the-scenes with members of the orchestra and to go in the stage door and down the stairs to the basement seems to add an extra thrill.

Mr. Chitalla, who has been a member of the orchestra since 1951, began to play the trumpet when he was eight years old. Born in Alpha, Ill., he went to Illinois Wesleyan University and New York University and then continued his musical studies at the Julliard School. He's on the faculties of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Boston University, and the New England Conservatory of Music.

His listeners were most enthusiastic and clapped delightedly when he was urged to "play something." They also asked him many questions, among them "What happens when you get a head cold?" and "What is most likely to cause damage to a trumpet?" He patiently answered all questions in such a satisfactory manner that we heard several women agree that "He's terribly good!"

Mrs. George Bates, co-chairman of the committee with Mrs. David Bird, introduced the speaker. She has been completely converted to the midi and wore a gray dress with a long skirt and gold jewelry. Also a midi convert is Mrs. Cecil Rose.

Mrs. Alfred Willmann was bubbling over with enthusiasm even after being at the Ballgivers' Ball at the Sheraton-Boston till all hours the night before and at the Pan American fashion luncheon at Mrs. George Cheever Shattuck's in Brookline the same afternoon. Who said women are the weaker sex?

Mrs. Reginald Foster was bemoaning the fact that her daughter, Nancy, who is now Mrs. Roberto Zucconi, lives in Italy. "But," she added, "Florence is a wonderful place to visit, and after all, it takes only eight hours to get there."

Mrs. Harold Blanchard missed most of the lecture, but arrived in time for the box luncheon. She has been racing back and forth from Winchester to her summer place, "Skymeadows," in Lisbon, N. H., and her native home in Virginia.

The energetic committee in charge of the lectures includes Mrs. Frank G. Allen, Mrs. Norman L. Cahners, Mrs. Charles A. Coolidge Jr., Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow Jr., Mrs. William V. Ellis, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Donald B. Sinclair, Mrs. Robert Saltonstall, Mrs. Sherman Thayer and Mrs. Roger Voisin.

Yesterday's hostesses included Mrs. Philip K. Allen, Mrs. James H. Grew, Mrs. Frederic A. Worthen, Mrs. Charles M. Bartlett, Mrs. Marshall K. Bartlett, Mrs. Alexander H. Bright, Mrs. Richard P. Higgins and Mrs. A. Osborn Willauer.

Among the many others were Mrs. Albert Goodhue, Mrs. Nelson Aldrich, Mrs. Harold D. Hodgkinson, Mrs. Freeman Davison, Mrs. Walter Amory, Mrs. Richard Ely, Mrs. Charles P. Howard and Mrs. C. Chauncey Gray.

Youth Concerts Lists Dates For Programs

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall has announced that its 1970-71 season will consist of two series of three concerts each, which will take place Saturday mornings at 11 a.m. Music Director Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in three programs entitled "Beethoven is Brotherhood," "A Tribute to Abraham Lincoln" and "The Story of Carmen."

The programs are designed for students in grades 5-12. Dates for the first series are: Nov. 7, Jan. 30, March 6; for the second series, Nov. 14, Feb. 6, March 13. Highlighting the first program will be the finale from Beethoven's Symphony No. 9, with the Boston English and Jeremiah Burke High School Glee Clubs. Baritone Mac Morgan will narrate Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" and Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" at the second program, and a cast of singers to be announced will present excerpts from Bizet's opera at the third program. Only series tickets are available, and further information may be obtained from Mrs. Manuel Kurland at 469-0656.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

OCT 8 1970 En

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

OCT 10 1970 En

Club Birthday Recalls 80 Years Of History

CANAAN — The Hawthorne Club, founded in the days when young unmarried women were called "maiden ladies," celebrated its 80th birthday Thurs-

OCT 11 1970

Further reports on Dec. 6, 1911: A banquet was given to the husbands, brothers, and others at the Canfield Inn. "And that's how it came about that on April 15, 1912, the 'Husbands, Brothers and Others Club' paid off an installment of their indebtedness to the ladies by journeying to Pittsfield to attend the concert of the Boston Symphony. All took possession of the second coach on the 6:41 express, and at the close, in a drenching rainstorm, boarded a special trolley car chartered for the occasion, and after being shunted back and forth and gee-hawed around the central part of the city several times, started for home at exactly 11 o'clock." They got home around 1 a.m.

Over the years (the history goes on to relate), meetings were held at The Maples, Canwith Mrs. Lyles, some going on snowshoes."

In 1926-27: Two dolls were dressed for the Japanese Friendship Scheme, two of 4,000

Mrs. Charles A. Beaujon. Weeks had been spent by these ladies in making the puppets and costumes, requiring much skill and ingenuity. The voice parts were well taken." Several performances were given for school children.

In 1947-48 the club voted to send its set of Hawthorne books (gift of the late Mrs. William Smart) to the Hawthorne Memorial.

Mrs. Ambler Travis, club chairman, and Mrs. Lillian P. Keener, vice chairman of the club, were hostesses at the Thursday Club anniversary event, a large decorated birthday cake being a feature and cut by Mrs. Robert C. Sellew Sr., who has belonged to the club the greater number of years, and Mrs. Robert Loesch, the youngest member. Poems were read by Mrs. Travis during the program.

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

They sit there with the heating pipes overhead and the hard concrete floor beneath their feet, these ladies whose names are well-known in Boston, in a room that is a far cry from luxury or comfort, and yet it's harder to get a ticket to join them than it is to attend almost any other event in Boston.

In the short time since their beginning the Stage Door Lectures in the basement of Symphony Hall have become the most popular of all the events associated with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and are a complete sell-out. To the thrifty Bostonians who, however large the family fortune might be, really hates to spend money on anything approaching frivolity the bareness of the basement room and the simplicity of the box lunch contents their Calvinistic consciences and they can enjoy the event without the slightest feelings of guilt at their extravagance.

The fact that the speakers at the 11:30 a.m. lectures are among the most entertaining to be found anywhere may well have something to do with the popularity also. All members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra they take their audience behind the scenes of the orchestra and tell them amusing secrets and anecdotes about their colleagues in the musical world. Friday's lecturer was no exception and kept the ladies laughing with his tales of his life as a trumpet player with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Armando Ghitalla is the principal trumpet player of the group and he is also by way of being a carpenter. He amusingly told his audience of his adventures converting his house at Priscilla Beach in Plymouth to an all-year round house, then took them on a complete course of the trumpet, demonstrating to them by way of a rubber hose and a funnel the evolvement of the instrument, and showing them the many different types, all of which he plays depending which is called for in the music being performed by the orchestra.

He was an interesting and informal speaker yet one with a consideration for his audience for as the many questions were asked after his talk he carefully repeated each one before answering so that those at the back of the room could hear.

The committee headed by Mrs. David Bird and Mrs. George Bates had made a determined effort to brighten up the basement room with a huge pink backdrop patterned with a replica of the well-known insignia that appears on the front of each B.S.O. program. Each white lunch box was decorated with a chrysanthemum corsage in a variety of colors and later at the Symphony concert the sprays of flowers stood as an identifying badge of those who had attended the lecture. The hostesses for the day, who included among them Mrs. Charles Bartlett and Mrs. Marshall K. Bartlett both of Dedham, Mrs. Reginald Foster of Chestnut Hill and Mrs. Richard R. Higgins of Dedham, all wore smocks in coral and green over their symphony-going clothes which blended with the colors of the chrysanthemums.

There were many at the lecture who had been at many of the numerous benefits and social events held last week. Mrs. Richard Thompson of Swampscott had been at many of them, as had Mrs. William Mixter, Jr. of Dedham. Mrs. Charles A. Coolidge, Jr. of Belmont and Mrs. Norman Cahners had both been at the Aquarium benefit and the Pan American Fashion Show the day before.

Others enjoying the lecture were Mrs. Hollis Gleason of Cohasset, Mrs. Edwin Ohl of Dedham, Mrs. Herbert Motley of Needham. Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow, Jr. of Duxbury, Mrs. C. Russell Eddy of Duxbury, Mrs. Sherman Thayer of Chestnut Hill and Cohasset, and Mrs Charles P. Howard.

* * *

Mrs. Alfred Willmann of Belmont was also at the Stage Door Lecture and she and her husband had been among the honored guests at the Benefit-Givers Ball at the Sheraton Boston the evening before.

The affair was in the nature of a thank you party from the Sheraton Corporation to the many organizations who had used their facilities, and a night to remember it certainly was. The hosts, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Barger, general manager of the Sheraton Boston, and Miss Ann Sargent, had left no stone unturned in thinking of ways to honor their guests from the epicurean whole smoked salmon on a silver fish-shaped platter served as part of the hors d'oevres to the four different wines served with the six course gourmet dinner.

The scene in the ballroom resembled the way a dinner party in the huge English country houses of the last century must have looked. A wide table ran the entire length of the ballroom seating 50 on each side. Giant silver epergne holding flowers and candles were placed down the center of the table, garlands of flowers of all kinds linking them. White gloved waiters stood behind almost each chair and as soon as a guest used the starched damask napkin at each place it was quietly replaced with a fresh one.

The entire evening was like a page from the past. Dinner was long and leisurely with no clattering of plates or rushing to remove half eaten dishes by the well trained waiters. The six courses started with a clear soupe tortue verte served with a glass of La Ina sherry. Tiny shrimp baked in a delicious dill sauce in a scallop shell—petites crevettes en coquille—followed, accompanied by a white wine Liebfraumilch 1967. A small parfait glass of a sorbet, or sherbert, followed to clear the palate for the filet de boeuf, perigordine, so tender it could be cut with a fork, served with potato, tomato and asparagus—pommes Anna, tamate Farci, and asperges. A red wine, Baune-Graves 1964 accompanied this. A salad of laitue bibb, endives Belgiques and fromage Brie came next followed by strawberries with sauce Sabayon and petits fours. Champagne Taittinger 1961, was the wine with dessert and a demi-tasse rounded off the unforgettable dinner.

Between courses Ruby Newman and his orchestra played for dancing on a spacious and uncrowded floor. Among the lucky 100 invited to this special party were Mr. and Mrs. E. Roland Teiner for the Buddy Dog Humane Society; Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld for the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Mrs. Rosenfeld in a lovely dress of silver; Mr. and Mrs. David Crockett of Ipswich for the Boston Opera Association which represents the Metropolitan Opera; the Theodore Tillotsons of Belmont for the Mt. Auburn Hospital; Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gibson and Mr. and Mrs. Edward McGrath of Brookline for the Florence Crittenton League; the Stanwood Calderwoods of Belmont—Mr. Calderwood is the new president of Channel 2 and is just back from England with news of all kinds of marvellous programs he has purchased from the B.B.C.; Mr. and Mrs. Peter Benfield of the Yale Club of Boston; Mr. and Mrs. C. Charles Marran of Newton, the Gerald Roberts of Needham for the Association for the Performing Arts; Mrs. Roland Burlingame for the Boston Ballet Society and many more being feted at an evening to remember.

Leaders Discuss Problem

N.E. Conservatory In Fiscal Crisis

By CHARLES GIULIANO

The New England Conservatory is in a state of financial crisis. Senator Edward Brooke assembled a luncheon of concerned business men and community leaders to discuss the financial plight of the 107-year-old Boston institution.

As President Gunther Schuller of the Conservatory explained, the Conservatory was founded without endowment by a Rhode Island music teacher. The Conservatory, at first, strictly believed that the school should be self-sustaining. For several decades that idea worked, probably because the low salary scale of the faculty served as an outright gift to the institution.

IN THE PAST few years, costs of educating music students have risen astronomically. Because the Conservatory primarily undertakes to educate performers, the students are taught largely in a one-to-one relationship. As Schuller pointed out, it takes as much time to educate a violinist in 1970 as it took in 1870.

Currently, each student pays some $2,300 annually yet the cost to the school is $5,000 for each student. In addition to subsidizing half the costs of each student, the school must provide extnesive scholarship relief.

IF THE CONSERVATORY is allowed to fold, then the musical life of New England will be severely undermined. Right now, as much as a third of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is composed of Conservatory graduates. The Conservatory also feeds other New England musical institutions representing a broad spectrum of music education.

In 1964, the school sought an endowment of $7 million. They succeeded in gaining $5 million. Presently, that fund has been depleted due to across-the-board faculty pay increases and almost doubled administrative expenses.

THE CURRENT annual deficit of the Conservatory is $1.3 million. Of this, only $180,000 is met with investment interest. Costs have doubled in the past five years and show no sign of having reached their ceiling. Inflation is severely undermining the quality of higher education; unfortunately, the Conservatory is only a sensitive litmus of a greater educational crisis which over the next decade affects all institutions of higher learning.

To ensure continued operation, the Conservatory must seek an endowment of some $20 million for the next five years.

Senator Brooke underscored that a large foundation is prepared to help but only if matching funds are provided by the community. As Sherman C. Badger, the chairman of the board of directors, stated, "in the past the community has not done its job in supporting this vital institution of higher learning."

The function of the Conservatory is specialized. Unlike liberal arts colleges which train teachers, the Conservatory trains the actual performers. The health of the performing arts in New England is directly dependent upon the continuation of the Conservatory.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557
OCT 22 1970
New Engl

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387
OCT 12 1970

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377
OCT 21 1970
New Engl News

The BSO 25 years ago

25 Years Ago at Symphony — Serge Koussevitsky conducted the opening concert of the 1945-46 season. The Program included Beethoven's 3rd "Leonore" Overture and "Eroica" Symphony, the latter dedicated "to the peace of the world and to the heroism which has made it possible," and the first Boston performance of a suite from Aaron Copland's "Appalachian Spring."

50 Years Ago at Symphony — Pierre Monteux was Music Director in the 1920-21 season, and his opening program included Beethoven's Symphony No. 8, the first Boston performances of Symphonic Fantasia on two Folksongs of Anjou by Guillaume Lekeu and of Gabriel Pierne's orchestration of Franck's Prelude, Chorale, and Fugue, and it ended with Liszt's symphonic poem, "Tasso."

A three-party night for Civic Symphony

Take a number. The cost of one of the year's most pizazzy do's, for instance.

Then divide it by three because unlike everything else you're going to be paying for this spiral-upped season, the Civic Symphony's Dec. 6 go-round will hand you three parties for the price of one.

No. 1 idea gal Janet Field has thought of everything. Like your car will be parked in the onetime Vanderbilt back field just around the corner from The Country Club in Brookline. The rest of the night you'll be tooled to 3 handsome houses. It'll begin, of course, with that ex-Vanderbilt house where Helen and Paul Bernat have made a collectors' heaven out of the fascinating rooms that lead to wild-duck ponds and a glasswalled swimming pool. It'll be champagne and music by candlelight, and if you've never seen the Bernats' exquisite jades you'll never have a better chance.

From there you'll be spirited off to wine and dine at the beautiful Fisher Hill home of the Alan Rices where there'll be more music by prize-winning players from the symphony. And if you've shared their Edgartown house, you know what made-to-order hosts the Rices are.

One of the least-seen, most-choice houses in Boston belongs to Dr. and Mrs. Jost Michelsen who'll have dessert and brandy waiting for the Civic Symphony guests. Another treat will be a glimpse of their Colombian art collection.

This aptly named "Enchanted Evening" will be the first money-raiser for the Civic Symphony in its 45 community-centered years. Under the year-old baton of the Boston Symphony's very-bright-boy Michel Sasson, the Civic has sent off first-desk men to two leading orchestras. A violinist went to the Los Angeles Philharmonic, where Sasson will guest-conduct later this season, and a first trombone is now at The Hague. The Civic's three-a-season concerts are tops—the first-time benefit is a real don't-miss.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377
OCT 26 1970
New Engla

Stage Door Dinner At Symphony

The North Shore Area of the Council of Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra will sponsor a Stage Door Dinner at Symphony Hall, Boston, prior to Thursday night's concert.

Mrs. Erick Kauders is the North Shore Area chairman.

Assisting Mrs. Kauders in planning and hostessing the dinner are Friends from Andover: Mrs. Herbert Abrams, Mrs. James H. Grew and Mrs. Hart C. Leavitt. Ladies participating from Beverly Farms and Manchester are: Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, Mrs. F. Corning Kenly, Mrs. Drayton Phillips and Mrs. Richard Thorndike. Also on the committee from Marblehead are: Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich, Mrs. Raymond W. Ellis, Mrs. John A. McCandless, Mrs. John T. G. Nichols III and Mrs. George R. Poor; from Salem, Mrs. Henry P. Binney and Mrs. David B. Little and from Swampscott, Mrs. Nelson W. Darling.

ITEM
LYNN, MASS.
(E) 38,000
OCT 30 1970

BSO Friends Sponsoring Dinner

A STAGE DOOR DINNER at Symphony Hall, Thursday evening, Nov. 5, before the concert of the Symphony Orchestra is sponsored by the North Shore Area of the Council of Friends, of which Mrs. Erick Kauders is chairman. Assisting her are Mrs. Herbert Abrams, Mrs. James H. Grew, Mrs. Hart Leavitt, Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, Mrs. F. Corning Kenly, Mrs. Drayton Phillips and Mrs. Richard Thorndike.

Also, Mrs. Nelson Aldrich, Mrs. Raymond W. Ellis, Mrs. John A. McCandless, Mrs. John T. G. Nichols 3d, Mrs. George R. Poor, Mrs. Henry P. Binney, Mrs. David B. Little and Mrs. Nelson W. Darling. They advise you to make your reservations immediately.

CRICKET
MANCHESTER, MASS.
WEEKLY 1,598
OCT 30 1970

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S)
OCT 29 1970

Stage Door Dinner

An active group rightfully called "Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra" is again serving the Boston community. The North Shore Area of the Council of Friends is sponsoring a Stage Door Dinner for the Thursday evening Friends at Symphony Hall before the concert the evening of November 5th.

Mrs. Erick Kauders, North Shore Area chairman, feels this will be a festive affair offering an opportunity for the audience, staff and orchestra to become acquainted.

Assisting Mrs. Kauders in planning and hostessing the dinner are "Friends" from Beverly Farms and Manchester: Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, Mrs. F. Corning Kenly, Mrs. Drayton Phillips and Mrs. Richard Thorndike.

The dinner is expected to be a very popular event and the committee suggests reservations should be made immediately. Any further information may be obtained from the Friends' office at Symphony Hall in Boston.

Another thing — a B. U. student publication's most recent edition lists the current prices for marijuana, hashish, mescaline, LSD and psilocybin. It also says the prices were "quoted by dealers who serve the B. U. community." Unless it's a big put-on — if the students can get to the dealers, the police ought to be able to, as well.

Arthur Stivaletta of the Wake Up America Committee assesses Dom Bianculli, administrative secretary of the Executive Council, this way: "If he were Vice President of the U. S., he'd make Spiro Agnew and Teddy Roosevelt sound like Cal Coolidge."

As he did the first time they met 15 years ago or so, Harry Ellis Dickson of the BSO accompanied Danny Kaye to Logan Airport Sunday to see him off for the Broadway run of "Two by Two." At the airport, passersby who recognized him would say, "Hey, there's Danny Kaye." And Kaye would say more loudly, "Hey, there's Harry Dickson."

Last Friday, an hour before the Boston Symphony was to begin its customary concert, Dickson, at Kaye's behest, called for him at the Shubert Theater to take him along. But "Two by Two" was still rehearsing old and new material with composer Richard Rodgers sitting in.

Kaye took a look at Rodgers, didn't even ask the question, turned to Dickson like a little boy being punished for some mischief, and said plaintively, "I can't go."

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300
OCT 28 1970

Candidate's wife

I am responding to an Oct. 2 letter requesting information about Mrs. Helen Spaulding. I agree entirely that the voter has learned almost nothing about Helen Spaulding — not to mention Si Spaulding — from the news media.

Mrs. Spaulding is a very interesting woman who has done rather extensive research on the drug problem in our Commonwealth and has visited almost every drug rehabilitation center in our state. She is very interested, too, in the environment and in consumer affairs. Her brother-in-law, Russell Train, is a member of the President's Commission on Environmental Quality, and her sister Aileen is very active in the area of consumer affairs. In fact, her entire family is as interesting as the Kennedys.

Helen's mother is frequently seen wearing an enormous button that reads "I am a Democrat for Spaulding." Helen Spaulding is a vivacious, intelligent, attractive woman who is actively involved in civic and community affairs. She has been involved with the Boston Aquarium, the North Shore Children's Hospital, and the Boston Symphony. She skis, plays tennis, and collects antiques. And she inspired her three sons to organize a bicycle campaign last summer to combat pollution.

On the subject of fashion, she says she might buy a midi coat but will never wear a midi dress; she likes her clothes to or above the knee. And she was a bridesmaid in Jackie's wedding to John Kennedy. Why, then, when there are so many things to be said about Helen Spaulding, do four separate editions of a major Boston newspaper devote prime space to the issue of what Joan Kennedy wore to lunch and no space whatever — even on the back page — to Mrs. Si Spaulding?

BARBARA J. TROMBLEY
An acquaintance of "Mrs. Si" Milton

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377
OCT 2 1970
New Engla

s as a Concert Pianist instant news. Early during the Nixon tenure in the White House, when miniskirts were still somewhat restricted to the very young or the very swinging, she wore a very abbreviated dress to a White House reception, with black stockings and black shoes with rhinestones on the heels.

* * *

WHEN SHE WORE a simple floor-length tiered gown of Spanish black lace at an art museum ball with a Spanish flavor, she told admirers: "It's four years old and I designed it myself."

* * *

WHEN SHE TALKED to a women's group in Gary, Ind. on behalf of Sen. Birch Bayh (still a very active Vietnam dove) she was photographed with her shoes off while standing at the rostrum.

* * *

SHE HAS THREE children...Edward M. Jr., Kara and Joseph...which isn't a big family by Kennedy clan standards. So when she and husband Ted greeted sister-in-law Ethel at the hospital after her 11th child, Ted quipped: "Joan and I are going to take this baby home... Ethel has enough of them."

* * *

SHE WAS AT A Washington, D. C. beauty parlor having her hair done when a former Harvard classmate of her husband's sought her out to gently tell her that John F. Kennedy had been shot.

* * *

IN MAY 1969 SHE GAVE a thoroughly professional reading of "Peter and the Wolf" as the Boston Pops Orchestra played the Prokofiev classic. The occasion was a benefit at Boston's Symphony Hall and a reviewer wrote that "her tones were as satiny as her flowered dress." For her efforts she was given a Baccarat paperweight from the Pops musicians, yellow tea roses from her children and husband Ted's critique: "She did well. No wonder, she's been listening to my speeches."

Three months later she again narrated "Peter," this time at Tanglewood, Mass., a commitment she honored despite Ted Kennedy's tragic accident at Chappaquiddick which had just occurred. As a result the audience greeted her with a standing ovation and famed conductor Arthur Fiedler gave her a special salute.

* * *

SHE DID NOT ATTEND Jackie's wedding to Aristotle Onassis. When Bobby Kennedy was shot, Joan was in Paris. She flew home immediately to be with her husband at Bobby's funeral.

* * *

IN HER HOME DECOR, Joan liked to combine early American antiques with European period pieces, a device, she believes, that makes for an effect of freedom and individuality.

* * *

SHE IS ALSO VERY fond of decorative pillows. Her library has three purple and blue plaid couches heaped with fox and raccoon pillows for comfort and cozyness. Pillows also practically cover three couches and two love seats in her drawing room.

* * *

JOAN ALSO LIKES to decorate walls with posed and informal photographs of the entire Kennedy clan.

Music

It's a critical situation

by Harry Neville

Music critics are a pampered lot. No doubt about it. Everyone knows that critics get tons of free tickets to every musical event, which they then see at black market prices if the performer happens to be Sills, Sutherland or Horowitz. Moreover, the trustees of the Boston Symphony always supply critics with suitably dignified transportation—usually a Rolls but never less than a Cadillac—to and from the Friday afternoon Symphony Hall concerts. And to make bearable for critics the inconvenience of having to review events at Tanglewood during the summer, the Symphnoy overseers ensconce critics in fine old Lenox mansions, seeing to it that their every whim is satisfied.

When critics enter Symphony Hall, impeccably attired and awesome in demeanor, little girls curtsey and diffidently request autographs. Bystanders cast admiring glances. Ushers beam and yield their duties to a high-ranking member of the management, who escorts the critic to his seat. At intermission the critic frequently receives a note from the conductor, apologizing for the gaffe in the first movement of the Tchaikovsky and inviting him to dinner at the Ritz afterwards so that they can discuss the score to be played the following week.

Singers, who tend to become more and more humble with increasing fame, are perhaps most solicitous of all in their attitudes toward critics. If a critic is obliged to report that Madame X sang a whole tone flat throughout "Sempre libera," he is as likely as not to receive a phone call from Madame X herself the following day, thanking him for bringing the matter to her attention. Opera house managers, too, constantly seek the advice of critics, for it would be unthinkable to plan a season, choose singers, designers, etc. without the benefit of the critic's expert knowledge.

None of this attentiveness, however, compares with that of the contemporary composer, whose attitude toward the critic can only be described as one of servile adulation. Composers, more than anyone else, recognize the critic's invaluable service, and after having been told how to patch together a faulty score the composer often dedicates the work to the helpful critic. Little wonder then that every two or three years the critic is besieged by publishers eager to print his collected reviews, from which the critic makes thousands of dollars in royalties in addition to his plush salary as a journalist.

How in view of all this deference can the critic remain such a nasty, ill-tempered person? How can he, day in and day out, voice such rudenesses as the following, which are but a few examples of his venom:

On the subject of "young art": "Apart from some slow handclaps for aleatory, I hail the new invisible sculpture. . . and all forms of throw-away art and self-exploding art are sure-fire with me."

On the subject of Wagner's "Siegfried": "What terrible harm Wagner did by interspersing his pages of genius with harmonic and modulatory outrages to which both young and old are gradually becoming accustomed and from which have procreated d'Indy and Richard Strauss!"

On Wagner's "Twilight of the Gods": ". . .never has anything been more tedious and more dragged-out than this rigmarole."

On an opera of Tchaikovsky: "As an opera, "Eugene Onegin" is stillborn and absolutely incompetent."

On Richard Strauss: "Strauss may be characterized in four words: little talent, much impudence.'

On Sibelius: "I found the Second Symphony . . .vulgar, self-indulgent, and provincial beyond all description."

On Scriabin's Second Symphony: ". . .there was a gross error in the program: instead of 'symphony' they should have printed 'cacophony,' because in this alleged 'composition' there seems to be a complete absence of all consonance."

On Moussorgsky: "I have made a thorough study of "Boris Godunov". . .I consign it from the bottom of my heart to the devil; it is the most insipid and base parody on music."

On Ernst Krenek: "Krenek's Fourth Symphony is a pseudo-masterpiece, with about as much savor to it as a pasteboard turkey."

On "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun": "Debussy did not create a style. He cultivated an absence of style, logic and common sense."

This list could go on for several pages, but the above examples will explain why once in a great while someone works up enough courage to chide the critics. This happened a couple of years ago when a distinguished musical philanthropist suggested to a group of critics that they might improve their manners by taking a cue from composers, who seldom if ever talk about composers in the manner that critics often use. In case the reader is interested in knowing the names of the people who wrote the crude remarks printed above, they are: Stravinsky, Rimsky-Korsakov, Tchaikovsky, Caesar Cui, Caeasr Cui, Virgil Thomson, Anton Arensky, Tchaikovsky, Thomson and Saint-Saens.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

NOV 3 1970

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

NOV 1 1970

Rose Walsh – Friends Set Season

Stage Door Lectures by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pre-Symphony Luncheons and, something new this year, Pre-Symphony Dinners are part of the lively 1970-71 program planned by the Council of Friends of the BSO.

The busy committee heads are also launching a membership drive for the Symphony's 90th season.

Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr., co-chairmen, tell us "It's not too late to join as a Friend of the Orchestra and be privileged to attend many exciting and informative functions."

Four dates are red-lettered this month—Nov. 5 (Thursday) the first in the Thursday Pre-Symphony Stage Door Dinner series; Nov. 13, the Stage Door Lecture (followed by a box luncheon and a la carte bar).

Nov. 14 has the Saturday Pre-Symphony Dinner; and Nov. 24 the Tuesday Pre-Symphony Dinner.

Each event is under the auspices of different area groups in the Council headed by Mrs. William J. Mixter, Jr., new chairman for all areas.

Thursday's dinner, headed by Mrs. Erick Kauders, North Shore area, will be aided by members from Marblehead, Swampscott, Salem, Beverly, Beverly Farms, Manchester and Andover.

Seiji Ozawa will conduct the BSO in a program of Debussy, Prokofiev and Schuman with Maurizio Pollini as pianist.

On Nov. 14 Brookline-Chestnut Hill and Newton areas will provide the hostesses.

Ozawa will conduct a program of Copland's "Quiet City" (1940) in honor of the composer's 70th birthday; Ligeti and Berlioz. On Nov. 24, Weston, Wayland and Wellesley area members will be hostesses.

Friday, Nov. 13, "Know Your Orchestra" stage door lecture, Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird, co-chairmen of the series, will be given by Carol Procter, cellist. Boullon will be served at 11:30.

Ticket resale plan in practice for Symphony tickets also applies to the luncheon and lecture series.

Information is available from Mrs. Kay Whitty in the Friends' Office, 266-1348.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

NOV 2 1970

Social Chatter
by Alison Arnold

Friends of BSO Plan Activities For Old and New Members

A FRIEND, according to the dictionary, is "one who favors and supports." Are you a Friend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra? It has many, but would like even more. As a Friend, or if you become a new Friend quickly, you will be invited to a Pre-Symphony Supper, Thursday, Nov. 5, a Stage Door Lecture, Friday, Nov. 13, and a Pre-Symphony Supper, Saturday, Nov. 14. And there's a 1971 European tour in preparation by the Council of Friends, of which Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. are co-chairmen.

They are overwhelmed by the response to the Stage Door Lectures by members of the orchestra, followed by a box luncheon. Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird are co-chairmen of this series. The next, on Friday, Nov. 13, will feature Carol Procter, cello.

The Pre-Symphony Luncheon chairmen are Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson. They have planned the second luncheon for Friday, Dec. 18. On this committee are Mrs. John M. Bradley, Mrs. Lewis P. Cabot, Mrs. Lewis H. Clark, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. James F. Hunnewell, Mrs. James A. Marsh, Mrs. Thomas Otis, Mrs. William J. Mixter, Mrs. Jerome M. Rosenfeld, Mrs. B. Gring Wallace and Mrs. James O. Welch Jr.

Mrs. William J. Mixter Jr. is the new chairman for all the Areas represented by The Friends. Each event is under the auspices of a different area. In this way, new Friends are made for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

NOV 2 1970

SOCIETY
by Miriam Tod

Every organization seems to have chosen this fall as an ideal time for its membership drive: The Ladies Committee of the Museum of Fine Arts have just completed their drive to recruit 1,500 new members for the museum, and now it is the turn of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A pleasant aspect of these particular drives is the courtesy and consideration that these organizations show towards one another. In a world where such nicities are getting more and more rare it is good to hear that each group consulted with the other before arranging their dates so that there would be no conflict and no "treading on each other's toes."

The Council of Friends, of which Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr. of Chestnut Hill, are cochairmen, are justifiably proud of the popularity of the many events arranged for their members. The Stage Door Lectures by individual members of the orchestra which are held in the basement of Symphony Hall are among the most successful ever planned. Bouillon is served and after the lecture and before the ladies climb the short flight of stairs to Symphony Hall for the Friday afternoon concert, they enjoy a cocktail and a box luncheon. Mrs. George E. Bates of Boston and Mrs. David Bird of Cambridge are cochairman of this series, the second of which will take place Nov. 13. Carol Procter, cellist with the orchestra, will be the speaker. Among those on the committee in charge of these lectures are Mrs. Frank G. Allen of Boston, Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline, Mrs. Charles A. Coolidge, Jr. of Belmont, Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow, Jr. of Duxbury, Mrs. William V. Ellis Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord, Mrs. Donald B. Sinclair of Concord, Mrs. Robert Saltonstall of North Andover, Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Boston and Cohasset and Mrs. Roger Voisin of Jamaica Plain.

The Pre-Symphony Luncheons are also extremely popular with the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Held at Horticultural Hall across the street from Symphony Hall the second in the current series will be a Christmas luncheon to take place on Dec. 18. Mrs. Nelson Aldrich of Marblehead and Mrs. George Parson of Boston are cochairman of this series.

Under the chairmanship of Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld and her area hostesses a series of pre-symphony supper parties for the Friends has been planned during the next five weeks. Each one will take place at 7 p.m. at Symphony Hall and guests will enter through the Stage Door. Thursday, Nov. 5 it will be the turn of the Friends from the Marblehead, Swampscott, Salem, Beverly, Beverly Farms, Manchester and Andover areas. Brookline-Chestnut Hill and Newton areas will attend the pre-Symphony supper on Nov. 14, and on Nov. 24 it will be held for those from Weston, Wayland and Wellesley. The final one will be on Dec. 8 and will be for Friends from Belmont and Lexington.

Mrs. William J. Mixter, Jr. of Dedham is chairman for all the areas represented in the Council of Friends. Each event is under the auspices of a different area. It is often possible to purchase individual tickets to the various events as the ticket resale practice that is also in effect for Symphony tickets applies to the Friends events. Mrs. Kay Whitty, without whose efficiency and delightful personality the Friends would find it hard to function, mans the Friends' office at Symphony Hall and from her may be purchased individual tickets.

There are so many interesting and rewarding events arranged for the Friends of the B.S.O. By joining this active organization one can not only support one of Boston's leading institutions famous the world over, The Boston Symphony Orchestra, but can enjoy all these events plus the 1971 European tour of the orchestra and tours of Symphony Hall, plans for which are now in the preparation stage.

Books

BOSTON GLOBE-SUNDAY NOVEMBER 2 1969

Dickson swings a mighty pen, too

GENTLEMEN PLEASE DOLCE PLEASE, by Harry Ellis Dickson, Beacon Press, Boston, $7.50.

Occasionally I have followed Harry Dickson on a speaking platform. It is a tough assignment. For twenty-five years I have known that he can fiddle, conduct, and speak. Now I know that he can write.

The subtitle of this book is "An Irreverent Memoir of Thirty Years in the Boston Symphony Orchestra." It is irreverent surely, and into the bargain it is witty, revealing, and utterly delightful.

When, before a concert, the musicians of the B.S.O. move on stage they might appear to be automatons in formal dress as prepared as West Point cadets to do their leader's bidding.

Under Dickson's candid microscope they turn out to be ordinary men and women, husbands and wives (each year more ladies join up) who worry about home mortgages, children's teeth that need straightening, a mother-in-law who has come to live in, and the perennially overdrawn checking account.

Musicians, first, of course. Yet you might not know that in what little spare time they have they turn out to be golfers who shoot in the seventies, ex-pugilists, an ordained minister, down-hill skiers, cabinet makers, a watch repairer, and painters whose canvesses are sought for exhibition.

The reader will read of the ordeal which must be survived by any gifted player who aspires to win a seat. To insure anonymity a curtain is dropped between the nervous candidate and his (or her) jury of peers lurking on the other side with their beheading axes whetted. The advent of women players brought feelings of prejudice in many a male player's breast. It was discovered that these musical misogynists were spotting lady players by the click of their high heels. And so, my dear Watson, the ladies now play calmly and confidently in their stocking feet.

Through his many appearances on the podium as a conductor Dickson has proved, conclusively that he can lead with a baton. In the book he proves that he can lead with his chin! With the precision of a skilled surgeon he disects his compatriots, classification by classification. Space only permits a snatch:

"Oboe players are a breed unto themselves. They are the most unhappy of musicians. The typical picture of an oboe player on and off stage is one with oboe resting on lap, while, with trusty scalpel he furiously fashions his reed. . . ."

The book's title takes us back to the orchestra's golden age when Koussevitzky, the redoubtable, lifted the B.S.O. to the international pinnacle. His colorful language made him the Casey Stengel of conductors. Repeatedly he issued a polite command to his players, "Gentlemen, more dolce, please."

There are descriptions of those terrifying moments when, in mid-performance, the orchestra is suddenly derailed with players, bug-eyed, scrutinizing their parts like road maps while the conductor lashes with his stick shouting directions which he hopes will get the show back on the track.

The book is full of musical anecdotes which will be adrenalin for your next sagging party. And I assure you things will never be the same when you attend a concert at Symphony Hall.

A delightful visual accompaniment are 12 lively cartoon portraits of conductors and artists by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky. With a few sweeping lines she has captured personality and characteristics of her subjects.

FRANCIS W. HATCH

(Mr. Hatch is a long-time trustee of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.)

Boston Symphony: How tradition works

BY L. P. KATZENSTEIN

Since the Boston Symphony Orchestra played its first concert on October 22, 1881, Boston has had one of the finest of the nation's orchestras. The U. S. may be in last place when it comes to opera, but the best orchestras, except for the Vienna Philharmonic and a few others of that class, are American. And Boston's is one of our most exceptional. Boston music lovers cherish its distinctive sound, which lies somewhere between the lush opulence of the Philadelphia orchestra and the dry, crisp clarity of the Cleveland, though with few of the drawbacks of either of those extremes.

The regular BSO conductor is William Steinberg (no relation to Globe music critic Michael Steinberg). He came to Boston last year from the Pittsburgh Symphony, which in 17 years he had built into a really first-rate ensemble. But the real star of last year's season was assistant — now associate — conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, who last October at the age of 24 assumed the leadership of the orchestra when Steinberg became ill during a BSO concert in New York. Thomas conducted the rest of the season and it was a triumph. He didn't pick easy successes, either. He chose pieces like La Mer, the Sibelius fourth, the Mahler ninth, and brought them off. He is young and capable of errors (mostly metrical). But he is already among the top flight of American conductors and will be around for a long time. Thomas will conduct six of this year's 22 concert pairs and will continue as pianist of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

Tickets to the BSO are easier to come by than popular myth would indicate. Series ticket prices begin as low as $6.50 for a Thursday series of three concerts. Individual tickets are usually available — call the box office at 266-1492.

BSO concerts are paired, with the same program given Friday afternoon at two and Saturday at 8:30. There are 22 of these pairs. There are also 16 Tuesday evening concerts at which the program for the preceding weekend pair is played. Some of these are at 7:30, some at 8:30. Six concerts are played on Thursday evening, as well. This all sounds rather complicated so, again, call the box office and ask them to send you a season program.

A special BSO tradition is rush line tickets, 150 special seats which go on sale in the Huntington Avenue lobby for a mere dollar one hour before the concert. Anyone can buy these, so get there early — two hours is not unreasonable. Maybe bring a blanket and book, or a score.

If you are a student with a valid ID, there is yet another way to hear the BSO. Ten minutes before concert time all remaining unsold tickets are sold at the box office for $3 each, regardless of face value. So for $3 you might have the best seat in the house.

Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor William Steinberg

On Saturday, be there by 8 p.m.

A last way to hear the BSO is at one of the six open rehearsals. For $15 you can hear all six, or you can buy individual tickets for $3. Open rehearsals are completely informal and all seats are unreserved, so sit where you like. Tickets are always available for open rehearsals. I heartily recommend attending at least one; try to sit close enough to hear the conductor's remarks, which are not amplified. Even if you have to put up with an occasional interruption of the music, you might get to hear your favorite part twice.

All of these varied events occur at Symphony Hall, 251 Huntington Ave., near Northeastern and the New England Conservatory. Just look for the MTA stop marked Symphony. The acoustics are excellent, so just close your eyes and listen.

Which brings us to the year's programs, which range from Perotin (12th century) to Schuller (born 1925). There are a few novelties (the Vaughn Williams tuba concerto) and many old friends (Schumann's Rhenish, Chopin's F-minor piano concerto). I could do without people like Birtwistle and Erb, but there are some extremely interesting offerings. I look forward particularly to the Golden Calf scene from Schoenberg's Moses and Aaron and to Nielsen's big fifth symphony.

Two symphonies by Mahler and one by Bruckner are also scheduled. Amazingly, not a single Beethoven, Brahms or Mozart concerto is programmed, except for Mozart's early bassoon concerto. Also not found on this year's programs are Shostakovich, Sibelius and Tchaikovsky symphonies. But many neglected works will be heard, pieces like the Dvorak seventh, which deserves a hearing and are far more interesting than yet another Pathetique Symphony. So there is no excuse for not enjoying the pleasures of symphony going this year. Music is good for the soul.

BOSTON AFTER DARK
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 7,500

OCT 20 1970

MediaRep Center Conducts Sales For Boston Symphony

Media Rep Center, Inc., has been appointed advertising sales representatives for BSO Programs. These programs include Boston Symphony Orchestra Winter Concert and Tanglewood Programs and the Boston Pops Programs. They are published by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Carl Goose, MediaRep Center, will be account executive.

COMMERCE DIGEST
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 11,500

NOV . 1970

MARJORIE SHERMAN 55

Plaques note BSO heritage

When someone loans you a seat at Symphony Hall and there's a small gold plaque set in the polished wood under your right arm, read it.

The Commemorative chair is a lot more than $2500 worth of dedication to Brahmindom's top citadel. The devotion of a family lifetime is often spelled out in that brief lettering, or a Symphony Hall friendship shared, along with the concerts, for 50 years.

"In honor of George Wallace Woodworth, 1902-1969" goes straight to the heart of anyone who ever held a note for Harvard or Radcliffe. And everyone who knew and loved music in Woodie's energetic, endless periphery was part of his happy orbit.

Two seats are dedicated to Ann Smith Monks Banks, who died so tragically last year—one by her husband Talcott Banks, president of the Trustees of Symphony, and one by her friends.

Still in stalwart attendance, Margaret Ruthven Lang has engraved on her plaque: "Given in honor of her 90th birthday".

Palfrey Perkins, who is still serving as a trustee emeritus of the BSO, is so listed on his Commemorative chair, along with the dates of his trusteeship, 1954-1960.

Critic Phillip Hale (1854-1934), Henry S. Grew (1875-1953), Anita Kauders, In Memoriam, have the little gold plates. Julia Houser's was given by her daughter, in her memory; Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Lord and Marion Gray Lewis are others "In memory," and Virginia Gammell Cross's was given "by some members of her family."

Almost as great a coup is the fun of walking into the Hall by the stage door and wandering down among the worn black traveling trunks labeled Boston Symphony to have supper with some of the players (Those, that is, who haven't back-doored it to Amalfi's to argue a score over Mario's veal marsala).

The Richard Ehrlichs were suppering with Talcott Banks this weekend and talking to composer-conductor Boris Goldovsky. Boris, former Boston Opera and N.E. Conservatory genius, has taken these attractive music followers down to New York almost as often as they head for their Litchfield, Conn., family homing place.

BSO fiddler-author ("Gentlemen, More Dolce Please") Youth Concert founder and storyteller without peer, Harry Dickson backstaged his amused listeners into some BSO howlers that kept everybody below stairs until it was almost gongtime.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E
(S) 566,377

NOV 17 1970

Charm From That Face?

Continued from Page 1

since in both cases the orchestra is not "his" orchestra.

But I admit that is all undue conductorial modesty. The truth is that in both cases the performances essentially came from the podium, based on my relationship with that mighty score, as of that moment. Although there had been only four days between the last Vienna performance and the first Boston rehearsal, I had again gone through a crucial re-examination of the score in those four days, as I had in the days preceding the Vienna rehearsals, and as I always have done before any performance of a major score, no matter how often I had previously conducted it. And each time there is a difference, even if it is only a difference between Mu and Nu. And with Beethoven, the difference tends to be greater than with any other composer. It can go from Beta to Mu, from Nu to Psi.

Why should this be? Why is Beethoven eternally rediscoverable? I could probably explain it, or try to, in 10,000 more words. But perhaps one example will point the way.

In one of these performances of the Ninth (I won't say which) I discovered a new element in Beethoven's music! Is it possible? Hasn't everything been said that can be said about Beethoven? And yet it happened: I discovered that Beethoven's music has charm. What? Charm in Beethoven? Of all qualities, this would be the least expected. Charm, from that fierce face, that lion's head, that stunted, pock-marked body? And yet, there it was to be found, buried under layers of severity, austerity, uncompromising insistence, passionate hammering, demonic ruthlessness, earth-free mysticism — all those clichés. There, underneath, lay charm. Underneath? But charm is an outward attribute, exteriorized, isn't it?

Not Beethoven's charm. His is not of the shy sort, never coquette, not rococo, not Mozartian, not sophisticated. His is the charm of utter naiveté, the pure simplicity of his childlike belief. What is more deeply charming than childlike belief? It is total, overwhelming. To play Beethoven's music is to give oneself over completely to the child-spirit that lived in that grim, awkward, violent man. It is to be seduced by a ravishing innocence.

Without that utter submission, it is impossible to play the Adagio of the Ninth. Or, for that matter, the Scherzo. Or, Heaven knows, the first movement. And the Finale? Most of all! It is simply unplayable unless we go all the way with him, in total, prepubescent faith, in that certainty of immortality that only children (and geniuses) really possesses — to go all the way with him as he cries out "Brüder!" "Tochter!" "Freude!" "Millionen!" "Gott!"

But especially "Brüder!" That above all is his child-inspired cry. We must believe it in order to play it. That is why we of this cynical world are still charmed by that quaint, old-fashioned notion of all men together as children of God—when we hear it articulated not by Schiller but by Beethoven. It is the irresistible charm of Beethoven's belief that makes the idea and the music imperishable.

And I firmly believe that it is the performer's relation to that belief that determines his performance. It is one's ability to identify with Beethoven, the charming child, the innocent spirit of Grace, that enables one to recreate the music. To the extent of that identification, all those sextuplets, 32d notes, crescendi, fortissimi and everything else simply fall into place, naturally and inevitably.

And this is the answer to my riddle of the Boston and Vienna performances. What was the ratio of hope to despair that I felt in Boston or in Vienna? How long were my arms in one city or the other—long enough to embrace my Brothers, the orchestra, or only the cello section, or everyone including the chorus? How childlike was I capable of letting myself become? How trusting? How willing to suspend disbelief? How desperate about Vietnam, Israel, the Soviet Union or a newly lost friend? How hopeful for new music, for the black American, for peace? Brüder!

Charm From That Fierce Face?

By LEONARD BERNSTEIN

THESE notes are written just after having had the extraordinary experience of conducting two different performances of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony within six days of each other: one with the Vienna Philharmonic, in Vienna, and the other with the Boston Symphony, in Boston. I have always been aware of the extreme range of interpretive difference in performances of any work by Beethoven, but never so acutely as in this case, with a work so mysterious, complicated, elusive, with so unorthodox an orchestration, and with two great orchestras of such differing natures within so short a time.

And in this year, when we are all more than ever Beethoven-conscious, it becomes more apparent than ever that Beethoven of all composers, is the most "interpretable." The reason would seem to be the complexity of his symphonic thought, but not at all; I now realize it is precisely the opposite—it is the utter simplicity of his thought. It is a simplicity so basic, so believed in, so elemental that it necessarily invites interpretation, in the same way that the simplest, most basic statements always have (Let there be light: Cogito ergo sum; All is vanity; Blessed are the meek; Existence precedes Essence; God is One; God is Three; God is dead).

In the case of Beethoven's Ninth, it is not a matter of reverting to one or another extreme of performance-conception, but rather a matter of emphasis, leaning toward one extreme or the other. For the sake of clarity, let me try briefly to articulate these extremes. The one is a highly literal, faithful, rhythmically and dynamically accurate reading of the score, free of orchestrational changes or additions, without gratuitous pauses or retardations or rubati, faithful even to the highly controversial (sometimes even impossible) metronomic markings, and with no dynamic adjustments in the cause of orchestral balance. Let us call this Approach Alpha. The other, Approach Omega, would be a highly romanticized conception, based on extra-musical ideas such as Formless Chaos (the opening bars), Germinal one-cell creation (the first motive), culminating in the Development-of-Man-in-Full-Reason-and-Spirit, complete with fermate, rubati, dynamic exaggerations and/or changes, vacillating tempi, poetical meanderings and personal, subjective indulgences.

Somewhere between Alpha and Omega lie all the performances of the Ninth we have ever heard; but I have rarely heard two performances from any one conductor that tended so divergently toward the two alphabetical extremes as these two I heard myself conduct.

For example, the first sixteen bars. Should the opening sextuplets in the 2d violins and celli sound like sextuplets, rhythmically agitated, electrifying even in their pianissimo, or should they emerge as an indistinct tremolo ("Formless Chaos") with no rhythmic vitality, and be absorbed into the pedal notes of the horns? Should the first note of the two-note motive, the 32d note, be treated literally as a 32d note, or be made to coincide with the sixth note of the sextuplet? Should the progressive entrances of new pedal tones (clarinet, oboe, flutes) be heard as entrances, or somehow mysteriously just be there, as new overtones of the horn-fifths? Should the crescendo be as gradual as possible, given the very brief duration in which it must occur, or should it erupt like some subterranean upheaval? Should the fortissimo, when it does arrive, hit us in strict time, with no preparatory enlargement for the anacrusis, or should it crash in on us like a wave which we see coming, and which has its suspenseful moment of maximum height and threat before it descends in all its elemental strength? Should . . .

And many more are the questions that arise in those first 20 seconds of the music. But none of them can really be answered in Alpha-Omega terms, except by a conductor who is out to prove something about himself rather than about Beethoven. I shall certainly not try to answer them here. I can say, only in the most general terms, that the Vienna performance leaned more in the Omega direction, almost like a Mahlerian adumbration, more sostenuto, perhaps more romantic. The Boston performance favored clarity, immediacy of attack, what some might call a more classic approach. And yet it was I, with no premeditation or cause, who performed them both.

A number of reasons could be given for this. One is a vast difference in the acoustical qualities of the two halls, the Konzerthaus and Symphony Hall. Another is particular orchestral tradition. Another might be the personal qualities of the solo players—clarinet or concertmaster. Another, the actual make of instrument — the American trumpet, for instance vs. the German. But all these are exterior conditionings: these are forces that impinge on the conductor, who to some extent must take his cue from them, allowing the ambience to be formed by them, (Continued on Page 10)

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 895,505 SUN. 1,445,507

NOV 22 1970

BSO Names 3 Trustees

BOSTON — Talcott M. Banks, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the election of Allen G. Barry, Irving W. Rabb and Sidney S. Stonemen as BSO trustees.

Barry, who has been vice president of the Board of overseers of the orchestra, is president of the New England Telephone Co. Born in Troy, N.Y., he graduated from Harvard University and has worked for the Bell Telephone System ever since. He is a director of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., the First National Bank of Boston, the Old Colony Insurance Co., the Massachusetts Bay United Fund and the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce.

Rabb, vice chairman of the board and director of the Stop & Shop Companies, was educated at Boston Latin School and graduated cum laude from Harvard University and its graduate school of business administration. He is a director and past president of the Supermarket Institute, the Massachusetts Bay United Fund and the Boston Better Business Bureau.

Sidney S. Stoneman, who has been an overseer of the BSO, graduated from Dartmouth College and Harvard Law School. He is now vice chairman, director and executive committee chairman of the General Cinema Corp. and a director of Suitmat Corp. and the Exeter International Corp.

Earlier this month, Stoneman succeeded Rabb as president of the Beth Israel Hospital.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(E) 30,100

NOV 20 1970

Boston Symphony: How tradition works

BY L. P. KATZENSTEIN

Since the Boston Symphony Orchestra played its first concert on October 22, 1881, Boston has had one of the finest of the nation's orchestras. The U. S. may be in last place when it comes to opera, but the best orchestras, except for the Vienna Philharmonic and a few others of that class, are American. And Boston's is one of our most exceptional. Boston music lovers cherish its distinctive sound, which lies somewhere between the lush opulence of the Philadelphia orchestra and the dry, crisp clarity of the Cleveland, though with few of the drawbacks of either of those extremes.

The regular BSO conductor is William Steinberg (no relation to Globe music critic Michael Steinberg). He came to Boston last year from the Pittsburgh Symphony, which in 17 years he had built into a really first-rate ensemble. But the real star of last year's season was assistant — now associate — conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, who last October at the age of 24 assumed the leadership of the orchestra when Steinberg became ill during a BSO concert in New York. Thomas conducted the rest of the season and it was a triumph. He didn't pick easy successes, either. He chose pieces like La Mer, the Sibelius fourth, the Mahler ninth, and brought them off. He is young and capable of errors (mostly metrical). But he is already among the top flight of American conductors and will be around for a long time. Thomas will conduct six of this year's 22 concert pairs and will continue as pianist of the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

Tickets to the BSO are easier to come by than popular myth would indicate. Series ticket prices begin as low as $6.50 for a Thursday series of three concerts. Individual tickets are usually available — call the box office at 266-1492.

BSO concerts are paired, with the same program given Friday afternoon at two and Saturday at 8:30. There are 22 of these pairs. There are also 16 Tuesday evening concerts at which the program for the preceding weekend pair is played. Some of these are at 7:30, some at 8:30. Six concerts are played on Thursday evening, as well. This all sounds rather complicated so, again, call the box office and ask them to send you a season program.

A special BSO tradition is rush line tickets, 150 special seats which go on sale in the Huntington Avenue lobby for a mere dollar one hour before the concert. Anyone can buy these, so get there early — two hours is not unreasonable. Maybe bring a blanket and book, or a score.

If you are a student with a valid ID, there is yet another way to hear the BSO. Ten minutes before concert time all remaining unsold tickets are sold at the box office for $3 each, regardless of face value. So for $3 you might have the best seat in the house.

Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor William Steinberg

On Saturday, be there by 8 p.m.

A last way to hear the BSO is at one of the six open rehearsals. For $15 you can hear all six, or you can buy individual tickets for $3. Open rehearsals are completely informal and all seats are unreserved, so sit where you like. Tickets are always available for open rehearsals. I heartily recommend attending at least one; try to sit close enough to hear the conductor's remarks, which are not amplified. Even if you have to put up with an occasional interruption of the music, you might get to hear your favorite part twice.

All of these varied events occur at Symphony Hall, 251 Huntington Ave., near Northeastern and the New England Conservatory. Just look for the MTA stop marked Symphony. The acoustics are excellent, so just close your eyes and listen.

Which brings us to the year's programs, which range from Perotin (12th century) to Schuller (born 1925). There are a few novelties (the Vaughn Williams tuba concerto) and many old friends (Schumann's Rhenish, Chopin's F-minor piano concerto). I could do without people like Birtwistle and Erb, but there are some extremely interesting offerings. I look forward particularly to the Golden Calf scene from Schoenberg's Moses and Aaron and to Nielsen's big fifth symphony.

Two symphonies by Mahler and one by Bruckner are also scheduled. Amazingly, not a single Beethoven, Brahms or Mozart concerto is programmed, except for Mozart's early bassoon concerto. Also not found on this year's programs are Shostakovich, Sibelius and Tchaikovsky symphonies. But many neglected works will be heard, pieces like the Dvorak seventh, which deserves a hearing and are far more interesting than yet another Pathetique Symphony. So there is no excuse for not enjoying the pleasures of symphony going this year. Music is good for the soul.

BOSTON AFTER DARK
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 7,500

OCT 20 1970

MediaRep Center Conducts Sales For Boston Symphony

Media Rep Center, Inc., has been appointed advertising sales representatives for BSO Programs. These programs include Boston Symphony Orchestra Winter Concert and Tanglewood Programs and the Boston Pops Programs. They are published by Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Carl Goose, MediaRep Center, will be account executive.

COMMERCE DIGEST
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 11,000

NOV . 1970

MARJORIE SHERMAN

55

Plaques note BSO heritage

When someone loans you a seat at Symphony Hall and there's a small gold plaque set in the polished wood under your right arm, read it.

The Commemorative chair is a lot more than $2500 worth of dedication to Brahmindom's top citadel. The devotion of a family lifetime is often spelled out in that brief lettering, or a Symphony Hall friendship shared, along with the concerts, for 50 years.

"In honor of George Wallace Woodworth, 1902-1969" goes straight to the heart of anyone who ever held a note for Harvard or Radcliffe. And everyone who knew and loved music in Woodie's energetic, endless periphery was part of his happy orbit.

Two seats are dedicated to Ann Smith Monks Banks, who died so tragically last year—one by her husband Talcott Banks, president of the Trustees of Symphony, and one by her friends.

Still in stalwart attendance, Margaret Ruthven Lang has engraved on her plaque: "Given in honor of her 90th birthday".

Palfrey Perkins, who is still serving as a trustee emeritus of the BSO, is so listed on his Commemorative chair, along with the dates of his trusteeship, 1954-1960.

Critic Phillip Hale (1854-1934), Henry S. Grew (1875-1953), Anita Kauders, In Memoriam, have the little gold plates. Julia Houser's was given by her daughter, in her memory; Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Lord and Marion Gray Lewis are others "In memory," and Virginia Gammell Cross's was given "by some members of her family."

Almost as great a coup is the fun of walking into the Hall by the stage door and wandering down among the worn black traveling trunks labeled Boston Symphony to have supper with some of the players (Those, that is, who haven't back-doored it to Amalfi's to argue a score over Mario's veal marsala).

The Richard Ehrlichs were suppering with Talcott Banks this weekend and talking to composer-conductor Boris Goldovsky. Boris, former Boston Opera and N.E. Conservatory genius, has taken these attractive music followers down to New York almost as often as they head for their Litchfield, Conn., family homing place.

BSO fiddler-author ("Gentlemen, More Dolce Please") Youth Concert founder and storyteller without peer, Harry Dickson backstaged his amused listeners into some BSO howlers that kept everybody below stairs until it was almost gongtime.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E
(S) 566,377

NOV 17 1970

Charm From That Face?

Continued from Page 1

since in both cases the orchestra is not "his" orchestra.

But I admit that is all undue conductorial modesty. The truth is that in both cases the performances essentially came from the podium, based on my relationship with that mighty score, as of that moment. Although there had been only four days between the last Vienna performance and the first Boston rehearsal, I had again gone through a crucial re-examination of the score in those four days, as I had in the days preceding the Vienna rehearsals, and as I always have done before any performance of a major score, no matter how often I had previously conducted it. And each time there is a difference, even if it is only a difference between Mu and Nu. And with Beethoven, the difference tends to be greater than with any other composer. It can go from Beta to Mu, from Nu to Psi.

Why should this be? Why is Beethoven eternally rediscoverable? I could probably explain it, or try to, in 10,000 more words. But perhaps one example will point the way.

In one of these performances of the Ninth (I won't say which) I discovered a new element in Beethoven's music! Is it possible? Hasn't everything been said that can be said about Beethoven? And yet it happened: I discovered that Beethoven's music has charm. What? Charm in Beethoven? Of all qualities, this would be the least expected. Charm, from that fierce face, that lion's head, that stunted, pock-marked body? And yet, there it was to be found, buried under layers of severity, austerity, uncompromising insistence, passionate hammering, demonic ruthlessness, earth-free mysticism — all those clichés. There, underneath, lay charm. Underneath? But charm is an outward attribute, exteriorized, isn't it?

Not Beethoven's charm. His is not of the shy sort, never coquette, not rococo, not Mozartian, not sophisticated. His is the charm of utter naiveté, the pure simplicity of his childlike belief. What is more deeply charming than childlike belief? It is total, overwhelming. To play Beethoven's music is to give oneself over completely to the child-spirit that lived in that grim, awkward, violent man. It is to be seduced by a ravishing innocence.

Without that utter submission, it is impossible to play the Adagio of the Ninth. Or, for that matter, the Scherzo. Or, Heaven knows, the first movement. And the Finale? Most of all! It is simply unplayable unless we go all the way with him, in total, prepubescent faith, in that certainty of immortality that only children (and geniuses) really possesses — to go all the way with him as he cries out "Brüder!" "Tochter!" "Freude!" "Millionen!" "Gott!"

But especially "Brüder!" That above all is his child-inspired cry. We must believe it in order to play it. That is why we of this cynical world are still charmed by that quaint, old-fashioned notion of all men together as children of God—when we hear it articulated not by Schiller but by Beethoven. It is the irresistible charm of Beethoven's belief that makes the idea and the music imperishable.

And I firmly believe that it is the performer's relation to that belief that determines his performance. It is one's ability to identify with Beethoven, the charming child, the innocent spirit of Grace, that enables one to recreate the music. To the extent of that identification, all those sextuplets, 32d notes, crescendi, fortissimi and everything else simply fall into place, naturally and inevitably.

And this is the answer to my riddle of the Boston and Vienna performances. What was the ratio of hope to despair that I felt in Boston or in Vienna? How long were my arms in one city or the other—long enough to embrace my Brothers, the orchestra, or only the cello section, or everyone including the chorus? How childlike was I capable of letting myself become? How trusting? How willing to suspend disbelief? How desperate about Vietnam, Israel, the Soviet Union or a newly lost friend? How hopeful for new music, for the black American, for peace? Brüder!

Charm From That Fierce Face?

By LEONARD BERNSTEIN

THESE notes are written just after having had the extraordinary experience of conducting two different performances of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony within six days of each other: one with the Vienna Philharmonic, in Vienna, and the other with the Boston Symphony, in Boston. I have always been aware of the extreme range of interpretive difference in performances of any work by Beethoven, but never so acutely as in this case, with a work so mysterious, complicated, elusive, with so unorthodox an orchestration, and with two great orchestras of such differing natures within so short a time.

And in this year, when we are all more than ever Beethoven-conscious, it becomes more apparent than ever that Beethoven of all composers, is the most "interpretable." The reason would seem to be the complexity of his symphonic thought, but not at all; I now realize it is precisely the opposite—it is the utter simplicity of his thought. It is a simplicity so basic, so believed in, so elemental that it necessarily invites interpretation, in the same way that the simplest, most basic statements always have (Let there be light: Cogito ergo sum; All is vanity; Blessed are the meek; Existence precedes Essence; God is One; God is Three; God is dead).

In the case of Beethoven's Ninth, it is not a matter of reverting to one or another extreme of performance-conception, but rather a matter of emphasis, leaning toward one extreme or the other. For the sake of clarity, let me try briefly to articulate these extremes. The one is a highly literal, faithful, rhythmically and dynamically accurate reading of the score, free of orchestrational changes or additions, without gratuitous pauses or retardations or rubati, faithful even to the highly controversial (sometimes even impossible) metronomic markings, and with no dynamic adjustments in the cause of orchestral balance. Let us call this Approach Alpha. The other, Approach Omega, would be a highly romanticized conception, based on extra-musical ideas such as Formless Chaos (the opening bars), Germinal one-cell creation (the first motive), culminating in the Development-of-Man-in-Full-Reason-and-Spirit, complete with fermate, rubati, dynamic exaggerations and/or changes, vacillating tempi, poetical meanderings and personal, subjective indulgences.

Somewhere between Alpha and Omega lie all the performances of the Ninth we have ever heard; but I have rarely heard two performances from any one conductor that tended so divergently toward the two alphabetical extremes as these two I heard myself conduct.

For example, the first sixteen bars. Should the opening sextuplets in the 2d violins and celli sound like sextuplets, rhythmically agitated, electrifying even in their pianissimo, or should they emerge as an indistinct tremolo ("Formless Chaos") with no rhythmic vitality, and be absorbed into the pedal notes of the horns? Should the first note of the two-note motive, the 32d note, be treated literally as a 32d note, or be made to coincide with the sixth note of the sextuplet? Should the progressive entrances of new pedal tones (clarinet, oboe, flutes) be heard as entrances, or somehow mysteriously just be there, as new overtones of the horn-fifths? Should the crescendo be as gradual as possible, given the very brief duration in which it must occur, or should it erupt like some subterranean upheaval? Should the fortissimo, when it does arrive, hit us in strict time, with no preparatory enlargement for the anacrusis, or should it crash in on us like a wave which we see coming, and which has its suspenseful moment of maximum height and threat before it descends in all its elemental strength? Should . . .

And many more are the questions that arise in those first 20 seconds of the music. But none of them can really be answered in Alpha-Omega terms, except by a conductor who is out to prove something about himself rather than about Beethoven. I shall certainly not try to answer them here. I can say, only in the most general terms, that the Vienna performance leaned more in the Omega direction, almost like a Mahlerian adumbration, more sostenuto, perhaps more romantic. The Boston performance favored clarity, immediacy of attack, what some might call a more classic approach. And yet it was I, with no premeditation or cause, who performed them both.

A number of reasons could be given for this. One is a vast difference in the acoustical qualities of the two halls, the Konzerthaus and Symphony Hall. Another is particular orchestral tradition. Another might be the personal qualities of the solo players—clarinet or concertmaster. Another, the actual make of instrument — the American trumpet, for instance vs. the German. But all these are exterior conditionings: these are forces that impinge on the conductor, who to some extent must take his cue from them, allowing the ambience to be formed by them, (Continued on Page 10)

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 895,505 SUN. 1,445,507

NOV 22 1970

BSO Names 3 Trustees

BOSTON — Talcott M. Banks, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced the election of Allen G. Barry, Irving W. Rabb and Sidney S. Stonemen as BSO trustees.

Barry, who has been vice president of the Board of overseers of the orchestra, is president of the New England Telephone Co. Born in Troy, N.Y., he graduated from Harvard University and has worked for the Bell Telephone System ever since. He is a director of the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., the First National Bank of Boston, the Old Colony Insurance Co., the Massachusetts Bay United Fund and the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce.

Rabb, vice chairman of the board and director of the Stop & Shop Companies, was educated at Boston Latin School and graduated cum laude from Harvard University and its graduate school of business administration. He is a director and past president of the Supermarket Institute, the Massachusetts Bay United Fund and the Boston Better Business Bureau.

Sidney S. Stoneman, who has been an overseer of the BSO, graduated from Dartmouth College and Harvard Law School. He is now vice chairman, director and executive committee chairman of the General Cinema Corp. and a director of Suitmat Corp. and the Exeter International Corp.

Earlier this month, Stoneman succeeded Rabb as president of the Beth Israel Hospital.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(E) 30,100

NOV 20 1970

BLANK PAGE

56

Friends of BSO Plan 1971 Europe Tour

Council Members of the Wellesley-Needham Area of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will meet this week at the home of the Chairman, Mrs. Howard E. Hansen, in Wellesley Hills, to discuss plans for the coming year for Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

This year marks the 90th Anniversary of the BSO. Special guests at this meeting will be Mrs. William J. Mixter, new Council Chairman of areas, and Mrs. Howard Davis of Concord, who will announce plans for the forthcoming major membership drive.

Wellesley-Needham Area Council members will serve as hostesses this month at one of the popular Stage Door Lectures held backstage at Symphony Hall and they will also hostess at a Pre-Symphony Dinner before an evening performance at Symphony Hall. An event of major importance in 1971 will be the European tour of the Orchestra, and Friends of BSO have been invited to share this trip with the members of the Orchestra and its conductors, William Steinberg, Michael Tilson Thomas, and Arthur Fiedler. The 23-day tour will take them to England, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain, and France.

The members of the Wellesley-Needham Area Council are Mrs. Howard E. Hansen, Chairman, Mrs. Walter Amory, Mrs. Donald P. Babson, Mrs. H. Starr Ballou, Mrs. William J. Brown, Mrs. Robert D. Chellis, Mrs. Thomas W. Chesterton, Mrs. Abram Collier, Mrs. Robert Dean, Mrs. Thomas E. Franks, Mrs. Frank F. Homeyer, Mrs. Roger Hunt, Mrs. Robert Kistner, Mrs. Jack S. Parker, Mrs. Alvar W. Polk, Mrs. Frederick Stare, Mrs. Edward S. Stimpson, Mrs. Bartlett Stone, Mrs. William H. Vogler, Mrs. Mark C. Wheeler and Mrs. Robert Wiese.

Anyone interested in becoming a Friend is welcome to call any member of the Committee for further details.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

NOV 2 1970

Rose Walsh

Mrs. Francis W. Sargent will do the Christmas lighting on Friday, shortly before noon, at Symphony Hall. Then she will be guest of honor at the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at luncheon in Horticultural Hall. Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin, co-chairmen of the Council, will be the welcoming hostesses for members and their guests.

Luncheon chairmen, Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson, have on their committee South Shore and Milton area members.

Subscribers who wish to release tickets for resale or would like to bring a guest may call Mrs. Kay Whitty in the Friends' office, 266-1348.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

DEC 16 1970

Bus To Symphony Planned

TOWNSMAN
ANDOVER, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 2,350

NOV 12 1970

785

The Andover Committee of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has decided because of the parking difficulties in Boston, plus air pollution, to run an Andover Symphony bus.

Starting Friday, Nov. 13, for the remaining 16 concerts, the bus will leave Andover from Salem Street, at the Phillips Academy tower, promptly at 10:30 a.m. each Friday.

On the way in, the bus will stop at Lechemere to drop off any passengers who wish to go to the downtown Boston area before the Symphony begins at 2 p.m. The bus will also make a stop between Arlington Street and Copley Square, and another at Symphony Hall; then it will go on to terminate its intown trip at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, if any passengers want to start their day there.

The return trip will be non-stop from Symphony Hall back to Salem Street, Andover, directly after the concert.

The bus service was initiated to serve symphony goers, many of whom have reserved round trip bus seats for the symphony season, which lasts until April 1.

However, there are at the moment some extra seats available which can be reserved by non-symphony goers, or occasional symphony goers, on a single round-trip basis.

Anyone interested in reserving a seat on the Symphony bus may call Miss Ruth Hayes, 28 Phillips St., before 9 a.m. or after 6 p.m. on one of the weekdays before each trip. These seats will be filled on a first-come, first-served basis each week.

Miss Hayes noted that there would be no symphony concerts, and thus no bus trip, on the following Fridays during the season: Nov. 20, Dec. 25, Jan. 15, Feb. 19 and March 19.

TOWNSMAN
WELLESLEY, MASS.
WEEKLY 8,600

NOV 19 1970

SOCIETY
by Miriam Tod

Every organization seems to have chosen this fall as an ideal time for its membership drive: The Ladies Committee of the Museum of Fine Arts have just completed their drive to recruit 1,500 new members for the museum, and now it is the turn of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A pleasant aspect of these particular drives is the courtesy and consideration that these organizations show towards one another. In a world where such nicities are getting more and more rare it is good to hear that each group consulted with the other before arranging their dates so that there would be no conflict and no "treading on each other's toes."

The Council of Friends, of which Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr. of Chestnut Hill, are cochairmen, are justifiably proud of the popularity of the many events arranged for their members. The Stage Door Lectures by individual members of the orchestra which are held in the basement of Symphony Hall are among the most successful ever planned. Bouillon is served and after the lecture and before the ladies climb the short flight of stairs to Symphony Hall for the Friday afternoon concert, they enjoy a cocktail and a box luncheon. Mrs. George E. Bates of Boston and Mrs. David Bird of Cambridge are cochairman of this series, the second of which will take place Nov. 13. Carol Procter, cellist with the orchestra, will be the speaker. Among those on the committee in charge of these lectures are Mrs. Frank G. Allen of Boston, Mrs. Norman L. Cahners of Brookline, Mrs. Charles A. Coolidge, Jr. of Belmont, Mrs. G. Lincoln Dow, Jr. of Duxbury, Mrs. William V. Ellis Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord, Mrs. Donald B. Sinclair of Concord, Mrs. Robert Saltonstall of North Andover, Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Boston and Cohasset and Mrs. Roger Voisin of Jamaica Plain.

The Pre-Symphony Luncheons are also extremely popular with the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Held at Horticultural Hall across the street from Symphony Hall the second in the current series will be a Christmas luncheon to take place on Dec. 18. Mrs. Nelson Aldrich of Marblehead and Mrs. George Parson of Boston are cochairman of this series.

Under the chairmanship of Mrs. Jerome Rosenfeld and her area hostesses a series of pre-symphony supper parties for the Friends has been planned during the next five weeks. Each one will take place at 7 p.m. at Symphony Hall and guests will enter through the Stage Door. Thursday, Nov. 5 it will be the turn of the Friends from the Marblehead, Swampscott, Salem, Beverly, Beverly Farms, Manchester and Andover areas. Brookline-Chestnut Hill and Newton areas will attend the pre-Symphony supper on Nov. 14, and on Nov. 24 it will be held for those from Weston, Wayland and Wellesley. The final one will be on Dec. 8 and will be for Friends from Belmont and Lexington.

Mrs. William J. Mixter, Jr. of Dedham is chairman for all the areas represented in the Council of Friends. Each event is under the auspices of a different area. It is often possible to purchase individual tickets to the various events as the ticket resale practice that is also in effect for Symphony tickets applies to the Friends events. Mrs. Kay Whitty, without whose efficiency and delightful personality the Friends would find it hard to function, mans the Friends' office at Symphony Hall and from her may be purchased individual tickets.

There are so many interesting and rewarding events arranged for the Friends of the B.S.O. By joining this active organization one can not only support one of Boston's leading institutions famous the world over, The Boston Symphony Orchestra, but can enjoy all these events plus the 1971 European tour of the orchestra and tours of Symphony Hall, plans for which are now in the preparation stage.

Social Chatter
by Alison Arnold

Friends of BSO Plan Activities For Old and New Members

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S)

NOV 2 1970

477

A FRIEND, according to the dictionary, is "one who favors and supports." Are you a Friend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra? It has many, but would like even more. As a Friend, or if you become a new Friend quickly, you will be invited to a Pre-Symphony Supper, Thursday, Nov. 5, a Stage Door Lecture, Friday, Nov. 13, and a Pre-Symphony Supper, Saturday, Nov. 14. And there's a 1971 European tour in preparation by the Council of Friends, of which Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. are co-chairmen.

They are overwhelmed by the response to the Stage Door Lectures by members of the orchestra, followed by a box luncheon. Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird are co-chairmen of this series. The next, on Friday, Nov. 13, will feature Carol Procter, cello.

The Pre-Symphony Luncheon chairmen are Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson. They have planned the second luncheon for Friday, Dec. 18. On this committee are Mrs. John M. Bradley, Mrs. Lewis P. Cabot, Mrs. Lewis H. Clark, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mrs. Charles F. Hovey, Mrs. James F. Hunnewell, Mrs. James A. Marsh, Mrs. Thomas Otis, Mrs. William J. Mixter, Mrs. Jerome M. Rosenfeld, Mrs. B. Gring Wallace and Mrs. James O. Welch Jr.

Mrs. William J. Mixter Jr. is the new chairman for all the Areas represented by The Friends. Each event is under the auspices of a different area. In this way, new Friends are made for the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S)

DEC 14 1970

BSO Friends' Yule Luncheon

COME AS A GUEST and join as a Friend, urges The Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is having its Christmas luncheon Friday, Dec. 18, at noon, in Horticultural Hall. The orchestra welcomes your support. Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr., co-chairmen of The Council of Friends, will have Mrs. Francis W. Sargent as special guest of honor.

The luncheon chairmen, Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich and Mrs. George A. Parson, will have members of the Council from the South Shore and Milton areas as hostesses and decorators for this Christmas party. Don't miss this second luncheon of the season before Mozart and Mahler symphonies, conducted by William Steinberg across the street in Symphony Hall.

Subscribers who wish to release tickets for resale or would like to bring a guest should call Mrs. Whitty in The Friends office at Symphony Hall.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

NOV 16 1970

A very feminine red rose was the badge of distinction worn by all the ladies who attended the second Stage Door Lecture at Symphony Hall on Friday. The flower was carefully wrapped in celophane and was pinned to the outside of the white-boxed lunches presented to the ladies as they arrived for the lecture in the basement of Symphony Hall.

The feminine touch was appropriate for the member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who reminisced for the ladies on her career with the B.S.O. was the young female cellist, Carol Procter. Her stories of her days in Japan where she spent some time as a musician kept her audience laughing, and her obvious devotion to her mother, who was seated close by and who is a teacher of piano in Dedham, was most touching.

The hostesses for the event were members of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from the Weston, Wayland and Wellesley areas. They included Mrs. James T. Countz, Mrs. Richard Ely, Mrs. Lyndall F. Carter, Mrs. William D. Manice, Jr., Mrs. Robert J. Caldwell, Mrs. Francis Devlin, Mrs. H. Allen Powning, Mrs. Robert Kistner, Mrs. Thomas W. Chesterton, Mrs. Jack S. Parker, Mrs. Thomas Franks, Mrs. Howard E. Hansen and Mrs. Edward S. Stimpson.

The lecture was one more of the many events that are open to those who become a Friend of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. For $15 a year a member is invited to participate in the pre-symphony concert suppers and luncheons, the lectures and all the other events planned for them. It is not generally known that for as little as one dollar a year one can become a Friend of the B.S.O., and for this tiny sum, every cent of which helps to support the orchestra,, you will be invited to a free rehearsal and to the annual meeting of the Friends. A dollar well spent, one could say.

Another group who work hard to support another musical organization, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, work in conjunction with the Friends of the New England Conservatory and many of them belong to both organizations. Like the Friends of the Conservatory, the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra organize events for their members amongst which are the series of pre-symphony luncheons given four times a year before the Friday afternoon B. S. O. concerts.

The second in the 1970-71 series will take place Dec. 18 at noon at Horticultural Hall. This will be a Christmas luncheon and the hostesses for the event and those in charge of the decorating of the hall will be from the South Shore and Milton areas of the Council of Friends. Mrs. Francis W. Sargent will be the guest of honor at the luncheon.

Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich of Marblehead and Mrs. George A. Parson of Beacon Hill are cochairmen of the series, and Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr. of Chestnut Hill are cochairmen of the Council of Friends.

The system of ticket resale for the luncheons applies to these events as it does to the resale of Symphony tickets. Those wishing to release tickets for resale or those who would like to bring a guest to the luncheon should call Mrs. Kay Whitty at the Friends office at Symphony Hall.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

DEC 11 1970

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

DEC 21 1970

SOCIETY
by Miriam Tod

In case anyone is at a loss about what to give that hard to please friend for Christmas, a suggestion might be a jewelled Christmas tree. That this is the "in" jewelry this season was very apparent on Friday at the Pre-Symphony luncheon held at Horticultural Hall. Little pins in this shape bedecked the coats, dresses and even the hair of dozens of the members of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra attending the luncheon, echoing the theme of the affair, which, as might be expected, was Christmas.

The luncheon was the second in the series of four arranged for the Friends of the orchestra during the symphony season. A complete sell-out, the popularity of the event is well deserved for in addition to one-stop parking the guests are close to Symphony Hall and are conducted in style across the street by one of Boston's "finest", the mounted police. They have no worry about transportation to the concert or the dreaded spector of a late arrival looming over them.

On Friday the members of the Council of Friends from the Milton and South Shore areas were responsible for the luncheon. They had hung wreaths decorated with red ribbons at the windows and the massed pots of red poinsettias in the entrance way. Each luncheon table was decorated with a little pot of red kalanchoe, together with a Christmas corsage, all of which were snapped up by eager buyers at the end of the event.

Almost all the committee from the South Shore and Milton had got into the mood of the season and wore either red or green. Mrs. Sherman Whipple of Plymouth and Mrs. C. Russell Eddy of Duxbury chose red and among those in green was Mrs. Frederick Whiskin of Duxbury. Others on the committee were Mrs. Lewis W. Kane of Milton, Mrs. John Thayer, Mrs. William Harris of Milton, Mrs. Stephen Ames of Milton, Mrs. Henry Russell and Mrs. Joseph Watkins of Hingham.

Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Concord, one of the two lady trustees of the orchestra, wore the most outstanding hat at the luncheon. Perfect with her plain black dress it was a circle of gilded doves, made of kid and intertwined with black velvet ribbons. Mrs. James Perkins, the other lady trustee, wore a hat of violet felt with her beige suit. Both ladies sat at the head table with guest of honor, Mrs. Francis Sargent, who had crossed the street from Symphony Hall for the luncheon where she had formally lighted a large Christmas tree in the Huntington Avenue lobby. Also seated with them was the president of the trustees of the orchestra, Talcott Banks; a member of the orchestra, Harry Ellis Dickson, well known for his Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall; Mrs. Albert Goodhue, cochairman of the Council of Friends, who was one of the many wearing the Christmas tree symbol, hers pinned to the back of her dark hair; Mrs. John L. Grandin, her cochairman, and Mrs. Charles Hovey.

58

Nation's arts are being hampered by effects of unhealthy economy

BY EARL J. DIAS

The arts in this nation are experiencing enormous difficulty and menacing threats to their continued existence. Orchestras, ballet and theater companies, museums— all are suffering from the effects of inflation and an unhealthy economy. And not only organizations but interpretive artists are feeling the pinch as well.

Actually, this woeful state is something of a paradox, for never in the history of this country have its arts institutions presented such lengthened seasons or been engaged in such widespread and varied activities. However, rarely have so many labored under so serious and pressing an economic threat.

Let us look, first, at some of the evidence nearest at hand. In nearby Boston, the venerable and first-rate New England Conservatory of Music may not be able to open during the 1971-72 academic year. The Charles Playhouse, Boston's residential professional theater company, has shut its doors and is now engaged in a fund-raising campaign its last hope for survival. The Boston Symphony Orchestra this year will have a large deficit. one that must be made up by devoted friends of the orchestra and by foundation grants.

Money is scarce

In New Bedford, it is no secret that the Greater New Bedford Concert Series is not exactly finding the path to solvency an easy one, nor is the New Bedford Symphony Orchestra. Moreover, artists who have appeared here locally all confirm that in their travels through the nation, the cry is the same — if money is not forthcoming, many institutions and organizations will be forced to give up the ghost.

In other areas of the nation, the news is equally dismal. For example, not long before the opening of the Lincoln Center Repertory Theater's season in New York, its chairman, Robert L. Hoquet, warned that the company might have to close by midseason. In Kansas City, Mo., the city's symphony orchestra is surviving only on a week-to-week basis. In Chicago, musicians in the Chicago Symphony have just signed a contract increasing their salaries by more than $50 a week, a contract that will require the trustees of the orchestra to raise an aditional $1,000,000 for an institution that is already in grave financial trouble. Moreover, the new union contract signed by the New York Philharmonic will cost another $1,000,000 during the next three years. To add to the woes of the world of music, also in financial trouble are the orchestras in Dallas, Washington, D.C., Buffalo, Syracuse, and Hartford.

Patrons earning less

One of the major causes of the current problem in the arts is that those people who usually patronize them are in a period of decreased earning. Thus, for orchestras, theaters, ballet companies and the like to raise considerably their prices of admission would be virtually self-defeating. Some museums have, in fact, begun charging admission fees, but, on the whole, this experimental remedy has tended to lower attendance at museum exhibits.

Another problem is that foundations and corporations have, in recent years, reduced their contributions to the arts. True, the Rockefeller and Ford Foundations have maintained their contributions at the same annual level, but the purchasing power of these contributions has shrunk in an inflationary economy. Many other foundations have elected to apportion a good deal of their money to aid in solving problems creaed by the racial and urban crises. On the credit side, some new sources of aid have been developed. In New York, for example, the state legislature voted a special appropriation of $18,000,000 to help ailing cultural institutions. What worries these institutions, however, is that this appropriation may be only a one-shot affair and, given the vagaries of politics, might not be repeated.

Funds increased

Moreover, on the urging of President Nixon, Congress recently voted to increase the funds available to the National Arts Endowment. The fund this year had made its chief effort in attempting to help a iling orchestras (the Boston Symphony was recently awarded a grant of $75,000), but a limit of $100,000 a orchestra has had to be imposed, with the exception of Washington's National Symphony, which was given $250,000. There is some hope, however, that the Nixon administration will take an even stronger lead in efforts to subsidize the arts.

In our own state, the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities has performed yeoman service but on a budget that is ridiculously small.

There is no question in my mind that much more extensive support of our art institutions — federal, state, and local, along with long term private and public support — is necessary if the arts are to survive. Most European countries — and we could emulate them in this — seem to know that the culture of a nation is its very heart, that its citizens need food for the mind and soul as well as food for the body. Our economy, no doubt, will improve, but more is needed than such an improvement.

What is needed is an awakening to the importance of the arts to our nation's life and, indeed, to its very health

STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
(E) 70,000 (S) 60,0

DEC 27 1970

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

DEC 21 1970

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

On this nostalgic and inevitably sentimental last day of the old year it doesn't seem out of place to cast a final lingering glance backwards over the year just past before turning one's face and optimistic hopes towards the shining face of the new a few short hours away.

It was a peculiar year socially in many ways. It was a year that saw a drastic decline in the debutante party syndrome. No fewer than four of the presentation parties never got off the ground at all last year, and those that did were sparse indeed compared to other times. Private deb parties, too, were few and far between with not one single party held in Boston that even approached the elaborate affair held last week for debutante Melissa Leib in New York. The Peter Fullers gave a delightful all-age party for their oldest daughter, Mindy, at their estate in Little Boar's Head, N. H. and the George Seybolts gave one for Nina in Dedham, but both were unpublicised family affairs, conforming to the current trend.

If 1970 was noted for one particular social event it was the year of the ball. No fewer than 11 balls were held in the short space of two months in the spring with every weekend during April and May booked with such events at the Sheraton Plaza and the Sheraton Boston hotels.

The highlight of this ball marathon, both in price and decor, was the Symphony Ball at Symphony Hall. Organized by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the event raised over $130,000 for the orchestra and turned the venerable old hall into a replica of Maxim's in Paris. This was the top ball socially with every Cabot, Coolidge, Adams and other important name attending.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

DEC 31 1970

Rose Walsh

Symphony Hall Is All Aglow

Symphony Hall is aglow with the Christmas lights that Mrs. Francis W. Sargent turned on at noon yesterday. And for the first time in 90 years, a Christmas tree and boxwood-like wreaths, adorned with miniature musical instruments, have been hung in the lobby.

Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin, co-chairman of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, created the tree decor of perky white ribbon bows, garlands of tinsel and tiny lights.

Talcott Banks, president of the BSO trustees, and Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Orchestra, joined in the tree-lighting ceremony and later attended the Council of Friends Christmas Luncheon in Horticultural Hall.

Members of the Milton and South Shore areas did the luncheon decorating of calendula centerpieces and greenery. In that group were Mrs. C. Russell Eddy, Mrs. Lewis W. Kane, Mrs. John Thayer, Mrs. William Harris, Mrs. Stephen Ames, Mrs. Henry Russell, Mrs. Sherman Whipple, Mrs. Joseph Watkins and Mrs. Frederick E. Whiskin.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,337

JAN 11 1971

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

It would sometimes appear on reading the social columns that all the attention is given to the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who attend the Friday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall. It would seem that the Stage Door Lectures and the Pre-Symphony Luncheons arranged for them are constantly in the news while little or no notice is given to the thousands of others who regularly attend the other series of concerts on Saturday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

Actually nothing could be further from the truth. The Council of Friends of the B.S.O. has far from neglected the Saturday evening concertgoers, arranging for them pre-symphony suppers under the auspices of the various area chairmen of the Friends. Last week it was the turn of the Thursday evening subscribers to have a special event planned for them and enthusiam and delight were the result.

There is a thrill about going behind the scenes of any big institution and somehow Symphony Hall provides more thrills than most. On Thursday evening the subscribers to the Thursday evening concerts came in through the Stage Door Entrance and down the stone steps to the basement of the old building. through a swing door they found themselves following a path lined with huge trunks and instrument cases labelled with the magic B.S.O. marking, part and parcel of the tons of equipment that accompany the orchestra everytime they go on tour.

The large well-lit basement room, painted all in off-white but with pipes and heating ducts in full view, was quite a revelation to the many who had never seen the underside of Symphony Hall before. Here a long bar was set up for their enjoyment and on the other side of the room a long buffet table, decorted with flowers and silver candelabra, stood ready to hold the delicious meat pie, salad and rolls that were served as the menu for the first of the Table Talk Suppers as these Thursday evening series are called.

The keynote of the evening was friendliness and informality. Few of the guests knew each other before they arrived for they came from among the thousands who make up the audience at any Symphony Hall concert, but they gathered around the tables for eight and within the briefest span of time were old friends. They came from all around Boston and even from out of state, but their common love of music gave them an instant rapport.

Mrs. Albert Goodhue, cochairman of the Council of Friends of the B.S.O., greeted every guest and was openly delighted with the great success of this newest venture. In a silver gray midi ruffled at hem and bodice, she went from table to table during the supper answering questions and asking for suggestions. At her arrangement each table held a little flower pot in which was "planted" an extremely realistic paper zinnia, complete with realistic bee, and each tablecloth was crossed with a navy and white checkered "cowboy" scarf. Huge sunbursts of paper flowers were on the brick columns that form the supports for the floor of Symphony Hall above, and the dais had the usual large backdrop painted with the insignia of the B.S.O.

In many ways the evening resembled the Stage Door Lectures held on Friday mornings in the same place, for a member of the orchestra was the speaker after supper. William Stokking is a cellist with the B.S.O. and with the help of his blonde wife at the piano he gave his audience a small private concert. A resident of Medfield, Mr. Stokking amused his guests with his description of his family and large menagrie of pets, including his daughter's horse called Buckingham, who lives in a stable called "Buckingham's Palace".

Among the many at this first of what is obviously going to be a very popular series of events were handwriting-expert Liz McCarthy and her husband, Richard Badlian; Mr. and Mrs. George Sisson, down from Exeter, N.H. for the supper and concert; the John E. Larsens of Hingham; trustee of the orchestra Philip K. Allen of Andover and Mrs. Allen; the David Birds of Cambridge; James MacDonald, who is the New England representative for Table Talk Pies which the company donated for the dessert at the supper, and Mrs. MacDonald; the Walter Wrigleys of Wollaston; Roland Godfrey of Wellesley; Mr. and Mrs. John J. Lynch of Norwood; Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert L. Bean of Braintree; the A. B. Sandwens of North Weymouth; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Day of Duxbury and the Timothy Buckeridges of Marshfield Hills.

The next Table Talk Supper will take place on Feb. 4 and the speaker will be a member of the orchestra, Sheldon Rotenberg, first violin. Reservations may be made by calling Mrs. Kay Whitty at the Friends Office at Symphony Hall.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

NOV 17 1970

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

JAN 11 1971

Rose Walsh

'Follies' Performance To Aid Cancer Fund

One of February's most important benefit dates is Saturday evening, the 20th, red-lettered by members and friends of the American Cancer Society, who will be attending the much-heralded "Follies" at the Colonial Theatre. During the numerous recent holiday parties, committee members for the event did their share of promoting the benefit premiere performance.

Early sponsor response has come from the John S. Ameses, the Robert P. Bainbridges, the Thomas P. Beals, the Ralph Bradleys, Mrs. Barbara S. Chase, the Gardner Coxes, the David Crocketts, Mrs. Allan Cunningham, the Robert Cushmans, the Dominic DiMaggios, the Herbert Harwoods, the Hafdan Lees, Mrs. George Lewis, the Henry L. Masons, Admr. and Mrs. John L. Crea and many more.

Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. Robert G. Stone, and Mrs. Augustus Vogel, benefit co-chairmen, have as members of their committee, Mrs. Julian Crocker, Mrs. Robert P. Greaves, Mrs. Marland C. Hobbs, Dr. Rita M. Kelley, Mrs. Stuart H. Lowell, Mrs. Edwin P. Maynard, Mrs. Edward J. Mitton, Mrs. James T. Mountz, Mrs. Peter J. Mozden, Mrs. Omar T. Pace, Mrs. Milford D. Schulz, Mrs. Howard Ulfelder and Mrs. Shields Warren.

Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra can chalk up another successful party venture to further their financial aid to the BSO. Thursday night's first in a series of pre-concert 3 Table Talk Suppers on the lower floor of Syhphony Hall brought in an overflow of reservations from subscribers and guests of the Thursday "B" Series of concerts.

Additional tables centered with cheerful plants atop old-fashioned red and blue bandanas were quickly set up for the extras. For those wishing cocktails, and a la carte bar opened at 6. The delectable buffet fare offered hot casseroles of beefsteak pie rolls, salad and Table Talk apple pie with cheese.

"Talk" guest was BSO cellist William Stokking who revealed "I can't remember ever not having a cello in my hand" (and played selections between comments) He began to study it at the age of 4 and entered Curtis Institute of Music when he was 10.

Has been with the BSO since 1968 and previously played with the Chamber Symphony of Philadelphia, Cleveland Orchestra and The Philadelphia Orchestra.

Mrs. Albert Goodhue, co-chairman of the Council, did the welcoming honors. The G. W. Sissons came down from Exeter, N. H., Florence Davey had reservations for 5; and among others at the supper party were Harry Ellis Dickson, the David Birds, the Ernest Klemas, the Donald Houghtons, the Herbert Johnsons, the J.P. Sullivans, the R. V. Whitmans, the Joseph P. Days, the H. C. Harrisons, Elinor P. Kane, the Robert T. Danns.

Rose Walsh

Boston Symphony Orchestra's only woman cello player, Carol Ann Proctor (born into a musical family) has a sparkling personality as the Council of Friends of the BSO quickly noted at her Stage Door Lecture Friday at Symphony Hall.

Carol's mother, a composer and pianist who teaches music in Dedham, was introduced to the audience by Mrs. George E. Bates, co-chairman of the Friends Committee.

The cellist, recently returned from Japan where she lived for a year, devoted her lecture to her experiences there.

While she never learned to speak the language, even though she knew the alphabet, Carol made many friends. One was a psychiatrist bent on helping her to lose 10 pounds. Instead she gained two more.

Seated at Pops tables, the lecture-goers enjoyed box lunches, (each one tied with a fresh rosebud) and coffee. Cocktails were available.

Hostess duties were shared by Council of Friends from the Weston, Wayland and Wellesley areas and included Mrs. James T. Mountz, Mrs.

Rose Walsh

Symphony's Friends Promise Fun in '71

"Don't miss the fun in '71" is the slogan of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has started a January to April membership Drive for 1000 new Council Friends.

The present membership enjoys such privileges as luncheons, lectures, table talk suppers, receptions, meetings and special programs.

Mrs. Howard W. Davis of Concord, New Members Drive chairman, has arranged grand awards for the three solicitors who obtain the largest numbers of new Friends.

First award will be a gold pass for two to the series of their choice for the 1971-72 season. Second place: a weekend for two at Tanglewood; and third, a table at the Boston Pops for three concerts this season.

All three winners will receive the first Deutsche Gramaphon Albums with Michael Tilson Thomas, Claudio Abbado and the BSO Chamber Players.

This Friday is one of the Council's festive days, beginning with bouillon at 11:30 a.m. downstairs in Symphony Hall, followed by a stage-door lecture at 11:45 and a box luncheon (an a la carte bar will be available).

Co-chairmen Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin have invited Luis G. Leguia, BSO cellist to be guest lecturer. He joined the Orchestra in 1963, has played solo recitals and concerts and this season played at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C.

Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird are in charge of the lecture for which Newton and New Hampshire area members will be hostesses.

Subscribers who wish to release tickets for resale (same plan as for Symphony concert tickets) or desire single tickets may call Mrs. Frank Whitty in the Friends' office, 266-1348.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

JAN 18 1971

58

Nation's arts are being hampered by effects of unhealthy economy

BY EARL J. DIAS

The arts in this nation are experiencing enormous difficulty and menacing threats to their continued existence. Orchestras, ballet and theater companies, museums— all are suffering from the effects of inflation and an unhealthy economy. And not only organizations but interpretive artists are feeling the pinch as well.

Actually, this woeful state is something of a paradox, for never in the history of this country have its arts institutions presented such lengthened seasons or been engaged in such widespread and varied activities. However, rarely have so many labored under so serious and pressing an economic threat.

Let us look, first, at some of the evidence nearest at hand. In nearby Boston, the venerable and first-rate New England Conservatory of Music may not be able to open during the 1971-72 academic year. The Charles Playhouse, Boston's residential professional theater company, has shut its doors and is now engaged in a fund-raising campaign its last hope for survival. The Boston Symphony Orchestra this year will have a large deficit. one that must be made up by devoted friends of the orchestra and by foundation grants.

Money is scarce

In New Bedford, it is no secret that the Greater New Bedford Concert Series is not exactly finding the path to solvency an easy one, nor is the New Bedford Symphony Orchestra. Moreover, artists who have appeared here locally all confirm that in their travels through the nation, the cry is the same — if money is not forthcoming, many institutions and organizations will be forced to give up the ghost.

In other areas of the nation, the news is equally dismal. For example, not long before the opening of the Lincoln Center Repertory Theater's season in New York, its chairman, Robert L. Hoquet, warned that the company might have to close by midseason. In Kansas City, Mo., the city's symphony orchestra is surviving only on a week-to-week basis. In Chicago, musicians in the Chicago Symphony have just signed a contract increasing their salaries by more than $50 a week, a contract that will require the trustees of the orchestra to raise an aditional $1,000,000 for an institution that is already in grave financial trouble. Moreover, the new union contract signed by the New York Philharmonic will cost another $1,000,000 during the next three years. To add to the woes of the world of music, also in financial trouble are the orchestras in Dallas, Washington, D.C., Buffalo, Syracuse, and Hartford.

Patrons earning less

One of the major causes of the current problem in the arts is that those people who usually patronize them are in a period of decreased earning. Thus, for orchestras, theaters, ballet companies and the like to raise considerably their prices of admission would be virtually self-defeating. Some museums have, in fact, begun charging admission fees, but, on the whole, this experimental remedy has tended to lower attendance at museum exhibits.

Another problem is that foundations and corporations have, in recent years, reduced their contributions to the arts. True, the Rockefeller and Ford Foundations have maintained their contributions at the same annual level, but the purchasing power of these contributions has shrunk in an inflationary economy. Many other foundations have elected to apportion a good deal of their money to aid in solving problems creaed by the racial and urban crises. On the credit side, some new sources of aid have been developed. In New York, for example, the state legislature voted a special appropriation of $18,000,000 to help ailing cultural institutions. What worries these institutions, however, is that this appropriation may be only a one-shot affair and, given the vagaries of politics, might not be repeated.

Funds increased

Moreover, on the urging of President Nixon, Congress recently voted to increase the funds available to the National Arts Endowment. The fund this year had made its chief effort in attempting to help a iling orchestras (the Boston Symphony was recently awarded a grant of $75,000), but a limit of $100,000 a orchestra has had to be imposed, with the exception of Washington's National Symphony, which was given $250,000. There is some hope, however, that the Nixon administration will take an even stronger lead in efforts to subsidize the arts.

In our own state, the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities has performed yeoman service but on a budget that is ridiculously small.

There is no question in my mind that much more extensive support of our art institutions — federal, state, and local, along with long term private and public support — is necessary if the arts are to survive. Most European countries — and we could emulate them in this — seem to know that the culture of a nation is its very heart, that its citizens need food for the mind and soul as well as food for the body. Our economy, no doubt, will improve, but more is needed than such an improvement.

What is needed is an awakening to the importance of the arts to our nation's life and, indeed, to its very health

STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
(E) 70,000 (S) 60,0

DEC 27 1970

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

DEC 31 1970

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

On this nostalgic and inevitably sentimental last day of the old year it doesn't seem out of place to cast a final lingering glance backwards over the year just past before turning one's face and optimistic hopes towards the shining face of the new a few short hours away.

It was a peculiar year socially in many ways. It was a year that saw a drastic decline in the debutante party syndrome. No fewer than four of the presentation parties never got off the ground at all last year, and those that did were sparse indeed compared to other times. Private deb parties, too, were few and far between with not one single party held in Boston that even approached the elaborate affair held last week for debutante Melissa Leib in New York. The Peter Fullers gave a delightful all-age party for their oldest daughter, Mindy, at their estate in Little Boar's Head, N. H. and the George Seybolts gave one for Nina in Dedham, but both were unpublicised family affairs, conforming to the current trend.

If 1970 was noted for one particular social event it was the year of the ball. No fewer than 11 balls were held in the short space of two months in the spring with every weekend during April and May booked with such events at the Sheraton Plaza and the Sheraton Boston hotels.

The highlight of this ball marathon, both in price and decor, was the Symphony Ball at Symphony Hall. Organized by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra the event raised over $130,000 for the orchestra and turned the venerable old hall into a replica of Maxim's in Paris. This was the top ball socially with every Cabot, Coolidge, Adams and other important name attending.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

DEC 31 1970

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

NOV 17 1970

Rose Walsh

Symphony Hall Is All Aglow

Symphony Hall is aglow with the Christmas lights that Mrs. Francis W. Sargent turned on at noon yesterday. And for the first time in 90 years, a Christmas tree and boxwood-like wreaths, adorned with miniature musical instruments, have been hung in the lobby.

Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin, co-chairman of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, created the tree decor of perky white ribbon bows, garlands of tinsel and tiny lights.

Talcott Banks, president of the BSO trustees, and Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Orchestra, joined in the tree-lighting ceremony and later attended the Council of Friends Christmas Luncheon in Horticultural Hall.

Members of the Milton and South Shore areas did the luncheon decorating of calendula centerpieces and greenery. In that group were Mrs. C. Russell Eddy, Mrs. Lewis W. Kane, Mrs. John Thayer, Mrs. William Harris, Mrs. Stephen Ames, Mrs. Henry Russell, Mrs. Sherman Whipple, Mrs. Joseph Watkins and Mrs. Frederick E. Whiskin.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

JAN 11 1971

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

It would sometimes appear on reading the social columns that all the attention is given to the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who attend the Friday afternoon concerts at Symphony Hall. It would seem that the Stage Door Lectures and the Pre-Symphony Luncheons arranged for them are constantly in the news while little or no notice is given to the thousands of others who regularly attend the other series of concerts on Saturday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings.

Actually nothing could be further from the truth. The Council of Friends of the B.S.O. has far from neglected the Saturday evening concertgoers, arranging for them pre-symphony suppers under the auspices of the various area chairmen of the Friends. Last week it was the turn of the Thursday evening subscribers to have a special event planned for them and enthusiam and delight were the result.

There is a thrill about going behind the scenes of any big institution and somehow Symphony Hall provides more thrills than most. On Thursday evening the subscribers to the Thursday evening concerts came in through the Stage Door Entrance and down the stone steps to the basement of the old building. through a swing door they found themselves following a path lined with huge trunks and instrument cases labelled with the magic B.S.O. marking, part and parcel of the tons of equipment that accompany the orchestra everytime they go on tour.

The large well-lit basement room, painted all in off-white but with pipes and heating ducts in full view, was quite a revelation to the many who had never seen the underside of Symphony Hall before. Here a long bar was set up for their enjoyment and on the other side of the room a long buffet table, decorted with flowers and silver candelabra, stood ready to hold the delicious meat pie, salad and rolls that were served as the menu for the first of the Table Talk Suppers as these Thursday evening series are called.

The keynote of the evening was friendliness and informality. Few of the guests knew each other before they arrived for they came from among the thousands who make up the audience at any Symphony Hall concert, but they gathered around the tables for eight and within the briefest span of time were old friends. They came from all around Boston and even from out of state, but their common love of music gave them an instant rapport.

Mrs. Albert Goodhue, cochairman of the Council of Friends of the B.S.O., greeted every guest and was openly delighted with the great success of this newest venture. In a silver gray midi ruffled at hem and bodice, she went from table to table during the supper answering questions and asking for suggestions. At her arrangement each table held a little flower pot in which was "planted" an extremely realistic paper zinnia, complete with realistic bee, and each tablecloth was crossed with a navy and white checkered "cowboy" scarf. Huge sunbursts of paper flowers were on the brick columns that form the supports for the floor of Symphony Hall above, and the dais had the usual large backdrop painted with the insignia of the B.S.O.

In many ways the evening resembled the Stage Door Lectures held on Friday mornings in the same place. for a member of the orchestra was the speaker after supper. William Stokking is a cellist with the B.S.O. and with the help of his blonde wife at the piano he gave his audience a small private concert. A resident of Medfield, Mr. Stokking amused his guests with his description of his family and large menagrie of pets, including his daughter's horse called Buckingham, who lives in a stable called "Buckingham's Palace".

Among the many at this first of what is obviously going to be a very popular series of events were handwriting-expert Liz McCarthy and her husband, Richard Badlian; Mr. and Mrs. George Sisson, down from Exeter, N.H. for the supper and concert; the John E. Larsens of Hingham; trustee of the orchestra Philip K. Allen of Andover and Mrs. Allen; the David Birds of Cambridge; James MacDonald, who is the New England representative for Table Talk Pies which the company donated for the dessert at the supper, and Mrs. MacDonald; the Walter Wrigleys of Wollaston; Roland Godfrey of Wellesley; Mr. and Mrs. John J. Lynch of Norwood; Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert L. Bean of Braintree; the A. B. Sandwens of North Weymouth; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Day of Duxbury and the Timothy Buckeridges of Marshfield Hills.

The next Table Talk Supper will take place on Feb. 4 and the speaker will be a member of the orchestra, Sheldon Rotenberg, first violin. Reservations may be made by calling Mrs. Kay Whitty at the Friends Office at Symphony Hall.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

JAN 11 1971

Rose Walsh

'Follies' Performance To Aid Cancer Fund

One of February's most important benefit dates is Saturday evening, the 20th, red-lettered by members and friends of the American Cancer Society, who will be attending the much-heralded "Follies" at the Colonial Theatre. During the numerous recent holiday parties, committee members for the event did their share of promoting the benefit premiere performance.

Early sponsor response has come from the John S. Ameses, the Robert P. Bainbridges, the Thomas P. Beals, the Ralph Bradleys, Mrs. Barbara S. Chase, the Gardner Coxes, the David Crocketts, Mrs. Allan Cunningham, the Robert Cushmans, the Dominic DiMaggios, the Herbert Harwoods, the Hafden Lees, Mrs. George Lewis, the Henry L. Masons, Admr. and Mrs. John L. Crea and many more.

Mrs. Charles Devens, Mrs. Robert G. Stone, and Mrs. Augustus Vogel, benefit co-chairmen, have as members of their committee, Mrs. Julian Crocker, Mrs. Robert P. Greaves, Mrs. Marland C. Hobbs, Dr. Rita M. Kelley, Mrs. Stuart H. Lowell, Mrs. Edwin P. Maynard, Mrs. Edward J. Mitton, Mrs. James T. Mountz, Mrs. Peter J. Mozden, Mrs. Omar T. Pace, Mrs. Milford D. Schulz, Mrs. Howard Ulfelder and Mrs. Shields Warren.

Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra can chalk up another successful party venture to further their financial aid to the BSO. Thursday night's first in a series of pre-concert 3 Table Talk Suppers on the lower floor of Syhphony Hall brought in an overflow of reservations from subscribers and guests of the Thursday "B" Series of concerts.

Additional tables centered with cheerful plants atop old-fashioned red and blue bandanas were quickly set up for the extras. For those wishing cocktails, and a la carte bar opened at 6. The delectable buffet fare offered hot casseroles of beefsteak pie rolls, salad and Table Talk apple pie with cheese.

"Talk" guest was BSO cellist William Stokking who revealed "I can't remember ever not having a cello in my hand" (and played selections between comments) He began to study it at the age of 4 and entered Curtis Institute of Music when he was 10.

Has been with the BSO since 1968 and previously played with the Chamber Symphony of Philadelphia, Cleveland Orchestra and The Philadelphia Orchestra.

Mrs. Albert Goodhue, co-chairman of the Council, did the welcoming honors. The G. W. Sissons came down from Exeter, N. H., Florence Davey had reservations for 5; and among others at the supper party were Harry Ellis Dickson, the David Birds, the Ernest Klemas, the Donald Houghtons, the Herbert Johnsons, the J.P. Sullivans, the R. V. Whitmans, the Joseph P. Days, the H. C. Harrisons, Elinor P. Kane, the Robert T. Danns.

Rose Walsh

Boston Symphony Orchestra's only woman cello player, Carol Ann Proctor (born into a musical family) has a sparkling personality as the Council of Friends of the Brighton Ely, Mrs. Lyman P. Carter, Mrs William D. Manice, Jr., Mrs. Robert J. Caldwell, Mrs. Thomas Franks, Mrs. Robert Kistner, Mrs. Francis Devlin, Mrs. George Draper and Mrs. Walter Watson II.

Last year the Friends (numbering 4200) contributed over $334,000 for the Orchestra's support. An additional $129,000 was received from the glittering Anniversary Ball.

This season the goal is even higher—$550,000. Everyone is invited to be a "Friend," and the way to do it is to make an annual contribution to the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There are special events throughout the season — like the pre-Symphony Luncheon series; the Stage Door Lectures, pre-Symphony suppers, attendance at a BSO rehearsal and an invitation to attend the annual meeting.

Even as small a contribution as $1 entitles a "friend" to a rehearsal and the annual meeting.

Rose Walsh

Symphony's Friends Promise Fun in '71

"Don't miss the fun in '71" is the slogan of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has started a January to April membership Drive for 1000 new Council Friends.

The present membership enjoys such privileges as luncheons, lectures, table talk suppers, receptions, meetings and special programs.

Mrs. Howard W. Davis of Concord, New Members Drive chairman, has arranged grand awards for the three solicitors who obtain the largest numbers of new Friends.

First award will be a gold pass for two to the series of their choice for the 1971-72 season. Second place: a weekend for two at Tanglewood; and third, a table at the Boston Pops for three concerts this season.

All three winners will receive the first Deutsche Gramaphon Albums with Michael Tilson Thomas, Claudio Abbado and the BSO Chamber Players.

This Friday is one of the Council's festive days, beginning with bouillon at 11:30 a.m. downstairs in Symphony Hall, followed by a stage-door lecture at 11:45 and a box luncheon (an a la carte bar will be available).

Co-chairmen Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin have invited Luis G. Leguia, BSO cellist to be guest lecturer. He joined the Orchestra in 1963, has played solo recitals and concerts and this season played at the National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C.

Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird are in charge of the lecture for which Newton and New Hampshire area members will be hostesses.

Subscribers who wish to release tickets for resale (same plan as for Symphony concert tickets) or desire single tickets may call Mrs. Frank Whitty in the Friends' office, 266-1348.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

JAN 18 1971

Social Chatter
by Alison Arnold

Membership Drive Is Under Way For Friends of Boston Symphony

MORE FRIENDS are needed for the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its costs are increasing each year. Last year, nearly 4200 Friends contributed more than $334,000 for the orchestra's support and an additional $129,000 was received from the 90th Anniversary Ball. Not surprisingly, the Friends' goal this year must be even higher and is $550,000. So 1,000 new Friends are needed, and The Council of Friends, headed by Mrs. Albert Goodhue and Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr. is launching a 1971 January-April membership drive in charge of Mrs. Howard W. Davis of Concord.

In Boston and throughout the world of music the Boston Symphony is regarded as unique, a matchless musical instrument and a source of pleasure and pride. At Symphony Hall and at Tanglewood we have concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Michael Tilson Thomas and guest conductors.

There are open rehearsals, and in the spring Arthur Fiedler conducts the Pops and the free outdoor concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. At Tanglewood there is the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

As a Friend of the orchestra you will be invited to luncheons, lectures, table talk suppers, receptions, meetings and special programs. The stage door luncheons are informal and held on the lower floor of Symphony Hall in an area usually seen only by members of the orchestra. The guest speaker at each luncheon is a member of the orchestra who gives a glimpse of the backstage workings.

Under the chairmanship of Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird there will be one, Friday, Jan. 22, at Stage Door, Symphony Hall. Hostesses from the Newton and New Hampshire areas will serve bouillon at 11:30. The lecture will start promptly at 11:45, with an a la carte bar and luncheon to follow.

Luis G. Leguia, cellist with the orchestra, will be the guest lecturer. He joined the orchestra in 1963, has played solo recitals and concerts at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and with the Place des Arts in Montreal. In Washington he has appeared at the Lisner Auditorium and at the Phillips Collectkon and this season at the National Gallery of Art.

The luncheons at Horticultural Hall are popular and give an opportunity to visit with Friends who gather before the Friday afternoon concerts. This season there is a series of table talk suppers, one for each series, open to all Friends.

Additional special events are also planned for those in the Named Categories of giving: $15 and more, contributor; $50 and more, donor; $100 and more, sponsor; $250 and more, sustaining; $500 and more, patron; $1000 and more, guarantor; and $5000 and more, benefactor. So you may choose your own category.

You can join the Friends by going to the Friends office at Symphony Hall during the day or by writing or phoning the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall. Gifts to the orchestra are deductible under the Federal Income Tax laws and checks should be made payable to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc.

Prizes will be given to the three persons who obtain the largest number of new Friends. There will be a Gold Pass for two to a series of their choice for the 1971-72 season, a weekend for two at Tanglewood, and a table at the Pops for three concerts of the 1971 season. All three winners will receive one of the first Deutsche Grannophen Albums with Michael Tilson Thomas, Claudio Abbado and the Boston Symphony Orchestra Chamber Players.

According to the dictionary, a friend is one attached to another by esteem, respect or affection. So why not be a Friend to the Boston Symphony Orchestra? It certainly rates your esteem, respect and affection.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S)

JAN 18 1971

NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MASS
(E) 19,654

JAN 25 1971

Membership Drive Launched For New Symphony Friends

FRAMINGHAM — More friends are needed for the Boston Symphony's Orchestra, whose costs are increasing.

Last year nearly 4,200 friends contributed more than $334,000 for the orchestra's support and an additional $129,000 was received from the 90th anniversary ball.

Because friends are needed, the Council of Friends is launching a 1971 January to April membership drive headed by Mrs. Howard W. Davis, formerly of Framingham.

Mrs. Richard M. Bunker is in charge of the Framingham area committee assisted by Mrs. George Naylor, Mrs. Raymond C. Gordon, Mrs. Kenneth Howes Jr., Mrs. William Randall, Mrs. Herbert Horene, and Mrs. George Willis.

The area includes Framingham, Fayville, Southboro, Marlboro, Hudson, Ashland, Hopkinton, and Holliston.

Boston Symphony is considered a matchless musical source of pleasure not only in Boston but throughout the world of music.

At Symphony Hall and at Tanglewood the concerts are conducted by William Steinberg, Michael Tilson Thomas and guest conductors.

There are open rehearsals and in the spring Arthur Fiedler conducts the Pops and the free outdoor concerts on the Charles River Esplanade. At Tanglewood, there is the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center.

Friends of the orchestra are invited to luncheons, lectures, table talk suppers, receptions, meetings, and special programs. The stage door luncheons are informal and held on the lower floor of Symphony Hall in an area usually seen only by members of the orchestra. Guest speaker at each luncheon is a member of the orchestra who provides a glimpse of the backstage workings.

Area residents wishing to become Friends may report to the Friends office at Symphony Hall during the day or write or phone the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall.

TIMES
PEABODY, MASS.
WEEKLY 6,000

JAN 29 1971

Symphony seeks Friends

BOSTON — The Boston Symphony Orchestra depends on its 4,200 "Friends" who contributed $334,000 towards the orchestra's support last year with an additional $129,000 received from the 90th Anniversary Ball.

Not surprisingly, new Friends are needed to support this year's goal of $550,000. The Council of Friends, headed by Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr., has launched a January to April membership drive.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is unique in that it carries as diverse a program as any orchestra in the world. Besides the regular Friday and Saturday afternoon concerts there are Tuesday and Thursday series. There are open rehearsals conducted by William Steinberg and his assistant conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas and guest conductors.

In the spring Arthur Fiedler conducts the well known Pops Concerts and summer brings the free Esplanade Concerts on the Charles River. The orchestra performs every summer at the Berkshire Music Festival and travels abroad.

The cost demanded by the musicians in this unique Symphony Orchestra is stupendous with a new goal that is only $87.00 more than last years. Therefore, the new drive for additional needed Friends is a cause that music lovers must support. Those interested may join the Friends by going to the Friend's office at Symphony Hall during the day or by writing or phoning the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall. Any contribution allows an individual to be a Friend. Gifts to the orchestra are deductible under the Federal Income Tax laws.

Additional special events are planned for those giving $15 and more. The different catagories are $15, $50, $100, $250, $500, $1000, and $5000, allows one to be a benefactor. There are luncheons at Horticultural Hall, lectures, table talk suppers, receptions, meetings and special programs for friends.

Those working on the North Shore committee for the membership drive are: Mrs. F. Corning Kenly, chairman; Mrs. Richard Russell, assistant chairman; Mrs. Drayton Phillips, publicity; Mrs. Neil R. Ayer, Mrs. John M. Bradley, Mrs. Louis W. Cabot, Mrs. William Ellis, Mrs. William Endicott Jr., Mrs. Hans H. Estin, Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, Mrs. Francis W. Hatch Jr., Mrs. Robert Livermore, Mrs. William C. Loring, Mrs. Edward P. Parker, Mrs. Josiah A. Spaulding, Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike, Mrs. Barrett Wendell Jr., Mrs. Richard West, Mrs. Lyon Weyburn and Mrs. Oliver Wolcott Jr.

Prizes will be given to the persons who obtain the largest number of new Friends. Such musical excitement as that porvided by the Boston Symphony orchestra and its Friends is matchless and well worth the experience it provides.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Friendship Drive

CRICKET
MANCHESTER, MASS.
WEEKLY 1,598

JAN 29 1971

The Boston Symphony Orchestra depends on its 4200 "Friends" who contributed $334,000 towards the Orchestra's support last year with an additional $129,000 received from the 90th Anniversary Ball. Not surprisingly, new Friends are needed to support this year's goal of $550,000.

The Council of Friends, headed by Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Mrs. John L. Grandin Jr., have launched a January to April Membership Drive.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is unique in that it carries to you as diverse a program as any orchestra in the world. Besides the regular Friday and Saturday afternoon concerts there are Tuesday and Thursday series. There are Open Rehearsals conducted by William Steinberg and his assistant conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas and guest conductors. In the spring Arthur Fiedler conducts the well known Pops Concerts and summer brings the free Esplanade Concerts on the Charles River. The Orchestra performs every summer at the Berkshire Music Festival and travels abroad.

The cost demanded by the musicians in this unique Symphony Orchestra is stupendous with a new goal that is only $87,000 more than last years. Therefore, the new drive for additional needed Friends is a cause that music lovers must support. You may join the Friends by going to the Friend's office at Symphony Hall during the day or by writing or phoning the Friends of The Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall. Any Contribution allows you to be a Friend. Gifts to the Orchestra are deductible under the Federal Income Tax laws.

Additional special events are planned for those giving $15 and more. The different categories are $15, $50, $100, $250, $500, $1000, and $5000. allows one to be a benefactor. You will be invited to luncheons at Horticultural Hall, lectures, table talk suppers, receptions, meetings and special programs.

Those working on the North Shore Committee for the Membership Drive are: Mrs. F. Corning Kenly, chairman; Mrs. Richard Russell, assist. chairman; Mrs. Drayton Phillips, publicity; Mrs. Neil R. Ayer, Mrs. John M. Bradley, Mrs. Louis W. Cabot, Mrs. William Ellis, Mrs. William Endicott Jr., Mrs. Hans H. Estin, Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, Mrs. Francis W. Hatch Jr., Mrs. Robert Livermore, Mrs. William C. Loring, Mrs. Edward P. Parker, Mrs. Josiah A. Spaulding, Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike, Mrs. Barrett Wendell Jr., Mrs. Richard West, Mrs. Lyon Weyburn and Mrs. Oliver Wolcott Jr.

Rose Walsh – Challenge Issued

Here's a challenge for artists, architects, students or, quoting the Institute of Contemporary Art, "anyone who wishes to submit a proposal to make walking through the long, dark passageway inside the State Station a more pleasant experience."

The Institute and the Mass. Bay Transportation Authority have announced an open competition to improve the passageway. There are no limits on media.

An allotment of $5000 of a $15,000 grant from the Rockefeller Family Fund is being made by the Institute of Contemporary Art as the award to the winner of the competition.

The passageway links the southbound Orange and Blue lines at State Station and is used by more than 10,000 passengers.

Only stipulation of the grant is that the artist work with an apprentice. The competition winner will receive $5000 salary, plus an additional budget of $8000 for supplies, fabrication and actual execution of his project.

Initial proposals must be presented in outline form to the Institute by March 1. Upon receipt of the proposal, the institute will team up artists and prospective apprentices.

Final proposals are due June 1; work on the finished project must be completed by the end of the year. Susan Channing or Edwin Child at the Institute of Contemporary Art, 33 Beacon st., may be contacted for more information, maps and plans of the station.

Luis Leguia, a cellist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, remembers the cello he had when he was 4-years-old. Then there was an interval when he studied other music and his mother sold the cello. But at 14 Luis went back to his "first love" and bought his own cello.

This reminiscence came to light in his music-accompanied talk at Friday morning's Stage Door Lecture sponsored by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall. The talented musician who joined the BSO in 1963 after being a member of the Houston and Metropolitan orchestras has a busy spring schedule, including a performance at the Organziation of American States in the Pan American Union and in Town Hall in New York.

Mrs. David Bird, co-chairman with Mrs. George E. Bates of the popular lecture series, introduced the honor guest and his attractive wife, Virginia. They stayed on for the chatty box-luncheon session for which Newton and New Hampshire Council of Friends members were hostesses.

Included in that group were Mrs. Robert M. P. Kennard, Mrs. Morgan Campbell (presiding at the coffee/bouillon table); Mrs. David Connor, Mrs. William Bruce, Mrs. Langdon Parsons, Mrs. Samuel A. Levine, Mrs. John Osborn, Mrs. Irving Usen, Mrs. Charles T. Gallagher, Mrs. Fairfield Raymond and Mrs. Charles Pritchard.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

JAN 25 1971

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 56,387

JAN 25 1971

The ladies at the Stage Door Lecture that preceded the Friday afternoon symphony concert at Symphony Hall received an unexpected and very welcome breath of spring with their box luncheons. Attached to each box was a spray of fragrant mimosa and a carnation that came in a variety of colors so that each guest could choose the shade most becoming to her outfit and proudly wear it to the concert later.

The speaker at this third in the series of lectures by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was cellist Luis Leguira. He played a solo for the ladies but the fact that aroused their real interest was the news that he had studied with the great Pablo Casals in the South of France for a year and many were the questions asked about this topic.

The hostesses for the event were from the Newton and New Hampshire areas of the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, among them Mrs. Robert M.P. Kennard of West Newton who everyone was delighted to welcome back after a long seige of illness and hospitalization.

Others at the lecture were Mrs. Allan P. Joslin who was wearing a dramatic black gaucho hat with her black suit; trustee of the orchestra Philip Allen; Mrs. Howard Hansen of Wellesley; Mrs. Paul Grang; Mrs. John Knowles who was working diligently at her needlepoint while listening to Mr. Leguira; Mrs. George Sargent of Dover back recently from a fascinating trip half way around the world; Mrs. William V. Ellis and Mrs. Sherman R. Thayer of Cohasset.

Council Seeks Members

EAGLE-TRIBUNE
LAWRENCE, MASS.
(M&E) 45,050

JAN 21 1971

ANDOVER — The Andover-North Andover Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is seeking to broaden its membership.

A person can become a "friend" of the orchestra with a donation of $1 or more. The council is hoping the orchestra's wide listening audience in the area will respond to the need to keep the orchestra alive.

Last year, nearly 4,200 Friends contributed over $334,000 to the orchestra with $129,0000 coming from the 90th anniversary ball. The friends' goal this year is $550,000.

Friends of the orchestra are invited to luncheons, lectures, table talk suppers, receptions, meetings and special programs.

Additional special events are planned for those in the named categories of giving: $15 and more, contributor; $50 and more, donor; $100 and more, sponsor; $250 and more, sustaining; $500 and more, patron; $1000 and more, benefactor.

One may join the friends by writing or phoning the friends office at Symphony Hall, Boston, during the day or by contacting one of the members of the local council. The chairman is Mrs. James H. Grew, assisted by Mrs. Philip K. Allen, Mrs. Hart D. Leavitt, Miss Ruth Hayes, Mrs. Fredric S. O'Brien, Mrs. Alexander Z. Warren, and Mrs. Samuel S. Rogers, all of Andover; and Mrs. Harry H. Godden Jr., Mrs. Albert P. Manzi, Mrs. G. C. Waterston and Mrs. Frederic P. Worthen, of North Andover.

60

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

It is often not until after the New Year's holiday has passed that those new calendars received at Christmas are flipped and the blank month of January begins to get notations and jottings about affairs coming up.

It is amazing how the supposedly slow month of January is already peppered all over with lectures, benefits, luncheons, concerts and cocktail parties. On Tuesday Dr. Charles J. Chu, chairman of the Department of Chinese at Connecticut College, will give the first of the January lectures at the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, 264 Boylston St., Boston, to be called "Individualism in Chinese Painting." On Wednesday the newly formed FANS of Channel 2 will get together at the station to view one of the tapes on drugs that the channel will be showing shortly. The FANS hope to generate interest in Boston and in all the communities reached by the educational television stations for this excellent series on drugs and their abuse.

Thursday of this week will see the first of the 1971 Stammtisch luncheons at the Ritz Carlton sponsored by the Friends of Switzerland, Inc. The speaker will be Robert E. Hamman who will discuss a subject that should appeal mostly to the men seated around the big oval table in the Adams Room, "The Role of Chemical Industry in Agriculture."

That evening the Boston Opera Association is holding a cocktail party in honor of Francis Robinson, assistant manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association. President of the association in Boston, David Crockett of Ipswich, will be the host at the party that will take place in the Presidential Suite of the Sheraton Boston.

From there many of these ardent music lovers will go on to the first of a new series of pre-Symphony concert events instituted by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This is the Table Talk suppers that will be held before the first Thursday evening concert in the months of January, February and March. Similar in many ways to the Stage Door Lectures held before the Friday afternoon concerts in locale and informality, these events also will feature members of the orchestra who will speak. As has been overwhelmingly proven at the Stage Door Lectures these musicians are among the most entertaining speakers it is possible to find so those signing up for the series of three suppers are in for a treat. Before Thursday's concert, which will be conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas, the guest speaker will be William Stokking, cello. On Feb. 4, at which concert Claudio Abbado will conduct, first violinist Sheldon Rotenberg, will be featured, and the final Table Talk supper before the concert conducted by Bernard Haitink, on March 4, will have second violinist Christopher Kimber as speaker.

There will be an a la carte bar at 6 p.m. followed by a simple supper of casserole or pies. Guests will be asked to use the Stage Door entrance at Symphony Hall for the event. Any subscriber to the Thursday evening concerts is welcome at these suppers. Reservations may be made by calling Mrs. Kay Whitty at the Friends Office at Symphony Hall.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

JAN 4 1971

Help sought for Boston Symphony

Several area residents are working on the North Shore Committee for the January to April Membership Drive launched by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Working on the committee are Mrs. F. Corning Kenly, chairman; Mrs. Richard Russell, assistant chairman; Mrs. Drayton Phillips, publicity; and Mrs. Neil R. Ayer, Mrs. John M. Bradley, Mrs. Louis W. Cabot, Mrs. William Ellis, Mrs. William Endicott Jr., Mrs. Hans H. Estin, Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, Mrs. Francis W. Hatch, Jr., Mrs. Robert Livermore, Mrs. William C. Loring, Mrs. Edward P. Parker, Mrs. Josiah A. Spaulding, Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike, Mrs. Barrett Wendell Jr., Mrs. Richard West, Mrs. Lyon Weyburn and Mrs. Oliver Wolcott Jr.. Prizes will be given to persons who obtain the largest number of new Friends.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra depends on its 4,200 'Friends' who contributed $334,000 towards the Orchestra's support last year with an additional $129,000 received from the 90th Anniversary Ball. This year's goal is $550,000.

Persons wishing to join the Friends may do so by going to the Friends' office at Symphony Hall during the day or by phoning the Friends of The Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall.

HERALD
DANVERS, MASS.
WEEKLY 4,000

FEB 4 1971

TRI-TOWN TRANSCRIPT
& PENNY SAVER
TOPSFIELD, MASS.
WEEKLY

Feb 3 1971

NEWS
AMESBURY, MASS.
WEEKLY 2,040

FEB 4 1971

Social Chatter

by Alison Arnold

Pre-Symphony Luncheon Idea Adopted by Women's City Club

IMITATION is the sincerest form of flattery, it's said. Certainly, Pre-Symphony Luncheons, originated a decade ago by a former newspaper woman have been widely imitated in many forms by different organizations.

They began in 1961 at the Midtown Motor Inn and featured a speaker at each one. Then they moved to the Ritz-Carlton and became fashion luncheons with standing-room only. Later, they were held at the Statler Hilton and the Somerset.

The Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra pounced on the idea and conducted a series of Pre-Symphony Luncheons at Horticultural Hall, but without speakers or fashsions. Now we hear that the Women's City Club is having a Fun Fur Fashionette Pre-Symphony Luncheon, with cocktails, Friday, Feb. 12, at the clubhouse on Beacon Street. There will be two seatings—at 11:30 and 1:15—and a bus will transport the Symphony-goers to Symphony Hall after the earlier luncheon.

Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are looking forward to the third Pre-Symphony Luncheon, Friday, Feb. 12, at Horticultral Hall at 12 o'clock. No bus is needed to transport members of this group as mounted police escort them across the street to Symphony Hall after the luncheon.

Mrs. George A. Parson and Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich are co-chairmen of these luncheons, and members of the Council of Friends from the Boston, Brookline and Chestnut Hill areas will have charge of this one.

Also popular are the Pre-Symphony box luncheons in the basement of Symphony Hall. Leslie Martin, bass player with the orchestra, will be the final lecturer in this season's "Know Your Orchestra" series, Friday, Feb. 26, when Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird will have as their hostesses members of the Council of Friends from the Concord, Framingham and Winchester areas.

The Council of Friends asks you as a Friend to bring a valentine (a new Friend) to these gay and friendly get-togethers before Symphony. Subscribers who wish to release tickets for resale or who would like to bring a guest, should call Mrs. Kay Whitty, executive secretary, at the Friends office, Symphony Hall.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

FEB 15 1971

After conducting his Youth Symphony Orchestra concert, Friday morning, Harry Ellis Dickson first violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, joined the Council of Friends of the BSO at a Pre-Symphony luncheon at Horticultural Hall. It was just a for him before playing in the regular Friday afternoon BSO concert in Symphony Hall.

At the adjoining table, Philip K. Allen, vice-president of the trustees of the BSO, and Mrs. Allen lunched with trustees, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock and Mrs. James H. Perkins; Mrs. Albert Goodhue, co-chairmen (with Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr.) of the Friends; Harry J. Kraut and Andrew Raeburn of the Orchestra staff.

That the hostesses — members of the Boston, Brookline and Chestnut Hill areas — were thinking "Spring" was evidenced in the table centerpieces of white-potted pink appleblossoms. The bare walls were adorned with red and pink Valentine hearts fluttering from clusters of balloons.

The Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the U.S., Commandery of the State of Massachusetts, honored Abraham Lincoln at an Invitation Reception Thursday evening at its headquarters, Cadet Armory. Founded in 1868, the Loyal Legion's oldest Chapter is in Philadelphia.

Lenahan O'Connell, Commander-in-Chief of the distinguished organization and Mrs. O'Connell planed in Washington, D.C., after the gathering, to place a wreath at the Lincoln Memorial.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298

FEB 9 1971

Support Asked For Boston Symphony

During the coming months it is hoped that the ranks of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be increased by at least 1000 new members. The Concord Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the chairmanship of Mrs. Howard W. Davis and Mrs. Donald B. Sinclair has started its drive with confidence and enthusiasm, for there was a time when this group was represented 100% in its support. This means that for every registered Friend in the Concord area a financial contribution to the orchestra was made by someone. Donations were received from people who were and still are not Friends. They do however, subscribe to at least one of the concert series, and they appreciate the cultural value and continuing source of pleasure this unique and matchless group of musicians offers.

In Concord there are approximately 240 subscribers to one or more of the Boston Symphony concert series and only 174 Friends. It is our hope that by the end of the 1970-71 Drive which terminates in August, not only will the deficit be eliminated but also all Concord subscribers will be members of the Friends. The need for money is great and the price of subscriptions pays for little more than one half the cost of the concerts.

In becoming a Friend one may look forward to informal Stage Door Luncheons where the guest speaker, a member of the Boston Symphony gives glimpses into the backstage workings of the Orchestra. Horticultural Hall Luncheons give Friends an opportunity to visit with each other before the Friday afternoon concert. And for those members who attend the evening series, there are pre-Symphony Suppers open to Friends. Other special events are planned from time to time.

This year your help is needed more than ever. However, should you be interested in the financial support of the Boston Symphony, You are urged to communicate with any member of the Concord Council listed below or send your tax deductible gift payable to Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. to Symphony Hall, Boston, Massachusetts 02115.

Area Chairmen are: Mrs. Howard W. Davis and Mrs. Donald B. Sinclair.

The committee includes Mesdames Horace L. Arnold, George N. Barker, Lawrence H. Boling, Loring W. Coleman, Carl de Suze, Anatole Haemmerle, Edward Neal Hartley, Andrew Hepburn, Henry M. Keyes, Carl Koch, Anson W. Krickl, John E. Laynor, Henry A. Laughlin, William S. Malcolm, William B. Moses, Jr., William C. Moyer, Douglas H. Sears, Walter K. Shaw, Jr., Gordon Smith and Benjamin L. Wilson.

JOURNAL
CONCORD, MASS.
WEEKLY 5,000

FEB 4 1971

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

FEB 8 1971

It is not often that the Friends of the New England Conservatory and the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra clash over an event but they did on Thursday evening for while the Pierre Cardin fashions were being shown at Bonwit's for the Conservatory the second in the series of three Table Talk suppers was also going on in the basement of Symphony Hall.

These suppers are organized by the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Friends attending the Thursday evening series of concerts, and like the Stage Door Lectures feature a member of the orchestra as speaker. Informality and a good time are the keynotes of these affairs, and Thursday evening's supper party lived up to both. Spaghetti and meat balls — served from silver chafing dishes was the main course and guests who, a few minutes earlier, were complete strangers gathered together around the tables decorated with gay red and blue bandanas and became friends.

The speaker was Sheldon Rotenberg first violinist with the orchestra who gave his audience an entertaining account of his stay in Japan in 1968 when he was cultural exchange representative.

From here the guests went up the stairs into Symphony Hall where they heard the young Italian conductor Claudio Abbado lead the orchestra in a superb concert of Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet"; Scriabin's "Le Poem de L'Extase" and Beethoven's Third Symphony "Eroica".

SOCIETY

by Miriam Tod

One facet of next Friday's Pre-Symphony luncheon the guests can look forward to is the decorations. With Valentine's Day only two days away the decor is almost certain to be the pretty whites, reds and pinks of this holiday which, if the weather continues as it has been, will surely give a lift to jaded hearts.

The hostesses for this next event for the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which as usual will be held in Horticultural Hall will be members of the Council of Friends from the Boston, Brookline and Chestnut Hill areas.

Concord, Framingham and Winchester will be represented on Feb. 26 for the hostesses at the final Stage Door Lecture of the 1970-71 season will come from these areas. The speaker at this event which will take place in the basement of Symphony Hall will be a member of the orchestra, bass player Leslie Martin. Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird are cochairmen of these lectures that have proved to be extremely popular with the Friends of the B.S.O. Buillon is served at 11:30 a.m. and the lecture is followed by an a la carte bar and a box luncheon for subscribers.

The ticket resale policy applies to these events as it does to concerts at Symphony Hall. Subscribers unable to use their tickets are asked to call Mrs. Kay Whitty at the Friends Office at Symphony Hall and release them so that those wishing to bring a guest to one or other of the events may purchase a reservation by also calling the Friends Office.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

FEB 9 1971

Rose Walsh

Valentines come in all shapes and sizes — thus the suggestion from the Council of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, "As a Friend, bring a Valentine (a new Friend)" to the 3rd Pre-Symphony Luncheon, Friday, noon at Horticultural Hall.

These luncheon parties are great get-togethers before the Friday Symphony and the music lovers just have to walk across the street for the concerts.

Mrs. George A. Parson and Mrs. Nelson W. Aldrich, luncheon chairmen, have on their committee Council members from the Boston, Brookline and Chestnut Hill areas.

Subscribers who wish to release tickets for resale or who would like to bring a guest should call Mrs. Kay Whitty, executive secretary, at 266-1348.

Equally popular social event sponsored by the Friends is the Pre-Symphony Stage Door Series, "Know Your Orchestra."

The final one on Friday, Feb. 26 takes place at the Stage Door, Symphony Hall. Leslie Martin, bass player with the BSO, will lecture.

Mrs. George E. Bates and Mrs. David Bird, co-chairmen, will have as their hostesses, members of the Council from the Concord, Framingham and Winchester areas.

Last Thursday night, the second in a new series of Pre-Symphony hospitalities, "Stage Door Table Talk Suppers" prior to the Thursday "B" Series of concerts, had first violinist Sheldon Rotenberg as the lecturer. He introduced Japanese exchange player Hironaga Sugie and Mrs. Sugie.

Talcott Banks, president of the Symphony board of trustees, and Thomas Perry, manager of the Orchestra, were welcomed by Mrs. George L. Sargent and Mrs. Frank Whitty, when they strolled in to join friends. Seated with the Thomas Curtins were the Francis Cusacks, all of Nahant, and the Richard Badlians of Boston. (she is the noted handwriting expert).

The final talk in that series on March 4 will have Christopher Kimber, second violinist, as the speaker.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

FEB 9 1971

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

FEB 19 1971

Rose Walsh

Boston Symphony Set For European Tour

Other great Symphony Orchestras have toured Europe, accompanied by groups of friends, and have been widely acclaimed.

But the thrilling welcome that has been planned for our world-famed Boston Symphony Orchestra in Britain, Germany, Austria, Italy and France in April during its 12-city tour is fantastic.

Some 40 Friends of the BSO including trustees, overseers and Friends of Music at Tanglewood, will share in the hospitality spotlight in seven of the cities.

American Ambassadors will be hosts. Special receptions have been planned by the Lord Mayors of Berlin, Hamburg and Paris, as well as many other notables.

The Friends of the BSO fortunate enough to be taking the fabulous trip are persons who have contributed generously every year to this great institution, both in Greater Boston and in Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in the Berkshires.

In the happy safari will be conductors William Steinberg, Michael Tilson Thomas and Arthur Fiedler; 106 members of the orchestra, plus staff and the Friends.

On April 2 at 10 a.m., after a gala send-off, they will fly on two chartered jets especially named "Clipper Boston Symphony" and "Clipper Boston Pops" for a 23-day concert tour of the great halls of Europe.

Each jet will carry half the orchestra (so that in case of delay or any plane difficulty the concerts can still go on).

At lunch Wednesday in the luxurious 9-room Beacon st. apartment of Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, she and Mrs. Richard H. Thompson of Swampscott, who have been the arranging geniuses, revealed some of the highlights. Mr. and Mrs. Stephen V. C. Morris of Washington, D.C. and Lenox added their expertise to the plans.

Members of the Royal Family have been invited to the London concerts and the Lord Mayor of Boston, England, will be honored at a party after the Pops. And speaking of the Pops, England wants the setting to be identical to the Boston Pops at Symphony Hall, round tables seating 5, and the traditional "light refreshments."

There is a question as to whether or not the closely-guarded recipe for Pops Punch will be turned over to the English. Marvin Schofer, BSO's public relations director, told us that the recipe is known only to 3 of the Symphony Hall staff and they are not about to share it.

The President of West Germany will entertain the orchestra and Friends in Bonn, and the Berlin Senat has planned a soirce on Easter Eve.

There are so many other exciting events on the itinerary that I will have to continue the story in my Sunday Advertiser column.

Social Chatter
by Alison Arnold

Friends of BSO to Travel With Orchestra to Europe

THE FORTY FRIENDS of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who will have the unusual privilege of traveling with their orchestra on the European tour in April will have a busy schedule. These are Friends who have contributed generously every year to the orchestra, both in Boston and in Tanglewood, the orchestra's summer home in the Berkshires.

Leaving Boston April 2 aboard two chartered jets especially named Clipper Boston Symphony and Clipper Boston Pops, the Friends, conductors William Steinberg, Michael Tilson Thomas and Arthur Fiedler, will embark on a 23-day concert tour of the great halls of Europe.

The Friends will visit seven of the 12 cities where the orchestra will play—London, Berlin, Hamburg, Bonn, Vienna, Rome and Paris. They will hear the Boston Symphony six times, the Boston Pops twice and the Chamber Players once, as well as taking in eight opera and ballet performances by famous European companies.

They will be entertained by the American Ambassadors to Great Britain, Austria, Italy and France and by our cultural missions. Special receptions have been planned by the Lord Mayors of Berlin, Hamburg and Paris, as well as by many other notables.

Members of the Royal Family have been invited to the London concerts, and the Lord Mayor of Boston, England, will be honored at a party after the Pops. The president of West Germany will entertain the orchestra and Friends in Bonn, and the Berlin Senat has planned a soiree on Easter Eve.

Other highlights of the trip will be a supper dance in Hamburg given by Deutsche Grammophon, the orchestra's new recording company, and a Heuringen in the Vienna Woods where the Friends will join Boris Goldovsky and his opera touring group.

There will be a luncheon in the Paris town houses of Mrs. Johnson Garrett and Mrs. Randolph A. Kidder. These two former Washingtonians are in charge of a benefit for the American Library in Paris performed by the Chamber Players April 27 after the official end of the tour.

The entertainments and arrangements for this unique trip have been planned by Mrs. Harris Fahnestock of Boston, one of the two women trustees of the orchestra, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen V. C. Morris of Washington and Lenox and Mrs. Richard H. Thompson of Swampscott.

Among those going on the tour will be trustees, overseers and Friends of Music at Tanglewood, as well as Boston Symphony Orchestra Friends, including Mrs. Curtis Brooks of Providence, Mrs. M. Bella Gans of Newton, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick J. Leviseur, Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb and Mrs. Fahnestock of Boston, Mrs. Houghton P. Metcalf of Exeter, N. H., Mrs. Fredrick J. Stare of Wellesley and Miss Grace M. Otis of Everett.

Clipper Boston Pops will return April 25 and for those players and Friends who wish to spend an extra week abroad, Clipper Boston Symphony will fly home May 2.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298

FEB 18 1971

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

FEB 18 1971

SOCIETY
by Miriam Tod

It really pays off to become a "Friend" of a charitable organization. Not only do you find yourself a much courted VIP with the group, in addition to the satisfactory feeling of helping it financially in some small way, but fantastic opportunities are open to you that never would be available to the average person in a million years.

Forty lucky souls who are Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will live through a "dream come true" during the month of April for they are the fortunate ones who will accompany the B.S.O. on its first European tour in 15 years.

This fact in itself may not sound too exciting but the itinerary and the events planned for the fortunate 40 reads like a triumphal procession and a tour of state rolled into one. Seven principal cities of Europe will host them and each will vie to outdo each other in the events planned and the entertainment offered.

It would seem that there are two ingredients necessary to become a member of this select tour — one is energy, for nobody with faint heart could possibly keep up the pace, and the other is the bald but obvious fact of dollars and cents. Each of the 40 has given, in addition to the heavy expenses of the tour, a more than substantial gift to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one that in each case is in the four figure category.

Unlike gifts often given to other charitable organizations, this one will be returned tenfold in experience and fun. Ambassadors, presidents, royalty, and top cultural groups will entertain them throughout Europe. They will attend ballets and concerts and operas in Paris and Vienna, Rome and London. They will stay in top luxury hotels as only Europe can provide them; they will dine aboard a boat on the Rhine and attend a cocktail party at the Kaiser's old hunting lodge in Bonn. They will have dinner at Maxim's in Paris, and attend a Heuringen — a tasting of new wine — in the famous Woods of Vienna where they will be joined by Boris Goldovsky and his opera touring group.

They will travel with and be a part of the orchestral group. They will join the 120 people from Symphony Hall connected with the Boston Symphony Orchestra — 106 musicians and 14 stage hands, librarians, publicity directors and others who will be filling two jets called "Clipper Boston Symphony" and "Clipper Boston Pops." Conductors William Steinberg, Michael Tillson Thomas and Arthur Fiedler will be part of the group for both the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops will play concerts in the 12 cities in which the orchestras will perform.

Yesterday cochairman of the Friends European Tour, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, gave a luncheon at her recently occupied and attractive apartment on Beacon Street facing the Public Garden. Also at the luncheon were her cochairman Mrs. Richard H. Thompson of Swampscott and Mrs. Richard Carter of Weston who will be one of the guides on the tour. Also assisting with the arrangements are Mr. and Mrs. Stephen V. C. Morris of Lenox and Washington who are Friends of the Orchestra at Tanglewood and members of the Board of Overseers of the B.S.O.

Among those going on this once-in-a-lifetime tour will be Mrs. Curtis Brooks of Providence, R.I.; Mrs. William K. Russell of Chestnut Hill who will meet the group in Europe after a tour of Japan and the Far East; Mrs. M. Bella Gans of Newton; Mrs. Fahnestock, the Frederick J. Levisurs of Boston; Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb of Boston; Mrs. Houghton P. Metcalf of Exeter, R.I. and Hope Sound; the Stephen Morris'; Mrs. Robert M. Murdock of Hasting-on-Hudson, N.Y.; Miss Grace M. Otis of Everett; Mrs. Fredrick J. Stare of Wellesley and Mrs. Thompson.

The group, together with the orchestra, will leave Boston on April 2 for first stop London and return home, no doubt dazed and happy, on April 25.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

MAR 1 1971

SOCIETY
by Miriam Tod

Except among the musicians who might once in a while entertain each other this way it is not often that the nether regions of Symphony Hall resound with the thump, thump, thump of a jazz bass. It did though on Friday morning as the speaker at the last of the Stage Door Lectures given for the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra went into a wild jazz session to round off the number he had been playing quite seriously up to that moment. Needless to say it brought cheers from his audience seated in the basement below Symphony Hall.

The speaker at the Stage Door Lecture was double bass player with the B.S.O. Leslie Martin who, to many, looked the very personification of a jazz musician. A very distinguished member of the orchestra he has played in the past with such well known bands as those of Gene Krupa, Bob Chester and Skinnay Ennis. For 20 years he played with the Seattle Symphony Orchestra before coming to the Boston Symphony in 1957. A resident of Needham he has a wonderful sense of humor and kept the ladies laughing throughout his talk.

These Stage Door Lectures are among the most popular of the events planned for the Friends of the B.S.O. One of the nicest aspects of them are the little details planned to give pleasure to the many attending. On Friday this took the form of a spring flower corsage pinned to every box luncheon and in an instant the somewhat barren basement of Symphony Hall was abloom with carnations, daffodils, roses and iris.

The springlike day brought forth both spring and winter fashions. Many still wore their long winter boots yet there were flower-loaded spring hats to be seen here and there. Pastel spring colors were popular although there were fur trimmed suits and hats. Among those at this last lecture until the new season starts again in the fall were Mrs. Harold Blanchard of Winchester, who was one of the hostesses; Mrs. Edwin T. Green of Cambridge; Mrs. Richard Ely of Weston in a pale pink suit; Mrs. Louis Cabot of Wenham! Mrs. Hollis Gleason of Cohasset; Mrs. Thomas Franks of Wellesley; Mrs. Charles Devens of Milton, another who chose pink; Mrs. James H. Perkins of Westwood wearing a dress and hat of her favorite violet, and Mrs. George Simonds of Belmont.

62

THE LOWELL SUN

FEBRUARY 13, 1971

Fiedler recalls happy years in Lowell

By ALFRED W. BURKE

Sun Music Critic

LOWELL — The conversation was centered around Maestro Arthur Fiedler and his musical activities in Lowell over a period of time covering about 40 years.

A few points had been briefly covered. The personable conductor of the world famous Boston Pops Orchestra suddenly broke in with "you know we are coming back to Lowell on March 10 for a concert sponsored by the Lowell and Tewskbury Rotary clubs?

We knew that very well and pointed out that this was to be an encore engagement. The dynamic and ever enthusiastic maestro smiled broadly. He was in his Lowell performance kind of mood. "I have been going to Lowell for almost 40 years, and I hope I am only beginning." Such a statement could only bring a note of assent from this city's concert going public who have literally made Arthur Fiedler No. 1 on the community's list of music makers.

However, it was important to go back to the "early days" when the conductor was a mere lad in the field — that is aside from where he stands at the present time. The late John A. Hunnewell, the executive head of the Lowell Electric Light Company, who was a devoted music lover as well as a man capable of recognizing a great musician in the making, brought the young man to Lowell. His duty was to train an orchestra whose members were on the company staff.

The young man who in the coming years was to achieve world fame did his job better than well. "It was push and go at times", he smiled as he reflected on the occasions he spent locally one night a week at the Market Street spot, and continued, "but you know, these young men just had to have music, they gave everything."

Recalls Lowell musicians

There was another pause and he spoke of such musicians in our cit yas Stanley Gonyea, Herman Faust who was concertmaster of the Orchestra, and James McCormack. He took time out for a moment and turned to our long time friend and one of this city's top horn men, John Gleason, and said, "you were not with the company orchestra under me, but I remember well when you played for me with the McDowell Club of Boston, and during the war at Fort Devens where I conducted a concert."

That is the thing about Arthur Fiedler, nothing is a passing event, concerts past, and present, are equally important and a great part of his life. Possibly that is one reason why Maestro Arthur takes the gathering years in stride. He loves music, lives music, and decided a long time ago that it was a means of making people enjoy life.

For a moment we broke our concentration and glanced toward the ceiling of the "great man's office in Boston Symphony Hall, and in the next moment we had executed a fast double take. It is well known that conductor Fiedler is a fire "buff", but the collection of fireman helmets that were neatly set in an unbroken pattern around the top of the room was a revelation. They were of all colors, styles and came from all parts of the world.

THE MANY MOODS OF MAESTRO ARTHUR FIEDLER

It seems that Arthur Fiedler has been named a honorary fire chief of several hundreds of departments located in cities on every continent. From coast-to-coast he has been honored. In Japan he was equally recognized, and in Europe you can name any leading city and the name Arthur Fiedler, honorary fire chief, is solidly printed into the community records.

Owns fire truck

"You know" he grinned, "someone also gave me a fire truck. It's up in my garage and goes as part of my collection of such things." One thing we forgot to ask him, however, was whether he wore red suspenders as his late friend and world famous conductor Pierre Monteux did.

Before leaving the subject of fire departments we learned that many cities throughout the world celebrate the coming of Arthur Fiedler as a guest conductor by meeting him at the city line and putting him in the "drivers" seat on a long piece of apparatus that wends its way down the main thoroughfares of the community. The streets are always lined with well wishers, and the shouts of "bravo, Arthur and Maestro" are part of what is now a regular routine.

A few moments passed during which time incidents concerning the Boston Pops were brought back to life. But then again the old home town came back into focus. "The conductor eyed us intently for a moment, and then with his characteristic smile asked, "Didn't you and a violinist named Leo Penn, oh yes, and a gentleman that attended Lowell Tech, Allen Frank, team up on a radio panel in Lowell?" He was right. It was the first in a series of programs entitled, The Lowell Musical Appreciation Series," which was aired a a local station. The series covered various phases of music and also featured vocal and instrumental performers.

With Arthur Fiedler on the panel—to us he was the panel, the subject of music in the concert style was discussed. Even back then, and that goes to the mid-40's, the Maestro was greatly concerned with the development and opportunity of young and promising talent. He also remembered how we piled into a car after the program and wended our way to a restaurant where a "jam" session of music talk lasted into the late hours. "That is one thing I always enjoyed about Lowell over the years," he offered, "everyone you meet wants to talk music." In brief summary he added, "And it is still the same today. Why I remember well the first concert sponsored by the Rotary, and definitely those affairs for the Paint and Powder Club, everybody loves music in Lowell."

Paint and Powder Shows

From this point the subject turned completely to the Boston Pops concerts for the Paint and Powder Club in Lowell. Each was a success and the programs were some of the finest the orchestra ever played. There was the concert with a local angle featuring the duo-piano team of Marden and Reilly. They played a "Concerto for Orchestra and Two Pianos which was written by Harl MacDonald of New York.

The first of the Paint and Powder concerts which was in the late 1940's featured Leo Litwin as soloist and he played the "Warsaw Concerto."

Though Arthur Fiedler does not deal directly with many of the youth concerts played by the Pops he still remembers the names of those musicians from Lowell who have had their great moment either at the Esplanade or at other spots. Among those who have appeared on one or more occasion have been Leo Penn, Deborah Moriarty, who by the way will be soloist at the coming concert on March 10, Michael Thermopolis, to name only a few. These young artists with the exception of Leo Penn performed under Harry Ellis Dixon.

Next on the agenda was the subject of Conductor Arthur Fiedler in the role of teacher. The energetic maestro wants no part of teaching. "You can only learn the basic rhythms" he suggested, "as for myself, I simply go along and use my own ideas." We could only mentally reflect, "Well stated Maestro." All to many aspiring and even experienced conductors want every move and touch in the exact place at the exact time. Don't you believe it—if this were to happen at the Met goodness knows what the greats of the Golden Age would have done . . .!

How does Conductor Fiedler enjoy conducting opera and ballet? He enjoys both. He has not had as much experience in either as he has had in the concert or symphonic media, but he manages better than well. His performances in both fields have been far above average. We are certain that the singers especially love his complete and thoroughly sound beats that greets them from across the footlights.

The subject of composers of various types were brought up. Fiedler has played them all, from the three B's to Rock. We mentioned Leroy Anderson. Fiedler has played and recorded more of his music than any other conductor in the world. Actually Anderson's music is a sheer delight, but thanks to Arthur Fiedler and his musical magicians, the Boston-born composer has achieved modern music immortality.

This all lead to performances and recordings. Mr. Fiedler has to his credit more performances than any other conductor in musical history. His total exceeds the mid-four figure plateau! As for his record albums, he has more recordings than any other conductor. And naturally, that means that his orchestra shares his fame in this department.

First love is boxing

In an about face, the subject turned to sports. Arthur loves tennis which he played a lot in "his day", but his first love is boxing. There was a twinkle in his eye as we queried as to his ability in the realm of footwork, fast jabs and hooks. From what we could gather from a broad smile we would say that in years past "Kid Arthur" was quite adapt in all of these departments.

He is a dedicated fight fan. That is the way he puts it. He is a close friend and supporter of Peter Fuller and shares a ringside seat with him regularly. In fact, the Maestro is presently on a concert tour in Australia, but will return to this country to attend the coming Clay-Frazier title bout in New York. His second stop after the tour will be the concert in Lowell.

The conversation led to the names of other boxers and their places in ringdom. One was Rory Calhoun who is one of Fiedler's most popular ring figures. He remembers him from away back—back when he was a youngster with a four-rounder coming up. He has been to the Golden Gloves in Lowell on numerous occasions, and his enthusiasm never wanes.

However, he is first a musician, an expert on good food, and one of the "nicest guys" you will ever meet.

He recently reached the mid-70's mark, but he should be a great name in music for many years to come—especially in Lowell—where for about 40 years he has brought his magnificent music and the influence for the arts that every community needs.

So that is our story of Arthur Fiedler, conductor par excellence—honorary fire chief—and boxing expert.

Arthur Fiedler was their conductor

Some members of the Lowell Electric Light Company Orchestra prepare to catch Maestro Arthur Fieldler's initial beat as a rehearsal session swings into action. This rehearsal dates back to the very early 1930's, and pictured among the talented Lowell instrumentalists were left to right: Jocelyn Roy, Ken Fields, John Beattie, Ray Kinch, Herb Carlson, Stanley Gonyea, Herman Faust, concertmaster; James McCormack, Alexander Patterson and Joseph Lawrence.

BOSTON LOSES SYMPHONY DIRECTOR

NEW YORK (AP)—William Steinberg, 70, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952 and music director of the Boston Symphony since 1969, announced Monday that he plans to leave the Boston job.

Steinberg's office in New York quoted him as saying he would not renew his Boston contract after its expiration in the spring of 1972. The reason is that the Pittsburgh Symphony has asked for more of his time.

This season and next he will be conducting 17 weeks in Pittsburgh and 12 weeks in Boston. During the 1972-73 season he will devote at least 22 weeks to Pittsburgh.

Steinberg took the Boston music directorship at the time Erich Leinsdorf resigned, with the understanding he would guide the orchestra and advise on a permanent replacement for Leinsdorf. He said he would continue to help with recommendations for a permanent music director in Boston.

The Boston Symphony board will meet later this week and may discuss the possibility of Steinberg's spending eight weeks in Boston and being "senior conductor and music adviser" for the 1972-73 season.

The Pittsburgh Symphony gave the Cologne-born Steinberg a lifetime contract as music director in 1968.

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
(E) 7,904
FEB 10 1971

POST
WASH., D. C.
(M) 479,750 (S
FEB 10 1971

JOURNAL
LEWISTON, MAINE
(E) 14,465
FEB 9 1971

RECORDER-GAZETTE
GREENFIELD, MASS.
(E) 13,822
FEB 9 1971

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
(E) 27,800
FEB 9 1971

TIMES (M)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 959,600
FEB 9 1971

SUN
ATTLEBORO, MASS.
(E) 14,200
FEB 9 1971

SENTINEL
FITCHBURG, MASS
(E) 21,000
FEB 9 1971

HERALD
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
(E) 16,596
FEB 9 1971

NEWS
NEWPORT, R. I.
(E) 14,827
FEB 9 1971

STEINBERG TO LEAVE BOSTON SYMPHONY

William Steinberg has informed the Boston Symphony Orchestra that he will not renew his contract as music director when it expires at the end of next season.

Mr. Steinberg, who has been music director in Boston since the fall of 1969, said yesterday that he had been asked by the Pittsburgh Symphony, of which he also is music director, to devote more of his time to that orchestra and its expanding activities. "The Pittsburgh Symphony, of which I have been music director for 20 years, will always come first with me," he said.

The 71-year-old conductor's decision was announced by John E. Angle, president of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society. Mr. Steinberg said the Boston trustees had inquired whether he would be available to stay on for an additional year as music director, through the 1972-73 season.

He told them he could offer Boston no more than eight weeks, which he regarded as insufficient to carry out the duties. He offered instead to consider the post of senior conductor and music director for that season, ad the matter was to be taken up later this week by the Boston board of trustees.

Mr. Steinberg informed Talcott M. Banks, president of the Boston Symphony, of his decision last December, and promised to help in recommending possible candidates to succeed him. During the 1972-73 season, Mr. Steinberg is scheduled to give at least 22 weeks to the Pittsburgh orchestra, conducting 16 of the 24 major concerts.

Modest About His Music

By John Haskins
The Star's Music Editor

William Steinberg, on the podium of the Pittsburgh symphony, which he has conducted since 1952, or of the Boston symphony, of which he has been musical director since the retirement of Erich Leinsdorf in 1969, qualifies as one of the great active chefs d'orchestre.

Off the podium Steinberg is one of the civilized men of music, with an extraordinary memory for particulars, courteously offering his tobacco pouch to an interviewer with a pipe stem peeking out of his breast pocket.

Steinberg brings his 106-piece Pittburgh symphony into the Music Hall tonight for a program of Carl Maria von Weber, Tchaikovsky and Dichard Strauss.

Steinberg was told ticket sales for the concert had gone badly because of speculation he might not appear and the concert might be conducted by his touring assistant. The speculation was attributed to an overpublicized illness last year that caused him to cancel performances in Boston and Pittsburgh.

Innately courteous though he may be, Steinberg is a conductor used to commanding and getting his way; he is very out spoken.

"Bah!" he exclaimed with a deprecatory wave of the hand. "This business of who stands before an orchestra at a concert is an invention of the press and entirely a thing of our time. When I was a child, playing violin in the orchestra at Cologne (I was 15 years old), people used to come to concerts to hear Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Strauss, Mahler, Bruckner, not to watch a fellow wave his arms before the orchestra."

WILLIAM STEINBERG

He would not be put off with the counter-argument from one who has seen him turn an orchestra on, that the public counts on conductors of his vast experience to show them things in thrice-familiar scores which they had not known were there. Cited was an occasion at Tanglewood summer workshop a couple of years ago when Steinberg conducted the Boston symphony in a Russian program without score and impelled about a dozen visiting music critics to go backstage after the concert to shake his hand. He remembered the concert and modestly responded "Yes, it went very well that night.

"I can memorize a Hamlet soliloquy, or a poem, but I do not memorize music," Steinberg said. 'Some things, however, I know that well that I do not need a score, either in rehearsal or in performance."

It was announced two weeks ago Steinberg would not continue with the Boston symphony when his current contract expires, since the Pittsburgh orchestra has asked more of his time.

For those who doubted it can be reported Steinberg is alive and well here, looking forward to leading his Pittsburgh orchestra tonight in the Music Hall.

The program: Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Symphony No. 6 in B Minor, Op. 74 ("Pathetique"); "Don Juan," Strauss; "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Strauss.

The Kansas City Times
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 334,249
FEB 19 1971

THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER
D. 189,425 SUN. 302,445
FEB 7 1971

Boston

The post of music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra also is open when William Steinberg's contract expires in 1972. Rumors indicate some of the same persons are being considered there.

LONG ISLAND PRESS
October 14, 1970

ON PODIUM: Maestro William Steinberg is on the podium for three concert series openers. He conducts the Boston Symphony tonight and Friday in Philharmonic Hall and conducts tomorrow night in Carnegie Hall.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967
(S) 566,377
FEB 9 1971

Steinberg expected to leave BSO after 1971-72 season

By Michael Steinberg
Globe Staff

The 1971-72 season is likely to be William Steinberg's last as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was learned yesterday Steinberg, who will be 73 at the end of that season, plans thereafter to devote his main energies to the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra whose music director he has been since 1952.

He has held the music directorship of both orchestras since 1969, dividing his time more or less equally between them in 1969-70, though kept out of action much of last year because of illness. During the current year he has been conducting about half the Pittsburgh season and one quarter of Boston's.

By 1972 the Pittsburgh Symphony expects to have completed a $4 million fund drive that will bring its endowment to $20 million. It will have moved into a new hall, increased its size to 106 players, offering them year-round employment for the first time. The Pittsburgh trustees asked Steinberg if for that gala year for their orchestra he would increase his commitment to them for 22 weeks of conducting, and he said he

That would leave him only eight weeks for Boston, and he commented he thought that too short a period to justify his continuing to have the responsibilities and title of music director. He has offered to continue to serve the Boston Symphony with some such title as senior conductor or musical adviser. The Boston Symphony's future arrangement with Steinberg will be discussed at a trustees' meeting Thursday.

Steinberg's three-year contract with Boston for the seasons 1969-72 was announced in the spring of 1968 following the announcement in December 1967 by Erich Leinsdorf, music director since 1962, of his intention to resign as of the end of the summer of 1968.

FOR THOSE OF YOU who like Tanglewood over there at Lenox, Mass. every summer, it's of interest to hear that music director William Steinberg won't be renewing his contract with the Boston Symphony. He was named to the post after Erich Leinsdorf left in the fall of 1969. The Pittsburg Symphony, which Steinberg also directs, has asked him to devote more of his time to that orchestra.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
FEB 12 1971

Chicago
today
American
Always on Top of the News
D. 436,893 SUN. 483,418
FEB 15 1971

William Steinberg announced his decision to leave the Boston Symphony as music director upon completion of an initial 3-year contract [in the spring of 1972], to concentrate on the Pittsburgh Symphony — of which he is lifetime music director — and guest conducting. The Boston trustees, known to have wooed but not won either Herbert von Karajan or Rafael Kubelik, are begging his reconsideration thru the 1972-73 season, but Steinberg says he will have only 8 weeks free for Boston then. Shall his successor be, as lately rumored, Claudio Abbado—or, as also rumored, young Michael Tillson Thomas?

New York Post
D. 708,180 SAT. 369,902
FEB 12 1971

Steinberg to Leave Boston in Spring '72

William Steinberg, currently music director of both the Pittsburgh and Boston Symphony Orchestras, will leave the Boston at the expiration of his current contract in the spring of '72. He has been asked by the Pittsburgh Board to give the orchestra more time, especially as it has plans for expansion and in view of the completion of the reconstruction of the Penn Theater in downtown Pittsburgh in the fall of this year. Donald Johanos, formerly music director of the Dallas Symphony, will remain as associate conductor of Pittsburgh.

Steinberg will devote at least 22 weeks to the '72-'73 season and will participate in the Temple University Summer Music Festival and Institute.

BOSTON LOSES SYMPHONY DIRECTOR

NEW YORK (AP)—William Steinberg, 70, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952 and music director of the Boston Symphony since 1969, announced Monday that he plans to leave the Boston job.

Steinberg's office in New York quoted him as saying he would not renew his Boston contract after its expiration in the spring of 1972. The reason is that the Pittsburgh Symphony has asked for more of his time.

This season and next he will be conducting 17 weeks in Pittsburgh and 12 weeks in Boston. During the 1972-73 season he will devote at least 22 weeks to Pittsburgh.

Steinberg took the Boston music directorship at the time Erich Leinsdorf resigned, with the understanding he would guide the orchestra and advise on a permanent replacement for Leinsdorf. He said he would continue to help with recommendations for a permanent music director in Boston.

The Boston Symphony board will meet later this week and may discuss the possibility of Steinberg's spending eight weeks in Boston and being "senior conductor and music adviser" for the 1972-73 season.

The Pittsburgh Symphony gave the Cologne-born Steinberg a lifetime contract as music director in 1968.

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
(E) 7,904
FEB 10 1971

POST
WASH., D. C.
(M) 479,750 (S
FEB 10 1971

JOURNAL
LEWISTON, MAINE
(E) 14,465
FEB 9 1971

RECORDER-GAZETTE
GREENFIELD, MASS
(E) 13,822
FEB 9 1971

TRANSCRIPT-TELEGRAM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
(E) 27,800
FEB 9 1971

TIMES (M)
NEW YORK, N. Y.
CIRC. 959,600
FEB 9 1971

SUN
ATTLEBORO, MASS.
(E) 14,200
FEB 9 1971

SENTINEL
FITCHBURG, MASS
(E) 21,000
FEB 9 1971

HERALD
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
(E) 16,596
FEB 9 1971

NEWS
NEWPORT, R. I.
(E) 14,827
FEB 9 1971

STEINBERG TO LEAVE BOSTON SYMPHONY

William Steinberg has informed the Boston Symphony Orchestra that he will not renew his contract as music director when it expires at the end of next season.

Mr. Steinberg, who has been music director in Boston since the fall of 1969, said yesterday that he had been asked by the Pittsburgh Symphony, of which he also is music director, to devote more of his time to that orchestra and its expanding activities. "The Pittsburgh Symphony, of which I have been music director for 20 years, will always come first with me," he said.

The 71-year-old conductor's decision was announced by John E. Angle, president of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society. Mr. Steinberg said the Boston trustees had inquired whether he would be available to stay on for an additional year as music director, through the 1972-73 season.

He told them he could offer Boston no more than eight weeks, which he regarded as insufficient to carry out the duties. He offered instead to consider the post of senior conductor and music director for that season, ad the matter was to be taken up later this week by the Boston board of trustees.

Mr. Steinberg informed Talcott M. Banks, president of the Boston Symphony, of his decision last December, and promised to help in recommending possible candidates to succeed him. During the 1972-73 season, Mr. Steinberg is scheduled to give at least 22 weeks to the Pittsburgh orchestra, conducting 16 of the 24 major concerts.

Modest About His Music

By John Haskins
The Star's Music Editor

William Steinberg, on the podium of the Pittsburgh symphony, which he has conducted since 1952, or of the Boston symphony, of which he has been musical director since the retirement of Erich Leinsdorf in 1969, qualifies as one of the great active chefs d'orchestre.

Off the podium Steinberg is one of the civilized men of music, with an extraordinary memory for particulars, courteously offering his tobacco pouch to an interviewer with a pipe stem peeking out of his breast pocket.

Steinberg brings his 106-piece Pittburgh symphony into the Music Hall tonight for a program of Carl Maria von Weber, Tchaikovsky and Dichard Strauss.

Steinberg was told ticket sales for the concert had gone badly because of speculation he might not appear and the concert might be conducted by his touring assistant. The speculation was attributed to an overpublicized illness last year that caused him to cancel performances in Boston and Pittsburgh.

Innately courteous though he may be, Steinberg is a conductor used to commanding and getting his way; he is very out spoken.

"Bah!" he exclaimed with a deprecatory wave of the hand. "This business of who stands before an orchestra at a concert is an invention of the press and entirely a thing of our time. When I was a child, playing violin in the orchestra at Cologne (I was 15 years old), people used to come to concerts to hear Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Strauss, Mahler, Bruckner, not to watch a fellow wave his arms before the orchestra."

WILLIAM STEINBERG

He would not be put off with the counter-argument from one who has seen him turn an orchestra on, that the public counts on conductors of his vast experience to show them things in thrice-familiar scores which they had not known were there. Cited was an occasion at Tanglewood summer workshop a couple of years ago when Steinberg conducted the Boston symphony in a Russian program without score and impelled about a dozen visiting music critics to go backstage after the concert to shake his hand. He remembered the concert and modestly responded "Yes, it went very well that night.

"I can memorize a Hamlet soliloquy, or a poem, but I do not memorize music," Steinberg said. "Some things, however, I know that well that I do not need a score, either in rehearsal or in performance."

It was announced two weeks ago Steinberg would not continue with the Boston symphony when his current contract expires, since the Pittsburgh orchestra has asked more of his time.

For those who doubted it can be reported Steinberg is alive and well here, looking forward to leading his Pittsburgh orchestra tonight in the Music Hall.

The program: Overture to "Oberon," Weber; Symphony No. 6 in B Minor, Op. 74 ("Pathetique"); "Don Juan," Strauss; "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks," Strauss.

The Kansas City Times
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 334,249
FEB 19 1971

THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER
D. 189,425 SUN. 302,445
FEB 7 1971

Boston

The post of music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra also is open when William Steinberg's contract expires in 1972. Rumors indicate some of the same persons are being considered there.

LONG ISLAND PRESS
October 14, 1970

ON PODIUM: Maestro William Steinberg is on the podium for three concert series openers. He conducts the Boston Symphony tonight and Friday in Philharmonic Hall and conducts tomorrow night in Carnegie Hall.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967
(S) 566,377
FEB 9 1971

Steinberg expected to leave BSO after 1971-72 season

By Michael Steinberg
Globe Staff

The 1971-72 season is likely to be William Steinberg's last as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was learned yesterday Steinberg, who will be 73 at the end of that season, plans thereafter to devote his main energies to the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra whose music director he has been since 1952.

He has held the music directorship of both orchestras since 1969, dividing his time more or less equally between them in 1969-70, though kept out of action much of last year because of illness. During the current year he has been conducting about half the Pittsburgh season and one quarter of Boston's.

By 1972 the Pittsburgh Symphony expects to have completed a $4 million fund drive that will bring its endowment to $20 million. It will have moved into a new hall, increased its size to 106 players, offering them year-round employment for the first time. The Pittsburgh trustees asked Steinberg if for that gala year for their orchestra he would increase his commitment to them for 22 weeks of conducting, and he said he

That would leave him only eight weeks for Boston, and he commented he thought that too short a period to justify his continuing to have the responsibilities and title of music director. He has offered to continue to serve the Boston Symphony with some such title as senior conductor or musical adviser. The Boston Symphony's future arrangement with Steinberg will be discussed at a trustees' meeting Thursday.

Steinberg's three-year contract with Boston for the seasons 1969-72 was announced in the spring of 1968 following the announcement in December 1967 by Erich Leinsdorf, music director since 1962, of his intention to resign as of the end of the summer of 1968.

Chicago
today
American
Always on Top of the News
D. 436,893 SUN. 483,418
FEB 15 1971

William Steinberg announced his decision to leave the Boston Symphony as music director upon completion of an initial 3-year contract [in the spring of 1972], to concentrate on the Pittsburgh Symphony — of which he is lifetime music director — and guest conducting. The Boston trustees, known to have wooed but not won either Herbert von Karajan or Rafael Kubelik, are begging his reconsideration thru the 1972-73 season, but Steinberg says he will have only 8 weeks free for Boston then. Shall his successor be, as lately rumored, Claudio Abbado—or, as also rumored, young Michael Tillson Thomas?

FOR THOSE OF YOU who like Tanglewood over there at Lenox, Mass. every summer, it's of interest to hear that music director William Steinberg won't be renewing his contract with the Boston Symphony. He was named to the post after Erich Leinsdorf left in the fall of 1969. The Pittsburg Symphony, which Steinberg also directs, has asked him to devote more of his time to that orchestra.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
FEB 12 1971

New York Post
D. 708,180 SAT. 369,902
FEB 12 1971

Steinberg to Leave Boston in Spring '72

William Steinberg, currently music director of both the Pittsburgh and Boston Symphony Orchestras, will leave the Boston at the expiration of his current contract in the spring of '72. He has been asked by the Pittsburgh Board to give the orchestra more time, especially as it has plans for expansion and in view of the completion of the reconstruction of the Penn Theater in downtown Pittsburgh in the fall of this year. Donald Johanos, formerly music director of the Dallas Symphony, will remain as associate conductor of Pittsburgh.

Steinberg will devote at least 22 weeks to the '72-'73 season and will participate in the Temple University Summer Music Festival and Institute.

63

FREE PRESS
BURLINGTON, VERMONT
(M) 41,[illegible]

OCT 1[illegible] 1970

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
SUN
D. 33,500 S. 3[illegible]

JAN 21 1971

Fiedler Conducting Pops Sunday

IN CONCERT — Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops will be guest conductor at the Las Vegas Symphony Concert, Sunday, Jan 24, 4 p.m., in the Rotunda Convention Center.

★ ★ ★

The Las Vegas Symphony Concert will present an afternoon of Pops music, Sunday, Jan. 24, 4 p.m., in the Rotunda Convention Center. Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops will be guest conductor.

Bostonian Arthur Fiedler is more than the local boy who made good. He is the local boy who has made an indelible mark not only on the musical history of his city, but on the musical taste of millions throughout the world.

Born in Boston on December 17, 1894, Arthur Fiedler inherited a rich family background of European musical culture. His father, Austrian-born Emanuel Fiedler, was a first violinist with the Boston Symphony (no relation to Max Fiedler, onetime conductor of the BSO). "I was brought up in the European manner," Fiedler says. "As a young boy, I practiced the violin and piano, and studied French and German. I didn't like music more than any other kid. Practice and lessons were drudgery." When Arthur showed progress in his practice sessions, his mother rewarded him with a trip to B. F. Keith's vaudeville theatre — which may account for his reputation not only as a popular conductor but as a showman par excellence.

Fiedler's formal education was obtained at the Prince Grammar School and the Boston Latin School until his father's retirement after twenty-five years in the Boston Symphony and the family's return to their native Austria. In Vienna and later in Berlin, teen-aged Arthur worked in the publishing business before entering the Royal Academy in Berlin as a student of violin, piano and conducting.

Important in making the names of Fiedler and the Boston Pops into household words has been recordings. The Boston Pops has made more records than any other orchestra. Fiedler's rediscovery of a forgotten Jacob Gade composition, "Jalousie," resulted in the sale of over one million copies of this record by Fiedler and his Pops. In the summer of 1958 RCA honored Mr. Fiedler with a plaque commemorating both his 30th anniversary with the Esplanade concerts and the sale of his two millionth album. Since 1958 another four million Pops albums have been sold, and the Pops and Fiedler have averaged a million singles a year. The total sales are now over 47,000,000.

General admission $2, $3 and $5. The Convention Center Box Office will be open Saturday and Sunday, 1-4 p.m. For further information call 384-1139 or 382-2012.

ARTHUR FIEDLER TO DO ROCK OF AGES COMMERCIAL

BARRE — The conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, has been signed by the Rock of Ages Corp. to be the spokesman in the company's national advertising program for 1971. He will be the spokesman in a TV commercial to be filmed in Symphony Hall, Boston.

A stereo record, "Music for Memories," recorded by the Boston Pops and produced for Rock of Ages by RCA Victor, will be offered in the commercial to qualified memorial prospects by the company's dealers.

MACON, GA.
TELEGRAPH
D. 50,500

JAN 27 1971

Concert Here To Include 'Dash of the Unexpected'

When Arthur Fiedler conducts the Atlanta Sumphony Orchestra at the Grand Opera House here Sunday afternoon, he will once again use his familiar formula for entertaining an audience: "two parts classical and semi-classical to one part popular — plus a dash of the unexpected."

The concert, third in a series the Atlanta orchestra is presenting in Macon during the season, will begin at 2:30 p.m.

The program will include Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor, Op. 23, featuring soloist Barry Snyder.

Other selections will be Festive Overture, Op. 96, by Shostakovitch; Dances from The Three-Cornered Hat, de Falla, and Music from the Movies, "Hello Dolly", by Herman; "Love Is A Many Splendored Thing", Fain; "Consider Yourself, Bart, and selections from "Hair", MacDermot.

According to officials of the Macon Arts Council, sponsor for the symphony series, tickets for the concert are available at the Grand Opera House box office, telephone 745-7925.

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
REVIEW-JOURNAL
D. 52,000 S. 55,

JAN 17 1971

Las Vegas Convention

Symphony Society to p

The Las Vegas Symphony Society will present Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops Orchestra, as guest conductor of the Las Vegas Symphony Orchestra on Sunday, January 24 at 4 p.m. in the Rotunda of the Las Vegas Convention Center.

The box office at the Convention Center will be open January 16, 23 and 24 from 1 to 4 p.m. For further information call 384-1139 or 382-2012.

In his hometown of Boston, Arthur Fiedler is an institution. His unique personality, his flair, style and individual approach to music have made him a s familiar and beloved a feature of Boston life as Symphony Hall-where, each spring, he inaugurates the Boston Pops season. Bostonian Arthur Fiedler is more than the local boy who male good. He is the local boy who has made an indelible mark not only on the musical history of his city, but on the musical taste of millions throughout the world.

Born in Boston on December 17, 1894, Fiedler inherited a rich family background of European musical culture. His father, Austrian-born Emanuel Fiedler, was a first violinist with the Boston Symphony (no relation to Max Fiedler, onetime conductor of the BSO), and his mother was a "good amateur musician" who gave the young Arthur his first piano, and studied French and German. European manner, Fiedler says. As a young boy, I practiced the violin and piano lessons: "I was brought up in the I didn't like music more than any other kid. Practice and lessons were drudgery." When Fiedler showed progress in his practice sessions, his mother rewarded him with a trip to B. F. Keith's vaudeville theatre—which may account for his reputation not only as a popular conductor but as a showman par excellence.

Fiedler's formal education was obtained at the Prince Grammar School and the Boston Latin School until his father's retirement after twenty-five years in the Boston Sumphony and the family's return to their native Austria. In Vienna and later in Berlin, teen-aged Arthur worked in the publishing business before entering the Royal Academy in Berlin as a student of violin, piano and conducting.

With the advent of World War I Fiedler returned to Boston and in 1915, at the age of twenty, joined the Boston Symphony as a violinist under Karl Muck. His ambition to conduct led him to form, nine years later, the Boston Sinfonietta, a chamber orchestra composed of Boston Symphony members. At the same time he continued play as a member of the Boston Symphony, playing the violin, viola, piano, celesta, organ and even percussion instruments.

In 1929, after long planning and financial struggle, Mr. Fiedler launched the first of the free outdoor Esplanade Concerts on the east bank of the Charles River, at the foot of Boston's Beacon Hill. The final stamp of approval was placed on Fiedler's Esplanade project in July 1954 when Governor Christian Herter of Massachusetts celebrated the 25th anniversary of the concerts by dedicating a new "Arthur Fiedler Bridge" over the highway bordering the area.

In 1930 Fiedler was appointed the 18th conductor of Boston Pops concerts, a feature of Boston's musical life since 1885. Under his direction, the Boston Pops has become familiar to the music-minded citizens of the world. Fiedler states that the key to the great success of the Pops is: "A Strauss waltz is as good a thing of its kind as a Beethoven symphony. It's nice to eat a chunk of beef, but you want a slice of light dessert, too."

Important in making the names of Fiedler and the Boston Pops into household words has been recordings. The Boston Pops has made more records than any other orchestra. Fiedler's rediscovery of a forgotten Jacob Gade composition, "Jalousie," resulted in the sale of over one million copies of this record by Fiedler and his Pops. In the summer of 1958 RCA honored Fiedler with a plaque commemorating both his 30th anniversary with the Esplanade concerts and the sale of his two millionth album. Since 1958 another four million Pops albums have been sold and the Pops and Fiedler have averaged a million singles a year. The total sales are now over 47,000,000.

Arthur Fiedler has also found time during his busy career to teach at Boston University, to conduct Boston's Cecilia Society Chorus, the University Glee Club of Providence, Rhode Island, and the MacDowell Club Orchestra of Boston. He has conducted a long list of top American orchestras including the Boston Symphony. His conducting career has taken him to all corners of North America, as well as Europe, Africa, Asia, South America and Australia.

Married since 1942 to former Boston debutante Ellen Bottomley, Mr. and Mrs. Fiedler and their three children live in suburban Brookline. Fiedler cherishes his status as an active honorary member of the Boston Fire Department, and his car is equipped with a short wave radio and siren to keep him in constant touch with his revered fire-fighters.

In almost every city he visits, Fiedler is designated an honorary Fire Chief with appropriate badge and helmet. His collection is large, with regalia from over a hundred cities in this country and abroad. He speaks to the world through the universal language of music, and the universal appeal of the Boston Pops.

FREE PRESS
BURLINGTON, VERMONT
(M) 41,[illegible]

OCT 1[illegible] 1970

ARTHUR FIEDLER TO DO ROCK OF AGES COMMERCIAL

BARRE — The conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, has been signed by the Rock of Ages Corp. to be the spokesman in the company's national advertising program for 1971. He will be the spokesman in a TV commercial to be filmed in Symphony Hall, Boston.

A stereo record, "Music for Memories," recorded by the Boston Pops and produced for Rock of Ages by RCA Victor, will be offered in the commercial to qualified memorial prospects by the company's dealers.

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
SUN
D. 33,500 S. 3:

JAN 21 1971

Fiedler Conducting Pops Sunday

IN CONCERT — Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops will be guest conductor at the Las Vegas Symphony Concert, Sunday, Jan 24, 4 p.m., in the Rotunda Convention Center.

★ ★ ★

The Las Vegas Symphony Concert will present an afternoon of Pops music, Sunday, Jan. 24, 4 p.m., in the Rotunda Convention Center. Arthur Fiedler of the Boston Pops will be guest conductor.

Bostonian Arthur Fiedler is more than the local boy who made good. He is the local boy who has made an indelible mark not only on the musical history of his city, but on the musical taste of millions throughout the world.

Born in Boston on December 17, 1894, Arthur Fiedler inherited a rich family background of European musical culture. His father, Austrian-born Emanuel Fiedler, was a first violinist with the Boston Symphony (no relation to Max Fiedler, onetime conductor of the BSO). "I was brought up in the European manner," Fiedler says. "As a young boy, I practiced the violin and piano, and studied French and German. I didn't like music more than any other kid. Practice and lessons were drudgery." When Arthur showed progress in his practice sessions, his mother rewarded him with a trip to B. F. Keith's vaudeville theatre — which may account for his reputation not only as a popular conductor but as a showman par excellence.

★ ★ ★

Fiedler's formal education was obtained at the Prince Grammar School and the Boston Latin School until his father's retirement after twenty-five years in the Boston Symphony and the family's return to their native Austria. In Vienna and later in Berlin, teen-aged Arthur worked in the publishing business before entering the Royal Academy in Berlin as a student of violin, piano and conducting.

Important in making the names of Fiedler and the Boston Pops into household words has been recordings. The Boston Pops has made more records than any other orchestra. Fiedler's rediscovery of a forgotten Jacob Gade composition, "Jalousie," resulted in the sale of over one million copies of this record by Fiedler and his Pops. In the summer of 1958 RCA honored Mr. Fiedler with a plaque commemorating both his 30th anniversary with the Esplanade concerts and the sale of his two millionth album. Since 1958 another four million Pops albums have been sold, and the Pops and Fiedler have averaged a million singles a year. The total sales are now over 47,000,000.

★ ★ ★

General admission $2, $3 and $5. The Convention Center Box Office will be open Saturday and Sunday, 1-4 p.m. For further information call 384-1139 or 382-2012.

MACON, GA.
TELEGRAPH
D. 50,500

JAN 27 1971

Concert Here To Include 'Dash of the Unexpected'

When Arthur Fiedler conducts the Atlanta Sumphony Orchestra at the Grand Opera House here Sunday afternoon, he will once again use his familiar formula for entertaining an audience: "two parts classical and semi-classical to one part popular — plus a dash of the unexpected."

The concert, third in a series the Atlanta orchestra is presenting in Macon during the season, will begin at 2:30 p.m.

The program will include Tchaikovsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor, Op. 23, featuring soloist Barry Snyder.

Other selections will be Festive Overture, Op. 96, by Shostakovitch; Dances from The Three-Cornered Hat, de Falla, and Music from the Movies, "Hello Dolly", by Herman; "Love Is A Many Splendored Thing", Fain; "Consider Yourself, Bart, and selections from "Hair", MacDermot.

According to officials of the Macon Arts Council, sponsor for the symphony series, tickets for the concert are available at the Grand Opera House box office, telephone 745-7925.

LAS VEGAS, NEV.
REVIEW-JOURNAL
D. 52,000 S. 55,

JAN 17 1971

Center site for concert

present Arthur Fiedler

FADED TEXT

65.

Point Of View

Arthur Fiedler: Brisk At 75

By DONALD FREEMAN
Copley News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — It's a wonderful life when you're Arthur Fiedler, a briskly youthful 75 and still one of the surpassing giants and genuinely beloved figures of the symphonic world.

"I don't mean to boast about my age," said the maestro, for 41 years now the conductor of the Boston Pops, "but it's a fact and I live with it. I live with it very nicely."

For his 75th birthday, last December, Fiedler was saying his family gave him a 1937 fire engine from Milford, N.H. "Ah, what a beauty she is!" raved the maestro, a fire-fighting buff and an honorary fire chief in over 200 cities. "I drive to all the fires in Boston. I keep my fire engine in my garage and I put my Lincoln out in the street."

Fiedler was leading his Boston Pops in a concert in San Francisco and it seemed fitting for Station KQED, the public TV station, to honor the maestro at a luncheon. Fiedler has just launched his "Evening at Pops" concert series for the Public Broadcasting Service, featuring such people as Peter Nero, Doc Severinsen, George Shearing, Chet Atkins.

Guitar-playing Chet Atkins from Nashville? "Absolutely," said Dr. Fiedler. "Chet Atkins is a fine artist and a true gentleman."

It is typical of Arthur Fiedler that he draws no artificially inhibiting musical boundaries. He was, for instance, the first of the classicists to praise the Beatles and to record their music. "I got a letter from one of the Beatles," Fiedler recalled gleefully. "Just a little note really. It read: 'Dear Mr. Fiedler — You've got a great band. Thanks a lot.' "

Fiedler munched on crab salad, sipped his champagne and talked with great gusto. He's a dignified-looking Bostonian with a snowy thatch of hair and a silver moustache, a dapper man in his tweed sport jacket set off by a black knit tie on his striped shirt. He looked terrific. And, apparently, he feels like several million untaxable dollars.

"It must be a healthful activity, conducting an orchestra," Fiedler said. "But the legs do go first."

"How do you stay in shape, maestro?"

"By conducting," Fiedler said, "and by walking. Conductors do seem to have a durability. One reason, I believe, is that as you conduct you perspire terribly. Conducting is like a healthful Turkish bath, beginning with the downbeat.

"From the waist up, I'm built like a prizefighter. Strong! Muscular! A conductor gets very developed in the arms and shoulders. Try waving a baton for a couple of hours and you will see what it does. But one must watch the legs. I walk a lot. I shun elevators. I don't walk up Bunker Hill or the Empire State Building but I'll always walk up four or five floors."

Conducting is, however, more than physical movement, Fiedler pointed out. It is an exercise in control.

"This is what a symphony conductor is," said Fiedler. "He's a mother hen with a hundred chicks — a mother hen that's earned a degree in psychology the hard way. To lead a symphony, to make a hundred or so musicians conform to your will in a split second with only a quick glance — there are oh, so many pitfalls. Some musicians hate conductors. Some musicians hate music.

"And if you are a guest conductor — and I have conducted all over the world — some orchestras are more difficult than others.

"The New York Philharmonic—I shall put this as diplomatically as possible — is not the untoughest orchestra to lead."

Dr. Fiedler still harbors an ambition to conduct the Duke Ellington orchestra. But one night in New Orleans he did lead Al Hirt's group. "Al Hirt had played with the Boston Pops and invited me to reciprocate," Fiedler said. "So I did. 'Take over, maestro,' Al said. I got up and I noticed he had only six musicians. 'Al,' I said, 'where are the other 89 men?' "

Fiedler said he has an 18-year-old son who leads a rock group and his own tastes have few limits. "I agree with Rossini who once said, 'All music is wonderful except the boring kind.' I like whatever's good — classics, rock, a good Sousa march, a Strauss waltz, jazz. It's all stupid snobbery, the idea that if you like Bartok you can't like Tchaikovsky, too."

Would the maestro care to rate the world's symphonies? He hesitated, then he shrugged. "The Boston Symphony, of course, the Cleveland, the New York, the Chicago, the Philadelphia — but in no order, you understand. They are like five beautiful women, each slightly different. How do you choose from five Miss Universes?"

THE POST
FRANKLIN, MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY
NOV 16 1970
New England

The Tampa Times
TAMPA, FLA.
D. 31,651
SEP 26 1970

Brahms turns them on

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Youthful peace groups have been dancing — and raising money — to the blasting strains of rock music. Now they plan to try a new approach to broaden their appeal.

They're going long-hair — Brahms, that is.

The new approach will be sounded tomorrow at an all-Brahms concert in Washington sponsored by 10 national anti-war groups. It will be called "In Concert for Peace."

THE ORGANIZERS hope it will be the forerunner of similar concerts across the country.

Mike Bialek, spokesman for the concert coordinating committee of the peace groups, says the main reason for the concert is to bring together classical music lovers, regardless of their political views, in an atmosphere of peace. Besides, of course, raising some money.

"What we'd like to do," Bialek said, "is to set up a national organization to give concerts by a variety of artists, as sort of an artists' clearing house, besides raising money.

"The people involved with this want to express their dedication to peaceful ideals through artistic means, rather than make these concerts political forums."

PROFITS WILL be used by the anti-war groups to pay off debts and, if possible, to support peace candidates and "candidates working to save the environment."

But, Bialek said, "We don't think of this as a politically-oriented event, we like to think of it as a concert for classical music lovers."

"We chose Brahms," he added, "because we found that the members of our committee and our advisory board have a mutual interest in classical music. Also, we thought an all-Brahms program would be unusual."

If the concert succeeds, the "In Concert for Peace" alliance hopes to stage other programs possibly including theatrical events as well as musical concerts, coordinating them on a national level.

"ACTUALLY, we have an existence of our own now," Bialek said. "We've had several congressmen in contact with us." He said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., has promised to attend the concert at Constitution Hall.

Artists featured in the concert tomorrow will include pianist Misha Dichter and violinists James Oliver Buswell and Leslie Parnas. Members of Washington's National Symphony Orchestra will participate, with Michael Tilson Thomas conducting the program.

Tilson Thomas, 26, has been an associate conductor of the Boston Symphony since 1969, and has guest-conducted the London and Los Angeles symphonies.

Dichter, a prize winner at the 3rd international Tchaikovsky piano competition in Moscow, has appeared with orchestras in Boston, New York, London and Los Angeles, and has toured the Soviet Union.

BUSWELL, 23, has been hailed as a virtuoso since the age of 15, and has soloed with nearly every major orchestra in North America. He also has recorded with the London Symphony.

To emphasize the artistic nature of the concert, Bialek said, "The Daughters of the American Revolution didn't object when we rented Constitution Hall." The DAR, which owns the hall, is strongly anti-Communist and an advocate of victory in Vietnam.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000
FEB 25 1971

Thomas Named Buffalo Conductor Retains BSO Post

Michael Tilson Thomas, the 26-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic effective with the beginning of the 1971-72 season.

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

Mr. Thomas will continue in his post with the Boston Symphony, which he joined as assistant conductor in 1969. Following a mid-concert substitution for William Steinberg at Philharmonic Hall when the latter became ill, Mr. Thomas conducted the Boston Symphony in more than 30 concerts during his first season with it. He was named associate conductor in 1970.

The Buffalo Philharmonic has been without a music director since Lukas Foss resigned in 1970. Mr. Thomas is expected to conduct between 12 and 20 of its 28 concerts during his first season with the orchestra.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 244,000
JAN 16 1971

. . . Musical charisma is not among the missing elements, either, what with young podium dynamo Michael Tilson Thomas (photo below) turning up at major halls within these few days, at the head of the Boston Symphony: at the Brooklyn Academy Jan. 14, at Philharmonic Jan. 15, at Carnegie Jan. 16. The first and third programs are identical, with violinist Joseph Silverstein. At Philharmonic, saxophonist Harvey Pittel will be soloist . . . Abraham Kaplan and his Camerata Singers and Symphony are at Philharmonic Hall Jan. 24 for an evening of Brahms ("Liebeslieder Walzer"), Kodaly ("Missa Brevis"), and several a capella songs . . . Two virtuosos: guitarist Andres Segovia, who's at Philharmonic Hall Jan. 22, and violinist Leonid Kogan, who'll be at Carnegie Jan. 23. . . . And the mood goes Latino, at Philharmonic Jan. 23, with Sergio Mendes and Brasil '66.

CONDUCTOR IS 26

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Tilson Thomas, 26, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Los Angeles native will add these duties to his Boston duties beginning next fall.

Thomas was appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1969, following his winning the Koussevitzky Conducting Award at Tanglewood in 1968. During his first season, he made a dramatic substitution when conductor William Steinberg got sick in the middle of a concert in New York's Philharmonic Hall. He was appointed Boston associate conductor in 1970.

Previous music director in Buffalo was Lukas Foss, who programmed a lot of modern music.

NEWS-TRIBUNE
WALTHAM, MASS.
(E) 16,245
DEC 19 1970

Young Conductor Visits Newton, Relates Career

Michael Tilson Thomas, young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, visited Newton High School this week.

He came at the invitation of the Career Guidance Resources Center to speak on careers in music. The audience of students and faculty had an opportunity to question Thomas on career preparation as well as on his own career.

At age 25, Thomas has established an international reputation in the world of music. Time Magazine described him as the most naturally gifted young conductor to come along since Leonard Bernstein more than a generation ago.

FADED TEXT

65

Point Of View

Arthur Fiedler: Brisk At 75

By DONALD FREEMAN
Copley News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — It's a wonderful life when you're Arthur Fiedler, a briskly youthful 75 and still one of the surpassing giants and genuinely beloved figures of the symphonic world.

"I don't mean to boast about my age," said the maestro, for 41 years now the conductor of the Boston Pops, "but it's a fact and I live with it. I live with it very nicely."

For his 75th birthday, last December, Fiedler was saying his family gave him a 1937 fire engine from Milford, N.H. "Ah, what a beauty she is!" raved the maestro, a fire-fighting buff and an honorary fire chief in over 200 cities. "I drive to all the fires in Boston. I keep my fire engine in my garage and I put my Lincoln out in the street."

Fiedler was leading his Boston Pops in a concert in San Francisco and it seemed fitting for Station KQED, the public TV station, to honor the maestro at a luncheon. Fiedler has just launched his "Evening at Pops" concert series for the Public Broadcasting Service, featuring such people as Peter Nero, Doc Severinsen, George Shearing, Chet Atkins.

Guitar-playing Chet Atkins from Nashville? "Absolutely," said Dr. Fiedler. "Chet Atkins is a fine artist and a true gentleman."

It is typical of Arthur Fiedler that he draws no artificially inhibiting musical boundaries. He was, for instance, the first of the classicists to praise the Beatles and to record their music. "I got a letter from one of the Beatles," Fiedler recalled gleefully. "Just a little note really. It read: 'Dear Mr. Fiedler — You've got a great band. Thanks a lot.' "

Fiedler munched on crab salad, sipped his champagne and talked with great gusto. He's a dignified-looking Bostonian with a snowy thatch of hair and a silver moustache, a dapper man in his tweed sport jacket set off by a black knit tie on his striped shirt. He looked terrific. And, apparently, he feels like several million untaxable dollars.

"It must be a healthful activity, conducting an orchestra," Fiedler said. "But the legs do go first."

"How do you stay in shape, maestro?"

"By conducting," Fiedler said, "and by walking. Conductors do seem to have a durability. One reason, I believe, is that as you conduct you perspire terribly. Conducting is like a healthful Turkish bath, beginning with the downbeat.

"From the waist up, I'm built like a prizefighter. Strong! Muscular! A conductor gets very developed in the arms and shoulders. Try waving a baton for a couple of hours and you will see what it does. But one must watch the legs. I walk a lot. I shun elevators. I don't walk up Bunker Hill or the Empire State Building but I'll always walk up four or five floors."

Conducting is, however, more than physical movement, Fiedler pointed out. It is an exercise in control.

"This is what a symphony conductor is," said Fiedler. "He's a mother hen with a hundred chicks — a mother hen that's earned a degree in psychology the hard way. To lead a symphony, to make a hundred or so musicians conform to your will in a split second with only a quick glance — there are oh, so many pitfalls. Some musicians hate conductors. Some musicians hate music.

"And if you are a guest conductor — and I have conducted all over the world — some orchestras are more difficult than others.

"The New York Philharmonic—I shall put this as diplomatically as possible — is not the untoughest orchestra to lead."

Dr. Fiedler still harbors an ambition to conduct the Duke Ellington orchestra. But one night in New Orleans he did lead Al Hirt's group. "Al Hirt had played with the Boston Pops and invited me to reciprocate," Fiedler said. "So I did. 'Take over, maestro,' Al said. I got up and I noticed he had only six musicians. 'Al,' I said, 'where are the other 89 men?' "

Fiedler said he has an 18-year-old son who leads a rock group and his own tastes have few limits. "I agree with Rossini who once said, 'All music is wonderful except the boring kind.' I like whatever's good — classics, rock, a good Sousa march, a Strauss waltz, jazz. It's all stupid snobbery, the idea that if you like Bartok you can't like Tchaikovsky, too."

Would the maestro care to rate the world's symphonies? He hesitated, then he shrugged. "The Boston Symphony, of course, the Cleveland, the New York, the Chicago, the Philadelphia — but in no order, you understand. They are like five beautiful women, each slightly different. How do you choose from five Miss Universes?"

THE POST
FRANKLIN, MASSACHUSETTS
NOV 16 1970

CONDUCTOR IS 26

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Tilson Thomas, 26, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Los Angeles native will add these duties to his Boston duties beginning next fall.

Thomas was appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1969, following his winning the Koussevitzky Conducting Award at Tanglewood in 1968. During his first season, he made a dramatic substitution when conductor William Steinberg got sick in the middle of a concert in New York's Philharmonic Hall. He was appointed Boston associate conductor in 1970.

Previous music director in Buffalo was Lukas Foss, who programmed a lot of modern music.

NEWS-TRIBUNE
WALTHAM, MASS.
(D 15,24[illegible])

DEC 1[illegible]

Young Conductor Visits Newton, Relates Career

Michael Tilson Thomas, young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, visited Newton High School this week.

He came at the invitation of the Career Guidance Resources Center to speak on careers in music. The audience of students and faculty had an opportunity to question Thomas on career preparation as well as on his own career.

At age 25, Thomas has established an international reputation in the world of music. Time Magazine described him as the most naturally gifted young conductor to come along since Leonard Bernstein more than a generation ago.

Brahms turns them on

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Youthful peace groups have been dancing — and raising money — to the blasting strains of rock music. Now they plan to try a new approach to broaden their appeal.

They're going long-hair — Brahms, that is.

The new approach will be sounded tomorrow at an all-Brahms concert in Washington sponsored by 10 national anti-war groups. It will be called "In Concert for Peace."

THE ORGANIZERS hope it will be the forerunner of similar concerts across the country.

Mike Bialek, spokesman for the concert coordinating committee of the peace groups, says the main reason for the concert is to bring together classical music lovers, regardless of their political views, in an atmosphere of peace. Besides, of course, raising some money.

"What we'd like to do," Bialek said, "is to set up a national organization to give concerts by a variety of artists, as sort of an artists' clearing house, besides raising money.

"The people involved with this want to express their dedication to peaceful ideals through artistic means, rather than make these concerts political forums."

PROFITS WILL be used by the anti-war groups to pay off debts and, if possible, to support peace candidates and "candidates working to save the environment."

But, Bialek said, "We don't think of this as a politically-oriented event, we like to think of it as a concert for classical music lovers."

"We chose Brahms," he added, "because we found that the members of our committee and our advisory board have a mutual interest in classical music. Also, we thought an all-Brahms program would be unusual."

If the concert succeeds, the "In Concert for Peace" alliance hopes to stage other programs possibly including theatrical events as well as musical concerts, coordinating them on a national level.

"ACTUALLY, we have an existence of our own now," Bialek said. "We've had several congressmen in contact with us." He said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., has promised to attend the concert at Constitution Hall.

Artists featured in the concert tomorrow will include pianist Misha Dichter and violinists James Oliver Buswell and Leslie Parnas. Members of Washington's National Symphony Orchestra will participate, with Michael Tilson Thomas conducting the program.

Tilson Thomas, 26, has been an associate conductor of the Boston Symphony since 1969, and has guest-conducted the London and Los Angeles symphonies.

Dichter, a prize winner at the 3rd international Tchaikovsky piano competition in Moscow, has appeared with orchestras in Boston, New York, London and Los Angeles, and has toured the Soviet Union.

BUSWELL, 23, has been hailed as a virtuoso since the age of 15, and has soloed with nearly every major orchestra in North America. He also has recorded with the London Symphony.

To emphasize the artistic nature of the concert, Bialek said, "The Daughters of the American Revolution didn't object when we rented Constitution Hall." The DAR, which owns the hall, is strongly anti-Communist and an advocate of victory in Vietnam.

The Tampa Times
TAMPA, FLA.
D. 31,651
SEP 26 1970

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS
WEEKLY 2[illegible]

FEB 25 1971

Thomas Named Buffalo Conductor Retains BSO Post

Michael Tilson Thomas, the 26-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic effective with the beginning of the 1971-72 season.

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

Mr. Thomas will continue in his post with the Boston Symphony, which he joined as assistant conductor in 1969. Following a mid-concert substitution for William Steinberg at Philharmonic Hall when the latter became ill, Mr. Thomas conducted the Boston Symphony in more than 30 concerts during his first season with it. He was named associate conductor in 1970.

The Buffalo Philharmonic has been without a music director since Lukas Foss resigned in 1970. Mr. Thomas is expected to conduct between 12 and 20 of its 28 concerts during his first season with the orchestra.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 2[illegible]

JAN 16 1971

. . . Musical charisma is not among the missing elements, either, what with young podium dynamo Michael Tilson Thomas (photo below) turning up at major halls within these few days, at the head of the Boston Symphony: at the Brooklyn Academy Jan. 14, at Philharmonic Jan. 15, at Carnegie Jan. 16. The first and third programs are identical, with violinist Joseph Silverstein. At Philharmonic, saxophonist Harvey Pittel will be soloist . . . Abraham Kaplan and his Camerata Singers and Symphony are at Philharmonic Hall Jan. 24 for an evening of Brahms ("Liebeslieder Walzer"), Kodaly ("Missa Brevis"), and several a capella songs . . . Two virtuosos: guitarist Andres Segovia, who's at Philharmonic Hall Jan. 22, and violinist Leonid Kogan, who'll be at Carnegie Jan. 23. . . . And the mood goes Latino, at Philharmonic Jan. 23, with Sergio Mendes and Brasil '66.

With Michael Tilson Thomas, the show really does go on!

By ROY HEMMING

NOT since Leonard Bernstein in the 1940's has a young American conductor bowled over the musical Establishment so completely as 25-year-old Michael Tilson Thomas.

It was just a year ago this week – on October 22, 1969 – that he made a dramatic, last-minute substitution for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's regular conductor, William Steinberg, when Steinberg became ill halfway through a concert in New York.

What made Thomas' "going on" doubly dramatic was the fact that he had been named Steinberg's assistant only a few weeks before – the youngest in the Boston Symphony's history. Usually the job of assistant conductor is filled with lots of hard work behind-the-scenes, and little glory. But there he was out front, leading one of the world's greatest orchestras (some would say the greatest) – and doing so before some of the nation's toughest critics.

When it was over, the audience was cheering and the critics glowing.

Backstage after the concert, the tall (6'1"), openly friendly young stand-in told this reporter: "I still don't believe I was really out there."

Over the next few months, Steinberg's continuing illness threw onto Thomas' shoulders the responsibility for rehearsing and conducting more than 30 other BSO concerts. And when it came time this spring for the orchestra to make its first recording under a new contract with Deutsche Grammophon, it was Michael Thomas who conducted it. That recording (a coupling of two American works: Ives' Three Places in New England and Ruggles' Sun-Treader) has just been released this month, and has already won exciting critical kudos.

Even at a time when our culture seems more youth-oriented than ever, Thomas' rise has been unusually swift. Born in Hollywood, Calif., in 1945 (his father is film writer-director Ted Thomas; a family cousin was the late actor Paul Muni), Michael was winning prizes in both science and music while attending North Hollywood High School and the University of Southern California. At 19 he was conducting a youth orchestra in Los Angeles, and then became an assistant to Pierre Boulez at festivals in both California and Germany. In 1968, while studying at Tanglewood (the Boston Symphony's summer home), he conducted a student performance of a part-rock opera, Elephant Steps. A year later he became Steinberg's assistant.

This spring the Boston Symphony promoted Thomas to Associate Conductor. He will be conducting as many scheduled concerts this year as the now-recovered Steinberg. He is a young man definitely on his way.

I talked with Thomas a few weeks ago at Tanglewood about the past year's events, and other topics.

R.H.: How do you feel the past year has changed you personally?

M.T.T.: Whew! Let me answer this way: The first time I took over the concerts in New York, I just went through it and couldn't remember very much of what happened – as I told you then. The second night, in Philadelphia, I was fine. The third night was again in New York – and suddenly on that third night it hit me. My God! I'm here! I'm conducting this orchestra in this music which I never really rehearsed! That was about the most frightening moment of the year.

R.H.: And now?

M.T.T.: Now, I think I'm really aware of the enormous difficulty of being a conductor – of really being an effective conductor – and of not trying to fool anybody else, or yourself. It's hard, because your standards get higher and higher. Now I want even more things from myself than I did a year ago.

R.H.: What thoughts went through your mind as you approached your first recording session with the Boston Symphony? How different is it, for example, from stepping out on the podium to conduct a "live" concert?

M.T.T.: An enormous difference. You listen to what's happening differently. In a concert, you're doing it, you want to be into it, carrying the whole thing in a sweep. And if one or two minor details go wrong, or if somebody coughs, it doesn't make much difference. But with a recording you become superfinicky about everything. Was this really together? Was this really the way you wanted it to be? Sometimes there are things in the score you feel differently every night. You play with them – one way one time, another way another time. Or maybe you get access to new materials or research. But suddenly in a recording session you're aware that the way you happen to be doing it now is going to become "the way you do it" to listeners for years. I remember when Judy Collins came to Tanglewood once – an artist I admire immensely, incidentally – and she did "Suzanne" very differently from her record. I heard people say, "Well, it was nice, but you know it was sort of strange. She didn't do it the way she does it." Of course, I felt such tremendous respect for her for not having solidified just one version.

R.H.: What does classical music really have to say to young people today? Why do you feel it's worthwhile to devote your life to classical music?

M.T.T.: Because, ultimately, it is the most revelatory and most rewarding music. It's music which is worked out on so many different levels simultaneously. It's music that you can listen, listen, listen to, and study for 35, 50, 70 years – and still find, constantly, things that you never knew were there before. To me, it's the same reason why we should be interested in Shakespeare or Oedipus, because they are really universal statements. It doesn't make much difference whether they're done with strobe lights or megaphones, or whether they're electrified or amplified or whatever.

R.H.: Yet why is there so much resistance to it among young people?

M.T.T.: Because it really wasn't that widely available until very recently. Also, there was this immense snobbery connected with it – the society thing with the concert hall and all that. I think we're beginning to get beyond that now. The fact that rock music, especially, has become so much more sophisticated harmonically and rhythmically, kind of leads young people much more naturally into deeper, more diverse areas of music.

R.H.: Were you ever into rock?

M.T.T.: Until my second or third year in college, I didn't want to have anything to do with pop music. Then, around 1962, I was in England at the beginning of the Beatles craze. I heard them do their first songs "live" on television, and I liked their things very much. That began it. I remember incredible feelings of guilt when I bought my first Beatles record. Now, of course, I'm wide open to all this music. As a matter of fact, when I listen to music for my own enjoyment I often listen to rock, jazz, or Oriental music.

R.H.: Do you think the Beatles' music will ever be part of regular concert programs the way Gershwin now is?

M.T.T.: I don't think so. But it's interesting to speculate on that because, you know, when Bach was writing, there was an enormous, rich, secular, popular music of which we have virtually no record. It was just played, and not written down. Today all our popular stuff is recorded and available. One wonders, say in 200 years, what a music historian evaluating the second half of the 20th century will think is the most important. Will it be the superserialized works of some of our brainier people? Or will it be something like "Norwegian Wood"? Who knows?

R.H.: What about the charge that concert halls are becoming just museums?

M.T.T.: I love museums. I think it's fabulous that in the midst of our polluted atmosphere, in the midst of our throwaway society, there is some place where one can get away from the whole horror of day-to-day ozone counts, and where, in a reasonably calm environment, things which have deeply affected men as being beautiful are kept. I think the concert hall can be a museum in the best sense – exhibiting the best of the past, plus contemporary things of course.

R.H.: Who do you feel is the most significant composer today under 30?

M.T.T.: Wow! What a question! First of all, the word "significant" is tough. I could change the question and say who's the composer really into something very much of his own, very much apart from the aesthetic of what music has been, and answer perhaps Steve Reich. But that's a totally different idea – totally different.

R.H.: Is there anything you wish somebody had told you when you were 16 that you'd tell today's students?

M.T.T.: Yes – go through much more material than you think is even possible. Don't just read the textbook, but read books all around the text. Read things in all kinds of different areas. Don't get bogged down. Refuse to be programmed a particular way, the way a particular text or institution wants you to be programmed. Keep asking: Is it really true? Is it really so? And if you have things within yourself which you feel are strong, things you feel are good, and they're different from the sense of the people around you, you must stick to them against all pressures, against all the disapproval, against all the oblivion you may find yourself in. You must stick because everything depends on it.

R.H.: Like a rebel with a cause?

M.T.T.: There are different kinds of rebellion. There's a very romantic sort where people stand up and wave a flag or shout something obscene – that's very dramatic and appealing to some. But there's another kind of much more constructive rebellion – and that's to work and not be worn down, to work until you're in a position to put your ideas into effect. □

Michael Tilson Thomas awaits cue (left) from Boston Symphony Concert Manager Mary Smith to go on-stage at New York's Carnegie Hall. During concert (above) his face and gestures reflect music's moods.

At concert's end, Thomas grabs towel backstage to dry off hastily before returning to acknowledge audience cheers.

Photos by Paul J. Hoeffler

Joseph Silverstein, Concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

"We in the orchestra like Michael Tilson Thomas very much. He's a remarkable fellow – and he has two characteristics that young people who are as serious and gifted musically as he is don't often have: humility and a sense of humor. He's very much turned on to the whole modern scene. He's a real, engaging young American personality."

Thomas Mowrey, producer of Boston Symphony recordings for Deutsche Grammophon:

"Michael Tilson Thomas has, at 25, a tremendous musical scope – and he's busy acquiring more breadth all the time. His first recording sessions for us were remarkable in that he seemed very little interested in himself and was completely intent on the music. Yet at the same time he has charisma, pizzazz, or sex appeal – whatever you want to call what communicates to audiences – and classical music today can certainly use that sort of thing."

SCHOLASTIC MAGAZINE
SENIOR SCHOLASTIC
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,293,800

OCT 26 1970

With Michael Tilson Thomas, the show really does go on!

By ROY HEMMING

NOT since Leonard Bernstein in the 1940's has a young American conductor bowled over the musical Establishment so completely as 25-year-old Michael Tilson Thomas.

It was just a year ago this week – on October 22, 1969 – that he made a dramatic, last-minute substitution for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's regular conductor, William Steinberg, when Steinberg became ill halfway through a concert in New York.

What made Thomas' "going on" doubly dramatic was the fact that he had been named Steinberg's assistant only a few weeks before – the youngest in the Boston Symphony's history. Usually the job of assistant conductor is filled with lots of hard work behind-the-scenes, and little glory. But there he was out front, leading one of the world's greatest orchestras (some would say the greatest) – and doing so before some of the nation's toughest critics.

When it was over, the audience was cheering and the critics glowing.

Backstage after the concert, the tall (6'4"), openly friendly young stand-in told this reporter: "I still don't believe I was really out there."

Over the next few months, Steinberg's continuing illness threw onto Thomas' shoulders the responsibility for rehearsing and conducting more than 30 other BSO concerts. And when it came time last spring for the orchestra to make its first recording under a new contract with Deutsche Grammophon, it was Michael Thomas who conducted it. That recording (a coupling of two American works: Ives' Three Places in New England and Ruggles' Sun-Treader) has just been released this month, and has already won exciting critical kudos.

Even at a time when our culture seems more youth-oriented than ever, Thomas' rise has been unusually swift. Born in Hollywood, Calif., in 1945 (his father is film writer-director Ted Thomas; a family cousin was the late actor Paul Muni), Michael was winning prizes in both science and music while attending North Hollywood High School and the University of Southern California. At 19 he was conducting a youth orchestra in Los Angeles, and then became an assistant to Pierre Boulez at festivals in both California and Germany. In 1968, while studying at Tanglewood (the Boston Symphony's summer home) he conducted a student performance of a part-rock opera, Elephant Steps. A year later he became Steinberg's assistant.

This spring the Boston Symphony promoted Thomas to Associate Conductor. He will be conducting as many scheduled concerts this year as the now-recovered Steinberg. He is a young man definitely on his way.

I talked with Thomas a few weeks ago at Tanglewood about the past year's events, and other topics.

R.H.: How do you feel the past year has changed you personally?

M.T.T.: Whew! Let me answer this way: The first time I took over the concerts in New York, I just went through it and couldn't remember very much of what happened – as I told you then. The second night, in Philadelphia, I was fine. The third night was again in New York – and suddenly on that third night it hit me. My God! I'm here! I'm conducting this orchestra in this music which I never really rehearsed! That was about the most frightening moment of the year.

R.H.: And now?

M.T.T.: Now, I think I'm really aware of the enormous difficulty of being a conductor – of really being an effective conductor – and of not trying to fool anybody else, or yourself. It's hard, because you standards get higher and higher. Now I want even more things from myself than I did a year ago.

R.H.: What thoughts went through your mind as you approached your first recording session with the Boston Symphony? How different is it, for example, from stepping out on the podium to conduct a "live" concert?

M.T.T.: An enormous difference. You listen to what's happening differently. In a concert you're doing it, you want to be into it, carrying the whole thing in a sweep. And if one or two minor details go wrong, or if somebody coughs, it doesn't make much difference. But with a recording you become superfinicky about everything. Was this really together? Was this really the way you wanted it to be? Sometimes there are things in the score you feel differently every night. You play with them – one way one time, another way another time. Or maybe you get access to new materials or research. But suddenly in a recording session you're aware that the way you happen to be doing it now is going to become "the way you do it" to listeners for years. I remember when Judy Collins came to Tanglewood once – an artist I admire immensely, incidentally – and she did "Suzanne" very differently from her record. I heard people say, "Well, it was nice, but you know it was sort of strange. She didn't do it the way she does it." Of course, I felt such tremendous respect for her for not having solidified just one version.

R.H.: What does classical music really have to say to young people today? Why do you feel it's worthwhile to devote your life to classical music?

M.T.T.: Because, ultimately, it is the most revelatory and most rewarding music. It's music which is worked out on so many different levels simultaneously. It's music that you can listen, listen, listen to, and study for 35, 50, 70 years – and still find, constantly, things that you never knew were there before. To me, it's the same reason why we should be interested in Shakespeare or Oedipus, because they are really universal statements. It doesn't make much difference whether they're done with strobe lights or megaphones, or whether they're electrified or amplified or whatever.

R.H.: Yet why is there so much resistance to it among young people?

M.T.T.: Because it really wasn't that widely available until very recently. Also, there was this immense snobbery connected with it – the society thing with the concert hall and all that. I think we're beginning to get beyond that now. The fact that rock music, especially, has become so much more sophisticated harmonically and rhythmically kind of leads young people naturally into deeper, more diverse areas of music.

R.H.: Were you ever into rock?

M.T.T.: Until my second or third year in college, I didn't want to have anything to do with pop music. Then, around 1962, I was in England at the beginning of the Beatles craze. I heard them do their first songs "live" on television, and I liked their things very much. That began it. I remember incredible feelings of guilt when I bought my first Beatles record. Now, of course, I'm wide open to all this music. As a matter of fact, when I listen to music for my own enjoyment – often listen to rock, jazz, or Oriental music.

R.H.: Do you think the Beatles' music will ever be part of regular concert programs the way Gershwin now is?

M.T.T.: I don't think so. But it's interesting to speculate on that because, you know, when Bach was writing, there was an enormous, rich, secular, popular music of which we have virtually no record. It was just played, and not written down. Today all our popular stuff is recorded and available. One wonders, say in 200 years, what a music historian evaluating the second half of the 20th century will think is the most important. Will it be the superserialized works of some of our brainier people? Or will it be something like "Norwegian Wood"? Who knows?

R.H.: What about the charge that concert halls are becoming just museums?

M.T.T.: I love museums. I think it's fabulous that in the midst of our polluted atmosphere, in the midst of our throwaway society, there is some place where one can get away from the whole horror of day-to-day ozone counts, and where, in a reasonably calm environment, things which have deeply affected men as being beautiful are kept. I think the concert hall can be a museum in the best sense – exhibiting the best of the past, plus contemporary things of course.

R.H.: Who do you feel is the most significant composer today under 30?

M.T.T.: Wow! What a question! First of all, the word "significant" is tough. I could change the question and say who's the composer really into something very much of his own, very much apart from the aesthetic of what music has been, and answer perhaps Steve Reich. But that's a totally different idea – totally different.

R.H.: Is there anything you wish somebody had told you when you were 16 that you'd tell today's students?

M.T.T.: Yes – go through much more material than you think is even possible. Don't just read the textbook, but read books all around the text. Read things in all kinds of different areas. Don't get bogged down. Refuse to be programmed a particular way, the way a particular text or institution wants you to be programmed. Keep asking: Is it really true? Is it really so? And if you have things within yourself which you feel are strong, things you feel are good, and they're different from the sense of the people around you, you must stick to them against all pressures, against all the disapproval, against all the oblivion you may find yourself in. You must stick because everything depends on it.

R.H.: Like a rebel with a cause?

M.T.T.: There are different kinds of rebellion. There's a very romantic sort where people stand up and wave a flag or shout something obscene – that's very dramatic and appealing to some. But there's another kind of much more constructive rebellion – and that's to work and not be worn down, to work until you're in a position to put your ideas into effect. □

Michael Tilson Thomas awaits cue (left) from Boston Symphony Concert Manager Marvin Rich to go on-stage at New York's Carnegie Hall. During concert (above) his face and gestures reflect music's moods.

At concert's end, Thomas grabs towel backstage to dry off hastily before returning to acknowledge audience cheers.

Photos by Paul J. Hoeffler

Joseph Silverstein, Concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

"We like the orchestra like Michael Tilson Thomas very much. He's a remarkable fellow – and he has two characteristics that young people who are as serious and gifted musically as he is don't often have: humility and a sense of humor. He's very much turned on to the whole modern scene. He's a real, engaging young American personality."

Thomas Mowrey, producer of Boston Symphony recordings for Deutsche Grammophon:

"Michael Tilson Thomas has, at 25, a tremendous musical scope – and he's busy acquiring more breadth all the time. His first recording sessions for us were remarkable in that he seemed very little interested in himself and was completely intent on the music. Yet at the same time he has charisma, pizzazz, or sex appeal – whatever you want to call what communicates to audiences – and classical music today can certainly use that sort of thing."

THE HARTFORD TIMES
JANUARY 10, 1971

REMARKS THAT HE'S THE NEXT BERNSTEIN BRING A SMILE TO 26-YEAR OLD THOMAS

Upbeat Conductor — Michail Tilson Thomas

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS, young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will lead the Bostonians in a concert at the Bushnell this Tuesday. Curtain time is at 8:15 p.m.

By RUTHANNE DEVLIN
Times Staff Writer

BOSTON — At age 26, Michael Tilson Thomas seems to have the world tucked in his back pocket. His dizzyingly swift climb to fame after he replaced ailing conductor William Steinberg mid-concert is already well on its way to becoming a musical legend. "Cosmopolitan" magazine named him one of the year's most eligible bachelors. Fashionable ladies dote on him and musical journalists know a good interview subject when they see him.

But for all this, Thomas is disturbed when people insist he is a musical "prodigy."

"Prodigy! I'm no prodigy. Who ever heard of a prodigy starting music at age ten?"

If not a prodigy, then at least prodigious. His parents started him in piano lessons out of fear that with his natural talent he would never learn to read music. He entered the University of Southern California as a music major at age 18 with advanced standing, took graduate courses before his freshman ones, and in a year was conductor and piano soloist with the Young Musicians Foundation Debut Orchestra.

Meanwhile he was studying for three years in Piatigorsky's master classes, organizing his own groups, and conducting premieres of works by Stravinsky, Pierre Boulez, Stockhausen, Lukas Foss and Ingolf Dahl. In 1966 he found time to be assistant conductor to Boulez during the Bayreuth Festival and the Ojai Festival a year later.

These accomplishments plus a practical use of five languages, a natural ear for dialects and several years' study of inorganic chemistry and crystallography preceded the event which even today he can't believe really happened — his abrupt introduction as replacement for Steinberg during the concert at Philharmonic Hall, Lincoln Center in New York Oct. 22, 1969.

"It was a good concert," the 26-year-old reminisced. "It's all so very mysterious to me now, and I remember so little about that night. Now, when I go out someplace these days and see one of my records in a store window, I'm floored!"

Thomas finished the rest of the Boston Symphony's tour as Steinberg's replacement, more than 30 concerts in all. Then at the beginning of last summer's Tanglewood Festival season, he was named Associate Conductor, the first man to hold the position since Richard Burgin.

On the podium, Thomas is an imaginative, energetic conductor who makes dramatic passes at the orchestra with his hands or baton. He happily admits being in Leonard Bernstein's debt for his "free and open approach" to conducting, but adds he is integrating his new freedom with old principles he has learned.

Inevitably, because he exhorts, cajoles, weaves and viscerally fires the orchestra to performances, he has drawn the expected charge of "acting."

"One of the most important things a musician ever said to me was that a conductor had to act all the time — but for the orchestra, not the audience," Thomas explained. "He must be able to get people who have been sitting there night after night playing the same music for the umpteenth time to really want to play it. If you can get them 'up' for every performance by dramatizing the music, then I'm all for it."

Another sort of acting — the legitimate stage or, better yet, movies — appeals to the Hollywood-born conductor. A recurring fantasy is to take an important role in a movie, perhaps one directed by his famous father, director-producer Ted Thomas.

"I grew up surrounded by actors, so if I conduct dramatically it's no surprise. When I get stuck or bogged down in music or the business of music, I try to think of it as theater or just a performing art and it becomes less problemmatic.

"Really, a conductor is like a director," he continued with enthusiasm. "He questions what pacings should be, faster or slower, then the level and balance. Some times conductors can get so wrapped up i asking 'is it musical?' or the other tenuou esthetics they become paralyzed. I try t remember 'let's put it together and g the show on the road'!"

The desire for stage dramatics laughingly dismisses as answering a genet demand. In addition to his film-maki father, Thomas is grandson to Boris a Bessie Thomashevsky, founders of t American Yiddish theater, and cousin actor Paul Muni.

During last summer, the young c ductor's boyishness, engaging person and musical acumen evoked the nickn "MT-squared" from the students at Ta wood. Dressed casually, the six-foot-one conductor with penetrating blue-grey and dark brown hair blends unobtrus with students.

(Continued on Page 16C)

Michael Tilson Thomas

(Continued from Page 14C)

Before the Boston Symphony, however, the boyishness gives way to the professional musician. He has the respect of his instrumentalists and, reportedly, an almost uncanny knack for programming works, many of them contemporary.

"I'm not at all afraid of contemporary or electronic music," said Thomas. "I'm about as progressive as I want to be in my programming now, and there are composers I like very much who are not appreciated by the average listener yet."

Thomas disagrees with the premise that today's composers are untouchably far ahead of their time. Rather, he believes audiences are behind times, totally unfamiliar with the new music or judging it from the wrong perspectives.

"It's very interesting that some of the most avant-garde composers are a hit now with the teenage record world," Thomas pointed out. "A piece like 'Gesang der Junglinge' by Stockhausen is an enormous seller. It's just a matter of time . . ."

A glimpse of the enterprising conductor's attitude toward his new fame and responsibilities can be seen in the "green room" at Symphony Hall in Boston. The room has dignified appointments. Deep Persian rug, landscape of apple trees by the American Impressionist Enneking, still lite of fruit and flowers over the mantlepiece, and in the middle of the room a Baldwin with a small plate of pastries on it.

A huge, grey striped cardboard cut-out of a Cheshire cat, a la Lewis Caroll smile, rests on the mantlepiece and beams mockingly at everyone in the room.

"That's my Thomas cat," Michael Thomas said. "It was given to me by some friends in Los Angeles, and I love it so much. I think that's just the way the world is. When I come in here he smiles at me and I think, 'that's right'."

Doesn't that type of cat disappear tail first, we asked.

". . . until only the smile is left," Thomas completed with a grin of his own. "It's caudalocephalous instead of cephalocaudal, you understand."

68

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

ASSOCIATE CONDUCTOR, BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

"Music is an enormously liberating experience"

How does one address a boyish twenty-six-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony? I didn't want to get too familiar by calling him "Michael," but "Mr. Thomas" seemed much too formal for a near-contemporary of mine.

I worried about this as I sat in the backstage office of Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center in New York waiting to meet him. Suddenly, a thin young man in a gray suede jacket with a "Music for Peace" button on the lapel was shaking my hand. He knew about Interlochen Music Camp and the Academy, and asked me if I had ever been to Tanglewood, the famous Massachusetts summer music center, where he had conducted last year. I hadn't, but that didn't seem to matter. His warm, sincere interest put me immediately at ease. I decided to avoid calling him by name.

By the time we had gone two floors in the elevator, we were like old friends. Heading toward the greenroom, where we were to have the interview, he suddenly veered off in the opposite direction, beckoning me to follow. Strains of Tchaikovsky became more emphatic as he led me into a small observation booth from which we could see Leonard Bernstein rehearsing the New York Philharmonic. I stood awed for several moments and then remembered that my companion was also a conductor (continued on page 122)

MICHELLE MAKARSKI, 16, of Hamtramck, Michigan, is concertmistress of the orchestra at the Interlochen Arts Academy, where she's a junior. She is considered one of the most brilliant young violinists ever enrolled there. She hopes to go on to study liberal arts as well as music at the University of Michigan.

BFP021902-2/19/71-BUFFALO,NY-With these hands 26 year old Micheal Thomas will conduct the Buffalo Philharmonic.Appointed 2/19,Thomas is also associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. UPI-TWL-PHOTO rb/rb considered by some to be the "Lenny" of the 1970s.

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

continued from page 97

Comfortably ensconced in the greenroom, which was rather like a formal living room with piano, couch, wall tapestries and antique chests, I plunged into my first question. "How did you ever achieve so much so young?"

"I was born into a theatrical family in Hollywood, California. When I was a small child, I used to listen a lot to my parents' phonograph records, which were mainly classical. I began to play those pieces by ear on the piano. When I was ten I started formal lessons.

"Until I was eighteen I wavered between science and music as a career. But I found myself drawn toward becoming a performer. I remember one experience when I was about thirteen. I had learned to play the oboe and was in the orchestra at a summer camp. It was the first time we had played a piece through without stopping. I had an incredible feeling of exhilaration—a moment when what was just a dead piece of paper suddenly became alive and exciting. I think that was the kind of thing that drew me."

Michael attended the University of Southern California simultaneously with his last two years of high school and won the "outstanding student" award at his college graduation in 1964.

His brilliance, though, took its toll in personal relationships, at least in his early years. "I was very much alone in high school," he admitted, "because my interests and the work I was doing set me apart from the others. But I think it's important, if you feel there's something you want to do and can do, to have the courage to pursue it."

His unusual activities included conducting orchestras, appearing as a pianist in Los Angeles and other cities, working with celebrated musicians like Erich Leinsdorf and Pierre Boulez. Along the way he collected numerous awards and honors which culminated in his appointment as assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony.

But his biggest break came just a month later, in October 1969, when he was called upon in mid-concert at Lincoln Center in New York to replace conductor William Steinberg who had suddenly become ill. Thomas was immediately hailed a success. The New York Times wrote: "He knows his business and we shall be hearing from him again." The prophecy had not long to wait. Because of Steinberg's continuing illness, the young assistant was asked to take over the season's thirty-four remaining concerts and several recording sessions. His title was changed to Associate, he won national acclaim and this (continued on page 124) year he will go on a European tour with the orchestra.

To my many questions on musical issues, his answers were quick and stimulating.

How would he change music education? "I'd abandon the entire current format and have a course like 'hearing', for example, dealing with many kinds of music and textures—to teach people who are not musicians how to listen, how to get into the sound world. That's so much more important than learning Bach had twenty children."

What will concerts of the future be like? "Much less formal. Not necessarily in big concert halls. More variety in programs, more different kinds of ensembles. I hope the stodgy aspect of the symphony will vanish. Music, if you really involve yourself, is enormously liberating."

What about electronic music? "Great. Definitely here to stay. A valid, often profound art form."

Is a liberal arts education, rather than conservatory schooling, useful for a musical career? "To be an expert musician you have to immerse yourself in the whole character of the composer, study his historical setting, the literature and art of that period. I think my studies of other subjects may be more influential on my musical ideas than a lot of music courses I took."

What about other kinds of music? "I love rock and jazz. James Brown. Eastern music. Folk—not commercialized but in really ethnic tradition. Blues—Bessie Smith."

I was charmed. But Michael really won my heart at the end of the interview. He had an appointment coming up with Leonard Bernstein, in the dressing room next door to where we sat. "Would you like to meet him?" he asked. The next moment I was shaking hands with one of my idols, and Bernstein invited me to sit in on a Philharmonic rehearsal the next day. I couldn't, because I was due back at Interlochen to rehearse for my own concert, but I will never forget that I had the opportunity.

SEVENTEEN
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MONTHLY 1,362,000

JAN 1971

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

ASSOCIATE CONDUCTOR, BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

"Music is an enormously liberating experience"

How does one address a boyish twenty-six-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony? I didn't want to get too familiar by calling him "Michael," but "Mr. Thomas" seemed much too formal for a near-contemporary of mine.

I worried about this as I sat in the backstage office of Philharmonic Hall at Lincoln Center in New York waiting to meet him. Suddenly, a thin young man in a gray suede jacket with a "Music for Peace" button on the lapel was shaking my hand. He knew about Interlochen Music Camp and the Academy, and asked me if I had ever been to Tanglewood, the famous Massachusetts summer music center, where he had conducted last year. I hadn't, but that didn't seem to matter. His warm, sincere interest put me immediately at ease. I decided to avoid calling him by name.

By the time we had gone two floors in the elevator, we were like old friends. Heading toward the greenroom, where we were to have the interview, he suddenly veered off in the opposite direction, beckoning me to follow. Strains of Tchaikovsky became more emphatic as he led me into a small observation booth from which we could see Leonard Bernstein rehearsing the New York Philharmonic. I stood awed for several moments and then remembered that my companion was also a conductor (continued on page 122)

MICHELLE MAKARSKI, 16, of Hamtramck, Michigan, is concertmistress of the orchestra at the Interlochen Arts Academy, where she's a junior. She is considered one of the most brilliant young violinists ever enrolled there. She hopes to go on to study liberal arts as well as music at the University of Michigan.

BFP021902-2/19/71-BUFFALO,NY-With these hands 26 year old Michael Thomas will conduct the Buffalo Philharmonic.Appointed 2/19,Thomas is also associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. UPI-TELEPHOTO rb/rb considered by some to be the "Lenny" of the 1970s.

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

continued from page 97

Comfortably ensconced in the greenroom, which was rather like a formal living room with piano, couch, wall tapestries and antique chests, I plunged into my first question. "How did you ever achieve so much so young?"

"I was born into a theatrical family in Hollywood, California. When I was a small child, I used to listen a lot to my parents' phonograph records, which were mainly classical. I began to play those pieces by ear on the piano. When I was ten I started formal lessons.

"Until I was eighteen I wavered between science and music as a career. But I found myself drawn toward becoming a performer. I remember one experience when I was about thirteen. I had learned to play the oboe and was in the orchestra at a summer camp. It was the first time we had played a piece through without stopping. I had an incredible feeling of exhilaration—a moment when what was just a dead piece of paper suddenly became alive and exciting. I think that was the kind of thing that drew me."

Michael attended the University of Southern California simultaneously with his last two years of high school and won the "outstanding student" award at his college graduation in 1964.

His brilliance, though, took its toll in personal relationships, at least in his early years. "I was very much alone in high school," he admitted, "because my interests and the work I was doing set me apart from the others. But I think it's important, if you feel there's something you want to do and can do, to have the courage to pursue it."

His unusual activities included conducting orchestras, appearing as a pianist in Los Angeles and other cities, working with celebrated musicians like Erich Leinsdorf and Pierre Boulez. Along the way he collected numerous awards and honors which culminated in his appointment as assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony.

But his biggest break came just a month later, in October 1969, when he was called upon in mid-concert at Lincoln Center in New York to replace conductor William Steinberg who had suddenly become ill. Thomas was immediately hailed a success. The New York Times wrote: "He knows his business and we shall be hearing from him again." The prophecy had not long to wait. Because of Steinberg's continuing illness, the young assistant was asked to take over the season's thirty-four remaining concerts and several recording sessions. His title was changed to Associate, he won national acclaim and this (continued on page 124) year he will go on a European tour with the orchestra.

To my many questions on musical issues, his answers were quick and stimulating.

How would he change music education? "I'd abandon the entire current format and have a course like 'hearing', for example, dealing with many kinds of music and textures—to teach people who are not musicians how to listen, how to get into the sound world. That's so much more important than learning Bach had twenty children."

What will concerts of the future be like? "Much less formal. Not necessarily in big concert halls. More variety in programs, more different kinds of ensembles. I hope the stodgy aspect of the symphony will vanish. Music, if you really involve yourself, is enormously liberating."

What about electronic music? "Great. Definitely here to stay. A valid, often profound art form."

Is a liberal arts education, rather than conservatory schooling, useful for a musical career? "To be an expert musician you have to immerse yourself in the whole character of the composer, study his historical setting, the literature and art of that period. I think my studies of other subjects may be more influential on my musical ideas than a lot of music courses I took."

What about other kinds of music? "I love rock and jazz. James Brown. Eastern music. Folk—not commercialized but in really ethnic tradition. Blues—Bessie Smith."

I was charmed. But Michael really won my heart at the end of the interview. He had an appointment coming up with Leonard Bernstein, in the dressing room next door to where we sat. "Would you like to meet him?" he asked. The next moment I was shaking hands with one of my idols, and Bernstein invited me to sit in on a Philharmonic rehearsal the next day. I couldn't, because I was due back at Interlochen to rehearse for my own concert, but I will never forget that I had the opportunity.

Music/Alan Rich

TILSON THOMAS TO THE RESCUE

"It would be foolish to hope he can save the orchestra for good, but even another reprieve, as Bernstein gave it, would help."

NEW YORK MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. - CIRC. N

FEB 1 1971

I haven't written very much about the new phenomenon known as Michael Tilson Thomas, for two reasons. One is that there just isn't enough space on this one page to chronicle all my evening activities (even the musical ones) during a busy season. The other is a slight reticence that I seem to be acquiring—mostly from experience—to treat every arrival on the scene as the herald of a new era.

But after Thomas' recent week of concerts here with the Boston Symphony and a quick but exhilarating get-acquainted lunch, I guess it's time to add my small voice to the cheers of the many. He's good, this handsome, cocky, maybe-genius kid; his talents are solid and genuine, and the ideas he has for putting on concerts can do tremendous good in restoring some measure of excitement to the sometimes-stifling process of symphony-going. It would be foolish to claim that he, or any other single person, can save the symphony orchestra from its present moribund condition. But even if he can give the institution the same sort of 20-year reprieve that Leonard Bernstein did when he first rocketed to stardom, that would be something.

Comparisons with Bernstein are, of course, inevitable. Thomas was about the same age as Bernstein was when the Cinderella thing hit, and the circumstances were practically identical. But Thomas got an even better break, since the ailing conductor he had to replace (William Steinberg) missed most of a season, so that Thomas had that time to learn what conducting a major symphony orchestra was all about. The Boston Symphony has had a long tradition for granting its assistant conductor plenty of exposure. When I was growing up in Boston the post was held by the orchestra's concertmaster, Richard Burgin, who grew into one of the most eloquent and satisfying conductors of his time.

The major difference between Thomas today and Bernstein in 1943, however, is that nobody in those days questioned the idea that symphony programs as they were then constituted were anything less than sublime. Now, people do. The symphonic sound—that is, the sound of the orchestra as is was used from 1800 to about 1920—is in everybody's ears; we hear it somewhere or other for the major part of every day, and we're getting sick of it. The record industry has revealed to millions of people the fact that music contains other sounds as well. Thomas has the good sense to realize that if the orchestra is going to survive there has to be a greater variety of sound at a concert, to say nothing of style, than there was in the past.

He talked about a program he had done recently in Boston; I wish he had done it here. It had such things in the first half as a piece of thirteenth-century polyphony by Perotinus, done by a chorus and small instrumental ensemble with a certain amount of amplification used to adapt the complex designs of the music to Symphony Hall. Then there was a piece for seven instruments by Lou Harrison, and something-or-other by Stockhausen involving electronic sounds. After the intermission he conducted the Third Symphony of Schumann—a piece as mired in the symphonic sound as you can find. "You just wouldn't believe how fresh and new it sounded," he exulted. I would believe it.

His concert here a couple of weeks ago had a similar format: some little orchestral pieces by Webern, then the Bach Third Brandenburg played by only nine strings (in Koussevitzky's day they used to bring in extra strings for this kind of thing), a lively but rather old-fashioned piece by Ingolf Dahl for saxophone and wind band and then, after the intermission, Debussy's Images as the one concession to the repertory. The quality of Thomas' performances made the music sound tremendously fresh, but the marvelous layout of the program contributed even more to this effect.

Like anything else, this kind of programming could become a gimmick in time. Young conductors who are trained in the symphonic repertory are not necessarily ready to handle Perotinus or Stockhausen. Thomas, however, is. He has had a thorough training in the entire sweep of musical styles at one of the best liberal-arts-oriented music schools in the country, the University of Southern California. This is exactly the kind of training our future generation of conductors will need if they expect to join in this process of resuscitating our orchestras.

The best thing that could have happened to Beethoven for his birthday, Thomas told me, would have been to declare a three-year moratorium on performing his music. That way, the revival of the Fifth Symphony in say, 1973 could have had tremendous impact. This idea is, of course, thoroughly impractical in terms of present-day realities.

Or is it? Talking to—or, rather, being talked at by—Thomas, the realization hits one that the potentialities of the symphony orchestra have only begun to be explored by conductors in the last 200 years. This great, lumbering aggregation of talent could be better regarded as a source of music, rather than a single instrument for music. A fantastic repertory of music exists for almost every conceivable combination of single instruments, and most of it is sadly underprogrammed in our halls. One reason for the success of the Chamber Music Society at Tully Hall is its revival of some of the great out-of-the-way chamber works. If this kind of repertory could also engage the talents of a man like Thomas, and the whole generation of conductors, the benefit to our ears would be enormous. The alternative—this week's all-Tchaikovsky program and next week's—is sad to contemplate. ■

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
FEBRUARY 24, 1971

Thomas off to Buffalo in conductorial shuffle

By Louis Snyder

With the announcement last week of his engagement as music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic, Michael Tilson Thomas is one declared winner in the newest game of musical chairs. The latest flurry was started recently when the Pittsburgh Symphony announced that William Steinberg, its lifetime music director (and also music director of the BSO since 1969) would make himself available there for increasing periods of time because of the expanding activities of the orchestra. Mr. Steinberg himself indicated that he would not be able to renew his contract as music director in Boston at its expiration in the spring of 1972, although he would be willing to retain his connection as "senior conductor and music advisor."

Although Mr. Thomas is still in his 20's, he inevitably joined the lists of successors to Mr. Steinberg, hastily drawn by prognosticators, because of his dramatic and successful takeover in midseason last year when Mr. Steinberg became ill. Mr. Thomas's promotion by the BSO from assistant to associate conductor, his increased conducting schedule during the current season, his identification with the orchestra on its new Deutsche Grammophon recordings, and the assignment to him of five concerts on the European tour in April would seem to have made him a leading contender.

The fact that important orchestra conductors, like hit show tickets, must be booked well in advance lends added zest to this game of second guessing. By mutual agreement between Buffalo and Boston, Mr. Thomas will retain his position as associate conductor with the latter orchestra for an unspecified time. His contract in Buffalo is initially for two years.

The Boston Symphony's trustees have not yet announced a decision with regard to Mr. Steinberg's future with the orchestra after the spring of 1972, nor are they obliged to announce his successor immediately. Meanwhile, Mr. Thomas is venturing forth with their good wishes, and in the words of BSO president Talcott M. Banks: "We are pleased that by the arrangement we have made with the Philharmonic, our Associate Conductor can serve them without reducing his responsibilities or concert schedule in Boston and Tanglewood." Which covers a multitude of possibilities.

By Paul Buck Hoeffler

Michael Tilson Thomas

The young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony will retain that post when he becomes music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra at the beginning of the 1971-72 season.

Music/Alan Rich

TILSON THOMAS TO THE RESCUE

"It would be foolish to hope he can save the orchestra for good, but even another reprieve, as Bernstein gave it, would help."

NEW YORK TIMES
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. - CIRC. 3 ...
FEB 1 1971

I haven't written very much about the new phenomenon known as Michael Tilson Thomas, for two reasons. One is that there just isn't enough space on this one page to chronicle all my evening activities (even the musical ones) during a busy season. The other is a slight reticence that I seem to be acquiring—mostly from experience—to treat every arrival on the scene as the herald of a new era.

But after Thomas' recent week of concerts here with the Boston Symphony and a quick but exhilarating get-acquainted lunch, I guess it's time to add my small voice to the cheers of the many. He's good, this handsome, cocky, maybe-genius kid; his talents are solid and genuine, and the ideas he has for putting on concerts can do tremendous good in restoring some measure of excitement to the sometimes-stifling process of symphony-going. It would be foolish to claim that he, or any other single person, can save the symphony orchestra from its present moribund condition. But even if he can give the institution the same sort of 20-year reprieve that Leonard Bernstein did when he first rocketed to stardom, that would be something.

Comparisons with Bernstein are, of course, inevitable. Thomas was about the same age as Bernstein was when the Cinderella thing hit, and the circumstances were practically identical. But Thomas got an even better break, since the ailing conductor he had to replace (William Steinberg) missed most of a season, so that Thomas had that time to learn what conducting a major symphony orchestra was all about. The Boston Symphony has had a long tradition for granting its assistant conductor plenty of exposure. When I was growing up in Boston the post was held by the orchestra's concertmaster, Richard Burgin, who grew into one of the most eloquent and satisfying conductors of his time.

The major difference between Thomas today and Bernstein in 1943, however, is that nobody in those days questioned the idea that symphony programs as they were then constituted were anything less than sublime. Now, people do. The symphonic sound—that is, the sound of the orchestra as is was used from 1800 to about 1920—is in everybody's ears; we hear it somewhere or other for the major part of every day, and we're getting sick of it. The record industry has revealed to millions of people the fact that music contains other sounds as well. Thomas has the good sense to realize that if the orchestra is going to survive there has to be a greater variety of sound at a concert, to say nothing of style, than there was in the past.

He talked about a program he had done recently in Boston; I wish he had done it here. It had such things in the first half as a piece of thirteenth-century polyphony by Perotinus, done by a chorus and small instrumental ensemble with a certain amount of amplification used to adapt the complex designs of the music to Symphony Hall. Then there was a piece for seven instruments by Lou Harrison, and something-or-other by Stockhausen involving electronic sounds. After the intermission he conducted the Third Symphony of Schumann—a piece as mired in the symphonic sound as you can find. "You just wouldn't believe how fresh and new it sounded," he exulted. I would believe it.

His concert here a couple of weeks ago had a similar format: some little orchestral pieces by Webern, then the Bach Third Brandenburg played by only nine strings (in Koussevitzky's day they used to bring in extra strings for this kind of thing), a lively but rather old-fashioned piece by Ingolf Dahl for saxophone and wind band and then, after the intermission, Debussy's Images as the one concession to the repertory. The quality of Thomas' performances made the music sound tremendously fresh, but the marvelous layout of the program contributed even more to this effect.

Like anything else, this kind of programming could become a gimmick in time. Young conductors who are trained in the symphonic repertory are not necessarily ready to handle Perotinus or Stockhausen. Thomas, however, is. He has had a thorough training in the entire sweep of musical styles at one of the best liberal-arts-oriented music schools in the country, the University of Southern California. This is exactly the kind of training our future generation of conductors will need if they expect to join in this process of resuscitating our orchestras.

The best thing that could have happened to Beethoven for his birthday, Thomas told me, would have been to declare a three-year moratorium on performing his music. That way, the revival of the Fifth Symphony in say, 1973 could have had tremendous impact. This idea is, of course, thoroughly impractical in terms of present-day realities.

Or is it? Talking to—or, rather, being talked at by—Thomas, the realization hits one that the potentialities of the symphony orchestra have only begun to be explored by conductors in the last 200 years. This great, lumbering aggregation of talent could be better regarded as a source of music, rather than a single instrument for music. A fantastic repertory of music exists for almost every conceivable combination of single instruments, and most of it is sadly underprogrammed in our halls. One reason for the success of the Chamber Music Society at Tully Hall is its revival of some of the great out-of-the-way chamber works. If this kind of repertory could also engage the talents of a man like Thomas, and the whole generation of conductors, the benefit to our ears would be enormous. The alternative—this week's all-Tchaikovsky program and next week's—is sad to contemplate. ■

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
FEBRUARY 24, 1971

Thomas off to Buffalo in conductorial shuffle

By Louis Snyder

With the announcement last week of his engagement as music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic, Michael Tilson Thomas is one declared winner in the newest game of musical chairs. The latest flurry was started recently when the Pittsburgh Symphony announced that William Steinberg, its lifetime music director (and also music director of the BSO since 1969) would make himself available there for increasing periods of time because of the expanding activities of the orchestra. Mr. Steinberg himself indicated that he would not be able to renew his contract as music director in Boston at its expiration in the spring of 1972, although he would be willing to retain his connection as "senior conductor and music advisor."

Although Mr. Thomas is still in his 20's, he inevitably joined the lists of successors to Mr. Steinberg, hastily drawn by prognosticators, because of his dramatic and successful takeover in midseason last year when Mr. Steinberg became ill. Mr. Thomas's promotion by the BSO from assistant to associate conductor, his increased conducting schedule during the current season, his identification with the orchestra on its new Deutsche Grammophon recordings, and the assignment to him of five concerts on the European tour in April would seem to have made him a leading contender.

The fact that important orchestra conductors, like hit show tickets, must be booked well in advance lends added zest to this game of second guessing. By mutual agreement between Buffalo and Boston, Mr. Thomas will retain his position as associate conductor with the latter orchestra for an unspecified time. His contract in Buffalo is initially for two years.

The Boston Symphony's trustees have not yet announced a decision with regard to Mr. Steinberg's future with the orchestra after the spring of 1972, nor are they obliged to announce his successor immediately. Meanwhile, Mr. Thomas is venturing forth with their good wishes, and in the words of BSO president Talcott M. Banks: "We are pleased that by the arrangement we have made with the Philharmonic, our Associate Conductor can serve them without reducing his responsibilities or concert schedule in Boston and Tanglewood." Which covers a multitude of possibilities.

By Paul Buck Hoeffler

Michael Tilson Thomas

The young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony will retain that post when he becomes music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra at the beginning of the 1971-72 season.

70

Staten Island Advance
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
D. 62,810 SUN. 59,039

DEC 27 1970

Byron Belt on the arts

A major talent surfaces early

By BYRON BELT

Michael Tilson Thomas, the brilliant, young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was recently acclaimed by the prestigious "Musical America" annual as "Musician of the Year." Since this final column for 1970 had long been blocked out for our own similar pronouncement we can only welcome the older journal's recognition as confirmation, if any were needed, of the astonishing rise of America's newest conducting wonder.

A bare quarter-of-a-century old, Thomas rose to the top of his profession at so early an age thanks to the two necessary ingredients for skyrocketing acclaim — talent and a major "break."

Thomas got a major unexpected opportunity when he was assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony and replaced indisposed music director William Steinberg midway through a concert at Lincoln Center.

Born of a theatrical family of almost legendary importance in turn-of-the-century Yiddish theater, Thomas began his studies at 10. Speeded up training in high school led to work at the University of Southern California with Ingolf Dahl and John Crown. Conducting and chamber music experiences were combined, for the piano was the solo instrument which dominated his early career.

Perhaps the most significant early opportunity was to serve as assistant to Pierre Boulez in 1966 at Bayreuth and the following year at the Ojai Festival which he himself then directed the following two seasons.

During the 1968 Tanglewood Festival season, musicians began to advise seeing Thomas in action, but our first encounter came the next summer, when he assisted in the preparation of Erich Leinsdorf's superb performance of Berg's "Wozzeck."

In the summer of 1969, Thomas was named assistant conductor for the Boston Symphony, and it was on October 22 of that year that he replaced the indisposed music director and assumed command of more than 30 concerts in Boston and on the road.

Byron Belt

A major fruit of the concerts Thomas directed were performances of one of the little known classics of American symphonic composition, the stupendous "Sun-Treader" of Carl Ruggles. After striking success with the work in Boston and New York City, Thomas included the exciting music by one of our great creative iconoclasts, on the first record made by the Boston Symphony under its new contract with Deutsche Grammophon Gesellshaft.

Browning's stirring lines in tribute to Shelley, "Sun-Treader, light and life be thine forever," provided the poetic inspiration for one of the most propulsive and explosive musical quarter hours imaginable. The craggy Ruggles genius created a work both heroic and challenging an orchestral burst of radiance altogether overwhelming.

When Thomas first conducted "Sun-treader" in Carnegie Hall, the audience response was enthusiastic. Sensing perhaps that the crowd was more impressed with the performance than the music, the young maestro picked up the score and held it aloft in triumph. It was a great night for Ruggles, who, at 94, has yet to hear his score in live concert.

When listening to that performance of "Sun-treader," he never dreamed that its surging power could be captured on a disc. DGG, however, knew better. On their stereo record, the engineers have realized full spectrum of the spectacular sonics of the Boston Symphony at its imposing best and done so on surfaces as smooth as silk.

BEST BET

"Hansel and Gretel" will be shown tonight on Channel 13 at 10 p.m. The Englebert Humperdinck opera may gain a wider audience than usual because many of today's generation think of the composer's name in connection with a popular singer.

"Hansel and Gretel," composed in 1895, deserves a large audience because the score is extremely melodic and appealing, and the production by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., is generally worthy of the opera.

In spite of a few un-theatrical devices, such as showing the orchestra in concert setting for the long overture and various interludes, the show moves smoothly, with fanciful sets and costumes and a few clever electronic tricks to amuse the kiddies of all ages.

The Grimm fairy tale of the children who outwit the witch who tries to turn them into gingerbread is amiable enough, and Humperdinck's music ranges from Wagnerian splendors to more folk-like tunes.

The Candian cast is headed by Maureen Forrester, whose witch is a bit more campy than wicked, and Judith Forst and Christine Anton as Hansel and Gretel. Cornelis Opthof is the father, and Arlene Meadows is particularly impressive as the mother. The musical direction by Mario Bernardi is excellent, and the production, ballet and other visual credits are good enough to assure two hours of solid entertainment.

Someone should be scolded for placing "Hansel and Gretel" at so late an hour locally. An early re-run at an earlier hour is very much in order!

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
(E) 13,500

FEB 19 1971

New England Newsclip

Buffalo Philharmonic taps Michael T. Thomas of BSO

BUFFALO (AP) — The Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra Society called a news conference today to announce the appointment of Michael Tilson Thomas, 26-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, as the Buffalo orchestra's part-time permanent conductor.

Thomas, who has been associated with the Boston Symphony since May 1969, had been considered heir-apparent to the Boston orchestra's conductor, 71-year-old William Steinberg, who last week announced he is retiring.

Leon H. Lowenthal, president of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra Society, said Thomas and the society had reached "a tentative verbal agreement" and that "Mr. Thomas is in Buffalo now to sign a contract." The salary was not disclosed.

Melvin Strauss has been conductor-in-residence of the 87-piece Buffalo orchestra since Lukas Foss stepped down last year. Foss has remained as principal visiting conductor.

Thomas will divide his time between Boston and Buffalo but is expected to conduct from 12 to 20 of the Buffalo orchestra's 28 concerts next season. The appointment is effective in October.

The young conductor is a native of Hollywood, Calif., and is a member of a theater family, the Thomashefskys. He was graduated from the University of Southern California.

Thomas, considered a brilliant innovator and full of vitality, was a conducting fellow at Tanglewood in Massachusetts in 1968, when he won the Koussevitzky Prize, named for the late conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Michael Tilson Thomas

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 895,505 SUN. 1,445,507

FEB 22 1971

Thomas Will Head Buffalo Philharmonic

Michael Tilson Thomas, the 26-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic effective with the beginning of the 1971-72 season.

Mr. Thomas will continue in his post with the Boston Symphony, which he joined as assistant conductor in 1969. Following a mid-concert substitution for William Steinberg at Philharmonic Hall when the latter became ill. Mr. Thomas conducted the Boston Symphony in more than 30 concerts during his first season with it. He was named associate conductor in 1970.

The Buffalo Philharmonic has been without a music director since Lukas Foss resigned in 1970.

The Sunday Star-Ledger
NEWARK, N. J.
SUN. 416,248

DEC 27 1970

Thomas at 25: Talent beyond years

Critic At Large

By BYRON BELT

Michael Tilson Thomas, the brilliant young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was recently acclaimed by the prestigious "Musical America" annual as "Musician of the Year." Since this final column for 1970 had long been blocked out for our own similar pronouncement, we can only welcome the older journal's recognition as confirmation, if any were needed, of the astonishing rise of America's newest conducting wonder.

A bare quarter of a century old, Michael Tilson Thomas rose to the top of his profession at so early an age thanks to the two necessary ingredients for skyrocketing acclaim—talent and a major break.

Thomas got his major unexpected opportunity when he was in his first year as assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony and replaced ailing music director William Steinberg midway through a concert at Lincoln Center.

Having a break, and being ready for it, are two very different matters. In the case of the Hollywood-born musician, the preparation was thorough, the ability astonishing, the temperament ready for the big time. While he may look boyish, Michael Tilson Thomas is already one of the most mature musicians of our time.

* * *

Born of a theatrical family of almost legendary importance in the turn-of-the-century Yiddish theater, Michael began his studies at the age of 10. Speeded-up training in high school led to work at USC with Ingolf Dahl and John Crown. Conducting and chamber music experiences were combined, for the piano was the solo instrument which dominated his early career.

Perhaps the most significant early opportunity was to serve as assistant to Pierre Boulex in 1966 at Bayreuth, and the following year at the Ojai Festival which he himself then directed the following two seasons.

During the 1968 Tanglewood Festival season musicians began to advise keeping an eye on Thomas, but our first encounter came the next summer when he assisted in the preparation for Erich Leinsdorf's superb performance of Berg's "Wozzeck."

In the summer of 1969 Thomas was named assistant conductor for the Boston Symphony, and it was on Oct. 22 of that year that he replaced the indisposed music director and assumed command of more than 30 concerts in Boston and on the road. This summer he will share the podium with Dr. Steinberg and Arthur Fiedler when the orchestra tours Europe.

* * *

A major fruit of the concerts Thomas directed were performances of one of the little-known classics of American symphonic composition, the stupendous 1932 "Sun-treader" of Carl Ruggles. After striking success with the work in Boston and New York, Thomas included the exciting music by one of our great creative iconoclasts on the first record made by the Boston Symphony under its new contract with Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft.

Browning's stirring lines in tribute to Shelley, "Sun-treader, Light and Life be thine forever," provided the poetic inspiration for one of the most propulsive and explosive musical quarter-hours imaginable. The craggy Ruggles genius created a work both heroic and challenging—an orchestral burst of radiance altogether overwhelming.

When Thomas first conducted "Sun-treader"' in Carnegie Hall, the audience was enthusiastic. Sensing perhaps that the crowd was more impressed with the performance than the music, the young maestro picked up the score and held it aloft in triumph. It was a great night for Ruggles, who at 94, had yet to hear his score in live concert.

When listening to that performance of "Sun-treader," we never dreamed that its surging power could be captured on disc. DGG, however, knew better. On their stereo record 2530-048, the engineers have realized the full spectrum of the spectacular sonics of the Boston Symphony at its imposing best, and done so on surfaces as smooth as silk.

Thomas considers himself an "instinctive" musician. But with a remarkable ability to actually "hear" the scores he is studying, he comes to rehearsals fully prepared to take complete command.

Musicians and the public are expressing themselves with increasing fervor and enthusiasm for Michael Tilson Thomas. Surely most of them will be happy to share our conviction that the young conductor is "Musician of the year!"

D&C Photo by Jim Laragy

Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, is a night person.

A Nice, Normal Genius

By MARGARET CONVERSE

He must be — he is — sick of people who close in around him at receptions to say, "My, aren't you, er, normal!"

Especially since he isn't, really. He is Michael Tilson Thomas, the 25-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, one of the up-and-coming geniuses of our era. Ever since he stepped up to the podium a year ago last October to replace ailing conductor William Steinberg, he has been world famous and terribly busy. But he is just 25 years old and, well, very normal-looking.

Thomas arrived in Rochester at 2 a.m. Monday to begin preparing for tonight's Philharmonic concert, the first in a series of three he will conduct here.

At 11 a.m. Tuesday he has just crawled out of bed at the Holiday Inn, and is wandering around the unmade remains wearing a rumpled aqua-colored Shetland sweater and a pair of large chrome-framed sunglasses. The glare from the snow outside the window, he explains as he telephones room service for some toast and coffee, is getting to him, besides the fact that he is not a daytime person.

"Fame has charged my whole lifestyle. Take my pattern of eating: I almost never eat dinner earlier than 9:30 p.m., and my real dinner is after the concert, around 11 p.m." After that, he stays up late reading and studying scores; fame has made him work very, very hard.

He is somewhat nervous about the coming concert — not necessarily handling the orchestra or the theater: "A theater is a theater. I've been in the Eastman Theater in its thousand and one variations all over the world. I feel very much at home with any orchestra in any theater."

But he has been plotting out the program. "The first concert here is by far the easiest. Somehow, I produce my best when doing the most difficult. The second (with Beverly Sills on March 4) is difficult because there are so many pieces, and especially because it's with a singer, a very great, effortless singer. We've

Please turn to 4C

TILSON THOMAS

From 1C

observed each other at Tanglewood, and I admire her tremendously. The third (March 11, program yet unannounced) will be quite difficult, and a change from the first two."

TONIGHT'S PROGRAM IS just two works: Beethoven's Symphony No. 7 and the Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2, with soloist Bruno Leonardo Gelber. Thomas is noted for the terrific variety he puts into his program — in Boston recently, he placed a piece written in 1190 back-to-back with a 1966 Stockhausen work.

So what will he do to contrast the Two B's? "Beethoven is very pianistic. He worked a lot from keyboard models, and this influences his phrasing. I hope to achieve a variety of articulation and phrasing, particularly in the first movement where the same rhythmic patterns occur again and again and again. I want to make the Beethoven symphony have the qualities of a piano piece, and I want to make the Brahms piano concerto sound like an orchestra against the piano. That ought to make an interesting evening."

But what about this orchestra which is brand-new to him? "Inherent in your question is the idea that a conductor is a force that arrives and takes over the orchestra. Maybe that's the way conductors used to be. But my theory of conducting is that I am very much like a voice coach working with a singer. Sure you play things for her, offer different ideas, get her inspired, give shape to her performance — but it's the singer who sings, and the players who play. Even if you never actually say to the players, 'How do you perceive this?' it's obvious to you when you hear them, and you capitalize on that. Therefore, a performance here will be entirely different than one in Boston or in New York or in Berlin."

THE BREAKFAST ARrives, and Thomas begins spreading on the butter and jelly very thickly. The coffee is half cream. Conducting is fantastic exercise.

Does he find the orchestra members ever react to his inexperience? 'Inexperience?" The buttering and jellying stops.

Well, after all, he had only been assistant (not even associate) conductor to the Boston Symphony Symphony for three weeks and was fresh from the University of Southern California when lightning hit.

"Inexperience? I wouldn't say that. I had been at Tanglewood two years, won the Koussevitsky (Serge Koussevitsky Conducting Prize) and I had prepared 'Wozzeck' there for Eric Leinsdorf — the singers, the instrumentalists, everything . . . The first time I ever conducted was in junior high — Walter Reed Junior High School in North Hollywood. I was an oboist, and my teacher was also. So one time he had me conduct while he played the oboe. My principal impression was what a good oboist he was."

Young Thomas conducted the high school orchestra and band, organized chamber groups, then went off to USC where he did more of the same. At 19-and-a-half he was conductor of the Young Musicians Foundation Orchestra, composed of young professionals about 24 years old, and in 1968 he went off to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. "That confirmed my decision to become a conductor. I decided that those particular problems were the most fascinating."

THEN IT WAS BOSTON and success. "The first thing that happened the day after the concert was that Leonard Bernstein called me from New York. He'd read about it in The New York Times. All he would say for the first ten minutes was 'I don't believe it.' "

Bernstein, who had a similar experience with the New York Philharmonic when he was 25 years old, provided "immense help" during the next year, along with Colin Davis, who had gone through the same thing at 32 with the Philharmonia Orchestra in London. "It wasn't just that one concert, you know, it was the whole year, because Mr. Steinberg continued to be ill — 40 concerts of five different programs. Things became very difficult, but they understood what it was like to stay up all night learning a score, wondering 'God, will I ever do it? Will I ever learn it?"

He has changed a lot since then, he admits, and not just in his eating habits and repertoire. "I'm more flamboyant now than I was, in everything I do. But I'm aware there's a reason; I have to find out things. The next stage is more control of the flamboyance."

Other than the lionizing at cocktail parties, he finds his youth to be no disadvantage at all — in fact, it seems to be right in the step of the times. "There was a period a half century ago when there were lots and lots of terribly young, terribly flamboyant people: Toscanini, Horowitz, Heifetz. But there is a kind of missing generation in music, people in their 40s and 50s, probably because of the war, and because they grew up in the direct shadow of that generation of geniuses. Now, you see lots of young people coming up in their 20s, again."

INSTEAD OF STUNTING his growth, success has opened new experiences to him: "Especially in traveling. I get a chance to see lots of places I would never get to see otherwise. The big thing is museums. I love to go to museums, wherever I am: the Stein show at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, the Albright-Knox Gallery in Buffalo, the reorganized Tate in London . . .

"And I read a lot. I read very fast, five books a week, every kind. I go on jags. Recently, I was on a Russian jag and re-read all of Pushkin, "Resurrection" by Tolstoy. Once, I read a three-volume history of the British Navy."

In college — he chose a university over a conservatory because of the liberal arts atmosphere — he took courses in literature, philosophy, Asiatic history, history of science, art history. His all-time hero is Theodoric of Freiberg, who worked out "with beautiful scientific method how the rainbow works, three centuries before Descartes. And he was right, too."

He has an apartment in Boston which is quite bare, because he is not there very often, and abhors acquiring things: "They hold you down."

The telephone rings; another interviewer has been waiting in the lobby for 15 minutes. "That's the one big disadvantage of all this. You're always being interviewed. Even at parties, people come up to talk to you, and they know all about you. Then they start asking questions. It's weird."

He grabs a sportscoat and walks out to the elevator, sunglasses still in place. Otherwise, he looks very normal.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,982 SAT. 297,247
JUL 13 1971

Philharmonic's Conductor Hailed in N.Y. Times Review

Reviewig a recent concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Michael Tilson Thomas on the podium, the New York Times called the young maestro "one of those rare musicians who handle themselves so easily that prenatal influence seems the only explanation for it."

Thomas, recently named musical director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra is scheduled to conduct his first concert with the Philharmonic Oct. 16 at 8:30 PM in Kleinhans Music Hall.

"No doubt he works at the job as hard as anyone, but it certainly does not show," the Times review said.

"Most musicians have to work to become conductors; a few have conducting thrust upon them; Mr. Thomas was born to it," the Times praised.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
(E) 11,496
FEB 19 1971

Boston musician to conduct here

#6

Michael Tilson Thomas, the spectacular young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, today was named conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic orchestra.

Thomas succeeds Lukas Foss, who left the orchestra last year and has worked as principal guest conductor this season.

Spokesmen for the Buffalo Philharmonic told a news conference that Thomas has signed a two-year contract as conductor-in-residence. He becomes one of the youngest men in the nation to lead a full orchestra.

Terms of the contract were not disclosed.

Thomas made guest appearances with the Buffalo orchestra last Nov. 22-24.

Thomas, 26, became assistant conductor in April, 1970, in a classic way: Conductor William Steinberg became ill during an intermission during a concert in York and Thomas was told, "Put your suit on, you're going to conduct." He led the orchestra until Steinberg returned this fall.

MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS

His elegant and crisp manner of conducting won critical acclaim but sources close to the orchestra said Thursday Thomas had not done as well this year.

"The honeymoon seemed to be over between Thomas and the symphony," one member said. "He's a little wet behind the ears as far as handling a gang of men is concerned."

FUND DRIVE EXTENDED

Indefinite extension of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra's drive to raise $575,000 has been announced by Thomas R. Beecher Jr., drive chairman. So far, $235,306 has been raised and the drive will honor all pledges of $10 or more with two tickets, worth $8, to any pops or symphony concert this season or next.

New England Newsclip

Thomas will conduct in Buffalo

BOSTO N(UPI)— Michael Tilson Thomas, the spectacular young assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will resign to become conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic, sources in the orchestra said.

Thomas, 26, became assistant conductor in April 1970 in a classic way: Conductor William Steinberg became ill during an intermission during a concert in New York and Thomas was told, "put your suit on, you're going to conduct." He led the orchestra until Steinberg returned this fall.

His elegant and crisp manner of conducting won critical acclaim, but sources close to the orchestra said Thursday Thomas had not done as well this year. "The honeymoon seemed to be over between Thomas and the symphony," one member said. "He's a little wet behind the ears as far as handling a gang of men is concerned."

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.
NEWS
(BUFFALO MARKET AREA)
D. 17,500
FEB 19 1971

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 141,697 SUN. 221,661
FEB 18 1971

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 917,082 SUN. 1,219,382
FEB 26 1971

M. T. Thomas Named to Buffalo Post

Michael Tilson Thomas, 26-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been named music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

Thomas will retain his present Boston position when he assumes the Buffalo post at the beginning of the 1971-72 season. The Buffalo orchestra has been without a permanent conductor since Lukas Foss resigned in May, 1970.

Born in Los Angeles, Thomas was a student of Ingolf Dahl at USC and active on the local music scene. He was appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1969 and associate conductor last year.

Thomas will lead several concerts of the Boston orchestra during its European tour this April, then guest-conduct the Japan Philharmonic before returning for the Tanglewood summer season. He was recently selected by Musical America magazine as its Musician of the Year.

72

STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
(E) 70,000 (S) 60,000

MAR 7 1971 New England Newsclip

Buffalo names Boston conductor

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Tilson Thomas, 26, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Los Angeles native will add these duties to his Boston duties beginning next fall.

Thomas was appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1969, following his winning the Koussevitzky Conducting Award at Tanglewood in 1968. During his first season, he made a dramatic substitution when conductor William Steinberg got sick in the middle of a concert in New York's Philharmonic Hall. He was appointed Boston associate conductor in 1970.

Previous music director in Buffalo was Lukas Foss, who programmed a lot of modern music.

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 479,644 SUN. 626,111

FEB 22 1971

MONITOR
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 210,850

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

Thomas off to Buffalo in conductorial shuffle

By Louis Snyder

With the announcement yesterday of his engagement as music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic, Michael Tilson Thomas is one declared winner in the newest game of musical chairs. The latest flurry was started last week when the Pittsburgh Symphony announced that William Steinberg, its lifetime music director (and also music director of the BSO since 1969) would make himself available there for increasing periods of time because of the expanding activities of the orchestra. Mr. Steinberg himself indicated that he would not be able to renew his contract as music director in Boston at its expiration in the spring of 1972, although he would be willing to retain his connection as "senior conductor and music advisor."

Although Mr. Thomas is still in his 20's, he inevitably joined the lists of successors to Mr. Steinberg, hastily drawn by prognosticators, because of his dramatic and successful takeover in midseason last year when Mr. Steinberg became ill. Mr. Thomas's promotion by the BSO from assistant to associate conductor, his increased conducting schedule during the current season, his identification with the orchestra on its new Deutsche Grammophon recordings, and the assignment to him of five concerts on the European tour in April would seem to have made him a leading contender.

The fact that important orchestra conductors, like hit show tickets, must be booked well in advance lends added zest to this game of second guessing. By mutual agreement between Buffalo and Boston, Mr. Thomas will retain his position as associate conductor with the latter orchestra for an unspecified time. His contract in Buffalo is initially for two years.

By Paul Buck Hoeffler

Michael Tilson Thomas

The young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony will retain that post when he becomes music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra at the beginning of the 1971-72 season.

The Boston Symphony's trustees have not yet announced a decision with regard to Mr. Steinberg's future with the orchestra after the spring of 1972, nor are they obliged to announce his successor immediately. Meanwhile, Mr. Thomas is venturing forth with their good wishes, and in the words of BSO president Talcott M. Banks: "We are pleased that by the arrangement we have made with the Philharmonic, our Associate Conductor can serve them without reducing his responsibilities or concert schedule in Boston and Tanglewood." Which covers a multitude of possibilities.

Thomas Named Conductor

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UPI)—Michael Tilson Thomas, regarded by some critics as the most gifted young musician to come along since Leonard Bernstein, was appointed music director and conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra Friday.

Thomas, 26, currently an associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, becomes one of the youngest conductors ever to head a major symphony orchestra in the United States.

Thomas' appointment was announced at a news conference by Robert I. Millonzi, chairman of the music advisory committee of the Buffalo Philharmonic. Millonzi said Thomas will continue to work as an associate conductor in Boston and will commute between the two cities.

Thomas told the news conference he planned to "go both backward and forward" with the Buffalo Philharmonic.

"I'll try to approach the totality of 800 years of Western music, going back into the past, performing works from the 16th century," he said. "I also hope to maintain Buffalo's already admirable tradition for presenting contemporary works."

A native of Hollywood, Calif., and a member of the Jewish theatrical family, the Thomaschevskys, Thomas stepped into the national spotlight on Oct. 22, 1969, when Boston Symphony Conductor William Steinberg became ill during a concert at the Lincoln Center in New York City.

It was less than a month since Thomas had been named an assistant conductor of the orchestra, but he was told during an intermission: "Put on your suit, you're going to conduct."

Steinberg, music director for the Buffalo Philharmonic from 1945 to 1952, did not return to work until last fall, giving Thomas an opportunity to conduct more than 30 concerts with the Boston Symphony. Thomas was appointed associate conductor at the close of the 1969-70 season.

Thomas made guest appearances with the Buffalo Philharmonic last November and also has conducted the Japan, London and Chicago symphony orchestras.

Michael Tilson Thomas

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,982 SAT. 297,247

FEB 19 1971

HIGH NOTE FOR CITY—Michael Tilson Thomas, right, signs a memorandum of agreement that insures his appointment, effective next season, as musical director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra. Robert I. Millonzi, left, chairman of the Philharmonic Advisory Board that negotiated the agreement, and Leon H. Lowenthal, president of the Philharmonic Society, watch youthful conductor sign.

PAGE ONE

Michael Thomas Named Philharmonic Conductor

By JOHN DWYER

The nation's most exciting and most talked-about young conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas, has accepted appointment as Buffalo Philharmonic music director and conductor, effective in October.

Mr. Thomas, 26, will retain his current post as associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and divide his time between Buffalo and Boston, though he will have a substantial role here. It is expected he will conduct six to 10 concert pairs in the 14-pair Buffalo season. He scored a triumph here as guest conductor in November.

Buffalo Philharmonic board approval of the appointment was voted enthusiastically on Thursday evening in a meeting in the residence of Robert I. Millonzi, chairman of the advisory board.

* * *

MR. MILLONZI and his committee have been negotiating for more than a year to bring Mr. Thomas to Buffalo as permanent conductor.

Leon H. Lowenthal, president of the Orchestra Society, said today that "a tentative verbal agreement" has been reached, and that "Mr. Thomas is in Buffalo now to sign a contract."

As for salary, Mr. Thomas commands one of the highest prices in the country for a pair of concerts, he said.

The appointment will make Mr. Thomas one of the youngest full conductors of a major orchestra in American music history.

* * *

THE YOUNG maestro had been recognized as exceptional for some years, but he zoomed to international attention and news magazine covers in October of 1969 in Lincoln Center.

Boston Symphony conductor William Steinberg (who incidentally was Buffalo maestro from 1945 to 1952 became ill on the podium, and Mr. Thomas, then an assistant-conductor, took the baton. His performance was hailed in the New York press and press reviews to the rest of the nation.

While Mr. Steinberg was recuperating, Mr. Thomas repeated his triumph in Carnegie Hall and went on to direct more than 30 concerts of the Boston orchestra.

He was raised from assistant to associate, and there was an immediate and huge demand for his appearances as guest conductor. He appeared with the Buffalo orchestra in series concerts Nov. 22-24, to high critical praise and standing audience tributes.

* * *

HE WAS born in Hollywood to a family renowned in Jewish theater, the Thomashevskys. A cousin was the late film actor Paul Muni (Scarface, Zola, Last Angry Man on late TV).

He was graduated from the University of Southern California and became director of the Young Musicians Foundation Debut Orchestra.

He was a conductor and piano soloist in the Los Angeles Monday Evening Concerts, founded by Mr. and Mrs. Peter Yates. Mr. Yates, now chairman of the music department of Buffalo State College, has continued to take a warm interest in the young musician.

Mr. Thomas was assistant conductor to noted composer Pierre Boulez in the 1966 Bayreuth Festival and the Ojai Festival in California, and he became Ojai Festival director in 1968 and 1969.

Also in 1968 he was a conducting fellow in the Berkshire Music Center and was awarded the Koussevitzky Prize. Last May he made his British debut with the London Symphony Orchestra, with ensuing summer appearances in the Ravinia Festival in Chicago and the Lincoln Center Mozart Festival.

* * *

THE BUFFALO Philharmonic, after formative years principally under John Ingram, developed the good fortune of having conductors of long tenure, rather than the fitful departures that have afflicted so many other orchestras.

From the mid-1930s to now there have been just four conductors, all of international repute — Franco Autori, William Steinberg, Josef Krips and Lukas Foss. Mr. Foss resigned and became principal guest conductor this season with Melvin Strauss as resident conductor.

Mr. Thomas is a thorough scholar, prepared to present masters of the Renaissance or the wide range of 20th-Century composers, as well as the more accustomed middle of the repertoire. And his gift of showmanship without trying, apparently a legacy of a theatrical family, should be no small factor in concert attendances.

NEWSWEEK
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 1,935,000

MAR 1 1971

MUSIC

On the Upbeat

At 26, Michael Tilson Thomas has advanced rapidly into the upper echelon of conductors. He was first catapulted into the limelight (NEWSWEEK, April 13, 1970) when he dramatically substituted for ailing conductor William Steinberg in the middle of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in New York's Philharmonic Hall in the fall of 1969. Since then the Los Angeles-born Thomas has been promoted from assistant conductor to associate conductor and has become a familiar figure on the podium of Boston's Symphony Hall. When the orchestra began to record for Deutsche Grammophon, it was Thomas who conducted the first release, an all-American parlay featuring the music of Charles Ives and Carl Ruggles. It has just been nominated for a Grammy Award as the best classical album of the year.

Loom: Last week Thomas took another giant step with the announcement that beginning this fall he would become the new music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic. He will also continue in his post with the BSO. "We're working out the period of residence in Buffalo now," Thomas told NEWSWEEK's Hubert Saal, "I'll probably spend about eight weeks actually conducting. But I'll also be around to decide on guest conductors and to plan the repertory. One of my first big projects is to schedule programs which will encompass in a season 800 years of Western music."

But the tall, lean figure of Thomas promises to loom even larger on the American musical scene. In Boston, 71-year-old music director William Steinberg (who himself directed the Buffalo Philharmonic from 1945 to 1952) will resign his position in 1972 to devote all his time to the Pittsburgh Symphony. Not only is the BSO in search of a conductor but so is the Cleveland Orchestra since the death of George Szell. And it should be added that Eugene Ormandy, head of the Philadelphia Orchestra, is 71 years old. It's clear that new, young blood is desperately needed in the sclerotic arteries of a number of major orchestras.

Magnetism: Steinberg's resignation in Boston will be followed by an interregnum during which he will serve as musical adviser and the orchestra will be led by Thomas and by a series of guest conductors. The Boston has gone through an unfortunate period of relative obscurity, especially in the sale of its records. Now, Thomas is in great favor with Deutsche Grammophon, as well as with the BSO, for his magnetism, his great grasp of repertory, his youthful American image, along the lines of a Leonard Bernstein.

"I will be doing a great deal of conducting in 1972-73 in Boston," admits Thomas. "Beyond that, there's nothing I can say." However, his two-year contract with Buffalo would free him nicely for 1973. And he would be well seasoned from running his own orchestra. A spokesman for the Boston Symphony was reluctant to confirm that Thomas would be the next musical director. But no one would deny it. And it seemed that widespread speculation as to who would become the new music director of the magnificent, 90-year-old orchestra, whose conductors have included Arthur Nikisch, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch, was now coming to an end. Michael Tilson Thomas is about to advance to the top of the orchestral ladder.

Ivan Massar—Black Star

Thomas: Young blood needed

EXPRESS
PORTLAND, MAINE
(E) [illegible]

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

ENTERPRISE & TIMES
BROCKTON, MASS.
(E) 53,254

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
(E) 19,654

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(M) 77,427

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

Thomas To Quit Hub Symphony For Buffalo Post

BOSTON (UPI)— Michael Tilson Thomas, the spectacular young assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will resign to become conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic, sources in the orchestra said.

Thomas, 26, became assistant conductor in April 1970 in a classic way: Conductor William Steinberg became ill during an intermission during a concert in New York and Thomas was told, "put you suit on, you're going to conduct." He led the orchestra until Steinburg returned this fall.

His elegant and crisp manner of conducting won critical acclaim, but sources close to the orchestra said Thursday Thomas had not done as well this year. "The honeymoon seemed to be over between Thomas and the symphony," one member said. "He's a little wet behind the ears as far as handling a gang of men is concerned."

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

AMSTERDAM, N. Y.
RECORDER & DEMOCRAT
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
D. 14,000

MAR 9 1971

POST
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
(E) 33,000 (S) 87,000

MAR 7 1971 New England Newsclip

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

New York Post
D. 708,180 SAT. 369,902

FEB 22 1971

ELYRIA, OHIO
CHRONICLE-TELEGRAM
D. 29,500

MAR 7 1971

Thomas Gets Buffalo Baton

Michael Tilson Thomas, 26-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed part-time permanent conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

BUFFALO CONDUCTOR IS 26

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Tilson Thomas, 26, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Los Angeles native will add these duties to his Boston duties beginning next fall.

Thomas was appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1969, following his winning the Koussevitzky Conducting Award at Tanglewood in 1968. During his first season, he made a dramatic substitution when conductor William Steinberg got sick.

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 154,165 SUN. 311,112

FEB 28 1971

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 144,697 SUN. 221,661

FEB 20 1971

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.
NEWS
(BUFFALO MARKET AREA)
D. 17,500

FEB 20 1971

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
(M) 152,525 (S) 198,160

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

RECORDER-GAZETTE
GREENFIELD, MASS.
(E) 13,822

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

HERALD
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
(E) 33,518

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(E) 85,055

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(M) 77,427

FEB 23 1971 New England Newsclip

Rochester Times-Union
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 145,808

FEB 17 1971

Niagara Falls Gazette
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
D. 35,280 SUN. 35,969

FEB 19 1971

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

FEB 23 1971 New England Newsclip

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

FEB 20 1971

BUFFALO, N. Y.
JEWISH REVIEW
W. 13,000

FEB 26 1971

OGDENSBURG, N. Y.
JOURNAL
D. 5,500

MAR 4 1971

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
(E) 11,496

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

HERALD
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
(E) 16,596

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

Jamestown Post-Journal
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
D. 29,489

FEB 19 1971

THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER
D. 189,425 SUN. 302,445

MAR 14 1971

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.
NEWS
(BUFFALO MARKET AREA)
D. 17,500

FEB 20 1971

LITTLE FALLS, N. Y.
TIMES
D. 6,500

FEB 19 1971

LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION-SUN &
JOURNAL
(BUFFALO MARKET AREA)
D. 15,000

FEB 19 1971

SENTINEL
FITCHBURG, MASS.
(E) 21,000

MAR 3 1971 New England Newsclip

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

THE POST-STANDARD
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 92,652

FEB 20 1971

SUN
WESTERLY, R. I.
(E) 9,900 (S) 9,950

MAR 19 1971 New England Newsclip

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 154,165 SUN. 311,112

FEB 20 1971

EXPRESS
NEWPORT, VERMONT
(E) 4,280

FEB 27 1971 New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(E) 30,100

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

CHRONICLE
NORTH ATTLEBORO, MASS.
(E) 4,780

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

DUNKIRK, N. Y.
OBSERVER
D. 12,000

FEB 19 1971

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,982 SAT. 297,247

MAR 15 1971

Philharmonic's Thomas Up for Grammy Award

NEW YORK, March 15 (AP) — Michael Tilson Thomas, recently named conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, is a nominee for a Grammy Award tomorrow.

Mr. Thomas

He is among artists who produced outstanding classical records last year. Mr. Thomas conducted the Boston Symphony in Shostakovich's Symphony No. 13.

There are 43 categories in the Grammy Awards, which will be presented on television.

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,982 SAT. 297,247

FEB 19 1971

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 154,165 SUN. 311,112

APR 15 1971

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
(E) 13,500

MAR 12 1971 New England Newsclip

SENTINEL
KEENE, N. H.
(E) 9,318

FEB 22 1971 New England Newsclip

SUN
WESTERLY, R. I.
(E) 9,900 (S) 9,950

MAR 15 1971 New England Newsclip

NEWSWEEK
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 1,935,000

MAR 1 1971

MUSIC

On the Upbeat

At 26, Michael Tilson Thomas has advanced rapidly into the upper echelon of conductors. He was first catapulted into the limelight (NEWSWEEK, April 13, 1970) when he dramatically substituted for ailing conductor William Steinberg in the middle of a Boston Symphony Orchestra concert in New York's Philharmonic Hall in the fall of 1969. Since then the Los Angeles-born Thomas has been promoted from assistant conductor to associate conductor and has become a familiar figure on the podium of Boston's Symphony Hall. When the orchestra began to record for Deutsche Grammophon, it was Thomas who conducted the first release, an all-American parlay featuring the music of Charles Ives and Carl Ruggles. It has just been nominated for a Grammy Award as the best classical album of the year.

Loom: Last week Thomas took another giant step with the announcement that beginning this fall he would become the new music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic. He will also continue in his post with the BSO. "We're working out the period of residence in Buffalo now," Thomas told NEWSWEEK's Hubert Saal, "I'll probably spend about eight weeks actually conducting. But I'll also be around to decide on guest conductors and to plan the repertory. One of my first big projects is to schedule programs which will encompass in a season 800 years of Western music."

But the tall, lean figure of Thomas promises to loom even larger on the American musical scene. In Boston, 71-year-old music director William Steinberg (who himself directed the Buffalo Philharmonic from 1945 to 1952) will resign his position in 1972 to devote all his time to the Pittsburgh Symphony. Not only is the BSO in search of a conductor but so is the Cleveland Orchestra since the death of George Szell. And it should be added that Eugene Ormandy, head of the Philadelphia Orchestra, is 71 years old. It's clear that new, young blood is desperately needed in the sclerotic arteries of a number of major orchestras.

Magnetism: Steinberg's resignation in Boston will be followed by an interregnum during which he will serve as musical adviser and the orchestra will be led by Thomas and by a series of guest conductors. The Boston has gone through an unfortunate period of relative obscurity, especially in the sale of its records. Now, Thomas is in great favor with Deutsche Grammophon, as well as with the BSO, for his magnetism, his great grasp of repertory, his youthful American image, along the lines of a Leonard Bernstein.

"I will be doing a great deal of conducting in 1972-73 in Boston," admits Thomas. "Beyond that, there's nothing I can say." However, his two-year contract with Buffalo would free him nicely for 1973. And he would be well seasoned from running his own orchestra. A spokesman for the Boston Symphony was reluctant to confirm that Thomas would be the next musical director. But no one would deny it. And it seemed that widespread speculation as to who would become the new music director of the magnificent, 90-year-old orchestra, whose conductors have included Arthur Nikisch, Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch, was now coming to an end. Michael Tilson Thomas is about to advance to the top of the orchestral ladder.

Ivan Massar—Black Star

Thomas: Young blood needed

EXPRESS
PORTLAND, MAINE
(E) [illegible]34

FEB 19 1971 New England Newscli

ENTERPRISE & TIMES
BROCKTON, MASS.
(E) 53,254

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
(E) 19,654

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(M) 77,427

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

Thomas To Quit Hub Symphony For Buffalo Post

BOSTON (UPI)— Michael Tilson Thomas, the spectacular young assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, will resign to become conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic, sources in the orchestra said.

Thomas, 26, became assistant conductor in April 1970 in a classic way: Conductor William Steinberg became ill during an intermission during a concert in New York and Thomas was told, "put you suit on, you're going to conduct." He led the orchestra until Steinburg returned this fall.

His elegant and crisp manner of conducting won critical acclaim, but sources close to the orchestra said Thursday Thomas had not done as well this year. "The honeymoon seemed to be over between Thomas and the symphony," one member said. "He's a little wet behind the ears as far as handling a gang of men is concerned."

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

AMSTERDAM, N. Y.
RECORDER & DEMOCRAT
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
D. 14,000

MAR 9 1971

POST
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
(E) 33,000 (S) 87,000

MAR 7 1971 New England Newsclip

BUFFALO CONDUCTOR IS 26

BOSTON (AP) — Michael Tilson Thomas, 26, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

The Los Angeles native will add these duties to his Boston duties beginning next fall.

Thomas was appointed assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony in 1969, following his winning the Koussevitzky Conducting Award at Tanglewood in 1968. During his first season, he made a dramatic substitution when conductor William Steinberg got sick.

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 154,165 SUN. 311,112

FEB 28 1971

Democrat and Chronicle
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 144,597 SUN. 221,661

FEB 20 1971

Rochester Times-Union
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
D. 145,808

FEB 17 1971

Niagara Falls Gazette
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
D. 35,280 SUN. 35,969

FEB 19 1971

OGDENSBURG, N. Y.
JOURNAL
D. 5,500

MAR 4 1971

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
(E) 11,496

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.
NEWS
(BUFFALO MARKET AREA)
D. 17,500

FEB 20 1971

LITTLE FALLS, N. Y.
TIMES
D. 6,500

FEB 19 1971

THE POST-STANDARD
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
D. 92,052

FEB 20 1971

SUN
WESTERLY, R. I.
(E) 9,900 (S) 9,950

MAR 19 1971 New England Newsclip

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,982 SAT. 297,247

MAR 15 1971

Philharmonic's Thomas Up for Grammy Award

NEW YORK, March 15 (AP) — Michael Tilson Thomas, recently named conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, is a nominee for a Grammy Award tomorrow.

Mr. Thomas

He is among artists who produced outstanding classical records last year. Mr. Thomas conducted the Boston Symphony in Shostakovich's Symphony No. 13.

There are 43 categories in the Grammy Awards, which will be presented on television.

New England Newsclip

New York Post
D. 708,190 SAT. 369,902

FEB 22 1971

Thomas Gets Buffalo Baton

Michael Tilson Thomas, 26-year-old associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, has been appointed part-time permanent conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra.

MAR 7 1971

NORTH TONAWANDA, N. Y.
NEWS
(BUFFALO MARKET AREA)
D. 17,500

FEB 20 1971

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
(M) 150,525 (S) 198,160

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

RECORDER-GAZETTE
GREENFIELD, MASS.
(E) 13,822

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

HERALD
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
(E) 33,518

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(E) 85,055

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(M) 77,427

FEB 23 1971 New England Newsclip

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,337

FEB 23 1971 New England Newsclip

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

FEB 20 1971

BUFFALO, N. Y.
JEWISH REVIEW
W. 13,000

FEB 26 1971

HERALD
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
(E) 16,596

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

Jamestown Post-Journal
JAMESTOWN, N. Y.
D. 29,489

FEB 19 1971

THE CINCINNATI ENQUIRER
D. 189,425 SUN. 302,445

MAR 14 1971

LOCKPORT, N. Y.
UNION-SUN & JOURNAL
(BUFFALO MARKET AREA)
D. 15,000

FEB 19 1971

SENTINEL
FITCHBURG, MASS.
(E) 21,000

MAR 3 1971 New England Newsclip

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 154,165 SUN. 311,112

FEB 20 1971

EXPRESS
NEWPORT, VERMONT
(E) 4,280

FEB 27 1971 New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(E) 30,100

FEB 19 1971 New England Newsclip

CHRONICLE
NORTH ATTLEBORO, MASS.
(E) 4,780

FEB 20 1971 New England Newsclip

DUNKIRK, N. Y.
OBSERVER
D. 12,000

FEB 19 1971

Buffalo Evening News
D. 281,982 SAT. 297,247

FEB 19 1971

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 154,165 SUN. 311,112

APR 15 1971

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
(E) 13,500

MAR 12 1971 New England Newsclip

SENTINEL
KEENE, N. H.
(E) 9,318

FEB 22 1971 New England Newsclip

SUN
WESTERLY, R. I.
(E) 9,900 (S) 9,950

MAR 15 1971 New England Newsclip

74

REPUBLICAN,
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(S) 113,761

Long Island Press
JAMAICA, N. Y.
D. 471,000 SUN. 472,700

New England Newsclip
JAN 3

DEC 27 1970

CRITIC-AT-LARGE

Michael Tilson Thomas 'Musician of the Year'

By BYRON BELT
Special to The Republican

NEW YORK — Michael Tilson Thomas, the brilliant young associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was recently acclaimed by the prestigious "Musical America" annual as "musician of the year." Since this column had long been planned for our own similar pronouncement, we can only welcome that journal's recognition as confirmation — if any were needed — of the astonishing rise of America's newest conducting wonder.

A bare quarter of a century old, Michael Tilson Thomas rose to the top of his profession at so early an age thanks to the two necessary ingredients for skyrocketing acclaim — talent and a major "break."

Unexpected Chance

Thomas got a major unexpected opportunity when he was assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony and replaced indisposed music director William Steinberg midway through a concert at Lincoln Center.

Having a break and being ready for it are two very different matters. In the case of the Hollywood - born musician, the preparation was thorough, the ability astonishing, the temperament ready for the big time. While he may look boyish, Thomas already is one of the most mature musicians of our time.

Born of a theatrical family of almost legendary importance in turn - of-the - century Yiddish theater, Michael began his studies at the age of 10. Speeded - up training in high school led to work at the University of Southern California with Ingolf Dahl and John Crown. Conducting and chamber music experiences were combined. The piano was the solo instrument that dominated his early career.

Perhaps the most significant early opportunity was to serve as assistant to Pierre Boulez in 1966 at Bayreuth, and the following year at the Ojai Festival which Thomas himself then directed the following two seasons.

During the 1968 Tanglewood festival season, musicians began to advise seeing Thomas in action, but our first encounter came the next summer when he assisted in the preparation of Erich Leinsdorf's superb performance of Berg's "Wozzeck."

In the summer of 1969 Thomas was named assistant conductor for the Boston Symphony, and it was on Oct. 22 of that year that he filled in for the music director and assumed command of more than 30 concerts in Boston and on the road.

A major fruit of the concerts Thomas directed were performances of one of the little known classics of American symphonic composition, the stupendous "Sun-Treader" of Carl Ruggles. After striking success with the work in Boston and New York, Thomas included the exciting music by one of our great creative iconoclasts on the first record made by the Boston Symphony under its new contract with Deutsche Grammophon Gesellshaft.

Browning's lines in tribute to Shelley, "Sun-treader, light and life be thine forever," provided the poetic inspiration for one of the most propulsive and explosive musical quarter-hours imaginable. The craggy Ruggles genius created a work both heroic and challenging, an orchestral burst of radiance altogether overwhelming.

Fine Response

When Thomas first conducted "Sun-Treader," in Carnegie Hall, the audience's response was enthusiastic. Perhaps sensing that the crowd was more impressed with the performance than the music, the young maestro picked up the score and held it aloft in triumph. It was a great night for Ruggles, who's 94.

When listening to that performance of "Sun-Treader," one never dreamed that its surging power could be capture on disc. DDG, however, knew better. On its stereo record 2530-048, the engineers have realized the full spectrum of the spectacular sonics of the Boston Symphony at its imposing best, and have done so on surfaces as smooth as silk.

As if the Ruggles were not sufficient accomplishment for Thomas, the magnificent Bostonians and DGG, the flip side features a splendid performance of "Three Places in New England" by fellow Yankee rebel Charles Ives. The combination is ear-boggling and mind-stretching. It was a performance of another Ruggles work attended by Charles Ives that caused the latter to down a heckler by shouting, "stop being such a god-damned sissy. Stand up and use your ear like a man!"

Rich Adventure

To everyone who will listen, "Sun-Treader" and "Three Places in New England" will be rich adventure indeed.

While Thomas is surely destined to devote most of his future career to conducting, the piano is still important to him personally and professionally. DGG did not overlook his pianistic talents when making its first recordings in Boston, and the result is a beautiful album of Debussy chamber works played to shimmering perfection by Thomas and various principals of the orchestra.

DGG 2535-049 features Thomas with Joseph Silverstein in the Debussy violin and piano sonata and with Jules Eskin in the sonata for cello and piano. The latter is a special delight, performed with passionate conviction by both musicians. The exquisite sonata for flute, viola and harp is hauntingly performed by Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Burton Fine and Ann Hobson, and Miss Dwyer plays the mysterious syrinx, for solo flute, wonderfully well.

Thomas considers himself an "instinctive" musician. With a remarkable ability to actually "hear" the scores he is studying, Thomas comes to rehearsals fully prepared to take complete command. Yet, as he put it recently, he feels that 'all music is a collaboration — the conductor's job is to provide a climate where musicians can express themselves.

Both the public and musicians have been expressing themselves enthusiastically concerning Thonas. They will surely share our pleasure in saluting him as "musician of the year."

Republican New York Bureau

STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
(E) 70,000 (S) 60,000

FEB 9 1971 New England Newsclip

Steinberg to leave Boston Symphony

NEW YORK (AP) — William Steinberg, 70, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952 and music director of the Boston Symphony since 1969, announced Monday that he plans to leave the Boston job.

Steinberg's office in New York quoted him as saying he would not renew his Boston contract after its expiration in the spring of 1972. The reason is that the Pittsburgh Symphony has asked for more of his time.

Steinberg took the Boston music directorship at the time Erich Leinsdorf resigned, with the understanding he would guide the orchestra and advise on a permanent replacement for Leinsdorf. He said he would continue to help with recommendations for a permanent music director in Boston.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

FEB 10 1971 New England Newsclip

William Steinberg

Steinberg to Quit BSO Post When Pact Expires in '72

William Steinberg, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will leave that post when his current contract expires in 1972.

Seinberg is also conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, and said that post —one he has held for the past 18 years—is demanding more of his time.

Steinberg, who is 70, took over here when Erich Leinsdorf resiged two years ago, with the understanding that he would advise the trustees on a choice of a permanent replacement for Leinsdorf. He said he will continue to do that.

The trustees will meet later this week, with the possibility of asking Steinberg to spend eight weeks in Boston and to serve as senior conductor and music adviser for the 1972-73 season.

Steinberg to Quit Boston Music Post

NEW YORK (AP) — William Steinberg, 70, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952 and music director of the Boston Symphony since 1969, has reported that he plans to leave the Boston job.

Steinberg's office in New York quoted him as saying he would not renew his Boston contract after its expiration in the spring of 1972. The reason is that the Pittsburgh Symphony has asked for more of his time.

This season and next he will be conducting 17 weeks in Pittsburgh and 12 weeks in Boston. During the 1972-73 season he will devote at least 22 weeks to Pittsburgh.

Steinberg took the Boston music directorship at the time Erich Leinsdorf resigned, with the understanding he would guide the orchestra and advise on a permanent replacement for Leinsdorf. He said he would continue to help with recommendations for a permanent music director in Boston.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
(M) 66,728 (S) 208,349

FEB 9 1971 New England Newsclip

Symphony's Conductor Quitting Hub

Pittsburgh —(UPI)— William Steinberg, who has served for the last two years as music director of both the Pittsburgh and Boston Symphony Orchestras, is leaving the Boston post next year, it was announced yesterday.

However, he has offered to continue as senior conductor and music adviser another season while the Boston group searches for a permanent replacement, devoting a maximum of eight weeks to Boston.

John E. Angle, president of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society, said the society board had asked Steinberg to give more of his time to the orchestra here starting with the 1972-73 season. Steinberg has been conductor and music director here for 20 years.

"The Pittsburgh Symphony will always come first with me as far as it desires and needs are concerned," Steinberg said. He said he had notified the Boston Symphony in December that he would not renew his contract as music director after it expires in the spring of 1972.

Last Tuesday, the Boston group asked him to consider staying one additional year, but Steinberg said eight weeks was the maximum. The offer is to be considered by Boston directors at a meeting this week.

The Evening Star
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 318,026 SUN. 362,403

FEB 16 1971

Steinberg Set To Leave Job In Boston

NEW YORK (AP)—William Steinberg, 70, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952 and music director of the Boston Symphony since 1969, has announced he plans to leave the Boston job.

Steinberg's office in New York quoted him as saying he would not renew his Boston contract after its expiration in the spring of 1972. The reason is that the Pittsburgh Symphony has asked for more of his time.

This season and next he will be conducting 17 weeks in Pittsburgh and 12 weeks in Boston. During the 1972-73 season he will devote at least 22 weeks to Pittsburgh.

Steinberg took the Boston music directorship at the time Erich Leinsdorf resigned, with the understanding he would guide the orchestra and advise on a permanent replacement for Leinsdorf. He said he would continue to help with recommendations for a permanent music director in Boston.

The Boston Symphony board is expected to discuss the possibility of Steinberg's spending eight weeks in Boston and being "senior conductor and music adviser" for the 1972-73 season.

The Pittsburgh Symphony gave the Cologne-born Steinberg a lifetime contract as music director in 1968.

Newsday
GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
D. 427,270

FEB 12 1971

Steinberg to leave Boston

Conductor William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh and Boston Symphonies, has announced that he will give up his Boston post after the 1971-72 season. Steinberg, 71, has been director of the Boston Symphony since 1969. He explained he was asked by Pittsburgh officials to devote more time to the orchestra he has directed since 1952. A spokesman for the Boston said that the orchestra's board of trustees were considering Steinberg's offer to spend eight weeks in Boston during the 1972-73 season as senior conductor and adviser.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 895,505 SUN. 1,445,507

FEB 9 1971

STEINBERG TO LEAVE BOSTON SYMPHONY

William Steinberg has informed the Boston Symphony Orchestra that he will not renew his contract as music director when it expires at the end of next season.

Mr. Steinberg, who has been music director in Boston since the fall of 1969, said yesterday that he had been asked by the Pittsburgh Symphony, of which he also is music director, to devote more of his time to that orchestra and its expanding activities. "The Pittsburgh Symphony, of which I have been music director for 20 years, will always come first with me," he said.

The 71-year-old conductor's decision was announced by John E. Angle, president of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society. Mr. Steinberg said the Boston trustees had inquired whether he would be available to stay on for an additional year as music director, through the 1972-73 season.

He told them he could offer Boston no more than eight weeks, which he regarded as insufficient to carry out the duties. He offered instead to consider the post of senior conductor and music director for that season, ad the matter was to be taken up later this week by the Boston board of trustees.

Mr. Steinberg informed Talcott M. Banks, president of the Boston Symphony, of his decision last December, and promised to help in recommending possible candidates to succeed him. During the 1972-73 season, Mr. Steinberg is scheduled to give at least 22 weeks to the Pittsburgh orchestra, conducting 16 of the 24 major concerts.

Los Angeles Times
LARGEST CIRCULATION IN THE WEST
D. 917,082 SUN. 1,219,382

FEB 17 1971

Abbado . . . Davis . . . Kubelik . . . Ozawa?

Who'll succeed Steinberg as BSO conductor?

By Michael Steinberg, Globe Staff

As of mid-1972, the Boston Symphony will again be without a Music Director. The three-year contract of William Steinberg, who turns 73 that summer, runs out then, and the Boston trustees had not yet invited him to stay when, last week, he announced his intention of again, for the 1972-73 season and beyond, giving his more or less full-time attention to the Pittsburgh Symphony, whose Music Director he has been since 1952. That would leave him a maximum of eight weeks to give Boston in 1972-73 and that, said Steinberg, was not enough for him to have the responsibilities and the title of Music Director. He suggested continuing to serve here as Senior Conductor or Musical Advisor, and that offer was to be discussed by the BSO trustees at a meeting scheduled after the writing of this article.

It is likely to be some time before the Boston Symphony announces who its new Music Director is to be; meanwhile, if the trustees have anything definite cooking, it is a well-kept secret. So now the guesswork can start again, much as it did in December, 1967, when Erich Leinsdorf said he would leave at the end of summer, 1969. The game then was made interesting because the Chicago Symphony and the New York Philharmonic were also looking for conductors, whom they found in the persons respectively of Georg Solti, which was no surprise, and Pierre Boulez, which was. Now Cleveland needs a conductor after the death last spring of George Szell, and Philadelphia will have to deal with the problem before long, Eugene Ormandy now being 71.

Indulging in fantasies about the future of the Boston Symphony will be easier once next season's guest conductor list is published, but so far that is being sat on tight. Of course there are some conductors that one can probably eliminate as candidates: the ones who aren't good enough (. . . well? . . .), the ones who aren't famous enough, those who are too well employed elsewhere (Boulez and Solti, for example), those who are too old, probably the very young, even though enormously gifted (Daniel Barenboim, Lawrence Foster, James Levine, Michael Tilson Thomas, for intance), and surely Leinsdorf who is not apt to pass this way again except as a guest. Apart from all the obvious desiderata for a Music Director, it will also have to be someone who pleases the Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft, with whom the BSO now has an exclusive recording contract.

To make a beginning, here is a short list of names to think about:

Claudio Abbado, 37, an Italian. A winner of the Koussevitzky prize at Tanglewood and of the Mitropoulos competition, he has made a big career quickly, being much involved with LaScala, Milan, and having just been named Permanent Conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic. He conducted here this season and last, and will not return next only because of scheduling difficulties. Except for an "Eroica" (all right, but not distinguished) and one Bellini opera (marvelous), I have heard him only in late 19th century repertory and beyond, most of which he does with fine flair, particularly the really splashy things like Scriabin's "Poem of Ecstasy." He is Deutsche Grammophon property, and he has made two recordings here (Debussy-Ravel and Scriabin-Tchaikovsky). Clearly one of the good guys, though not, I think, great, and in many ways an unknown quantity still.

Colin Davis, 43, English, now heading the Covent Garden Opera, and with a well established reputation as one of the most serious, responsible, and versatile performers of his generation, outstanding in Mozart and Berlioz. Trouble is that already he has turned the BSO down twice, and though there were rumors that he had been very much interested in the New York Philharmonic, it seems unlikely that he would want to take any permanent post in the United States. A pity.

Rafael Kubelik, 56, a political exile from Czechoslovakia since the Cmmunist take-over of 1948, now music director of the Bavarian Radio (Munich), and said recently to have turned down an offer from Cleveland. He comes here in March for his third guest engagement with the BSO. He, too, is with Deutsche Grammophon and will record Smetana's "My Fatherland" here next month. A profound musician, magnificently mature, strong in a wide portion of repertory, though in the 20th century his interests and effective range seem not to go beyond, say, Schoenberg nad Bartok. As a young man he had a brutal experience with the Chicago Symphony (more exactly with Claudia Cassidy of The Chicago Tribune), and though he has been guest conductor of virtually every major American orchestra with success since then (including Chicago), he perhaps hesitates about a permanent affiliation with another orchestra in this country.

Seiji Ozawa, 33, music director of the San Francisco Symphony, and already ours in so far as he is Artistic Director of Tanglewood (jointly with Gunther Schuller). His "Cosi fan tutte" last summer was enjoyable, but he has not generally been impressive in the 18th century, and has been strongest in the Abbado repertory, and there often very strong indeed. Erratic, he has seemed sometimes to conduct pieces before really digesting them, but then he has also given Boston some of its most impressive concerts in recent years. It would be a lively time, though with exasperating days.

Michael Tilson Thomas at 26 probably belongs in my "too young" list, but his position here, Assistant Conductor last season, promoted to Associate Conductor for this year, and the considerable impression he has been able to make since William Steinberg's illness last year provided him with extraordinary opportunities, mean that he should be considered. If he is a future BSO Music Director, he is more likely — and surely more wisely — not the next, but the one after next. His musical qualifications are superb, but the continued terrific upward acceleration that such an appointment would mean, is about the last thing he needs just now for his development as a musician and, for that matter for the shaping of his career. He can be more effective coming in later from somewhere else, and maybe he is our man for the 1980's and 90's.

Someone should organize a sweepstakes for the BSO's Pension Fund.

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
(E) 150,082
FEB 9 1971
New England Newsclip

Steinberg to Leave Boston Symphony

New York — (AP) — William Steinberg, 70, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952 and music director of the Boston Symphony since 1969, announced Monday that he plans to leave the Boston job.

Steinberg's office in New York quoted him as saying he would not renew his Boston contract after its expiration in the spring of 1972. The reason is that the Pittsburgh Symphony has asked for more of his time.

This season and next he will be conducting 17 weeks in Pittsburgh and 12 weeks in Boston. During the 1972-73 season he will devote at least 22 weeks to Pittsburgh.

Steinberg took the Boston music directorship at the time Erich Leinsdorf resigned, with the understanding he would guide the orchestra and advise on a permanent replacement for Leinsdorf. He said he would continue to help with recommendations for a permanent music director in Boston.

The Boston Symphony board will meet later this week and may discuss the possibility of Steinberg's spending eight weeks in Boston and being "senior conductor and music adviser" for the 1972-73 season.

The Pittsburgh Symphony gave the Cologne-born Steinberg a lifetime contract as music director in 1968.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(M) 77,427
FEB 9 1971
New England Newsclip

Pittsburgh 'First'

Music Director Quits Hub Symphony Post

PITTSBURGH (UPI) — William Steinberg, who has served for the past two years as music director of both the Pittsburgh and Boston Symphony Orchestras, is leaving the Boston post next year, it was announced Monday.

However, he has offered to continue as senior conductor and music adviser for another season while the Boston group searches for a permanent replacement, but devoting a maximum of eight weeks to Boston.

President John E. Angle of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society said the society board had asked Steinberg to give more of his time to the orchestra here starting with the 1972-73 season.

Steinberg has been conductor and music director here for 20 years.

"The Pittsburgh Symphony... will always come first with me as far as its desires and needs are concerned," Steinberg said.

Eight Weeks

Steinberg said he notified the Boston Symphony in December that he would not renew his contract as music director after it expires in the spring of 1972.

Last Tuesday, the Boston group asked him to consider staying one additional year, but Steinberg said eight weeks was the maximum. The offer was to be considered by Boston directors at a meeting later this week.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(E) 30,100
FEB 9 1971
New England Newsclip

Steinberg To Quit BSO At End of Next Season

William Steinberg has informed the Boston Symphony Orchestra that he will not renew his contract as music director when it expires at the end of next season.

Pittsburgh Request

Steinberg, who has been music director in Boston since the fall of 1969, said yesterday that he had been asked by the Pittsburgh Symphony, of which he also is music director, to devote more of his time to that orchestra and its expanding activities. "The Pittsburgh Symphony, of which I have been music director for 20 years, will always come first with me," he said.

The 71-year-old conductor's decision was announced by John E. Angle, president of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society. Steinberg said the Boston trustees had inquired whether he would be available to stay on for an additional year as music director, through the 1972-73 season.

He told them he could offer Boston no more than eight weeks, which he regarded as insufficient to carry out the duties. He offered instead to consider the post of senior conductor and music director for that season, and the matter was to be taken up later this week by the Boston board of trustees.

William Steinberg

Steinberg informed Talcott M. Banks, president of the Boston Symphony, of his decision last December and promised to help in recommending possible candidates to succeed him. During the 1972-73 season, Steinberg is scheduled to give at least 22 weeks to the Pittsburgh orchestra, conducting 16 of the 24 major concerts.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377
FEB 14 1971
New England Newsclip

Steinberg Leaves BSO Next Year

It was revealed this week that next season will be William Steinberg's last as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. According to an announcement made by John E. Angle, president of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society, Steinberg has informed the Boston Symphony trustees that he will not renew his contract as music director upon its expiration at the end of the 1971-72 season.

The 71-year-old conductor has been music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony for 20 years and has held the same position with the Boston orchestra since the fall of 1969, dividing his time more or less equally between the two groups.

In anticipation of a gala 1972-73 season, by which time Pittsburgh expects to have completed a major fund-raising drive and to have moved into a new hall, the orchestra there asked Steinberg to conduct 22 weeks of its concerts during that season. Steinberg, quoted as saying "The Pittsburgh Symphony . . . will always come first with me," acceded to the request.

HERALD TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 216,305 (S) 298,557
FEB 11 1971
New England Newsclip

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377
FEB 14 1971
New England Newsclip

Who'll conduct Hub Symphony?

William Steinberg's announcement that the 1971-72 season will be his last as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra raises speculation on his successor.

Some of the possible candidates include Claudio Abbado, Rafael Kubelik, Seiji Ozawa, Colin Davis, and Michael Tilson Thomas.

Michael Steinberg discusses the possibilities and qualifications of each on Page A-11.

New York Post
D. 708,180 SAT. 369,902
FEB 12 1971

Steinberg to Leave Boston in Spring '72

William Steinberg, currently music director of both the Pittsburgh and Boston Symphony Orchestras, will leave the Boston at the expiration of his current contract in the spring of '72. He has been asked by the Pittsburgh Board to give the orchestra more time, especially as it has plans for expansion and in view of the completion of the reconstruction of the Penn Theater in downtown Pittsburgh in the fall of this year. Donald Johanos, formerly music director of the Dallas Symphony, will remain as associate conductor of Pittsburgh.

Steinberg will devote at least 22 weeks to the '72-'73 season and will participate in the Temple University Summer Music Festival and Institute.

76

Close-Up

Keeping Open the Door to Symphony Hall

(Editor's Note: Since the retirement of Erich Leinsdorf and the accession of William Steinberg, now 70, as interim music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra two years ago, the name of Claudio Abbado, a 32-year-old Italian conductor, has been mentioned frequently as one of a handful of likely candidates to be the next long-term leader of the Boston Symphony.

(The announcement this week that Mr. Steinberg will relinquish his duties in Boston at the end of next season to spend full time with the Pittsburgh Symphony has lent a sense of urgency to the search for a new music director to continue the tradition of Serge Koussevitsky, Charles Munch and Mr. Leinsdorf. In fact, the Boston Symphony trustees have announced a meeting for today, presumably to discuss the implications of Mr. Steinberg's return to Pittsburgh.

(With the appointment earlier this year of Mr. Abbado as permanent conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic, there had been some speculation that he was thus removed from consideration for the Boston post. In the following interview, conducted in Philadelphia, Mr. Abbado discusses the Boston situation.)

By Dan Webster

Patriot Ledger Correspondent

When Claudio Abbado conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra last year, he was a talented young musician without the cachet of being music director of a major ensemble. When he returned last weekend (as guest conductor of the Symphony's Thursday, Friday and Saturday concerts and to lead a recording session on Monday) he came not as an itinerant prodigy but as the permanent conductor of the Vienna Philharmonic.

It is a major step for a conductor only 32 years old, one with overtones that will echo around the board rooms of the major orchestras still seeking conductors. If, the Boston Symphony trustees may ask, Abbado is of the stature to step into that line of succession in Vienna, may he not be the man to take over in Boston as well?

The question has occurred to Abbado, too. He turned it around in his mind one day the other week as he ate strawberries in the corner of a dark restaurant. He is already recording with the BSO on the Deutsche Grammophon label and leading it in Symphony Hall and Tanglewood.

Boston And Cleveland

"Well, nothing will be decided for a while, anyway," he said with a sly smile. "I like the Boston symphony, and the hall there I think is the best in this country. Whoever takes the Boston Symphony will have a lot of building to do. It's not the same as it was when I was at Tanglewood as a conducting student.

"I tell you frankly that I would like the Cleveland Orchestra. There is such discipline there. When you stop in rehearsal, there is not a sound. You tell them what you want and they give it to you. It is a beautiful orchestra, probably the best after Philadelphia.

"Of course, it is in Cleveland, and I don't like the city. The lake is dead and the city uninteresting. A few places in the suburbs are nice, I think. Nothing will be decided until 1973, anyway."

His accession in Vienna is a high point in his career.

"The sense of tradition there is marvelous," he goes on. "When I was a student in Vienna, I wanted to hear the Philharmonic rehearse but the rehearsals were always closed. Zubin (Mehta) and I joined the choir so we could at least sing in the rehearsals.

"The first time I went back to guest conduct the Philharmonic, there were all my friends in the chorus. It was very touching. By singing, I could watch Karl Boehm, Karajan, and all the great ones.

"When I was appointed in Vienna, everybody said I wouldn't like it because the orchestra is so conservative. I don't think that is true anymore. They want to play something new, and I think we have a duty to play new music."

Symptomatic of the change is the retirement of concertmaster Willy Boskowsky and the appointment of 20-year-old Rainer Kuchl in his place. The Vienna Philharmonic may be a young man's orchestra, now.

Time To Spare

The prestigious post will not prevent Abbado from being a candidate in Boston or Cleveland.

In Vienna, "They do only nine or ten programs a season. They play Saturday night and Sunday morning, with broadcasts on Mondays and special things Friday. I do decide repertory and sit with the committee on selecting guest conductors. So the job is not that time consuming.

"I still am music director for La Scala and I do two new productions a year there. We're doing 'Wozzeck' this year in a very interesting way. We will do the play in the little theater. You know that they found only a few months ago many more fragments of the play that offered several different endings. So the play will be done, then Bergman's film on the subject, and finally the opera. We are doing it in German, by the way. It has been done at La Scala before, but always in Italian, and somehow it always turned out to be an Italian opera."

So he brings a German work to Italy and takes an Italian temperament to Vienna, and a cosmopolitan outlook to Prokofiev and recorded both at the end of the series. And he's keeping a door open in that hall he thinks is the best in this country.

CLAUDIO ABBADO: an open door?

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

FEB 11 1971 New England Newsclip

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

FEB 9 1971 New England Newsclip

Steinberg To Quit Boston Symphony

NEW YORK (AP) — William Steinberg, 70, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952 and music director of the Boston Symphony since 1969, announced yesterday that he plans to leave the Boston job.

Steinberg's office in New York quoted him as saying he would not renew his Boston contract after its expiration in the spring of 1972. The reason is that the Pittsburgh Symphony has asked for more of his time.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300

FEB 10 1971 New England Newsclip

The Washington Post
WASHINGTON, D. C.
D. 479,644 SUN. 626,111

FEB 10 1971

BOSTON LOSES SYMPHONY DIRECTOR

NEW YORK (AP)—William Steinberg, 70, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony since 1952 and music director of the Boston Symphony since 1969, announced Monday that he plans to leave the Boston job.

Steinberg's office in New York quoted him as saying he would not renew his Boston contract after its expiration in the spring of 1972. The reason is that the Pittsburgh Symphony has asked for more of his time.

This season and next he will be conducting 17 weeks in Pittsburgh and 12 weeks in Boston. During the 1972-73 season he will devote at least 22 weeks to Pittsburgh.

Steinberg took the Boston music directorship at the time Erich Leinsdorf resigned, with the understanding he would guide the orchestra and advise on a permanent replacement for Leinsdorf. He said he would continue to help with recommendations for a permanent music director in Boston.

The Boston Symphony board will meet later this week and may discuss the possibility of Steinberg's spending eight weeks in Boston and being "senior conductor and music adviser" for the 1972-73 season.

The Pittsburgh Symphony gave the Cologne-born Steinberg a lifetime contract as music director in 1968.

BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,967 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

FEB 9 1971 New England Newsclip

People Making News

William Steinberg, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is leaving his post at expiration of his contract in 1972. Steinberg is also conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony and said that job is demanding more of his time.

Steinberg expected to leave BSO after current season

By Michael Steinberg
Globe Staff

The 1971-72 season is likely to be William Steinberg's last as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it was learned yesterday Steinberg, who will be 73 at the end of that season, plans thereafter to devote his main energies to the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra whose music director he has been since 1952.

He has held the music directorship of both orchestras since 1969, dividing his time more or less equally between them in 1969-70, though kept out of action much of last year because of illness. During the current year he has been conducting about half the Pittsburgh season and one quarter of Boston's.

By 1972 the Pittsburgh Symphony expects to have completed a $4 million fund drive that will bring its endowment to $20 million. It will have moved into a new hall, increased its size to 106 players, offering them year-round employment for the first time. The Pittsburgh trustees asked Steinberg if for that gala year for their orchestra he would increase his commitment to them for 22 weeks of conducting, and he said he

That would leave him only eight weeks for Boston, and he commented he thought that too short a period to justify his continuing to have the responsibilities and title of music director. He has offered to continue to serve the Boston Symphony with some such title as senior conductor or musical adviser. The Boston Symphony's future arrangement with Steinberg will be discussed at a trustees' meeting Thursday.

Steinberg's three-year contract with Boston for the seasons 1969-72 was announced in the spring of 1968 following the announcement in December 1967 by Erich Leinsdorf, music director since 1962, of his intention to resign as of the end of the summer of 1968.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042
JUN 11 1971 New England Newsclip

Canham named chairman of BSO

ERWIN CANHAM

Talcott M. Banks, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced Wednesday the selection of three new officers and 11 new members to the Orchestra's Board of Overseers, an advisory body whose work supplements that of the Board of Trustees.

Elected chairman for the coming season was Erwin D. Canham, Editor-in-Chief of the Christian Science Monitor. Vice president is Vernon Alden, chairman of the Boston Company, Inc. Leonard Kaplan, of Nutter, McLennan and Fish, is secretary.

New members elected are Silvio Conte, Archie C. Epps III, Maurice Lazarus, Leon Kirchner, Mrs. George Lee Sargent, Hazen H. Ayer, Dr. George H. A. Clowes, Jr., David O. Ives, Frank E. Morris, Mrs. Brooks Potter, and Stokley P. Towles.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540
JUN 10 1971 New England Newsclip

Canham Is Chairman Of BSO Overseers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced that Erwin D. Canham has been elected chairman of its Board of Overseers and Vernon Alden vice chairman, not president and vice president respectively, as previously reported. Talcott M. Banks continues as the orchestra's president.

CALL
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
D. 32,000
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Canham Heads Board Of Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has been elected president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of overseers.

Canham's election was announced Monday by Talcott M. Banks, president of the orchestra.

Among new members elected to the overseers were Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass.; Archie C. Epps, dean of students, Harvard College; Maurice Lazarus, vice chairman of the board of Federated Department Stores, Inc.; Leon Kirchner, Bigelow professor of music at Harvard; Dr. George H.A. Clowes Jr., clinical professor of surgery, Harvard Medical School; David O. Ives, president of the WGBH Educational Foundation, and Frank E. Morris, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston.

NEWS
GARDNER, MASS.
D. 8,061
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Canham Is Elected

BOSTON (AP) — Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has been elected president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of overseers.

Canham's election was announced Monday by Talcott M. Banks, president of the orchestra.

Among new members elected to the overseers were Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass.; Archie C. Epps, dean of students, Harvard College; Maurice Lazarus, vice chairman of the board of Federated Department Stores, Inc.; Leon Kirchner, Bigelow professor of music at Harvard; Dr. George H.A. Clowes Jr., clinical professor of surgery, Harvard Medical School; David O. Ives, president of the WGBH Educational Foundation, and Frank E. Morris, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Newspaper Editor Heads Hub Group

BOSTON (AP) — Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has been elected president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of overseers.

Canham's election was announced Monday by Talcott M. Banks, president of the orchestra.

Among new members elected to the overseers were Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass.; Archie C. Epps, dean of students, Harvard College; Maurice Lazarus, vice chairman of the board of Federated Department Stores, Inc.; Leon Kirchner, Bigelow professor of music at Harvard; Dr. George H. A. Clowes Jr., clinical professor of surgery, Harvard Medical School; David O. Ives, president of the WGBH Educational Foundation, and Frank E. Morris, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston.

RECORDER GAZETTE
GREENFIELD, MASS.
D. 14,698
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Canham Heads Orchestra

BOSTON (AP) — Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has been elected president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of overseers.

Canham's election was announced Monday by Talcott M. Banks, president of the orch»

JOURNAL
LEWISTON, MAINE
D. 14,019
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Canham Elected President of Boston Symphony Overseers

BOSTON (AP) — Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has been elected president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of overseers.

Canham's election was announced Monday by Talcott M. Banks, president of the orchestra.

Among new members elected to the overseers were Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass.; Archie C. Epps, dean of students, Harvard College; Maurice Lazarus, vice chairman of the board of Federated Department Stores, Inc.; Leon Kirchner, Bigelow professor of music at Harvard; Dr. George H.A. Clowes Jr., clinical professor of surgery, Harvard Medical School; David O. Ives, president of the WGBH Educational Foundation, and Frank E. Morris, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston.

TIMES
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
D. 38,127
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Elects Canham

BOSTON (AP) — Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has been elected president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of overseers.

Canham's election was announced Monday by Talcott M. Banks, president of the orchestra.

Among new members elected to the overseers were Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass.; Archie C. Epps, dean of students, Harvard College; Maurice Lazarus, vice chairman of the board of Federated Department Stores, Inc.; Leon Kirchner, Bigelow professor of music at Harvard; Dr. George H. A. Clowes Jr., clinical professor of surgery, Harvard Medical School; David O. Ives, president of the WGBH Educational Foundation, and Frank E. Morris, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston.

EAGLE TRIBUNE
LAWRENCE, MASS.
D. 48,000
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Symphony Board Headed By Canham

BOSTON (AP) — Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has been elected president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of overseers.

Canham's election was announced Monday by Talcott M. Banks, president of the orchestra.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

BSO Elects Rep. Conte Board Member

Congressman Silvio O. Conte is one of 11 new members appointed to the Board of Overseers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the recent annual meeting of the board. As an overseer, Conte will be responsible for bringing the orchestra in contact with the needs and interests of the various community audiences which it serves.

Officers elected were Erwin D. Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, president; Vernon Alden, chairman of the Boston Co., Inc., vice president; and Leonard Kaplan, partner in the Boston firm of Nutter, McLennan & Fish, secretary.

Newly named overseers are Archie C. Epps III, Maurice Lazarus, Leno Kirchner, Mrs. George Lee Sargent, Hazen H. Ayers, Dr. George H. A. Clowes Jr., David O. Ives, Frank E. Morris, Mrs. Brooks Potter and Stockley P. Towles.

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 149,649
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

CANHAM ELECTED

Boston — (AP) — Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has been elected president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of overseers.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540
JUN 10 1971 New England Newsclip

Banks Continues As BSO President

The Boston Symphony has issued a clarification of a recent press release which was reprinted in last Tuesday's edition of the Herald Traveler. The news release pertained to the recent election of new officers to the orchestra's Board of Overseers, incorrectly identifying Erwin D. Canham as president and Vernon Alden as vice president of the Board. Their correct designations are, respectively, chairman and vice chairman. Contrary to the implication of the story's headline, Talcott M. Banks continues as the orchestra's president.

MONITOR
CONCORD, N. H.
D. 15,300
JUN 10 1971 New England Newsclip

Canham Heads Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Erwin D. Canham, editor of The Christian Science Monitor, has been elected president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's board of overseers.

Among new members elected to the overseers were Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass.; Archie C. Epps, dean of students, Harvard College; Maurice Lazarus, vice chairman of the board of Federated Department Stores, Inc.; Leon Kirchner, Bigelow professor of music at Harvard; Dr. George H.A. Clowes Jr., clinical professor of surgery, Harvard Medical School; David O. Ives, president of the WGBH Educational Foundation, and Frank E. Morris, president of the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston.

UNIONLEADER
MANCHESTER, N. H.
(M&E) 57,003

DEC 8 1970 New England Newsclip

THE N. H. PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA opens its 12th season at Practical Arts Auditorium, Manchester, Sunday evening. Concert Master William Waterhouse of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (left photo) will be the guest violinist for the performance. One of the works featured Sunday will be "Afternoon of a Faun" with Evelyn Querfurth of Peterborough (center) as flute soloist. Carl Zeis of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (right) will augment the cello section for the opening performance. Conducting the orchestra at the season's inaugural will be Rolland Tapley, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

(Photos by George Naum)

NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
(E) 19,654

JAN 29 1971 New England Newsclip

DEDICATED MUSICIAN — Alfred Schneider, first violinist with the Boston Symphony, and conductor of the Framingham Symphony Orchestra, prepares the latter group for their second concert. In front is cellist Jill Grigsby. (Photo by Ric Getter)

CALL
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
(E) 30,774

JAN 7 1971 New England Newsclip

Musician Solves A Mystery

BOSTON (AP) — An Australian-born violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra has found the answer to the mystery about a plaque honoring the ship musicians who drowned when the Titanic sank in 1912.

The marble plaque listing the names of the eight musicians who drowned "still playing as the Titanic went down" after hitting an iceberg is on a corridor wall in Symphony Hall, the orchestra's 70-year-old home.

The plaque was seen by many persons, but none remembered where it had come from.

Violinist Christopher Kimber came up with the answer while researching Gardner Museum, the palatial home of the late Mrs. Jack Gardner.

Kimber became curious about the museum after being invited to give a recital next Saturday in a series of free concerts established by Mrs. Gardner.

Such concerts, he said, "are "something we don't have in Australia."

His research included reading a book about Mrs. Gardner. One chapter told how she had been so touched by the story of the Titanic musicians that she arranged to have the plaque put up in Symphony Hall.

Symphony Plans Second Concert

FRAMINGHAM — Alfred Schneider of Framingham now in his sixth season with the Framingham Symphony Orchestra, will conduct it in its second concert of the season at the Framingham South High School auditorium Sunday, Feb. 7 at 3 p.m.

Schneider is first violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program for the afternoon in the series of four concerts will include: Verdi's Overture to "La Forza del Destino" ("The Force of Destiny"); Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1 in A," Op. 11; and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 7 in A Major, Op. 92.

Verdi's overture is as popular in the concert hall as the opera it represents in the theater. It consists of a number of delightful melodies. As a concert work it can stand alone as an energetic and wholly enjoyable musical treat.

Enesco's "Roumanian Rhapsody No. 1" is also acclaimed for its dazzling melodies. The little dance-like tunes leap out brilliantly.

Beethoven's war horse, "The Seventh Symphony," has been given innumerable programmatic explanations by critics and laymen. The music is so rhythmically exciting, the listener may find himself associating his own imagery and story lines with the sounds.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

JAN 14 1971 New England Newsclip

INSIDE THE B.S.O.—Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops and Esplanade Orchestras, will speak at a meeting and reception for new members of Women's Scholarship Association, to be held Wednesday, Jan. 20 at 12:30 at the Putterham Library Auditorium in South Brookline. Subject will be "Inside the Boston Symphony". A petite luncheon will be served. Mrs. Morton Kliman will preside. Hostess of the day will be Mrs. Morton Goldberg. Program chairman is Mrs. Joseph Krinsky. In charge of hospitality is Mrs. Paul King. The public is invited to attend.

PRESS
WESTWOOD, MASS.
WEEKLY 2,743

FEB 17 1971 New England Newsclip

Demanding But Exciting Is Life Of BSO Violinist

By JUDIE STRAUSS
WILLIAM WATERHOUSE and CRAFTY

What's it like to be a member of the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra? For William J. Waterhouse of Grove Street who has been a violinist with the BSO for twenty years now "it's very demanding but also quite exciting!"

"There's a great deal of good hard work that goes on amidst the interesting life", admits Mr. Waterhouse. The job is far from the conventional nine to five variety and because of much time spent away, certain demands are made of one's family.

Although musicians are sometimes infamous for their fiery temperaments, Mr. Waterhouse reveals "there is surprisingly little jealousy among the one hundred and four members of the Symphony." He finds Bostonian audiences most appreciative of the orchestra's efforts and feels musicians in this area enjoy a better standing in their communities and other fringe benefits than do those in other parts of the country.

The traditional season for the Boston Symphony consists of the bulk of the concerts in Boston and a few guest performances in other cities during October to April. In Spring the Boston Pops plays with many of the same members of the BSO. Summertime finds the Symphony travelling to Tanglewood in the Berkshires which Mr. Waterhouse finds a delightful change and most enjoyable.

In 1952 and 1956 the orchestra travelled to Europe and are presently preparing for another trip in April. The countries they will play in include England, Germany, Austria, Italy, Spain, and France.

Recalling some adventures of a past European trip this violinist remembered when the customs inspector did not allow the instruments of the symphony to leave Czechoslovia to go to Austria. A local truck had to be hired and the men had to transfer their own instruments. That concert was played without the members of the orchestra even changing their clothes, but the "show goes on" in true show business style.

Mr. Waterhouse hails from Winnipeg, Canada where he developed his musical interests most naturally. Both parents were professional musicians, his father being a violinist and his mother a pianist, and they both taught music all their lives. His mother handled the theory end of it and his father the practical application. Mr. Waterhouse learned the violin at the tender age of four and actually began to practice in earnest at the age of six.

As for the question of inborn talent, he believes that ability in music is "98% perspiration and 2% inspiration and that 2% is all important."

After graduating from high school in Winnipeg, Mr. Waterhouse received a scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music in London. He succeeded in attaining several more scholarships and stayed a total of five years. Although the adjustment to musical life in London did not prove difficult, he found it hard getting used to the weather. Winnipeg winters might have been cold and severe, but at least he had seen the sun. At this time he was able to earn money by playing in the London String Orchestra and was a contractor for a film company.

In London, Mr. Waterhouse stayed at a home that served as a central place for Canadian music students, run by a Madame Ellis Brown, who turned out to be a fascinating person. She gained fame by writing a book about her husband who was lost as an explorer.

With the outbreak of war all concert jobs were cancelled and Mr. Waterhouse returned to Canada where he spent six years in the Canadian Army. Unfortunately he had little opportunity to practice at this point.

Upon the advice of Dmitri Mitropoulis, who was conductor of the Minneapolis Orchestra, Mr. Waterhouse decided he needed a refresher course and went to Boston University to study under Richard Burgin. Although he preferred to teach after studying at BU and obtaining his bachelor's and master's degrees, Mr. Waterhouse answered the call and auditioned for Charles Munch who was then conductor of the Boston Symphony. That was some twenty years ago and he has remained ever since.

In addition to this, Mr. Waterhouse serves as concert master for the New Hampshire Philharmonic Orchestra that meets in New Hampshire. He is also chairman of the Musician's Credit Union.

The status of the musician has changed a great deal, Mr. Waterhouse feels. Many of his colleagues have quite diversified interests, beyond their music. Some paint, one was a commander in the Navy and still keeps up his affiliations.

Mr. Waterhouse himself enjoys flying and in 1960 obtained his license. Very often he takes his family on day trips during the summer which would be difficult to reach by auto. His wife "Gilly" is an accomplished gardener and various species of plants adorn the entrance hall of their home. They have a daughter Caitlin, ten, who plays the clarinet, and a son, Jason, five. Previously married, Mr. Waterhouse has a son who is a research biologist at Pondville Hospital. He also has a married stepson living in Texas and stationed at Fort Hood.

Both he and his wife had a great deal to do with the planning and building of their beautiful home. A magnificent fireplace acts as the focal point in the middle with the kitchen set up on one side of it so this room actually enjoys the central pivotal place in the house. Mr. Waterhouse acted as general contractor and actually built himself the porch which is right outside the living room. A few abstract paintings adorn the walls and attest to Gilly's talents in the artistic line. Because of his rigorous schedule, their social life is not of the normal variety. "Gilly has mastered the art of buffet dinners and we usually entertain our friends during the week".

Relaxing for Mr. Waterhouse includes spending time with his family and attending to many of the chores that are necessary around the house. With the cute Pekinese, Crafty, Mr. Waterhouse will often go out and chop wood to keep the fireplace well stacked as a fire burns all winter. He hopes to complete a wood deck off the other end of the living room at some point.

Along with two other Westwood residents and Symphony players, Mr. William Marshall and Mr. Robert Ripley, Mr. Waterhouse will perform at a concert of chamber music, to be given on March 12th at the Westwood Library.

Looking back over the years with the Boston Symphony the violinist reveals that they have a remarkable and amazing record as far as cancelled concerts are concerned. Sometimes, he admits, just getting to Symphony Hall on time can be quite a task. Commenting on the fantastic acoustics at the Hall, he feels that the Boston Symphony is accustomed to hearing themselves play there and so has developed a certain sound that is associated with them.

Judging by their musical reputation and crowded concerts, the world acknowledges it.

SUN
LOWELL, MASS.
(E) 48,850 (S) 38 575

DEC 27 1970 New England Newsclip

MENC STUDENT Chapter 201 plans a recital of contemporary music featuring members of the Boston Symphony orchestra Monday, Jan. 4, in the Little Theatre.

Frank Epstein, percussion;; Paul Fried, flute, and Larry Wolfe, contrabass, will combine their efforts with Joan Heller, soprano and Ina Hahn, dancer, to present various pieces requiring different combinations of performers. There is no charge for admission.

It was announced also the Lowell State College Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Artin Arslanian, will present a concert, Thursday evening, Jan. 7 at 8 o'clock in the Little Theatre. This originally was scheduled Dec. 17 and postponed because of a snowstorm. Student Jay Rizzetto will be featured soloist. Tickets will be available at the door.

PATRIOT-LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
(E) 66,387

DEC 8 1970 New England Newsclip

Helpful Snakes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced that for the second year it is distributing its monthly "snake" (calendar of events at Symphony Hall) to 98 schools and colleges in the Boston area, reaching 170,000 students each month. The "snakes" (which measure five by 30 inches) list BSO concerts, open rehearsals, Boston Symphony Chamber Players and all outside events taking place at Symphony Hall. Listed at the bottom is information pertaining to regular and student prices, how to obtain tickets from the box office and how to reach Symphony Hall by MBTA.

Philharmonic Opens Next Sunday

The New Hampshire Philharmonic Orchestra begins the 12th season next Sunday evening at 8:15 p.m. with its winter concert at the Practical Arts Auditorium. Guest violinist William Waterhouse of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be featured in the prelude to "Afternoon of a Faun" by Debussy and "Poem in E flat major" by Chausson.

Mr. Waterhouse was born in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada. His first studies in music were begun at home, under the supervision of both parents. His father, John Waterhouse, was a fellow of the Royal Academy of Music in London, an accomplished violinist and teacher; his mother, both a pianist and harpist, was a graduate of the Royal College of Music.

The son was taught by his parents until he was 16, when he gained a scholarship to the Royal Academy. At the academy he studied both the violin and piano, excelling in the former subject, and winning a prize for both his violin playing and excellence in chamber music.

While in London he played under all the outstanding British conductors except Sir Thomas Beecham, with whom he finally caught up when he joined the Boston Symphony in October 1951 and Sir Thomas appeared as guest conductor shortly thereafter.

Member of both the Boston Symphony and the "Pops", Mr. Waterhouse is a licensed pilot and does his own flying when on tour with the BSO. In addition to his many musical activities in the Boston area, he finds time to assist the New Hampshire Philharmonic throughout the entire season. Although appearing in the winter concert as guest soloist, Mr. Waterhouse has appeared with the NHPO at a good many concerts the past two seasons as the leading violinist, the 'Concertmaster'.

Rolland Tapley, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and conductor of the New Hampshire Philharmonic Orchestra, has selected and will present "Symphony 8 in F Major, Op. 93" by Beethoven as the central portion of Next Sunday evening's "Winter Concert."

N. H. SUNDAY NEWS
MANCHESTER, N. H.
(C) 49 171

DEC 6 1970 New England Newsclip

HERALD NEWS
FALL RIVER, MASS.
(E) 41,946

JAN 26 1971 New England Newsclip

Woman's Club Subject Is Symphony

Stories about the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its famous conductors, as well as pictures of Symphony Hall, were the subject of a lecture presented for one Woman's Club of Fall River on Monday by Laning Humphrey, the orchestra archivist, and his wife.

It was noted that the orchestra is an integral part of the culture of New England, and that Symphony Hall, or the "talking house," was first opened in 1900 and refurbished only two years ago. The building, the members were told, is not only the home of the orchestra, but it also serves a variety of other uses from being a recording laboratory to housing an art gallery.

Mrs. Humphrey also showed pictures of the work of restoration — and of the orchestra itself performing at Tanglewood and at the Esplanade concerts.

Mrs. James Scott, of the music committee introduced the speakers.

President Mrs. James E. Fell presided at the business session, and Mrs. Eugene Baxter, chairman, announced plans for the club's annual food sale on Feb. 22.

The floral arrangement in the foyer was arranged for the meeting by Mrs. Earl T. Griffiths.

SOUTH BOSTON TRIBUNE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 10,250

JAN 28 1971 New England Newsclip

TRIBUNE TOPICS

The service of Confirmation for the Church of St. Matthew and The Redeemer will be conducted on Sunday, February 21, in Emmanuel Church in Boston. The officiating prelate will be the Rt. Rev. Francisco Reus-Froylan, Bishop of Puerto Rico.

A temporary promotion to the rank of working foreman in the water service repair section of the Public Works Dept. of the city has been given to Richard P. Coyne, 150a M street.

Pfc. Edward J. Morin III, whose parents live at 690 Columbia road, recently received the Army Commendation Medal near Chu Lai, Vietnam, where he is serving with Americal Division. A graduate of Boston Technical High School, he entered the Army in March, 1970.

A Children's Story Hour will be held at the South Boston Branch Library, E. Broadway, on Friday afternoon, February 5, at 3:30 o'clock.

Past President Carl Taccini is chairman for the St. Patrick's Day celebration of the Kiwanis Club of South Boston, which will take place on Tuesday, March 16, at the South Boston Boys' Club.

An appointment as a motor equipment maintenance man in the Traffic and Parking Dept. of the city has been given to Edward X. Long, 452½ E. Eighth street.

An exhibit of rare books and manuscripts saluting the Boston Symphony Orchestra on its 90th anniversary is being held in the Sargent Gallery, 3rd floor of the Central Library, Copley square, and will continue through March 31.

Effectively immediately, the U.S. Postal Service will not accept surface or air mail to Great Britain and Northern Ireland. Ireland is not affected. Military mail is not affected by this embargo caused by the British postal strike.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300
DEC 25 1970
New England Newsclip

—Record American Photos, Kevin Cole

Ikuko Mizuno practices on the Symphony Hall stage surrounded by the gentlemen of the orchestra.

Women Are a Vital Part of Boston Symphony

By FRAN WEIL

Ninety-nine to seven.

Though the odds are a little staggering, there is no apparent problem with the numbers, according to the seven women who dot the Boston Symphony Orchestra stage amidst their 99 male counterparts.

Life among BSO musicians is serene and lacking any shade of female discrimination, the ladies claim.

"There isn't any favoritism when it comes to us," teased principal flutist Doriot Dwyer — on her way to a Chamber Players rehearsal.

The first woman to hold a first chair in the Boston Symphony, Mrs. Dwyer raised some eyebrows in 1952 — the year of her appointment.

But the first is apparently the most difficult because, as the ladies of the orchestra agreed, they are now "in" and they are an accepted part of the 106 member team.

"There was a time when an audition committee decided on the man playing instead of the woman," explained Carol Procter, the attractive young lady who plies a studied hand to one of 11 cellos in the orchestra.

"They used to decide on the man simply because he generally had a family to support," said Miss Procter.

Cecylia Arzewski, violinist with the BSO and an alumna of the Juilliard School of Music and the New England Conservatory, claimed that "in order to get into any major symphony orchestra, the woman still has to play at least five times better than the man because of the passe 'men have to support their families routine." But once in, Cecylia agreed, equality is the rule.

"If you're competent there is no trouble getting established at all," said spritely Marylou Speaker, who plays second violin in the orchestra.

And even Ann Hobson, who holds the second harp position in the orchestra, considers playing with the predominately male ensemble "great."

She explained that when she auditioned, the committee listened to the players behind a curtain the first time so they could pick the finalists sight unseen. "They listen for the best," she said. Then they weed them for the final audition.

Cecelia Arzewski (left) and Marylou Speaker (right) rehearse.

Approximately 20 hours per week are devoted by orchestra members — male and female — to rehearsal and concert sessions on stage at Symphony Hall. The rest of the time is devoted to teaching by some members; free-lance engagements and practicing.

Ikuko Mizuno, second violinist, doesn't find the schedule too taxing. Section playing, she claimed, is fine. "If you're lazy you don't mind," she said with a laugh.

"Hours are odd," said Carol Procter. "It really ruins your social life if you're single."

Infrequently, when the BSO goes on tour, "we have to adjust to the accoustics of the halls; find a place to dress and occasionally have trouble finding our trunks," exclaimed flutist Lois Schaefer.

The gals all agreed though — on tour — "They treat us like gold!"

And as far as playing with the BSO is concerned, Marylou Speaker echoed the sentiments of most of the ladies.

"The BSO is marvelous. There is a sense of culture in Boston. They come to hear us whether they understand it or not. The audiences are ripe in Boston."

HAIRENIK WEEKLY
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY
DEC 10 1970
New England Newsclip

David Ohanian Appointed to Boston Symphony

BOSTON, Mass.—Officers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the appointment of David Ohanian to the (French) horn section of the great orchestra.

Ohanian previously played with the Boston Philharmonica, the Springfield symphony, the New Haven Symphony, the Hartford Symphony, the Rhode Island Philharmonic and the Handel and Haydn Society. He also taught at Milton (Mass.) Academy 1965-66.

Mr. Ohanian received his BM in horn from the New England Conservatory of Music in 1967 and studied with James Stagliano, principal horn of the Boston Symphony.

(As far as is known, Mr. Ohanian is the second Armenian ever to become a regular member of the BSO. The first, the late great violinist and concert master of the orchestra in the days of Serge Koussevitsky, Theodorowicz, owned proudly to descendency from a Polish Armenian family.)

. . . DAVID OHANIAN . . .

PHILADELPHIA SPOT LITE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
W. - CIRC. N. AVAIL.
NOV 7 1970

PHILHARMONIA ORCHESTRA AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC NOVEMBER 10

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony, have been invited by their Curtis Institute classmate, Ling Tung, to be soloists with the Philharmonia Orchestra on November 10 at the Academy of Music. Silverstein and Eskin will play the Brahms Double Concerto, a work they have performed in many cities, but not yet in Philadelphia.

The other works on the November 10 program are Dvorak's Carnival Overture, Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis, and Bartok's Music for strings, Percussion, and Celesta. The Bartok piece is generally recognized as a landmark of 20th Century music.

Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 504,669 SUN. 935,458
NOV 12 1970

2 From Boston Solo With Philharmonia

Reprinted from Wednesday's Late Editions

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Of The Inquirer Staff

The Philharmonia Orchestra, which began its sixth season Tuesday at the Academy, has been around long enough to have developed some recognizable traits and ensemble. The concert included major pieces by Brahms, Bartok and Hindemith and was played with distinction.

Ling Tung has shaped the orchestra into a responsive instrument with a glossy string section. The winds and brass were not as polished, but fit the ensemble in most places.

Soloists were Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello, in the Brahms Double Concerto. Both players have Philadelphia ties but have played here infrequently since becoming principals in the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Their approach to the Brahms was small-scaled, lyrical and, in places, like chamber music. Eskin's cello was soft-voiced, too much so for my taste. Many of the entrances call for a big, assertive attack and slashing phrasing. These qualities did not develop and, so, robbed the piece of some of the interest in the contrasting lines of the violin and cello.

Silverstein's playing was rather small, accurate, often beautifully phrased and expressed. He has the knack for varying the quality of sound through the phrase and even within a single note, and this kind of playing made his work in the slow movement particularly effective. His ensemble with Eskin was keenly balanced, and together the playing in the slow movement has distinction.

The orchestra was not at its best in support, with problems developing in the horns and in balance with the soloists. It was, however, a reading worth hearing and a conception that held through the piece.

Tung included Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celeste. The work is too rarely played here and this reading was a welcome one. The divided orchestra, playing in competition, the expressive percussion and the piquancy of the piano, harp and celeste combine to make the music notable.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300
DEC 25 1970
New England Newsclip

—Record American Photos, Kevin Cole

Ikuko Mizuno practices on the Symphony Hall stage surrounded by the gentlemen of the orchestra.

Women Are a Vital Part of Boston Symphony

By FRAN WEIL

Ninety-nine to seven.

Though the odds are a little staggering, there is no apparent problem with the numbers, according to the seven women who dot the Boston Symphony Orchestra stage amidst their 99 male counterparts.

Life among BSO musicians is serene and lacking any shade of female discrimination, the ladies claim.

"There isn't any favoritism when it comes to us," teased principal flutist Doriot Dwyer — on her way to a Chamber Players rehearsal.

The first woman to hold a first chair in the Boston Symphony, Mrs. Dwyer raised some eyebrows in 1952 — the year of her appointment.

But the first is apparently the most difficult because, as the ladies of the orchestra agreed, they are now "in" and they are an accepted part of the 106 member team.

"There was a time when an audition committee decided on the man playing instead of the woman," explained Carol Procter, the attractive young lady who plies a studied hand to one of 11 cellos in the orchestra.

"They used to decide on the man simply because he generally had a family to support," said Miss Procter.

Cecylia Arzewski, violinist with the BSO and an alumna of the Juilliard School of Music and the New England Conservatory, claimed that "in order to get into any major symphony orchestra, the woman still has to play at least five times better than the man because of the passe 'men have to support their families routine." But once in, Cecylia agreed, equality is the rule.

"If you're competent there is no trouble getting established at all," said spritely Marylou Speaker, who plays second violin in the orchestra.

And even Ann Hobson, who holds the second harp position in the orchestra, considers playing with the predominately male ensemble "great."

She explained that when she auditioned, the committee listened to the players behind a curtain the first time so they could pick the finalists sight unseen. "They listen for the best," she said. Then they weed them for the final audition.

Cecelia Arzewski (left) and Marylou Speaker (right) rehearse.

Approximately 20 hours per week are devoted by orchestra members — male and female — to rehearsal and concert sessions on stage at Symphony Hall. The rest of the time is devoted to teaching by some members; free-lance engagements and practicing.

Ikuko Mizuno, second violinist, doesn't find the schedule too taxing. Section playing, she claimed, is fine. "If you're lazy you don't mind," she said with a laugh.

"Hours are odd," said Carol Procter. "It really ruins your social life if you're single."

Infrequently, when the BSO goes on tour, "we have to adjust to the accoustics of the halls; find a place to dress and occasionally have trouble finding our trunks," exclaimed flutist Lois Schaefer.

The gals all agreed though — on tour — "They treat us like gold!"

And as far as playing with the BSO is concerned, Marylou Speaker echoed the sentiments of most of the ladies.

"The BSO is marvelous. There is a sense of culture in Boston. They come to hear us whether they understand it or not. The audiences are ripe in Boston."

HAIRENIK WEEKLY
BOSTON, MASS.
New England Newsclip

David Ohanian Appointed to Boston Symphony

BOSTON, Mass.—Officers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have announced the appointment of David Ohanian to the (French) horn section of the great orchestra.

Ohanian previously played with the Boston Philharmonica, the Springfield symphony, the New Haven Symphony, the Hartford Symphony, the Rhode Island Philharmonic and the Handel and Haydn Society. He also taught at Milton (Mass.) Academy 1965-66.

Mr. Ohanian received his BM in horn from the New England Conservatory of Music in 1967 and studied with James Stagliano, principal horn of the Boston Symphony.

(As far as is known, Mr. Ohanian is the second Armenian ever to become a regular member of the BSO. The first, the late great violinist and concert master of the orchestra in the days of Serge Koussevitsky, Theodorowicz, owned proudly to descendency from a Polish Armenian family.)

. . . DAVID OHANIAN . . .

PHILADELPHIA SPOT LITE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
W. - CIRC. N. AVAIL.
NOV 7 1970

PHILHARMONIA ORCHESTRA AT THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC NOVEMBER 10

Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster, and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony, have been invited by their Curtis Institute classmate, Ling Tung, to be soloists with the Philharmonia Orchestra on November 10 at the Academy of Music. Silverstein and Eskin will play the Brahms Double Concerto, a work they have performed in many cities, but not yet in Philadelphia.

The other works on the November 10 program are Dvorak's Carnival Overture, Hindemith's Symphonic Metamorphosis, and Bartok's Music for strings, Percussion, and Celesta. The Bartok piece is generally recognized as a landmark of 20th Century music.

Philadelphia Inquirer
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
D. 504,669 SUN. 935,458
NOV 12 1970

2 From Boston Solo With Philharmonia

Reprinted from Wednesday's Late Editions

By DANIEL WEBSTER
Of The Inquirer Staff

The Philharmonia Orchestra, which began its sixth season Tuesday at the Academy, has been around long enough to have developed some recognizable traits and ensemble. The concert included major pieces by Brahms, Bartok and Hindemith and was played with distinction.

Ling Tung has shaped the orchestra into a responsive instrument with a glossy string section. The winds and brass were not as polished, but fit the ensemble in most places.

Soloists were Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Jules Eskin, cello, in the Brahms Double Concerto. Both players have Philadelphia ties but have played here infrequently since becoming principals in the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Their approach to the Brahms was small-scaled, lyrical and, in places, like chamber music. Eskin's cello was soft-voiced, too much so for my taste. Many of the entrances call for a big, assertive attack and slashing phrasing. These qualities did not develop and, so, robbed the piece of some of the interest in the contrasting lines of the violin and cello.

Silverstein's playing was rather small, accurate, often beautifully phrased and expressed. He has the knack for varying the quality of sound through the phrase and even within a single note, and this kind of playing made his work in the slow movement particularly effective. His ensemble with Eskin was keenly balanced, and together the playing in the slow movement has distinction.

The orchestra was not at its best in support, with problems developing in the horns and in balance with the soloists. It was, however, a reading worth hearing and a conception that held through the piece.

Tung included Bartok's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celeste. The work is too rarely played here and this reading was a welcome one. The divided orchestra, playing in competition, the expressive percussion and the piquancy of the piano, harp and celeste combine to make the music notable.

Rose Walsh

Ted Hosts BSO Reception

Senator and Mrs. Edward Kennedy hosted their traditional reception for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Monday evening, following the first of its two concerts given annually in the capital's Constitution Hall.

The Kennedys and Mrs. Sargent Shriver were in the audience who gave rounds of applause to the conductor, Rafaeh Kubelik who has been guest conductor for the BSO the last couple of weeks in Boston.

Buses transported the musicians and many invited guests to the senator's McLean, Virginia home, for the informal cocktail and buffet supper. Sparkling burgundy toasts were raised to Mr. and Mrs. Kubelik and to brilliant Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, who conducted Tuesday night's concert. He was guest of honor at last year's reception in the same setting.

Gracious and talented Joan, who is really a part of the Boston Symphony family through her musical appearances, followed her usual high fashion flair, wearing a hot pants costume adopted from one of her favorite minis. The gold-pink-turquoise dress top flowed into long panels.

Ambassadors to the countries that the BSO will visit on their great 23-day concert tour of Europe were honor guests at the reception with the Apostolic Delegate Luigi Raymondi.

George London, former opera singer and Mrs. London attended the party as did Under Secretary of State John Richards and Mrs. Richards; Henry Kissinger who escorted well known Washingtonian Barbara Howar; William Denton of the Washington National Symphony Orchestra and several of that group.

Talcott Banks, president of the Trustees of the BSO, was among the Boston guests. Also Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, a trustee; the Stephen V. C. Morrises of Lenox (who are going on the European trip and have done a big share of the arrangements); the John Deweys, the David Rockefellers, the Thomas Perrys, (he is manager of the Orchestra), Msgr. Edward G. Murray, a trustee; Marvin Y. Schofer, public relations director and several more.

Members of the Association of the Performing Arts who sponsored a night at Jacques Brel Cabaret at the Somerset included (from left) Mr. and Mrs. Robert Watson, Mrs. Myron Snyder and her husband.

—Record American Photo, John Landers, Jr.

There will be a Debutante Cotillion—and what promises to be a charming one—on Monday, June 14 at the Sheraton Plaza Hotel. Currently girls from 17 different schools are on the list and mothers are doing early shopping for gowns.

Post-debs returning from their colleges are included in the plans now being completed by Margaret Howell Inc. This group will have a chance of partying with their former classmates before vacation trips get underway.

Proceeds of the Cotillion aid in sending less privileged boys and girls to camp this summer.

Among last year's debs serving on the floor committee for the Ball are Lydia Graves, Kathleen Wick. Cheryl Coulter, Claire Stuart, Wendy Bremer, Catherine Motley, and Alicia Talbot (she has been attending college in California).

"Beasts of the East" will offer true dragon stories and folktales reported to be true at Saturday afternoon's monthly children's program at the Museum of Fine Arts. Children age 6 to 12 and anyone interested in dragons are invited.

Joan Cohen, adjunct lecturer, who claims to have visited many dragons and monsters, will show slides and dragon materials such as rich Oriental embroideries, a Balinese monster mask and a dragon rattle which she will share with her audience.

After the lecture there will be a massive dragon hunt in the Museum galleries where youngsters will search for their dragons in the famous scrolls, embroideries and treasures in the collection.

An invitation to the Boston community to see "His Land," the thrilling story of Israel from ancient to modern times, is extended by Zionist House, 17 Commonwealth ave., for Sunday at 2 p.m. This is the film which Golda Meir, premier of Israel, called "A Christian Gift of Love to the Jewish people." It is a musical journey into the soul of a nation from a Christian point of view.

RECORD-AMERICAN
BOSTON, MASS.
(M&E) 433,300
MAR 18 1971 New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
AUG 14 1971 New England Newsclip

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540
AUG 18 1971 New England Newsclig

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
JUL 2 1971 New England Newsclip

BSO Principal Horn Player to Retire

James Stagliano, 59-year-old principal horn player of the Boston Symphony, will retire at the close of the Tanglewood Music Festival, it was announced this week. He will be stepping down from the first chair at the end of his silver anniversary year with the orchestra, closing out a 42 year symphonic career during which he played with the Detroit, St. Louis, Chicago, Los Angeles and Cleveland orchestra before coming to Boston under Koussevitzky.

Movies TV Art

Horn Virtuoso James Stagliano Retiring From BSO

James Stagliano, 59, principal horn player for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that he will retire at the end of the Tanglewood season.

Silver Anniversary

Mr. Stagliano celebrated his silver anniversary with the BSO this year, previously having played with the Detroit, St. Louis, Chicago, Los Angeles and Cleveland symphonies.

He is known in the Berkshires for more than his musical virtuosity. His home on Stockbridge Road in Lenox has long been a mecca for those who enjoy the good life. He is especially noted for his salad dressings, which he makes by the gallon and ages as carefully as any Kentucky distiller. Most of his entertaining is done in his elaborate basement bar, which has an adjoining sauna. He is also an avid golfer, usually in the company of his close friend, Judge John J. Dwyer.

A rather busy "retirement" has been scheduled by Mr. Stagliano. He plans to write a book about his 42 years in the various orchestras and to assess the conductors under whom he has played.

Native of Italy

A native of Italy, Mr. Stagliano came to this country at the age of 7. He had started his musical career under the tutelage of his father, who was a clarinet virtuoso and a bandmaster. When he came to the United States, however, he undertook the study of the French horn with his uncle, Alberto, who was to become the first horn player with the NBC Symphony under Arturo Toscanini.

Lying about his age, Stagliano was signed as the extra horn player with the Detroit Symphony when he was only 15. By the time he was 18, he was solo horn for the St. Louis Symphony. That same year he was offered contracts with five different orchestras. He chose to go with the Los Angeles Symphony, and while on the West Coast, he doubled in movie studio orchestras, cutting records with Frank Sinatra and Bing Crosby.

Erich Leinsdorf lured him back east as first horn with the Cleveland Symphony, and then Serge Koussevitzky lured him away from Leinsdorf to start his long stint with the BSO.

Own Records

In addition to all the recordings made with the Boston Symphony, Mr. Stagliano has starred in two records of horn masterpieces. He hopes to continue chamber recordings with some of his former BSO associates.

In November, he will fly to Milan, Italy, to join his close friend, conductor Bruno Maderna, who was associated with the Berkshire Music Center this summer, for the beginning of the opera and concert season in Italy.

Mr. Stagliano has been as noted for his personal charm as for his musical ability and has hosts of friends throughout the world.

Bercomar News Photo

GOOD FRIENDS James Stagliano, left, and Bruno Maderna make plans for a November meeting in Italy. Stagliano is planning extensive travels upon his retirement from the BSO at the end of the season.

Busy Concertmaster Discusses Young Musicians

By RICHARD CONWAY

Joseph Silverstein is concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This week end he is a featured soloist at both the Saturday night and Sunday afternoon concerts. This evening he appears with the Boston String Trio in the 7 weekend prelude program.

He is chairman of the Berkshire Music Center faculty. He is a busy man.

But the other day he took some time out of that hectic schedule to talk with me on string playing and players.

Biographically, Silverstein was born in Detroit, and was given his first instruction in violin by his father.

He studied music at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, and played with the Houston, Philadelphia, and Denver Symphony Orchestras before joining the Boston Symphony in 1955.

In seven years with the Boston Orchestra, he went from the last stand of second violins to his present position as concertmaster.

In 1959, Silverstein was the only American to place in the top ten of the Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Competition. He has other impressive credentials.

He is married and the father of two girls. He also likes to play golf, although from now until the Berkshire Center closes there will not be much time for that.

Of the many topics he discussed, and he is an easy and fascinating man to interview, this article will deal with his thoughts about the young musicians coming to Tanglewood. Later, I will write of his other interesting observations and ideas.

He said that in terms of their orchestral background most of them were better prepared than the students of say 20 years ago. Their overall musical sophistication is greater.

The reason for this is that most of the schools and colleges they attend have orchestras.

But their instrumental technique is not as high. Silverstein reflected that in 1946 there were several virtuoso level violinists who went on to become concertmasters of major orchestras, or who had reasonably distinguished concert careers. Tanglewood is not getting that many young musicians of that caliber now.

Silverstein pointed out that another reason for this is that there are now so many good summer music schools for the aspiring young professional to choose from.

What about the demands of today's music on the violinist?

"No problem," said Silverstein. "If a violinist can play Mozart or Mendelsohn, he can play contemporary music.

"I might say that the reverse is not always true. A musician who seems great playing contemporary music might not sound so good with a simple little Mozart piece."

In Silverstein's opinion, the young professional takes longer to reach major symphony playing level, but when he gets there he is a far more knowledgeable orchestral musician.

"I was playing professionally when I was 17. I dare say that now the average age is in the middle twenties. But these kids know more than I did."

Little wonder with men like Silverstein around to teach them.

THE WASHINGTON POST
E4 Wednesday, March 17, 1971

By Ellsworth Davis—The Washington Post

Joan Kennedy talks with conductor Michael Tilson Thomas at a party she and her husband gave at their house Monday night. Mrs. Kennedy is wearing a brocade minidress over matching bikini hot pants.

By Arthur Ellis—The Washington Post

Michael Tilson Thomas conducts the Boston Symphony during a rehearsal at Constitution Hall Tuesday morning.

A Big, New Baton

By Alan M. Kriegsman

Thirty years ago, the image of the symphony conductor was still one of an octogenarian with a shaggy mane and a foreign accent as thick as glue.

The upsurge of youth and America's rise to musical supremacy have changed all that. This year's prime example is 26-year-old Michael Tilson Thomas, who has a foot firmly planted upon two of the nation's most prominent orchestral podiums.

Thomas was here yesterday to rehearse for his appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Constitution Hall. Recently, he was named assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, and almost immediately thereafter, regular music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic.

The press has already drawn the inevitable parallel between the careers of Thomas and Leonard Bernstein.

"Of course," Thomas observes, "there are certain conincidental, chronological similarities. We're also both dark-haired, with Jewish backgrounds, and there's the show-biz involvement, too."

Thomas, in fact, was born in Hollywood, where his family has been connected with theater and motion pictures over several generations.

There's at least one musical aim that Thomas aspires to sharing with Bernstein. "The quality I especially admire in Bernstein is the way he demands that every note, every second of music be super-intense and alive. With Bernstein, even very slow

See THOMAS, E4, col. 1

Thomas' Tale of Two Podiums

THOMAS, From E1

pieces have staggering presence at every instant. I want to approach music in the same way. I'd like to have the feeling that the orchestral players and the conductor, together, are really speaking through the music."

Like Thomas, Bernstein in his 20s was a superb pianist as well as a prepossessing conductor. For both, the Boston Symphony served as a launching pad, Bernstein having gotten his start as assistant to Serge Koussevitzky in 1942. And Thomas, like Bernstein of old, enhances his articulate allure with a tall, slender, disarmingly boyish appearance.

Asked how he reacts to the comparison, Thomas replied:

"I would have to be very pompous indeed not to be flattered by it. The fact is that I admire Bernstein tremendously. I'm very much in awe of his powers and abilities. But I'm also very different from Bernstein, both as a person and as a musician."

Even before last night's concert, Thomas had aroused spirited discussion by his choice of program, which included, along with pieces by Bach, Chopin and Schoenberg, the "Divertissement" from Act III of Tchaikovsky's ballet, "Swan Lake." The latter almost never appears on "serious" symphonic programs these days.

How did he come to choose the "Divertissement"?

"I love Tchaikovsky very, very much, and especially the ballet music. Stravinsky

> "The quality I especially admire in Bernstein is the way he demands that every note, every second of music be super intense and alive. With Bernstein, even very slow pieces have staggering presence at every instant."

was right, you know, in pointing out that the ballet scores contain Tchaikovsky's most inventive and really his best music. Take the entrance of Rothbart and his exit with Odile at the end of the act, for instance—what startling music, what extraordinary rhythms and organization. And the incredible Coda—it's only a step away from Stravinsky, from 'Firebird.' The arrogance of Odile and Rothbart is so brilliantly projected."

"The Tchaikovsky snobbery," Thomas went on, "that used to prevent these pieces from being done, that's gone now. Actually, it's a revelation to hear this music played by a great orchestra. 'Swan Lake' isn't all I do; I'm also presenting things from the first and last acts of 'Sleeping Beauty,' and the second act of 'Nutcracker.' "

To accommodate his split responsibility, he'll maintain a residence in both Boston and Buffalo. With the Boston Symphony, he'll be conducting both subscription concerts and special events, "more adventurous stuff." In Buffalo, he'll do half the season, seven or eight concerts. Thomas also hews to the motto of the model modern maestro: "Have baton, will travel."

"Yes," he notes, "I'll have quite a bit of guesting coming up, principally in New York and London."

Thomas' predecessor in Buffalo was Lukas Foss, whose uncompromising emphasis on contemporary music won him both admiration and emnity. Thomas, too, both at the piano and with the baton, is becoming known as a champion of new, often difficult, works. Will he follow in Foss' footsteps?

"I'll be doing less contemporary music than Lukas; but on the other hand, I'll do considerably more early music. On my first several programs, for instance, there'll be names like Perotin, Monteverdi, Gabrieli and Zelenka — along with people like Beethoven, Schumann and Messiaen, of course. I'm going to dig into the really great centuries—the end of the 12th and beginning of the 13th, the spectacular 15th and the 17th, up to Bach. And, naturally, the 20th, the liveliest in a long time. What I want to do is to present an 800-year repertoire."

Thomas also foresees a bright orchestral future. "And I look to the U.S. to lead it, for despite incredible handicaps — economics, for instance—we've got the healthiest musical culture in the world right now."

AMERICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
D. 40,675
JUL 1 1971
New England Newsclip

Musicians 'Tuned Up' By Doctor

BOSTON, Mass. (AP)—While musicians tune up their instruments, Dr. Keran Chobanian tunes up the musicians—sometimes using the piano as an examination table and the trombone bell as a head-mirror.

It may very well be the Boston Symphony is the only orchestra which has, even without the title, someone who is in effect its medical director.

Dr. Chobanian's association with the orchestra began in 1956 when he accompanied the musicians on a tour to Europe and Russia. He believes the trip was the first time that a touring orchestra took a physician along. On a tour, he usually takes along 350 pounds of medical equipment and supplies, including a battery-operated electrocardiogram machine.

He has worked out a health plan at the request of the management in which a majority of the musicians voluntarily participate, and he is kept informed on the members' health status.

NEW YORK
Amsterdam News
W. 82,123
APR 24 1971

MUSICIANS MEET — Harpist, Ann Hobson, of Boston, Mass., the first and only Black to perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in her recent New York visit dropped in to see music professor Edward Boatner at his studio at 76 W. 69th St. Professor Boatner is including Miss Hobson, who also is principal harpist with the Boston Pops Orchestra, in his new and forthcoming book about interracial history. Miss Hobson won her acclaim when she auditioned with twenty-five contestants (White) behind a closed partition — conductor William Steinberg chose her.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500
JUN 17 1971
New England Newsclip

FROM GRATEFUL B.S.O. — Talcott M. Banks (right), President of the Board of Trustees, Boston Symphony Orchestra, presents a copy of the unreleased recording of Tchaikovsky's "Winter Dreams," performed by the B.S.O. under the direction of Michael Tilson Thomas, to Alan Strong, an executive of the Marriott Motor Hotel, Newton. The Marriott contributed food for volunteer workers of Friends of the Boston Symphony during the "Musical Marathon" fund raising campaign for the Orchestra.

THE WASHINGTON POST
E4 Wednesday, March 17, 1971

By Ellsworth Davis—The Washington Post

Joan Kennedy talks with conductor Michael Tilson Thomas at a party she and her husband gave at their house Monday night. Mrs. Kennedy is wearing a brocade minidress over matching bikini hot pants.

By Arthur Ellis—The Washington Post

Michael Tilson Thomas conducts the Boston Symphony during a rehearsal at Constitution Hall Tuesday morning.

A Big, New Baton

By Alan M. Kriegsman

Thirty years ago, the image of the symphony conductor was still one of an octogenarian with a shaggy mane and a foreign accent as thick as glue.

The upsurge of youth and America's rise to musical supremacy have changed all that. This year's prime example is 26-year-old Michael Tilson Thomas, who has a foot firmly planted upon two of the nation's most prominent orchestral podiums.

Thomas was here yesterday to rehearse for his appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night at Constitution Hall. Recently, he was named assistant conductor of the Boston Symphony, and almost immediately thereafter, regular music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic.

The press has already drawn the inevitable parallel between the careers of Thomas and Leonard Bernstein.

"Of course," Thomas observes, "there are certain conincidental, chronological similarities. We're also both dark-haired, with Jewish backgrounds, and there's the show-biz involvement, too."

Thomas, in fact, was born in Hollywood, where his family has been connected with theater and motion pictures over several generations.

There's at least one musical aim that Thomas admits to sharing with Bernstein. "The quality I especially admire in Bernstein is the way he demands that every note, every second of music be super-intense and alive. With Bernstein, even very slow

See THOMAS, E4, ol. 1

Thomas' Tale of Two Podiums

THOMAS, From E1

pieces have staggering presence at every instant. I want to approach music in the same way. I'd like to have the feeling that the orchestral players and the conductor, together, are really speaking through the music."

Like Thomas, Bernstein in his 20s was a superb pianist as well as a prepossessing conductor. For both, the Boston Symphony served as a launching pad, Bernstein having gotten his start as assistant to Serge Koussevitzky in 1942. And Thomas, like Bernstein of old, enhances his articulate allure with a tall, slender, disarmingly boyish appearance.

Asked how he reacts to the comparison, Thomas replied:

"I would have to be very pompous indeed not to be flattered by it. The fact is that I admire Bernstein tremendously. I'm very much in awe of his powers and abilities. But I'm also very different from Bernstein, both as a person and as a musician."

Even before last night's concert, Thomas had aroused spirited discussion by his choice of program, which included, along with pieces by Bach, Chopin and Schoenberg, the "Divertissement" from Act III of Tchaikovsky's ballet, "Swan Lake." The latter almost never appears on "serious" symphonic programs these days.

How did he come to choose the "Divertissement"?

"I love Tchaikovsky very, very much, and especially the ballet music. Stravinsky

"The quality I especially admire in Bernstein is the way he demands that every note, every second of music be super intense and alive. With Bernstein, even very slow pieces have staggering presence at every instant."

was right, you know, in pointing out that the ballet scores contain Tchaikovsky's most inventive and really his best music. Take the entrance of Rothbart and his exit with Odile at the end of the act, for instance—what startling music, what extraordinary rhythms and organization. And the incredible Coda—it's only a step away from Stravinsky, from 'Firebird.' The arrogance of Odile and Rothbart is so brilliantly projected."

"The Tchaikovsky snobbery," Thomas went on, "that used to prevent these pieces from being done, that's gone now. Actually, it's a revelation to hear this music played by a great orchestra. 'Swan Lake' isn't all I do; I'm also presenting things from the first and last acts of 'Sleeping Beauty,' and the second act of 'Nutcracker.' "

To accommodate his split responsibility, he'll maintain a residence in both Boston and Buffalo. With the Boston Symphony, he'll be conducting both subscription concerts and special events, "more adventurous stuff." In Buffalo, he'll do half the season, seven or eight concerts. Thomas also hews to the motto of the model modern maestro: "Have baton, will travel."

"Yes," he notes, "I'll have quite a bit of guesting coming up, principally in New York and London."

Thomas' predecessor in Buffalo was Lukas Foss, whose uncompromising emphasis on contemporary music won him both admiration and emnity. Thomas, too, both at the piano and with the baton, is becoming known as a champion of new, often difficult, works. Will he follow in Foss' footsteps?

"I'll be doing less contemporary music than Lukas; but on the other hand, I'll do considerably more early music. On my first several programs, for instance, there'll be names like Perotin, Monteverdi, Gabrieli and Zelenka — along with people like Beethoven, Schumann and Messiaen, of course. I'm going to dig into the really great centuries—the end of the 12th and beginning of the 13th, the spectacular 15th and the 17th, up to Bach. And, naturally, the 20th, the liveliest in a long time. What I want to do is to present an 800-year repertoire."

Thomas also foresees a bright orchestral future. "And I look to the U.S. to lead it, for despite incredible handicaps — economics, for instance—we've got the healthiest musical culture in the world right now."

AMERICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
D. 40,675
JUL 1 1971
New England Newsclip

Musicians 'Tuned Up' By Doctor

BOSTON, Mass. (AP)—While musicians tune up their instruments, Dr. Keran Chobanian tunes up the musicians—sometimes using the piano as an examination table and the trombone bell as a head-mirror.

It may very well be the Boston Symphony is the only orchestra which has, even without the title, someone who is in effect its medical director.

Dr. Chobanian's association with the orchestra began in 1956 when he accompanied the musicians on a tour to Europe and Russia. He believes the trip was the first time that a touring orchestra took a physician along. On a tour, he usually takes along 350 pounds of medical equipment and supplies, including a battery-operated electrocardiogram machine.

He has worked out a health plan at the request of the management in which a majority of the musicians voluntarily participate, and he is kept informed on the members' health status.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500
JUN 17 1971
New England Newsclip

NEW YORK
Amsterdam News
W. 82,123
APR 24 1971

MUSICIANS MEET — Harpist, Ann Hobson, of Boston, Mass., the first and only Black to perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in her recent New York visit dropped in to see music professor Edward Boatner at his studio at 76 W. 69th St. Professor Boatner is including Miss Hobson, who also is principal harpist with the Boston Pops Orchestra, in his new and forthcoming book about interracial history. Miss Hobson won her acclaim when she auditioned with twenty-five contestants (White) behind a closed partition — conductor William Steinberg chose her.

FROM GRATEFUL B.S.O. — Talcott M. Banks (right), President of the Board of Trustees, Boston Symphony Orchestra, presents a copy of the unreleased recording of Tchaikovsky's "Winter Dreams," performed by the B.S.O. under the direction of Michael Tilson Thomas, to Alan Strong, an executive of the Marriott Motor Hotel, Newton. The Marriott contributed food for volunteer workers of Friends of the Boston Symphony during the "Musical Marathon" fund raising campaign for the Orchestra.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,987 (E) 194,700
(S) 566,377

APR 28 1971 New England Newsclip

BOOK OF THE DAY

Funny music people

By Herbert A. Kenny
Globe Staff

THE HUMOR OF MUSIC AND OTHER ODDITIES IN THE ART, by Laning Humphrey. Crescendo, Boston. 96 pp. $4.50.

Henry Taylor Parker, for many years, was the music critic for the Boston Transcript, and signed his reviews with his initials, H.T.P. and was sometimes called, "Hell to Pay."

On one occasion, Mr. Humphrey records, he delivered a beautiful jab at seat-neighbors who were talking during a symphony program."

"Those people up on the stage" he snarled, "are making so much noise I can't hear a word you're saying."

H.T.P. has been gone for a good many years. But Laning Humphrey is still with us, a familiar figure in the music world, the publicity director for the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1938 to 1969, an annotator for the Pops programs, and author of innumerable articles on music and the personalities of that music world.

During his 75 years, he has heard and horded a veritable library of anecdotes, some hilarious, some heart-warming about the great and the near-great, and he has taken the occasion of his retirement to put them into a slim sprightly volume, charmingly illustrated with pencil sketches by his wife, Martha Burnham Humphrey.

Arthur Fiedler, the conductor, has written a brief foreword.

The book is stocked with interesting sidelights on a distinguished list of performers and composers: composer Walter Piston worked in the drafting department of the Boston Elevated Street Railway Co.; Enrico Caruso once took up the study of the flute but was unable to master it and quit: Burton Fine, violist with the BSO was nine years with NASA.

No conductor had a sharper tongue than Sir Thomas Beecham and a number of stories are told of his wit and sarcasm.

"Fritz Reiner," Humphrey writes, "highly esteemed like Beecham, as orchestral and operatic conductor was gracious enough to go back stage to meet the Englishman, who had finished conducting an opera of Mozart.

LANNING HUMPHREY

"Thank you for a delightful evening with Beecham and Mozart" Reined said.

"Why drag in Mozart? is Sir Thomas' reported reply."

Humphrey suggested that Beecham often posed as a brash egoist for the fun of watching its effect on people.

Humphrey in turn has got a great deal of fun over the years from watching musical people, and in this modest volume shares much of it with us, an appealing distillation from a long and vivid experience.

HERALD NEWS
FALL RIVER, MASS.
(E) 41,946

JAN 22 1971 New England Newsclip

Symphony Archivist

Laning Humphrey, archivist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and his wife, an artist, author and photographer, will present an illustrated lecture about "The Human Side of Symphony Hall and the Boston Symphony Orchestra" at the Woman's Club of Fall River on Monday at 3:15 p.m. The program, in observance of the orchestra's 90th season, will include views of the recent refurbishing of the hall, scenes at the esplanade concerts and informal stories about the orchestra.

N. H. PHILHARMONIC Orchestra Conductor Rolland Tapley (right) leads the orchestra in Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 in F Major." Beneath Tapley's directing hand is guest concertmaster, William Waterhouse, leading the string section. At left, the clarinet section intently reads the music. (Photo by George Naum)

Rolland Tapley of Boston Symphony Conducts

Philharmonic Presents Concert

The Winter Concert of the New Hampshire Philharmonic Orchestra was attended by a near capacity audience at Practical Arts Auditorium in Manchester Sunday night in spite of the snow and sleet.

New Hampshire's own major musical organization performed its most ambitious and difficult program of classical music to date.

The orchestra, conducted by Rolland Tapley of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opened the concert with the overture to "Rienzi" by Wagner. In complete unison and with beautiful intonation, particularly in the string passages, the group offered a rendition of "Symphony No. 8 in F major" by Beethoven, the major work of the Winter Concert.

Guest Violinist

Following intermission, guest artist William Waterhouse, a member of the Boston Symphony as well as concertmaster of the NHPO was featured in "Poem in E flat major" by Chausson. Waterhouse played with precision and brilliance and the audience showed its approval with prolonged applause.

Evelyn Querfurth of Peterborough, first flutist of the Philharmonic, charmed the audience with the delicate solo passages in Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun."

The Winter Concert, first of th 12th season, concluded with the lively, spirited "Espana Rhapsody" by Chabrier.

Science fiction? No, only the new 29-channel "mixing panel" in the Deutsche Grammophon control room, just built in the basement of Boston's Symphony Hall. The all-but-psychedelic detail and "presence" of the new BSO sound resulting therefrom can be heard in such a stereo showpiece as Holst's "The Planets." (reviewed below).

'Spacing Out' On Classics

RECORDS

By ABRAM CHIPMAN

Gustav Holst's Suite for Large Orchetra, "The Planets", has finally gone international (or universal, if you prefer) in a credible way. It has long been one of the prime showpieces for dazzling new recording techniques. Yet, as a conductor's vehicle, it has till recently retained a provincial status - only such British maestros as Boult or Sargent (with their aggregate of half a dozen disc versions) have been at home in this Englishman's solar system. I felt von Karajan and Stokowski, in their phonographic efforts, simply crashed with the countdown.

In this Age of Aquarius, it was inevitable that musicians of other cultural frameworks would "tune in" to the cosmology. It's just happened twice. For Philips, the London Philharmonic Orchestra is under the Dutchman, Bernard Haitink. On Deutsche Grammophon, Greman-born William Steinberg leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Both conduct with idiomatic flair, imagination and put their charges through their paces with brilliance and power. There are plenty of decibels and wide frequency response in the grooves as well. Of course, there are individual differences in outlook, for the choosers. The BSO's virtuosity is of a more aggressive sort—bold, confident, glittering, in contrast to the LPO's velvety refinement (note the oboe, horn and violin work in the slower, more reflective, music). DGG's sound is closer to the listener—the impact socks one in the solar plexis, rarely dropping below a mezzo forte. You are really wrapped up in the instruments, for the Bostonians' new crew of sonic scribes have wired Symphony Hall with a veritable army of microphones to hone in on every last stand of instrumental texture. Philips, by contrast, is conservative—a nice, blended perspective the way you would hear the ensemble from a good half-way back seat on the floor of the auditorium. Some comments on individual movements follow:

Mars, the Bringer of War—Steinberg whips up a taut blitzkrieg of a performance. Haitink, at a more measured pace, builds a gradual crescendo that eventually reaches brutal proportions, and the brass stress the syncopation of their phrases, making the attackers lunge menacingly at the receptive auditor.

Venus, the Bringer of Peace—Haitink catches more of the contrastingly reposeful mood, with gossamer soft, affectionate playing.

Mercury, the Winged Messenger—A difficult section to bring off. You need the texture of chamber-music (which Haitink conveys) along with the smoothest possible ensemble joints in the kaleidoscopic colors (provided by Steinberg). Both together are found in the current Boult — New Philharmonia, on Angel.

Jupiter, the Bringer of Jollity—Again, Steinberg ties the transitions together more smoothly, Haitink gets the rhythmic frolic more gaily, with generally funnier phrase-turning from the winds and brass. The latter is brisker, the former digs in with more mock pomposity. In the big central Maestoso passage, the Bostonians do everything but stand up and salute. I wondered if that was due to the fact that this patriotic-sounding tune is familiar to Boston-area radio listeners as the signature theme of WCRB's "Evening at Symphony!"

Saturn, the Bringer of Old Age — Haitink is slow and mysterious, Steinberg bleakly ferocious. The powerful, dirge-like majesty of this episode is still best conveyed on Sargent's BBC Symphony version, now unavailable. (I note as this goes to press that Angel-Seraphim has missed its chance to reissue that fine, and very atmospherically recorded, edition in favor of the much inferior Stokowski - for shame, Capitol! I also note Seraphim's reissue of Britten's "Young Person's Guide" with Sargent omits that performance's original coupling, Holst's otherwise unrecorded "Beni Moira."

Uranus, the Magician — Predictably, by now, Steinberg has the steadier rhythm, Haitink the more buffoonish sprit.

Neptune, the Mystic — The acid test is how well the wordless female choir fades away into nothingness. If you can tell the exact moment they stop singing, then it's thumbs down. That problem was one of the Achilles' Heels of a recent London Phase 4 release by the LPO under Bernard Herrman, a performance which the reader should not confuse with the LPO and Bernard Haitink of current interest. Philips fades down the John Alldis Choir rapidly, but their fadeout is imperceptible. The New England Conservatory Chorus, on DGG, is distantly miked so by the time the cut-off comes, you have to ride the gain way up in order to hear it as a cut-off. In other words, both the newcomers pass muster.

* * *

Sinfonia Antartica

Meanwhile, back on the Planet Earth, we travel to the distant reaches of the South Pole with a contemporary and countryman of Holst's, Ralph Vaughan Williams. His Symphony No. 7 ("Sinfonia Antartica") is newly issued by Angel, featuring soprano Norma Burrowes, the London Philharmonic Orchestra and Choir under Sir Adrian Boult. Note the absence of a male actor in the credits—this version omits the spoken superscriptures which annotator Michael Kennedy claims are ". . . for the listener to read silently, not to be spoken aloud as part of the work." According to whose authority, I wonder? Boult's earlier mono version (recorded in the composer's presence) had these unaccompanied preludes spoken by Sir John Gielgud, while the current stereo rival (Previn on RCA) includes Sir Ralph Richarson's intonations of these poetic pendants. Of course, Barbarolli, who gave the world premiere (and whose recording is long gone) omitted them. So I rather think it's a matter of discretiton.

In any case, Boult's remake is a reading of great and poetic sensitivity, broodingly introspective yet with some forward pressure on the opening movement, that contrasts with Previn's broader grandiloquence. The slow movement is unbroken by a turnover, the organ solo without the crescendo that impressed me on RCA. The wordless vocals are recorded close to, but otherwise the stereo layout is excellent and very subtle.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
D. 114,000

MAY 9 1971

New England Newsclip

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 130,000

MAY 1971

BOSTON

DGG'S New Studio

Any doubts about Deutsche Grammophon's long-range commitment to the Boston Symphony Orchestra were effectively laid to rest last February when the German recording company in residence formally unveiled a brand new $110,000 studio located in the basement of Symphony Hall. With such expensive equipment installed on a permanent basis, DGG had obviously come to stay. Oddly enough, this seems to be the first recording studio in America specifically designed and built for taping classical music on a grand symphonic scale. Columbia, for instance, used to transport its recording gear to Philadelphia's Town Hall and set up shop in the ladies room, while RCA shared its impromptu quarters in Boston with the ancient instrument collection situated in a museumlike room off the balcony level.

The inaugural sessions involved Claudio Abbado who was conducting two colorful orchestral works for future release: Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy and Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet. It was the latter piece that occupied DGG's technicians on the afternoon of February 8, and they already seemed very much at home in their new studio. With the handsome wood-paneled walls and other pleasingly designed acoustical features (devised by Bolt, Beranek, and Newman), the surroundings gave an aura of a comfortable living room—were it not for the complex mixing console that commanded center stage. Unlike RCA or Columbia recording procedures, which have one man in control of both musical and technical matters, DGG's three-man team operated in a carefully graded order of descending authority and responsibility: Günter Hermanns, senior balance engineer, presided before the console (in an upholstered chair with arms); Rainer Brock, artistic supervisor seated to the left (in a smaller chair, no arms), closely followed the score; while junior recording engineer Joachim Niss (perched on an even more modest secretarial swivel chair) operated the tapes. Hermanns maneuvered his dials with a minimum of balance adjustments and cool, astronautical efficiency; Brock, looking slightly mad in his mod outfit of bell trousers, love beads, and flowing blond locks, seemed to be enjoying his Beckmesser role hugely as he marked ensemble errors onto the score. All the while, the smooth, aristocratic sounds of the BSO emerged from the speakers at a well-modulated level, sounding very easy on the ears.

The proof of the pudding, of course, is the finished product. But whatever the over-all musical results of DGG's Boston venture, the company's unspared effort and expense to provide Symphony Hall with state-of-the-art recording facilities is a welcome and praiseworthy vote in favor of that hothouse bloom, the classical record.

PETER G. DAVIS

DGG/David Worts

MUSIC AND ARTISTS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
6 TI. A YR. CIRC. N. AVAIL.

APR MAY 1971

BSO RECORDS ON SITE

5/59

Deutsche Grammophon has invested $75,000 in permanent recording equipment for Boston's Symphony Hall. This will trim studio time costs, enabling the orchestra to enter and record in one take, or a second take at the most. The Boston Symphony is said to be the only American orchestra contracted to an annual output for any recording company.

DGG's American head of classical music says it is not true that recording classics is a lost-money venture. Though U.S. classical sales are only 3 to 5% of the total market picture, DGG releases its records in Europe and Japan where the markets are 30% and 40% respectively.

Science fiction? No, only the new 29-channel "mixing panel" in the Deutsche Grammophon control room, just built in the basement of Boston's Symphony Hall. The all-but-psychedelic detail and "presence" of the new BSO sound resulting therefrom can be heard in such a stereo showpiece as Holst's "The Planets." (reviewed below).

'Spacing Out' On Classics

RECORDS

By ABRAM CHIPMAN

Gustav Holst's Suite for Large Orchetra, "The Planets", has finally gone international (or universal, if you prefer) in a credible way. It has long been one of the prime showpieces for dazzling new recording techniques. Yet, as a conductor's vehicle, it has till recently retained a provincial status - only such British maestros as Boult or Sargent (with their aggregate of half a dozen disc versions) have been at home in this Englishman's solar system. I felt von Karajan and Stokowski, in their phonographic efforts, simply crashed with the countdown.

In this Age of Aquarius, it was inevitable that musicians of other cultural frameworks would "tune in" to the cosmology. It's just happened twice. For Philips, the London Philharmonic Orchestra is under the Dutchman, Bernard Haitink. On Deutsche Grammophon, Greman-born William Steinberg leads the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Both conduct with idiomatic flair, imagination and put their charges through their paces with brilliance and power. There are plenty of decibels and wide frequency response in the grooves as well. Of course, there are individual differences in outlook, for the choosers. The BSO's virtuosity is of a more aggressive sort—bold, confident, glittering, in contrast to the LPO's velvety refinement (note the oboe, horn and violin work in the slower, more reflective, music). DGG's sound is closer to the listener—the impact socks one in the solar plexis, rarely dropping below a mezzo forte. You are really wrapped up in the instruments, for the Bostonians' new crew of sonic scribes have wired Symphony Hall with a veritable army of microphones to hone in on every last stand of instrumental texture. Philips, by contrast, is conservative—a nice, blended perspective the way you would hear the ensemble from a good half-way back seat on the floor of the auditorium. Some comments on individual movements follow:

Mars, the Bringer of War—Steinberg whips up a taut blitzkrieg of a performance. Haitink, at a more measured pace, builds a gradual crescendo that eventually reaches brutal proportions, and the brass stress the syncopation of their phrases, making the attackers lunge menacingly at the receptive auditor.

Venus, the Bringer of Peace—Haitink catches more of the contrastingly reposeful mood, with gossamer soft, affectionate playing.

Mercury, the Winged Messenger—A difficult section to bring off. You need the texture of chamber-music (which Haitink conveys) along with the smoothest possible ensemble joints in the kaleidoscopic colors (provided by Steinberg). Both together are found in the current Boult — New Philharmonia, on Angel.

Jupiter, the Bringer of Jollity—Again, Steinberg ties the transitions together more smoothly, Haitink gets the rhythmic frolic more gaily, with generally funnier phrase-turning from the winds and brass. The latter is brisker, the former digs in with more mock pomposity. In the big central Maestoso passage, the Bostonians do everything but stand up and salute. I wondered if that was due to the fact that this patriotic-sounding tune is familiar to Boston-area radio listeners as the signature theme of WCRB's "Evening at Symphony!"

Saturn, the Bringer of Old Age — Haitink is slow and mysterious, Steinberg bleakly ferocious. The powerful, dirge-like majesty of this episode is still best conveyed on Sargent's BBC Symphony version, now unavailable. (I note as this goes to press that Angel-Seraphim has missed its chance to reissue that fine, and very atmospherically recorded, edition in favor of the much inferior Stokowski - for shame, Capitol! I also note Seraphim's reissue of Britten's "Young Person's Guide" with Sargent omits that performance's original coupling, Holst's otherwise unrecorded "Beni Moira."

Uranus, the Magician — Predictably, by now, Steinberg has the steadier rhythm, Haitink the more buffoonish sprit.

Neptune, the Mystic — The acid test is how well the wordless female choir fades away into nothingness. If you can tell the exact moment they stop singing, then it's thumbs down. That problem was one of the Achilles' Heels of a recent London Phase 4 release by the LPO under Bernard Herrman, a performance which the reader should not confuse with the LPO and Bernard Haitink of current interest. Philips fades down the John Alldis Choir rapidly, but their fadeout is imperceptible. The New England Conservatory Chorus, on DGG, is distantly miked so by the time the cut-off comes, you have to ride the gain way up in order to hear it as a cut-off. In other words, both the newcomers pass muster.

* * *

Sinfonia Antartica

Meanwhile, back on the Planet Earth, we travel to the distant reaches of the South Pole with a contemporary and countryman of Holst's, Ralph Vaughan Williams. His Symphony No. 7 ("Sinfonia Antartica") is newly issued by Angel, featuring soprano Norma Burrowes, the London Philharmonic Orchestra and Choir under Sir Adrian Boult. Note the absence of a male actor in the credits—this version omits the spoken superscriptures which annotator Michael Kennedy claims are ". . . for the listener to read silently, not to be spoken aloud as part of the work." According to whose authority, I wonder? Boult's earlier mono version (recorded in the composer's presence) had these unaccompanied preludes spoken by Sir John Gielgud, while the current stereo rival (Previn on RCA) includes Sir Ralph Richarson's intonations of these poetic pendants. Of course, Barbarolli, who gave the world premiere (and whose recording is long gone) omitted them. So I rather think it's a matter of discretiton.

In any case, Boult's remake is a reading of great and poetic sensitivity, broodingly introspective yet with some forward pressure on the opening movement, that contrasts with Previn's broader grandiloquence. The slow movement is unbroken by a turnover, the organ solo without the crescendo that impressed me on RCA. The wordless vocals are recorded close to, but otherwise the stereo layout is excellent and very subtle.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
D. 114,000

MAY 9 1971

New England Newsclip

HIGH FIDELITY
MUSICAL AMERICA
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 130,000

MAY 1971

BOSTON

DGG'S New Studio

Any doubts about Deutsche Grammophon's long-range commitment to the Boston Symphony Orchestra were effectively laid to rest last February when the German recording company in residence formally unveiled a brand new $110,000 studio located in the basement of Symphony Hall. With such expensive equipment installed on a permanent basis, DGG had obviously come to stay. Oddly enough, this seems to be the first recording studio in America specifically designed and built for taping classical music on a grand symphonic scale. Columbia, for instance, used to transport its recording gear to Philadelphia's Town Hall and set up shop in the ladies room, while RCA shared its impromptu quarters in Boston with the ancient instrument collection situated in a museumlike room off the balcony level.

The inaugural sessions involved Claudio Abbado who was conducting two colorful orchestral works for future release: Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy and Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet. It was the latter piece that occupied DGG's technicians on the afternoon of February 8, and they already seemed very much at home in their new studio. With the handsome wood-paneled walls and other pleasingly designed acoustical features (devised by Bolt, Beranek, and Newman), the surroundings gave an aura of a comfortable living room—were it not for the complex mixing console that commanded center stage. Unlike RCA or Columbia recording procedures, which have one man in control of both musical and technical matters, DGG's three-man team operated in a carefully graded order of descending authority and responsibility: Günter Hermanns, senior balance engineer, presided before the console (in an upholstered chair with arms); Rainer Brock, artistic supervisor seated to the left (in a smaller chair, no arms), closely followed the score; while junior recording engineer Joachim Niss (perched on an even more modest secretarial swivel chair) operated the tapes. Hermanns maneuvered his dials with a minimum of balance adjustments and cool, astronautical efficiency; Brock, looking slightly mad in his mod outfit of bell trousers, love beads, and flowing blond locks, seemed to be enjoying his Beckmesser role hugely as he marked ensemble errors onto the score. All the while, the smooth, aristocratic sounds of the BSO emerged from the speakers at a well-modulated level, sounding very easy on the ears.

The proof of the pudding, of course, is the finished product. But whatever the over-all musical results of DGG's Boston venture, the company's unspared effort and expense to provide Symphony Hall with state-of-the-art recording facilities is a welcome and praiseworthy vote in favor of that hothouse bloom, the classical record.

PETER G. DAVIS

DGG/David Worts

MUSIC AND ARTISTS
NEW YORK, N. Y.
6 TI A YR. CIRC. N. AVAIL.

APR MAY 1971

BSO RECORDS ON SITE

Deutsche Grammophon has invested $75,000 in permanent recording equipment for Boston's Symphony Hall. This will trim studio time costs, enabling the orchestra to enter and record in one take, or a second take at the most. The Boston Symphony is said to be the only American orchestra contracted to an annual output for any recording company.

DGG's American head of classical music says it is not true that recording classics is a lost-money venture. Though U.S. classical sales are only 3 to 5% of the total market picture, DGG releases its records in Europe and Japan where the markets are 30% and 40% respectively.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
(M) 237,902 (E) 194,70
(S) 566,377
MAR 12 1971 New England Newsclip

Levy would hit museum, BSO

Tax bill rocks arts

By Edgar Driscoll Jr.
Globe Staff

A proviso in the new tax-hike bill, now being hammered out by a Senate-House conference committee, rocked the Commonwealth's arts world yesterday.

Included in the bill, is a proviso that would slap a three percent sales tax on admission fees to cultural events. It would raise an estimated $8 million of the $245 million package.

Specifically the proviso (House Bill 5090) calls for the sales tax on "any admission or other charges to and for the use of any place of entertainment, amusement, recreation or sport . . . including but not limited to motion picture theaters or drive - ins; theaters, halls or other places presenting dramatic, choreographic or musical performance, entertainment or exhibitions; sporting events; bowling alleys golf ranges, miniature golf or similar activities . . . etc."

Most of the arts world leaders were completely unaware of what they consider the latest threat to their organizations' already shaky financial structure. But not Louise G. Tate, executive director of the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities. She dropped the bomb yesterday at a meeting of some 80 such leaders attending a meeting at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts of the Partnership of the Arts, a newly formed national organization whose purpose, ironically enough, is to engage business in the arts and to push for more state and federal funding.

She pointed out that the proviso says nothing about excluding non-profit organizations so it is assumed that it includes them.

"When the state taxes experimental theater it's the poor stealing from the hungry," said Richard Reichman, director-playwright of the Theater Workshop of Boston.

Said a flabbergasted Perry T. Rathbone, the Museum of Fine Arts director, who admits nobody on the staff of some 450 knew a thing about it: "We would be gravely concerned at the very thought of any tax on the admission charge to the museum. We already regret we have to charge any admission at all and this would only increase the hardship to people seeking culture in our society."

Talcott M. Banks, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said: "It would be very regrettable and distressing if all charitable performing arts organizations and museums in this state, almost all of which run at substantial deficits and perform very valuable services for their communities, should suffer from a new tax which would penalize both the charitable organizations and their patrons. We earnestly hope that the Legislature will make an exception for charitable institutions."

Said Sarah Caldwell, artistic director of The Opera Company of Boston: "We exist to participate in one of the most difficult of art forms. For all of us concerned with the arts, a tax of this type would be disastrous.

"It's like nailing the coffin on some art groups . . . A lot of them are on the brink and this could push them down the hill. Bonafide, non-profit organizations should be exempt. Besides, another expense the public doesn't need is to have tickets more expensive. They're high enough as it is," says Walter Pierce, managing director of the new Boston University Celebrity Series.

E. Virginia Williams, founder and director of the Boston Ballet Company said her group, as a non-profit cultural organization would find "any tax levied on tickets to its performances to be an extreme hardship, since private contributions constitute 75 percent of our existence."

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231
JUL 13 1971 New England Newsclip

Newton Woman Leaves $22 Million Will

The $22 million will of Miss Mabel Louise Riley of 93 Bellevue st., Newton, was filed in Middlesex Probate Court yesterday.

Miss Riley, in her late 80's set up a $20 million fund in memory of her father Charles E. Riley, a manufacturer of textile machinery, and her mother, Agnes Winslow Riley.

Bequests totalling $2 million were made to servants and educational and medical organizations, mostly in New England.

She left approximately $50,000 to a score of lifetime servants. Among the organizations receiving $100,000 are The Episcopal City Mission of Boston, Cape Cod Hospital, Hyannis; Children's Medical Center, Boston; Massachusetts General Hospital, New England Deaconess Hospital, New England Peabody Hospital for Crippled Children, Newton-Wellesley Hospital and Perkins Institute for the Blind.

Other bequests were, Boston Symphony Orchestra, $25,000; The Diabetes Foundation of Boston, $50,000; Mass. Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, $5000; Mass. Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, $5000; and Grace Episcopal Church, Newton, $50,000.

Miss Riley died June 23rd. Funeral services were at Grace Episcopal Church, Newton.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
JUN 15 1971 New England Newsclip

Notes and Comments: Music and Money

By Jon Lehman

Perhaps the fact got obscured by the hubbub of last week's Channel 2 auction, but the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra made somewhat more than $37,000 for the orchestra in the weekend-long "musical marathon" on radio station WCRB May 21, 22 and 23.

The amount pushed to almost $400,000 the funds the friends have raised from all sources this year toward a goal of $550,000, announced to help the BSO stave off what Symphony President Talcott M Banks last year described as the "threat of (financial) disaster."

Considering the size and prestige of the Boston musical community, and in terms of the $50,000 goal set for the marathon, the exercise was less than a total success — the public in Cleveland gave $47,000 for their orchestra during a similar event earlier this year.

Broadening the Base

But almost more important than the amount that was raised was the way it was done — and the possibilities inherent in his new approach for broadening the base of support for one of Boston's outstanding cultural institutions.

The musical marathon offered on-the-air, request broadcasts of recorded performances from the orchestra's tape library continuously throughout the weekend, on the basis of $1 contribution for every minute of music requested. The various categories of contributions covered a broad range (from $3 to $1,000), and catalogues of the tapes available for broadcast were widely distributed to music and record stores, schools and other places where persons interested in music might see them.

And, perhaps most significant, anyone who happened to tune in the only commercial station in Boston where you can hear serious music full-time was exposed to the proposition that the Boston Symphony, like all our arts organizations, needs financial support from the public. And they found out that giving can be fun.

High-Effort Investment

The marathon was the first time the Friends of the Symphony have gone to the public at large in their fund raising, and although the financial return the first time around appears small in relation to the effort expended, the investment should prove valuable in a number of other long-term ways.

For the BSO, perhaps more than any other Boston cultural institution, has always given the impression of a closed corporation. Now, it has been apparent for some years that a wealthy and devoted band of patrons cannot continue to come up with the huge sums needed to cover the difference between what can be earned through ticket subscriptions, recording contracts and other income sources on the one hand, and the multi-million dollar cost of operating a major symphony orchestra on the other.

Government and Business

It is equally apparent that government at any level in the United States is not going to start underwriting our artistic resources in anywhere near the amounts needed. And while U.S. business, the big hope of cultural fund-raisers, is beginning to pay lip services to support of the arts, there has been so far a notable failure to put the money where the mouth is — with the exception of a few corporations like Xerox, Gillette, Mobil Oil and Stanley Home Products.

So, although the individual amounts are small and the effort required is proportionately large, our great cultural institutions are going to have to turn increasingly to the public at large for aid. And in the process, let us hope that they make their art more accessible to that public and that they create a bit more of a feeling that they belong to the public that supports them.

Community Relations

Speaking of relations with the community, Erwin D. Canham, editor-in-chief of Christian Science Monitor, has been elected chairman of the symphony's board of overseers, according to an announcement by Talcott M. Banks, president of the orchestra. Other new officers of the board of overseers are Vernon vice chairman, Alden, who is chairman of the Boston Company and secretary, Leonard Kaplan, a partner in the Boston law firm of Nutter, McLennan and Fish.

The board of overseers of the orchestra is an advisory body which is distinct from the board of trustees and which is designed to act as a liaison between the symphony and the needs and interests of the community.

Merrill Trust Grant

Yesterday, the orchestra announced receipt of a $35,000 grant from the Charles E. Merrill trust to the Berkshire Music Center, the summer academy at Tanglewood for advanced music study. It is the trust's second grant to the Orchestra's 90th Anniversary fund, the first to the Tanglewood operation, and places the 90th Anniversary fund near the $2 million level. The goal of this capital fund campaign is $6 million and is intended to provide the symphony with investment income sufficient to cover a large part of its annual operating deficit. Tanglewood's share of the $6 million to be raised is $2.5 million. The Tanglewood operation accounts for more than 40 per cent of the annual deficit of the orchestra.

Looking Ahead

The word is beginning to come out on the Boston Symphony's 91st season, which begins Friday-Saturday, Sept. 24-25, in Symphony Hall. Conductors for the season will include Music Director William Steinberg (the last season during which he will continue in that post), Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, and guests Seiji Ozawa, Erich Leinsdorf, Aldo Ceccato, Colin Davis, Leon Kirchner, Rafael Kubelik, Erich Kunzel and Max Rudolph.

Among the soloists for the season will be pianists Andre Watts, Alexis Weissenberg, Alicia de Larrocha, Christoph Eschenbach, Horacio Gutierrez, Mischa Dichter, Stephen Bishop and Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer; violinists Zino Francescatti and Christiane Edinger, cellist Lawrence Lesser and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta. Vocal soloists will include Lili Chookasian, Eilenn Farrell and James King.

The orchestra will play 20 pairs of Friday-Saturday concerts instead of 22, in order to allow flexibility in planning two new series to be announced shortly, according to a press release by the orchestra. The remaining series will be unchanged: 10 concerts in the Tuesday "A" series, six in the Tuesday "B" series, six in the Tuesday "Cambridge" series, played in Symphony Hall, six in the Thursday "A" series and three in the Thursday "B" series.

Among the highlights of the season are expected to be a 90th birthday concert for the orchestra on Oct. 22, with Erich Leinsdorf conducting music from the BSO's first concert on Oct. 22, 1881; William Steinberg conducting Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet," and Colin Davis conducting the Mozart Requiem.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

BSO Raises $37,000 In Musical Marathon

BOSTON—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's first musical marathon, broadcast over WCRB AM/FM on May 21, 22, 23 raised more than $37,000 for the benefit of the Orchestra. The three-day, fund-raising effort was a project of the Friends of the Boston Symphony as part of the program to raise their 1970-71 goal of $550,000.

Listeners from all parts of New England called WCRB to request their favorite Boston Symphony performances from the musical marathon catalogue which contained more than 1,000 selections taped at BSO concerts from 1943 through 1971 for the Boston Symphony's Transcription Trust.

CHANNEL 2's 6th annual auction last week took in $450,000, $50,000 more than last year, making it the largest and most successful of the 27 Public Broadcasting Service auctions across the country. An offer of unlimited airline service for two brought in $3,125, the highest amount bid for any of the 7,000 items offered. A 1963 London cab went for $3,025. Midway into the 100-hour marathon, Channel 2 sent out an appeal for more antiques and pedigreed animals, the most popular categories in the auction. Shown auctioneering is Bill Plante, executive editor of the Newburyport Daily News, one of 200 volunteer auctioneers.
(Photo by Doug Tatreau)

84

The Cleveland Press
D. 393,191
MAY 29 1971

Milt Widder

Judge may run for mayor

THE PRESSURE on Chief Justice John V. Corrigan of Common Pleas Court is mounting to get him to enter the city's mayoral race. Many of his friends and political associates are talking to the judge in an effort to throw his hat in the ring that's already overcrowded with hopefuls.

On the other hand some party sages point out that Corrigan, who is happy on the bench, has to resign from his judicial post the minute he files his petitions.

MAYOR STOKES is making his box for the Indians games at the Stadium available to golden-agers this summer. First group, from the King-Kennedy Homes, goes June 8 to see Cleveland play the Chicago White Sox; the second group from Crestview attends the next night. Both of the groups are from Cuyahoga Metropolitan Housing Authority establishments.

TOWN TATTLE: Polish composer-conductor Witold Lutoslawski, who gets an honorary degree at the Cleveland Institute of Music Wednesday, was supposed to have directed the CIM Orchestra tomorrow in the American premiere of his "Livre Pour Orchestre." The letter asking him to do it was sent to Witold a month ago by director Victor Babin of the Institute, but it never arrived in Warsaw. Consequently the composer didn't have a chance to prepare for it . . . Artist Yaacov Agam flies in from Paris Thursday to be present at the dedication of two of his works at the Park Synagogue Art Festival.

Clevelander David Koblitz, composer doing graduate work at the University of Michigan, received a prize of $1200 from the Broadcast Music Inc. in New York this week for one of his works. He is a graduate of University of Pennsylvania, Orange High and the son of Anita and Adam Koblitz, Viking Steel executive . . . Bob Conrad, WCLV-FM program chief, is back from Boston where he helped raise $37,000 for the Boston Symphony with a radio marathon patterned after the Cleveland station's pitch for the Cleveland Orchestra here.

When complete this summer the new Heinen warehouse in Bedford will be large enough to allow the chain to open 15 additional units in the area.

WIT: Politicians who are presenting Council President Anthony Garofoli to West Side Irish-American constituents (Tony wants to be mayor) introduce him as: "Gary Foley."

TOUGH: Bill Silverman, the planner and publicist who has been close to the City Hall establishment, is telling friends that he received an "outrageous" bill from the city water department "for $90." He went to a number of departments to get relief on the bill but was turned down. He even appealed to William Gaskill, the utilities director, who gave him a flat "no."

"And I am the man who introduced Gaskill to Stokes," laments Silverman.

Cleveland musical forces combined their talents this week to play honor to Herbert Elwell, composer, writer and teacher, by devoting a full program to his works. This HALO OF THE WEEK to the distinguished musician, Elwell, who has graced this town with his music, writing and teaching for more than 40 years. It's the first time during his career that a full program has been dedicated to Elwell works and it is a happy happening that he was on hand to hear the Suburban Symphony Orchestra, pianist Eunice Podis, the Severance Quartet and soprano Sophie Ginn do justice to his delicate creations.

FAREWELL FOR A MONTH: Pretty, pert Betty Hughes takes over this corner Monday for four weeks while my wife and I go on a vacation.

NEWS
SALEM, MASS.
(E) 28,039
JAN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

WENHAM ...

Orchestra Volunteers

By SALLY LEIGHTON
468-4623

WENHAM — Wenham women working on the membership drive for Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra include Mrs. Neil R. Ayer, Mrs. Richard West and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot.

Area women involved are: Mrs. Corning Kenley, chairman; Mrs. Richard Russell, assistant chairman; Mrs. William Ellis, Mrs. Wiliam Endicott Jr., Mrs. Hans H. Estin, Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, Mrs. Francis W. Hatch Jr., Mrs. Robert Livermore, Mrs. William C. Loring, Mrs. Edward Parker, Mrs. Josiah A. Spaulding, Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike, Mrs. Barrett Wendell Jr., Mrs. Lyon Wayburn, and Mrs. Oliver Wolcott Jr. Mrs. Drayton Phillips of South Hamilton is in charge of publicity.

The orchestra depends on its 4200 "Friends" who contributed $334,000 toward the orchestra's support in 1970 with an additional $129,000 received from the 90th Anniversary Ball. Not surprisingly, new Friends are needed now to support this year's goal of $550,000. The Council of Friends headed by Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr. have launched a January to April Membership Drive.

Boston Symphony Orchestra is unique in that it carries as diverse a program as any orchestra in the world. Besides the regular Friday and Saturday afternoon concerts, there are Tuesday and Thursday series performances, open rehearsals and the World Famous Boston Pops Concert and summer free Esplanade Concerts on the Charles River.

Music lovers must support the drive if it is to continue. Any contribution is welcome and may be sent to Friends of The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston. The gifts are deductible under federal income tax laws.

Additional special events are planned for $15 or better contributors — luncheons at Horticultural Hall, special lectures, table talk suppers, receptions, meetings and special programs are planned for contributors in the $15, $50, $100, $250, $500, $1000 and $5000 categories.

Prizes will be given to persons obtaining the largest number of new "Friends." The committee believes that the musical excitement provided by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is matchless and well worth the support and attendance of all "Friends" and their guests.

STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
(E) 70,000
JAN 11 1971
New England Newsclip

Subsidy for the arts

"The arts in this nation are experiencing enormous difficulty and menacing threats to their continued existence. Orchestras, ballet and theater companies, museums—all are suffering from the effects of inflation and an unhealthy economy."

—Earl J. Dias, Standard-Times music and drama critic

What then can be done to help the first-rate New England Conservatory of Music, which may not be able to open during the 1971-72 academic year; Boston's Charles Playhouse, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and such meritorious institutions as the Greater New Bedford Concert Series and the New Bedford Symphony Orchestra?

Hope is offered in the newly formed Partnership for the Arts, the chairman of which is Amyas Ames, also chairman of Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts and of the New York Philharmonic. This organization has vice chairmen in every section of the country (ours is George C. Seybolt, trustee of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston) and its expenses will be met by voluntary contributions.

The Partnership has mailed thousands of brochures outlining the plight of the arts to artists, committees, arts associations, unions, educators and business and community organizations throughout the country.

This appeal urges full funding of the fiscal 1972 federal authorization of $30 million for the National Endowment for the Arts; greater contributions by state legislatures, and an expansion of county, city, corporate and individual participation "in a growing national movement."

It is reasonably argued that a $200-million federal funding, 13 times the appropriation of the National Endowment, would represent only $1 a person in the United States and would be only 10 per cent of the annual $2 billion spent on the arts in the United States, leaving 90 per cent to be raised privately.

At present, the United States government annually contributes 7.5 cents to the arts. By contrast, the Austrian government, representing a population of only 7 million, spends $2 per person, and the Canadian government, with its population of only 20 million, spends $1.40 per person.

Help. It's in your own best interests.

84

The Cleveland Press
D. 393,191
MAY 29 1971

Milt Widder

Judge may run for mayor

THE PRESSURE on Chief Justice John V. Corrigan of Common Pleas Court is mounting to get him to enter the city's mayoral race. Many of his friends and political associates are talking to the judge in an effort to throw his hat in the ring that's already overcrowded with hopefuls.

On the other hand some party sages point out that Corrigan, who is happy on the bench, has to resign from his judicial post the minute he files his petitions.

MAYOR STOKES is making his box for the Indians games at the Stadium available to golden-agers this summer. First group, from the King-Kennedy Homes, goes June 8 to see Cleveland play the Chicago White Sox; the second group from Crestview attends the next night. Both of the groups are from Cuyahoga Metropolitan Housing Authority establishments.

TOWN TATTLE: Polish composer-conductor Witold Lutoslawski, who gets an honorary degree at the Cleveland Institute of Music Wednesday, was supposed to have directed the CIM Orchestra tomorrow in the American premiere of his "Livre Pour Orchestre." The letter asking him to do it was sent to Witold a month ago by director Victor Babin of the Institute, but it never arrived in Warsaw. Consequently the composer didn't have a chance to prepare for it . . . Artist Yaacov Agam flies in from Paris Thursday to be present at the dedication of two of his works at the Park Synagogue Art Festival.

Clevelander David Koblitz, composer doing graduate work at the University of Michigan, received a prize of $1200 from the Broadcast Music Inc. in New York this week for one of his works. He is a graduate of University of Pennsylvania, Orange High and the son of Anita and Adam Koblitz, Viking Steel executive . . . Bob Conrad, WCLV-FM program chief, is back from Boston where he helped raise $37,000 for the Boston Symphony with a radio marathon patterned after the Cleveland station's pitch for the Cleveland Orchestra here.

When complete this summer the new Heinen warehouse in Bedford will be large enough to allow the chain to open 15 additional units in the area.

WIT: Politicians who are presenting Council President Anthony Garofoli to West Side Irish-American constituents (Tony wants to be mayor) introduce him as: "Gary Foley."

TOUGH: Bill Silverman, the planner and publicist who has been close to the City Hall establishment, is telling friends that he received an "outrageous" bill from the city water department "for $90." He went to a number of departments to get relief on the bill but was turned down. He even appealed to William Gaskill, the utilities director, who gave him a flat "no."

"And I am the man who introduced Gaskill to Stokes," laments Silverman.

Cleveland musical forces combined their talents this week to play honor to Herbert Elwell, composer, writer and teacher, by devoting a full program to his works. This HALO OF THE WEEK to the distinguished musician, Elwell, who has graced this town with his music, writing and teaching for more than 40 years. It's the first time during his career that a full program has been dedicated to Elwell works and it is a happy happening that he was on hand to hear the Suburban Symphony Orchestra, pianist Eunice Podis, the Severance Quartet and soprano Sophie Ginn do justice to his delicate creations.

FAREWELL FOR A MONTH: Pretty, pert Betty Hughes takes over this corner Monday for four weeks while my wife and I go on a vacation.

NEWS
SALEM, MASS.
(E) 26,029
JAN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

WENHAM ...

Orchestra Volunteers

By SALLY LEIGHTON
468-4623

WENHAM — Wenham women working on the membership drive for Friends of Boston Symphony Orchestra include Mrs. Neil R. Ayer, Mrs. Richard West and Mrs. Louis W. Cabot.

Area women involved are: Mrs. Corning Kenley, chairman; Mrs. Richard Russell, assistant chairman; Mrs. William Ellis, Mrs. Wiliam Endicott Jr., Mrs. Hans H. Estin, Mrs. Thomas Gardiner, Mrs. Francis W. Hatch Jr., Mrs. Robert Livermore, Mrs. William C. Loring, Mrs. Edward Parker, Mrs. Josiah A. Spaulding, Mrs. Richard K. Thorndike, Mrs. Barrett Wendell Jr., Mrs. Lyon Wayburn, and Mrs. Oliver Wolcott Jr. Mrs. Drayton Phillips of South Hamilton is in charge of publicity.

The orchestra depends on its 4200 "Friends" who contributed $334,000 toward the orchestra's support in 1970 with an additional $129,000 received from the 90th Anniversary Ball. Not surprisingly, new Friends are needed now to support this year's goal of $550,000. The Council of Friends headed by Mrs. Albert Goodhue of Marblehead and Mrs. John L. Grandin, Jr. have launched a January to April Membership Drive.

Boston Symphony Orchestra is unique in that it carries as diverse a program as any orchestra in the world. Besides the regular Friday and Saturday afternoon concerts, there are Tuesday and Thursday series performances, open rehearsals and the World Famous Boston Pops Concert and summer free Esplanade Concerts on the Charles River.

Music lovers must support the drive if it is to continue. Any contribution is welcome and may be sent to Friends of The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston. The gifts are deductible under federal income tax laws.

Additional special events are planned for $15 or better contributors — luncheons at Horticultural Hall, special lectures, table talk suppers, receptions, meetings and special programs are planned for contributors in the $15, $50, $100, $250, $500, $1000 and $5000 categories.

Prizes will be given to persons obtaining the largest number of new "Friends." The committee believes that the musical excitement provided by the Boston Symphony Orchestra is matchless and well worth the support and attendance of all "Friends" and their guests.

STANDARD-TIMES
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
(D) 70,000
JAN 11 1971
New England Newsclip

Subsidy for the arts

"The arts in this nation are experiencing enormous difficulty and menacing threats to their continued existence. Orchestras, ballet and theater companies, museums—all are suffering from the effects of inflation and an unhealthy economy."

—Earl J. Dias, Standard-Times music and drama critic

What then can be done to help the first-rate New England Conservatory of Music, which may not be able to open during the 1971-72 academic year; Boston's Charles Playhouse, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and such meritorious institutions as the Greater New Bedford Concert Series and the New Bedford Symphony Orchestra?

Hope is offered in the newly formed Partnership for the Arts, the chairman of which is Amyas Ames, also chairman of Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts and of the New York Philharmonic. This organization has vice chairmen in every section of the country (ours is George C. Seybolt, trustee of the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston) and its expenses will be met by voluntary contributions.

The Partnership has mailed thousands of brochures outlining the plight of the arts to artists, committees, arts associations, unions, educators and business and community organizations throughout the country.

This appeal urges full funding of the fiscal 1972 federal authorization of $30 million for the National Endowment for the Arts; greater contributions by state legislatures, and an expansion of county, city, corporate and individual participation "in a growing national movement."

It is reasonably argued that a $200-million federal funding, 13 times the appropriation of the National Endowment, would represent only $1 a person in the United States and would be only 10 per cent of the annual $2 billion spent on the arts in the United States, leaving 90 per cent to be raised privately.

At present, the United States government annually contributes 7.5 cents to the arts. By contrast, the Austrian government, representing a population of only 7 million, spends $2 per person, and the Canadian government, with its population of only 20 million, spends $1.40 per person.

Help. It's in your own best interests.

Budget battle over, Summerthing swings

BY JUDY STARK

Summerthing, Boston's citywide festival of the arts, fought a major battle of the budget this spring, but emerged with its $300,000 allocation intact, despite the best efforts of the program's detractors, led by Albert "Dapper" O'Neil.

That struggle to justify every cent of their request — which goes to support 25 different activities every day of the summer in the city's 17 neighborhoods, or a total of some 1100 in the course of the season — has done two things, according to Katharine D. Kane, Summerthing director, and George Davis, deputy director.

"It gave us a lot of publicity— for both good and ill," says Mrs. Kane, "On the one hand, some conservative foundations were reluctant to give us grants, because they didn't want to get involved in 'politics.' On the other hand, all the publicity helped us to get donations from people who hadn't heard of us before." (Summerthing — part of the Mayor's Office of Cultural Affairs — is one of the few city departments to raise any outside funds.)

"Second, the staff went through hell — both the staff here in the office and our neighborhood coordinators all around town," says George Davis. "But I think we've pulled together and are even more committed than ever to the program, and I think we've gained a lot more support in individual neighborhoods than we had before."

Now entering its fourth year, Summerthing places the emphasis on neighborhood participation in the activities that take place. The city is divided into 17 neighborhoods, each of which has its own coordinator, a person who lives in that neighborhood and meets with residents to determine what sort of Summerthing activities they'd like — ranging from African dancer Olatunje to the Mandala Folk Dance Ensemble, from the Street Corner (music) Ensemble to Joe Val and his Bluegrass Boys, from Susan Lynn and her puppets to a performance by the Stage I Drama Workshop.

Financial support comes from the neighborhoods, too, via fairs and festivals held in those locations, contributions of money or materials from local merchants, and the sale of Summerthing red-and-yellow T-shirts and buttons. All funds raised in each neighborhood stay in that neighborhood to finance programs for that locality.

"This year, more than ever, we're trying to organize the program around the Discovery Workshops. These are workshops run by the neighborhood coordinator with resource people, and they may vary from nature workshops to dance to music to whatever," explains Kathy Kane. "For instance, if several dance groups will be coming to a neighborhood in one week, the coordinators will spend that week's Discovery Workshops on dance, and we'll be able to send out teachers and resource people to assist in teaching and talking about dance.

Though their budget from City Council was not cut back, Summerthing is feeling a financial pinch. "Federal funds are sharply restricted," according to Davis. "Last year there was federal money enough to support 70 work-study students who worked in workshops and neighborhoods. This year there is money enough for only 15."

"We've been told that Massachusetts has been cut back more sharply than any other state on work-study, and this doesn't affect only us; there are hundreds of students throughout the state who relied on work-study programs, and they're just not there any more," Mrs. Kane adds.

Summerthing's activities this year can be divided roughly into five main areas: music, dance, theatre, visual arts, and mobiles. All these Summerthing events are free.

Music offerings, under the directorship of Louis Fantasia, include the Streetcorner Ensemble, a group of seven musicians "who can play anything from Bach to the Beatles," according to Davis. They'll split up into trios in the mornings to play for senior citizens groups, children's activities and other small-scale, quiet-music affairs. In the afternoons they'll regroup for somewhat louder tunes, and may spend some of their time with the neighborhood workshops. And in the evenings they'll call themselves the Streetcorner Group, with an emphasis on heavy rock. Their performances may take place anywhere — literally on streetcorners, in subway stations, empty lots, wherever they can set up.

Carol Yahn and John Tucker will provide guitar and harmonica folk music, both for performances and in workshops and lessons. The Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, will play four evening concerts: June 30, July 1, and July 7 and 8. There'll also be a noon concert July 7 at City Hall. That concert on July 7 is at Brighton.

A number of local rock groups have also been lined up to play throughout the summer. And, in an attempt at true diversity, Summerthing has acquired the services of a barbershop quartet, Joe Val and the Bluegrass Boys, the Associate Artists' Opera Co. (which will present two performances of Don Pasquale) and the Larry Cooper Band, a dance band which can play for block parties.

This is the first year Summerthing has had its own resident dance group, known as the Summerthing Dance Co., under the direction of Arawana Campbell. They will emphasize modern dance, "but nothing surrealistic or heavy," qualified Davis. The group of three men and four women will present a variety of pieces, ranging in length from two to seven minutes, choreographed to music ranging from Aretha Franklin to classics. Pieces especially for children emphasize vivid costume.

The Boston Ballet will perform for Summerthing for three weeks, with at least one performance in every neighborhood. From July 5 through 24 they will entertain with The Dolly Suite, Carnival of the Animals and several shorter pieces.

African native dancer Olatunje will give eight shows July 12-15. The Mandala Folk Dance Ensemble will perform August 2 through 19, with music provided by the Cambridge Folk Dance Orchestra. This group appears in vivid native costume and not only performs but also teaches their dances to the audience.

In addition, Summerthing is currently waiting for confirmation of the appearance of Louis Falco, who choreographed the rock ballet "Gamete Garden" for the Boston Ballet this past winter. All performances will be given outdoors.

This year the resident theatre company, the People and Players' Theatre, will be directed by British actress Helen Burns, who has performed with the Old Vic and for 13 years was with the Stratford, Ontario, Shakespeare Festival. This traveling musical theatre will include a variety of music — folk, jazz, bluegrass and South American.

Stage I Drama Workshop will be in residence through September 1. The Children's Theatre International of New York will present a piece called "Arrows to Atoms," and Susan Lynn and her puppets will give both performances and workshops.

Summerthing's vivid, huge wall murals are familiar sights in outlying neighborhoods, but they hope to be able to create murals on Center City walls this year. Silvana Cenci, artistic director for visual arts, will conduct a project with six high school art students selected by the city's art teachers. They will work as a crew for six weeks to create one major project — probably a large wood sculpture or collage which can be moved to display sites all over the city. There will also be wall murals painted by neighborhood youngsters on movable sheets of plywood.

The Plantmobile will again make the rounds of the neighborhoods, "doing wonderful things with flower pots and plastic cups," says George Davis. The Craftsmobile will tour the neighborhoods, stocked with yarn, glue, cardboard, paper, paints and other craft supplies.

The Children's Museum will tour the neighborhoods, creating mini-museums out of materials available in each neighborhood and teaching other crafts — leather, weaving, and tapestry work.

Circle Associates, a black consulting group, will create a special program for black neighborhoods. Stanley Pinckney, a mosaicist, recently returned from a year in Africa, will direct a program of black music, arts and culture.

A new event this year is the Tomorrowmobile, a gift from General Motors, which will provide things to do involving the future — moon shots, laser beams, and other scientific activities.

In other years Summerthing has tried to economize by buying used cars and trucks to transport its activities, but this has turned out to be a false economy, since many of the trucks have broken down, entailing lengthy stays in the repair shop and huge bills. "This year we've got some old mail trucks, which should be in pretty good condition," says Davis. "But we've used everything from hearses to milk trucks to flatbed trucks."

They have a new, specially designed sound equipment especially created for the kind of large-scale outdoor activities they present.

Summerthing will also help with the celebration of the Puerto Rican Festival in Blackstone Park July 17-18, and with the Festival of the August Moon in Chinatown August 29.

Scheduling those 1100-plus events is no easy task, the Summerthing staff points out. "If there's a Red Sox game, we can't schedule anything on the Fenway. In East Boston there's the airport noise, and in Charlestown you have to keep an eye on the rising tides."

"You should add that we are always looking for volunteers," suggested Kathy Kane, "and that donations of any size are welcome at the Boston Foundation, Inc."

"I think we're finally now drawing out some of the values a program like Summerthing was always meant to have," concludes George Davis. "We are building a strong and continuing arts festival for Boston. And we're getting a lot of very different kinds of people to work together. O

CLASSICAL

IN TOWN

BOSTON POPS ESPLANADE SEASON Conserts to be held June 28 thru July 10. Call 266-1492 for further information.

BLANK PAGE

CHRONICLE
CAMBRIDGE, MASS.
W. 13,735

JUN 24 1971 New England Newsclip

On Monday:

Shell Concerts Open

The forty-second season of free outdoor concerts by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra begins Monday evening, June 28 at 8:30 p.m. at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade. Arthur Fiedler, founder and conductor of the Esplanade Concerts, conducts the opening night concert. The Esplanade season extends from June 28 through Saturday, July 10. All evening concerts at the Hatch Shell begin at 8:30 p.m.

Concerts on June 30, July 1, July 7 and July 8 will be played in various Boston neighborhoods.

The Esplanade Concerts were founded by Arthur Fiedler in 1929 to bring symphonic music to a large public free of charge. Since then, audiences ranging up to 20,000 at a single concert have heard the program conducted by Mr. Fiedler and Harry Ellis Dickson.

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUN 22 1971 New England Newsclip

MDC Cancels Thursday's Concert at Hatch Shell

MDC Comr. John Sears has canceled a folk concert slated for the Hatch Shell on Thursday night so that the Shell and grounds can be refurbished in time for the start of Boston Symphony Esplanade concerts Monday night.

Sears acted following last Thursday's rock concert which brought upwards of 50,000 people to the Esplanade, causing damage to the Shell area and the grounds.

He said the MDC could not risk a similar episode with the annual appearance of Arthur Fiedler and the BSO beginning four days later. He cited the enormous cost and effort involved in policing and cleaning up after last week's concert.

The producer of the contemporary music series at the Shell has been asked to discuss the 71 concerts and their series with the MDC tomorrow, the commissioner added.

He disclosed that for the first time in the history of the Esplanade concerts Storrow Drive will be closed to traffic each concert night.

TIMES
PEABODY, MASS.
W. 6,043

JUN 25 1971 New England Newsclip

Fiedler opens Esplanade

BOSTON — The 42nd season of free outdoor concerts by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade orchestra begins Monday evening, June 28, at 8:30 at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade.

Arthur Fiedler, founder and conductor of the Esplanade Concerts, conducts the opening night concert. The Esplanade season extends from June 28 through Saturday, July 10. All evening concerts at the Hatch Shell begin at 8:30 p.m.

Again this season, five concerts will be played off the Esplanade in five different Boston neighborhoods in collaboration with the Mayor's Summerthing program: Bunker Hill, Charlestown, Wednesday, June 30 at 7:30 p.m.; Towne Field, Dorchester, Thursday, July 1 at 7:30 p.m.; City Hall Plaza, Government Center, Boston, Wednesday, July 7 at 12:00 noon; Rogers Park, Brighton, Wednesday, July 7 at 7:30 p.m.; and Smith Field, Hyde Park, Thursday, July 8 at 7:30 p.m.

The special concert for children takes place this year on the Esplanade, Wednesday, June 30 at 10:15 a.m., conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Corporate sponsors for the 1971 season are: Monday, June 28, Boston Gas Company, Harold Cabot and Company, Inc., John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., and United States Steel; Tuesday, June 29, Boston Globe and First National Bank of Boston; Wednesday morning, June 30, Massachusetts Port Authority; Friday, July 2, William Filene's Company; Saturday, July 3, New England Telephone and Telegraph Company; Monday, July 5, New England Merchants National Bank and Polaroid Corporation; Tuesday, July 6, New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, Sears Roebuck and Company, and Stop & Shop, Inc.; Wednesday, July 7 (at City Hall Plaza) the Gillette Company; Friday, July 9, Boston Edison Company, and Saturday, July 10, Raytheon Company.

This year the Boston Symphony Orchestra instituted a program for sole sponsorship or co-sponsorship of Esplanade concerts. Other benefits are included in this package.

The Esplanade Concerts were founded by Arthur Fiedler in 1929 to bring symphonic music to a large public free of charge. Since then, audiences ranging up to 20,000 at a single concert have heard the programs conducted by Fiedler and Dickson. Summerthing is produced by the Mayor's Office of Cultural Affairs under the direction of Katherine D. Kane.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514

JUN 25 1971 New England Newsclip

BOSTON — The 42nd season of free outdoor concerts by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade orchestra begins Monday evening, June 28, at 8:30 at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade.

Arthur Fiedler, founder and conductor of the Esplanade Concerts, conducts the opening night concert. The Esplanade season extends from June 28 through Saturday, July 10. All evening concerts at the Hatch Shell begin at 8:30 p.m.

Again this season, five concerts will be played off the Esplanade in five different Boston neighborhoods in collaboration with the Mayor's Summerthing program: Bunker Hill, Charlestown, Wednesday, June 30 at 7:30 p.m.; Towne Field, Dorchester, Thursday, July 1 at 7:30 p.m.; City Hall Plaza, Government Center, Boston, Wednesday, July 7 at 12:00 noon; Rogers Park, Brighton, Wednesday, July 7 at 7:30 p.m.; and Smith Field, Hyde Park, Thursday, July 8 at 7:30 p.m.

The special concert for children takes place this year on the Esplanade, Wednesday, June 30 at 10:15 a.m., conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Corporate sponsors for the 1971 season are: Monday, June 28, Boston Gas Company, Harold Cabot and Company, Inc., John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., and United States Steel; Tuesday, June 29, Boston Globe and First National Bank of Boston; Wednesday morning, June 30, Massachusetts Port Authority; Friday, July 2, William Filene's Company; Saturday, July 3, New England Telephone and Telegraph Company; Monday, July 5, New England Merchants National Bank and Polaroid Corporation; Tuesday, July 6, New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, Sears Roebuck and Company, and Stop & Shop, Inc.; Wednesday, July 7 (at City Hall Plaza) the Gillette Company; Friday, July 9, Boston Edison Company, and Saturday, July 10, Raytheon Company.

This year the Boston Symphony Orchestra instituted a program for sole sponsorship or co-sponsorship of Esplanade concerts. Other benefits are included in this package.

The Esplanade Concerts were founded by Arthur Fiedler in 1929 to bring symphonic music to a large public free of charge. Since then, audiences ranging up to 20,000 at a single concert have heard the programs conducted by Fiedler and Dickson. Summerthing is produced by the Mayor's Office of Cultural Affairs under the direction of Katherine D. Kane.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514

JUN 25 1971 New England Newsclip

Fiedler opens Esplanade

BOSTON — The 42nd season of free outdoor concerts by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade orchestra begins Monday evening, June 28, at 8:30 at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade.

Arthur Fiedler, founder and conductor of the Esplanade Concerts, conducts the opening night concert. The Esplanade season extends from June 28 through Saturday, July 10. All evening concerts at the Hatch Shell begin at 8:30 p.m.

Again this season, five concerts will be played off the Esplanade in five different Boston neighborhoods in collaboration with the Mayor's Summerthing program: Bunker Hill, Charlestown, Wednesday, June 30 at 7:30 p.m.; Towne Field, Dorchester, Thursday, July 1 at 7:30 p.m.; City Hall Plaza, Government Center, Boston, Wednesday, July 7 at 12:00 noon; Rogers Park, Brighton, Wednesday, July 7 at 7:30 p.m.; and Smith Field, Hyde Park, Thursday, July 8 at 7:30 p.m.

The special concert for children takes place this year on the Esplanade, Wednesday, June 30 at 10:15 a.m., conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Corporate sponsors for the 1971 season are: Monday, June 28, Boston Gas Company, Harold Cabot and Company, Inc., John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., and United States Steel; Tuesday, June 29, Boston Globe and First National Bank of Boston; Wednesday morning, June 30, Massachusetts Port Authority; Friday, July 2, William Filene's Company; Saturday, July 3, New England Telephone and Telegraph Company; Monday, July 5, New England Merchants National Bank and Polaroid Corporation; Tuesday, July 6, New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, Sears Roebuck and Company, and Stop & Shop, Inc.; Wednesday, July 7 (at City Hall Plaza) the Gillette Company; Friday, July 9, Boston Edison Company, and Saturday, July 10, Raytheon Company.

This year the Boston Symphony Orchestra instituted a program for sole sponsorship or co-sponsorship of Esplanade concerts. Other benefits are included in this package.

The Esplanade Concerts were founded by Arthur Fiedler in 1929 to bring symphonic music to a large public free of charge. Since then, audiences ranging up to 20,000 at a single concert have heard the programs conducted by Fiedler and Dickson. Summerthing is produced by the Mayor's Office of Cultural Affairs under the direction of Katherine D. Kane.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540

JUN 27 1971 New England Newsclip

Music

If you stay or go away...

by Harry Neville

Summer music for most Bostonians means weekend trips to the festivals that take place during July and August throughout the New England area. The quality of the offerings at some of these festivals is quite high, but so too is the expense of a weekend at Tanglewood, say, or Newport. And for that reason, this rundown of summer musical activities will begin with a summary of what is available to those whose summer journeys seldom extend much beyond the banks of the Charles River.

The Charles is, of course, the location of Boston's most famous summertime series, the Esplanade concerts played at Hatch Shell by members of the Boston Pops. Arthur Fiedler conducts tomorrow night's opening concert, which starts at 8:30 p.m.

Dates and places of other concerts in the two-week series may be obtained from the listing printed elsewhere in this week's Show Guide. Parents will be especially interested in the special youth concert to be given this Wednesday at 10:15 a.m.

Live opera will also be available at various neighborhood locations under the sponsorship of Boston's Summerthing program. Those who witnessed the Cambridge Opera Workshop's impressive "La Boheme" last year at Hatch Shell will be pleased to know that the same group is scheduled to present Mozart's "The Impresario" in Hyde Park and West Roxbury July 30 and 31.

Another talented group, Associate Artists Opera Company will perform Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" July 1, 2 and 3 at locations in the North End, East Boston and Dorchester.

City Hall Plaza will be the site of free noontime concerts

Szymon Goldberg will appear as conductor and violin soloist with the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra when the group performs in Symphony Hall in April. The Boston University Celebrity Series is sponsor of the event.

by the Boston Musicians Assn., Local 9-535, June 28 through July 2. These events are paid for out of the association's Recording Fund.

The Loeb Drama Center is again offering a series of five "Monday Nights at Sanders," beginning July 12 with the New Cleveland Quartet in a program of Bartok and Ravel. Cellist Siegfried Palm and pianist Louise Vosgerchian will appear July 19; Arthur Wiesberg conducts Schoenberg's "Pierrot Lunaire" July 26; details of Leon Kirchner's Aug. 2 program have not been announced; Aug. 9 will be devoted to music of Copland and Sessions performed by soprano Phyllis Curtin and pianists Robert Helps and Aaron Copland.

Beginning tomorrow and continuing to the end of July will be a festival of opera, ballet and symphony films at the Garden Cinema on Arlington St. An advance screening of excerpts from these films indicate an unusually high quality, not only as regards the performances of the artists (Herbert von Karajan, Carla Fracci, Erik Bruhn, Jon Vickers, Grace Bumbry and others) but in relation to the imaginative photography as well.

Moving on to out-of-town events, the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will feature an unusually attractive array of conductors and soloists. Leonard Bernstein will be on hand July 25 to direct Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. The festival's concluding performance of Aug. 22 will feature Seiji Ozawa conducting Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," with soloists Lois Marshall, John Alexander, Ezio Flagello and the Festival Chorus.

A new feature of this summer's festival will be the presentation of five musical-theatrical productions in Tanglewood's newly re-designed and restructured West Barn. Ian Strasfogel will direct Satie's scenic cantata "Socrates," Harrison Birtwistle's "Down by the Greenwood Side," Gyorgi Ligeti's "Adventures et Nouvelles Aventures," Offenbach's operetta "Croquefer," and Kurt Weill's "Mahagonny Songspiel" in the U.S. premiere of the original German version written in 1927.

Dates of these performances have not yet been released.

Music Mountain, located in Falls Village, Conn., is an easy side-trip from Tanglewood. The Berkshire String Quartet will present 10 Saturday concerts, with various guest artists, commencing July 3. The series has been expanded to include two Sunday concerts (July 11 and Aug. 1) this year, as well as a free children's concert July 21 at 10 a.m.

Saturday concerts are at 3 p.m. Sunday concerts at 4 p.m., and since noisy children are notoriously unwelcome at chamber music events, Music Mountain has thoughtfully provided a nearby playground for young ones whose parents can't leave them behind.

After an absence of one summer, South Mountain concerts at Pittsfield will resume June 26 with an appearance by the Prague Madrigal Singers. Once-a-month concerts are scheduled through October, when the series concludes with a program by the Beaux Arts Trio.

The Newport (R.I.) Festival of Romantic Music, July 29 through Aug. 7, promises to be as charming this summer as in past seasons. Romantic and off-beat piano music will dominate the repertory, and a not-to-be-missed event for piano buffs will be a program of music for one, two, three, four, five, six and eight hands by Scriabin, Chopin, Hummel and Czerny as performed by Peter Basquin, Raymond Lewenthal, Flavio Varani and Marshall Williamson.

All concerts take place amid the incredibly lavish ambience provided by Newport's fabled mansions, which should deter no one from attending. Despite the elegant surroundings, the atmosphere is decidedly relaxed and informal. The balloon ascent and cruise concert on Narragansett Bay, great popular successes from last summer, will be repeated.

Two colleges in Maine are presenting worthwhile series. At Bowdoin, in Brunswick, the Aeolian Chamber Players will give concerts during the period July 4 through Aug. 13, and at Colby College (Waterville) the Hungarian String Quartet will devote six Tuesday concerts, starting July 13 at 8 p.m., to works of Mozart, Bartok and Brahms.

Another college, Dartmouth at Hanover, N.H., has scheduled numerous concerts during July, August and September. These will be held in Hopkins Center and will feature such artists as pianist Gabriel Chodos, soprano Elly Ameling and the Composers String Quartet. The programs will put special emphasis on the music of Schubert.

Full details of other summer festivals have not yet been formulated, but the Herald Traveler will print these as they become available. As in the past, the Sunday Show Guide will list program details of each week's concerts. (See P. 14 for SUMMER MUSIC listings.)

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

JUN 25 1971 New England Newsclip

BSO at Esplanade Monday

BOSTON — The forty-second season of free outdoor concerts by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra begins Monday at 8.30 p.m. at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade.

Arthur Fiedler, founder and conductor of the Esplanade Concerts, conducts the opening night concert. The Esplanade season extends from Monday through July 10. All evening concerts at the Hatch Shell begin at 8.30 p.m.

The special concert for children takes place this year on the Esplanade, Wednesday, June 30 at 10.15 a.m., conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

ENTERPRISE
LEOMINSTER, MASS.
D. 5,003

JUN 25 1971 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony free concerts

BOSTON — The 42nd season of free outdoor concerts by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra begins Monday evening, June 28 at 8:30 p.m. at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade. Arthur Fiedler, founder and conductor of the Esplanade Concerts, conducts the opening night concert. The Esplanade season extends from June 28 through Saturday, July 10. All evening concerts at the Hatch Shell begin at 8:30 p.m.

Again this season, five concerts will be played off the Esplanade in five different Boston neighborhoods in collaboration with the Mayor's 'Summerthing' program: Bunker Hill, Charlestown, Wednesday, June 30 at 7:30 p.m., Towne Field, Dorchester, Thursday, July 1 at 7:30 p.m.; City Hall Plaza, Government Center, Boston, Wednesday July 7 at 12 noon; Rogers Park, Brighton, Wednesday, July 7 at 7:30 p.m.; and Smith Field, Hyde Park, Thursday, July 8 at 7:30 p.m.

The special concert for children takes place this year on the Esplanade, Wednesday, une 30 Esplanade, Wednesday, June 30 at 10:15 a.m., conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

JJJJJ

Corporate sponsors for the 1971 season are: Monday, June 28, Boston Gaston Gas Company, Harold Cabot and Company, Inc., John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., and United States Steel; Tuesday, June 29, Boston Globe and First National Bank of Boston; Wednesday morning June 30, Massachusetts Port Authority; Friday, July 2, William Filene's Company; Saturday, July 3, New England Telephone and Telegraph Company; Monday, July 5, New England Merchants National Bank and Polaroid Corporation; Tuesday, July 6, New England Mutual Life Insurance Company, Sears Roebuck Company, and Stop & Shop, Inc.; Wednesday, July 7 (at City Hall Plaza) The Gillette Company; Friday, July 9, Boston Edison Company, and Saturday, July 10, Raytheon Company. This year the Boston Symphony Orchestra instituted a program for sole sponsorship or co-sponsorship of Esplanade concerts. Other benefits are included in this package.

The Esplanade Concerts were founded by Arthur Fielder in 1929 to bring symphonic music to a large public free of charge. Since then, audiences ranging up to 20,000 at a single concert have heard the programs conducted by Mr. Fiedler and Harry Ellis Diskson. "Something" is produced by the Mayor's Office of Cultural Affairs under the direction of Katherine D. Kane.

TRANSCRIPT TELEGRAM
HOLYOKE, MASS.
D. 30,000

JUN 25 1971 New England Newsclip

Summer Series Of Hub Concerts Begins Monday

The 42nd season of free outdoor concerts by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra begins Monday at 8:30 p.m. at the Hatch Memorial Shell, on the Charles River Esplanade, Boston.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct. The season extends through July 10.

Five concerts will be played off the Esplanade in five different Boston neighborhoods in collaboration with the city's "Summerthing" program. The special concert for children this year will be held June 30 at 10:15 a.m. Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540

JUN 27 1971 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony

Music

Classcal

TODAY

Chamber music of Haydn, Schoenberg-Webern and Mozart; Gardner Museum, 4 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

Marian Ruhl, organ, in works of de Grigny, Buxtehude, Brahms, Mendelssohn, Ives and others; Methuen Memorial Music Hall, 8:30 p.m.

THE LENOX ART CENTER

July 3—Pete Seeger
July 10—Muddy Waters, Bug Mama Thornton, Jessie Fuller
July 17—Ravi Shanker
July 24—Delaney and Bonnie
July 31—Byrds
August 7—Mary Travers and Kris Kristofferson

HATCH SHELL CONCERTS: every Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

July 1—The Proposition with a Jazz Prelude
July 8—An Evening of Jazz
July 15—Folk Jamboree with Nancy Michaels, Peter Johnson and Reeve Little July 22—Ann Sexton and Her Kind
July 29—"Impresario" a Mozart Opera
August dates to be announced through Sept. 16.

Popular

NEWPORT JAZZ FESTIVAL

FRIDAY EVENING, JULY 2

Roberta Flack, Duke Ellington, Buddy Rich, Stan Kenton, Voices of East Harlem, Dave Pike Set.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 3

Ornette Coleman, Charlie Mingus, Bill Lee, Willie "The Lion" Smith, Eubie Blake, Freddie Hubbard.

SATURDAY EVENING

Dionne Warwick, Dave Brubeck, Chase, Gerry Mulligan, Paul Desmond, Mary Lou Williams, Jam Session with Herbie Mann, Dizzy Gillespie, Freddie Hubbard, Sonny Stitt, Gerry Mulligan.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 4

Aretha Franklin, Les McCann, Roland Kirk, King Curtis.

SUNDAY EVENING: Ray Charles, BB King, Allman Brothers, T Bone Walker, Joe Turner, Eddie Vinson, Buddy Tate, James Cotton.

MONDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 5

Miles Davis, Soft Machine, Weather Report, Ammons & Stitt.

MONDAY EVENING

Billy Eckstine, George Shearing, Cannonball Adderley, Herbie Mann, Dizzy Gillespie, Louis Bellson.

NEWPORT FOLK FESTIVAL

July 16-18

FRIDAY, JULY 16

Clancy Brothers, John Jackson, Kris Kristofferson, Professor Longhair, Country Joe McDonald, Taj Mahal, Morris, Mainer and Ledford, Utah Phillips.

SATURDAY, JULY 17

11 a.m. to 4 p.m. workshops. 6:30-7:30 square dancing.

EVENING CONCERT: Saturday

Afro American Ensemble, BC Harmonizers, Art Evans, Flash & the Dynamics, Michael Glick, JB Hutto, Matthew Jones, Rev. F. Kirkpatrick, Robert Kirkpatrick, Cruz Martinez, Pepe Y Flora, Wende Smith, Vincent Taylor, Harriet Tubman.

SUNDAY: July 16

11 a.m. religious music.
2 p.m. New Folks Concert: Rocky Birigwa, Golden Nectar Good Time Band, Larry Hanks, John Herald, JF Murphy, Brenda Jones, Bonnie Raitt, Roberts & Barrand, Paul Siebel, Chris Smither, Bill Williams.

6:30-7:30 Caravan East, Lebanese Dancing.

Sunday Evening Concert: John Hartford, Lily Mae Kedford, Earl Scruggs, Pete Seeger, Happy & Artie Traum, Bukka White.

SUMMERTHING CONCERTS

To be announced.

JAZZ WORKSHOP & PAUL'S MALL

July 5-16—T Bone Walker in Workshop and Roger Tillison in Mall
July 12-17—James Cotton at Jazz Workshop
July 19—Weather Report at Jazz Workshop
July 26-August 9— Willie Bobo at Paul's Mall
August bookings to be announced.

MUSIC PAVILLION SERIES AT SUFFOLK DOWNS

July 23—Jesus Christ Superstar
July 31—Three Dog Night
August 9—Chicago

SOUTH SHORE MUSIC CIRCUS

July 11—Al Hirt
July 18—Clancy Brothers
July 25—Roberta Flack
August 1—Victor Borge
August 8—Kris Kristofferson
August 8—Preservation Hall Jazz Band
August 15—Stan Kenton
August 22—Mel Tillis & The Statesiders
August 29—John Sebastian
September 5—The Byrds

Boston Pops

THIS WEEK'S SCHEDULE

(Concerts take place at Hatch Shell unless otherwise noted.)

MONDAY AT 8:30 P.M.
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
Rakoczi March, from "The Damnation of Faust" Berlioz
Concerto for Piano and Orchestra Khachaturian
Soloist: DONN-ALEXANDRE FEDER

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Symphony No. 5 in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven

TUESDAY AT 8:30 P.M.
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conductor
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" Mozart
Symphony No. 4 in A major, Op. 90 ("Italian") Mendelssohn

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Sinfonia Concertante for Violin and Viola in E flat, K. 364 Mozart
Soloists: JOHN and JOAN KORMAN
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" Wagner

WEDNESDAY AT 10:15 A.M.
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conductor
Suite from "The Nutcracker" Tchaikovsky
Finale (Presto: Molto allegro e vivace) from the Piano Concerto No. 1 in G minor, Op. 25 Mendelssohn
Soloist: MICHAEL THOMOPOULOS
Hoe-Down, from "Rodeo" Copland
First Movement (Allegro moderato) from the Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D major Haydn
Soloist: MARJORIE KRANSBERG
Two Sleigh Rides Mozart and Anderson
On the Esplanade, March Bodge

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

WEDNESDAY AT 7:30 P.M.
BUNKER HILL, CHARLESTOWN
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conductor
National Emblem, March Bagley
Overture to "William Tell" Rossini
By the Beautiful Blue Danube, Waltzes Strauss
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" Ponchielli

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Victor Herbert Favorites arr. Sanford
"Sing Out" arr. Hayman
Bostonian Suite Brown-Lansendoen

THURSDAY AT 7:30 P.M.
TOWNE FIELD, DORCHESTER
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conductor
Pomp and Circumstance, March No. 1 in D Major Elgar
Overture to "Light Cavalry" Suppe
Irish Suite Anderson

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes Strauss
Song Fest Medley arr. Bodge
Selection from "My Fair Lady" Loewe

FRIDAY AT 8:30 P.M.
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36 Tchaikovsky

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Grand Duo Concertante, for Violin and Double Bass Bottesini
Violin: MARYLOU SPEAKER
Double Bass: LAWRENCE WOLFE
Selection from "No, No, Nanette" Youmans

SATURDAY AT 8:30 P.M.
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
American Salute (When Johnny Comes Marching Home) Gould
An Outdoor Overture Copland
Selection from "West Side Story" Bernstein
Dancing Through the Years arr. Hayman

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra Gershwin
Soloist: LEO LITWIN
Selection from "Hair" MacDermot

• Classical music, dance

GREATER BOSTON

ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Hatch Memorial Shell, Charles River Esplanade, foot of Beacon Hill. The Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra will offer concerts of symphonies, concertos, overtures, marches and light classical nightly at 8:30 (except when it rains). Some rental chairs available. In addition the orchestra will tour five Summerthing neighborhoods: Charlestown, Bunker Hill Monument, June 30 at 8 p.m.; Dorchester Town Field, July 1, at 8 p.m.; Boston, City Hall Plaza, July 7 at noon; Brighton, Rogers Park, at 8; Hyde Park, Smith Field, July 8 at 8 p.m. Concerts are free. Further information may be obtained by callin 261-1660 on the day of concert.

Globe 6-27

Esplanade Concerts to Begin

Music will be in the air along the Charles tomorrow night and for the next two weeks.

The 42nd season of free outdoor concerts at the Hatch Shell on the Charles River Esplanade will start at 8:30 p. m. when Arthur Fiedler raises his baton.

Five concerts will also move into the city's neighborhoods in association with the Summerthing program.

Orchestra members will visit Bunker Hill in Charlestown June 30 at 7:30 p. m.; Towne Field, Dorchester, on July 1 at 7:30; City Hall Plaza, Boston, on July 7 at noon; Rogers Park, Brighton, on July 7 at 7:30, and Smith Field, Hyde Park, on July 8 at 7:30.

All evening concerts on the Esplanade begin at 8:30.

There will be a special morning concert for children this year on the Esplanade Wednesday at 10:15. Harry Ellis Disckson will conduct.

The Esplanade Concerts were founded by Fiedler in 1929 to bring symphony music to the public free. Since then, the attendance has included up to 20,000 people at a single concert.

The concerts run through July 10.

R.A. 6-27

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 260,961

JUN 27 1971 New England Newsclip

Week's Fete Opens July 4

City to Honor Freedom Trail

Boston will celebrate its "20th Anniversary Freedom Trail Week" July 4 to 10, Mayor White has announced.

The week-long activities will be held around the 15 landmarks on the Freedom Trail that are associated with Revolutionary War patriots.

The week will begin with flag-raising ceremonies at 9 a.m., July 4, at City Hall Plaza.

Shortly after the ceremonies, the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Co., bands, and other marching units will march as Freedom Trail Foundation officials ride in an MBTA bus along the Freedom Trail to the Old Granary Burying Ground, where John Hancock, Robert Paine and Samuel Adams, all Massachusetts signers of the Declaration of Independence, will be honored.

THE COLORFUL PARADE will then proceed to the Old State House for a 9:30 a.m. reading of the Declaration by James T. Luftman, of Hyde Park, who will re-enact in costume the scene 195 years ago when the newly-proclaimed document was read to Boston townsfolk in the same square.

Shortly after Luftman's address, the parade will march to Faneuil Hall for 10 a.m. oration exercises, to be highlighted by an address by Dr. Freddy Homburger, Swiss consul in Boston. There will also be band playing, patriotic ceremonies and a presentation by Dep. Mayor Edward T. Sullivan to William G. Schofield, founder of the Freedom Trail in 1951.

To celebrate the anniversary, Boston Pops Conductor Arthur Fiedler will include the song "America" in a July 5 Esplanade concert.

The week's celebrations also include many neighborhood events sponsored by Summerthing, July 2 through 5.

The Freedom Trail was established as a joint community service project in 1958 by the Advertising Club of Greater Boston and the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540

JUN 27 1971 New England Newsclip

42nd Esplanade season begins tomorrow evening

The 42nd season of free outdoor concerts by the oBston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra begins tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade. Arthur Fiedler, founder and conductor of the Esplanade Concerts, conducts the opening night concert.

The Esplanade season extends through Saturday, July 10. All evening concerts at the Hatch Shell begin at 8:30 p.m.

Five concerts will be played off the Esplanade in five different Boston neighborhoods in collaboration with the Mayor's Summerthing program: Bunker Hill, Charlestown, Wednesday, June 30 at 7:30 p.m.; Towne Field, Dorchester, Thursday, July 1 at 7:30 p.m.; City Hall Plaza, Government Center, Boston, Wednesday, July 7 at noon; Rogers Park, Brighton, Wednesday, July 7 at 7:30 p.m.; and Smith Field, Hyde Park, Thursday, July 8 at 7:30 p.m.

The special concert for children takes place this year on the Esplanade, Wednesday at 10:15 a.m., conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

90

CITY RECORD
(OFFICIAL CITY PUBLICATION)
BOSTON, MASS.
960

JUN 28 1971

New England
Newsclip

SUMMERTHING STARTS FOURTH SEASON

The swing of a dance band, the laughter of children at a puppet's antics, the vivid splash of a wall mural, the sprouting of a beanplant in a doorstep flowerpot — these are the sights and sounds of Summerthing. They were seen and heard across the city, and began Friday, June 25.

Summerthing opened its fourth season simultaneously in 17 Boston neighborhoods with over 30 events from a gospel sing-in in Dorchester to a square dance on Beacon Hill scheduled to take place during the opening weekend.

During the next ten weeks, Summerthing will again bring to Boston residents in their own communities top quality free performances by national and local entertainers, and assist neighborhoods with creative workshops and other projects which reflect each neighborhood's cultural and artistic interests.

Summerthing will happen in Allston-Brighton, Beacon Hill-Back Bay-West End, Bromley-Heath, Charlestown, Columbia Point, Dorchester, East Boston, Hyde Park, Jamaica Plain, Mattapan, the North End, Orchard Park, Parker Hill-Fenway, Roxbury, South Boston, the South End, and West Roxbury-Roslindale.

According to Katherine D. Kane, director of Summerthing since its inception in 1968, and the city's Office of Cultural Affairs, this year the festival will include its largest lineup yet of local groups to tour on Summerthing's city circuit. Among the groups scheduled to appear are the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, the Boston Ballet Company, the Cambridge Opera Workshop, the Ronald Ingraham Concert Choir, the Mandala Folk Dance Ensemble, Your Father's Moustache, the Associated Artists Opera Company, the Taylors (folk dancers), James Higgins' One-Man Band, Ralph Graham, Larry Cooper and His Orchestra, barbershop quartets of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America, and Art Dragon's Banjo Band. National stars will be announced during the summer as they are booked. Two groups now signed are Olatunji and his exciting company of singers, dancers, and musicians, and Children's Theater International. In 1970 over 800,000 people enjoyed over 1,200 performances by Summerthing.

The doors to neighborhood creative workshops, which last year enrolled 15,000 people, will swing open again this year to Boston children, teen-agers, and adults. Most neighborhoods will include workshops in art, dance, drama, music, and photography, and some will also have workshops which appeal to a particular neighborhood's interests such as yoga, crafts for senior citizens, jewelry-making, cooking, fashion, candle-making, sewing, and astrology. Returning this year will be "discovery" workshops which use combinations of the arts to see the different worlds within our communities.

This year, Summerthing will again be financed in part by the city and in part by contributions from private foundations, business firms, and interested citizens. The city has provided The Boston Foundation Inc. (a nonprofit corporation which disperses funds received for Summerthing) with $300,000 for the festival, and the Foundation will in turn seek an additional $300,000 for Summerthing and for year-round art programs across the city.

Says Mayor Kevin White, "After Summerthing's third season ended last September, a city-wide study was conducted by an independent research corporation to find out just what the people of Boston thought about their summer-long neighborhood festival. In addition to establishing that the public's impressions of Summerthing are overwhelmingly favorable, the privately funded poll showed that 86 percent of Boston residents who were aware of Summerthing wanted it to continue year-round. I was also personally very pleased to find out that Bostonians think Summerthing not only works but also works well by making city life more exciting and pleasant and brings people together within the community and between the communities. It is my fond hope that a year-round neighborhood arts program will become a permanent fixture in Boston, and that all those able to contribute will do so as generously as possible."

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUN 28 1971

New England
Newsclip

Hub Concerts Open Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler, again will bring its music outdoors with the first of its annual summer Esplanade concerts tonight on the banks of the Charles River.

The 8:30 concert is at Hatch Memorial Shell in conjunction with Summerthing. The concerts continue nightly at the Hatch Shell until July 10, except for Wednesday, 10:15 a.m. at the shell, and Bunker Hill, Charlestown, at 7:30 p.m.

Also, Towne Field, Dorchester, 7:30 p.m., Thursday; City Hall Plaza, noon, and Rogers Park, Brighton, 7:30 p.m., July 7; and Smith Field, Hyde Park, 7:30 p.m., July 8.

During the concert series westbound traffic on Storrow drive will be diverted between 7:30 and 10 p.m.

Outbound lanes will be closed from the Charles st. circle to the Berkeley street on-ramp.

Parking for concert-goers will be permitted in the closed off roadway.

GAZETTE
TAUNTON, MASS.
D. 13,000

JUN 28 1971

New England
Newsclip

Storrow Dr. Detour Set

BOSTON (AP) Westbound traffic on Storrow Drive will be diverted from the Hatch Memorial Shell area this evening and every evening from 7:30 to 10 p.m. during the Esplanade Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The closed lanes from Charles Street Circle to the Berkley Street on-ramp will be used for parking, the Metropolitan District Commission announced.

NEWS
MALDEN, MASS.
D. 12,420

JUN 28 1971

New England
Newsclip

M.D.C. Gets a Lesson in Disorder

Taxpayers in Malden, Medford, Melrose and Everett—just to name our own area communities — contribute through their real estate taxes each year to the support and maintenance of the far-flung Metropolitan District Commission public services. Recreational facilities—at their beaches, their reservations, their woodlands—are an important and valuable asset for the metropolitan district, and attract hundreds of thousands of people of all ages to the pleasures and beauty they provide.

Among the facilities to which the M.D.C. recreational communities contribute money annually is the Esplanade along the Charles river in Boston, including the Hatch Memorial Shell, made particularly famous by the annual free concerts under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. Tens upon tens of thousands of people have enjoyed those concerts on summer evenings, and in all the years of these magnificent events, there has been no complaint about problems, conflicts, dirt, debris, litter, fires or vandalism occurring. This remarkable and wholesome record is of great credit to the calibre of citizen who attends the concerts.

Yet, several days ago, the Shell and its vicinity was the scene of a rock and roll concert, which actually turned out to be a wreck and ruin affair. With a record outpouring of some 40,000 attending, Storrow Drive was snarled by people and triple-line parked cars in violation of the law, and the area was the scene of fires, some destroyed public property, and a carnage of litter never before encountered at this popular area. According to reports, residents in the area of the Esplanade were intimidated by the raucous gathering. Consumption of beer and other beverages was painfully apparent, and the consequences of drunkenness was equally so.

As a result, the M.D.C. has voted to limit such musical presentations, produced by Robert Gordon, president of PolyArts of Cambridge, which has planned a series of summer concerts, but evidently had not for a moment thought that they would provoke an uncontrollable turmoil at the site. M.D.C. has now taken steps to cancel a folk concert and two jazz concerts—concerts, one should explain to the uninitiated, that differ in content from rock and roll affairs.

The vote to limit but permit another effort later in July for a jazz concert prevailed by a three-to-one vote, the lone opponent being commission-member Max Rosenblatt, Malden's assistant city solicitor. He made it plain he was disinclined to commit the riding public and the residential community in the vicinity of Hatch to a program that got beyond control, and said he would not vote for the use of the area for such a concert because "jazz is a kissin' cousin of rock and roll." He deplored the vandalism and hoodlumism that prevailed at the last concert, the presence of people smoking pot openly, and the beer and booze consumers, and all the riotous conduct that prevailed.

However, taking a different view, it will be the responsibility of the majority of the commission to demonstrate at the next permitted performance that its judgment was correct. But we see a hint of some doubt in the vote, and, as well, some further evidence that the commission decision some months ago to permit the consumption of alcoholic beverages on its beaches, parks and recreation areas—like the Hatch Shell and the Middlesex Fells—may turn out to have been a major mistake. Taxpayers in our area have a stake in such a decision, as already pointed out.

90

CITY RECORD
(OFFICIAL CITY PUBLICATION)
BOSTON, MASS.
960

JUN 28 1971

New England
Newsclip

SUMMERTHING STARTS FOURTH SEASON

The swing of a dance band, the laughter of children at a puppet's antics, the vivid splash of a wall mural, the sprouting of a beanplant in a doorstep flowerpot — these are the sights and sounds of Summerthing. They were seen and heard across the city, and began Friday, June 25.

Summerthing opened its fourth season simultaneously in 17 Boston neighborhoods with over 30 events from a gospel sing-in in Dorchester to a square dance on Beacon Hill scheduled to take place during the opening weekend.

During the next ten weeks, Summerthing will again bring to Boston residents in their own communities top quality free performances by national and local entertainers, and assist neighborhoods with creative workshops and other projects which reflect each neighborhood's cultural and artistic interests.

Summerthing will happen in Allston-Brighton, Beacon Hill-Back Bay-West End, Bromley-Heath, Charlestown, Columbia Point, Dorchester, East Boston, Hyde Park, Jamaica Plain, Mattapan, the North End, Orchard Park, Parker Hill-Fenway, Roxbury, South Boston, the South End, and West Roxbury-Roslindale.

According to Katherine D. Kane, director of Summerthing since its inception in 1968, and the city's Office of Cultural Affairs, this year the festival will include its largest lineup yet of local groups to tour on Summerthing's city circuit. Among the groups scheduled to appear are the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, the Boston Ballet Company, the Cambridge Opera Workshop, the Ronald Ingraham Concert Choir, the Mandala Folk Dance Ensemble, Your Father's Moustache, the Associated Artists Opera Company, the Taylors (folk dancers), James Higgins' One-Man Band, Ralph Graham, Larry Cooper and His Orchestra, barbershop quartets of the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barbershop Quartet Singing in America, and Art Dragon's Banjo Band. National stars will be announced during the summer as they are booked. Two groups now signed are Olatunji and his exciting company of singers, dancers, and musicians, and Children's Theater International. In 1970 over 300,000 people enjoyed over 1,200 performances by Summerthing.

The doors to neighborhood creative workshops, which last year enrolled 15,000 people, will swing open again this year to Boston children, teen-agers, and adults. Most neighborhoods will include workshops in art, dance, drama, music, and photography, and some will also have workshops which appeal to a particular neighborhood's interests such as yoga, crafts for senior citizens, jewelry-making, cooking, fashion, candle-making, sewing, and astrology. Returning this year will be "discovery" workshops which use combinations of the arts to see the different worlds within our communities.

This year, Summerthing will again be financed in part by the city and in part by contributions from private foundations, business firms, and interested citizens. The city has provided The Boston Foundation Inc. (a nonprofit corporation which disperses funds received for Summerthing) with $300,000 for the festival, and the Foundation will in turn seek an additional $300,000 for Summerthing and for year-round art programs across the city.

Says Mayor Kevin White, "After Summerthing's third season ended last September, a city-wide study was conducted by an independent research corporation to find out just what the people of Boston thought about their summer-long neighborhood festival. In addition to establishing that the public's impressions of Summerthing are overwhelmingly favorable, the privately funded poll showed that 86 percent of Boston residents who were aware of Summerthing wanted it to continue year-round. I was also personally very pleased to find out that Bostonians think Summerthing not only works but also works well by making city life more exciting and pleasant and brings people together within the community and between the communities. It is my fond hope that a year-round neighborhood arts program will become a permanent fixture in Boston, and that all those able to contribute will do so as generously as possible."

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUN 28 1971

New England
Newsclip

Hub Concerts Open Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler, again will bring its music outdoors with the first of its annual summer Esplanade concerts tonight on the banks of the Charles River.

The 8:30 concert is at Hatch Memorial Shell in conjunction with Summerthing. The concerts continue nightly at the Hatch Shell until July 10, except for Wednesday, 10:15 a.m. at the shell, and Bunker Hill, Charlestown, at 7:30 p.m.

Also, Towne Field, Dorchester, 7:30 p.m., Thursday; City Hall Plaza, noon, and Rogers Park, Brighton, 7:30 p.m., July 7; and Smith Field, Hyde Park, 7:30 p.m., July 8.

During the concert series westbound traffic on Storrow drive will be diverted between 7:30 and 10 p.m.

Outbound lanes will be closed from the Charles st. circle to the Berkeley street on-ramp.

Parking for concert-goers will be permitted in the closed off roadway.

GAZETTE
TAUNTON, MASS.
D. 13,000

JUN 28 1971

New England
Newsclip

Storrow Dr. Detour Set

BOSTON (AP) Westbound traffic on Storrow Drive will be diverted from the Hatch Memorial Shell area this evening and every evening from 7:30 to 10 p.m. during the Esplanade Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The closed lanes from Charles Street Circle to the Berkley Street on-ramp will be used for parking, the Metropolitan District Commission announced.

NEWS
MALDEN, MASS.
D. 12,420

JUN 28 1971

New England
Newsclip

M.D.C. Gets a Lesson in Disorder

Taxpayers in Malden, Medford, Melrose and Everett—just to name our own area communities — contribute through their real estate taxes each year to the support and maintenance of the far-flung Metropolitan District Commission public services. Recreational facilities—at their beaches, their reservations, their woodlands—are an important and valuable asset for the metropolitan district, and attract hundreds of thousands of people of all ages to the pleasures and beauty they provide.

Among the facilities to which the M.D.C. recreational communities contribute money annually is the Esplanade along the Charles river in Boston, including the Hatch Memorial Shell, made particularly famous by the annual free concerts under the baton of Arthur Fiedler. Tens upon tens of thousands of people have enjoyed those concerts on summer evenings, and in all the years of these magnificent events, there has been no complaint about problems, conflicts, dirt, debris, litter, fires or vandalism occurring. This remarkable and wholesome record is of great credit to the calibre of citizen who attends the concerts.

Yet, several days ago, the Shell and its vicinity was the scene of a rock and roll concert, which actually turned out to be a wreck and ruin affair. With a record outpouring of some 40,000 attending, Storrow Drive was snarled by people and triple-line parked cars in violation of the law, and the area was the scene of fires, some destroyed public property, and a carnage of litter never before encountered at this popular area. According to reports, residents in the area of the Esplanade were intimidated by the raucous gathering. Consumption of beer and other beverages was painfully apparent, and the consequences of drunkenness was equally so.

As a result, the M.D.C. has voted to limit such musical presentations, produced by Robert Gordon, president of PolyArts of Cambridge, which has planned a series of summer concerts, but evidently had not for a moment thought that they would provoke an uncontrollable turmoil at the site. M.D.C. has now taken steps to cancel a folk concert and two jazz concerts—concerts, one should explain to the uninitiated, that differ in content from rock and roll affairs.

The vote to limit but permit another effort later in July for a jazz concert prevailed by a three-to-one vote, the lone opponent being commission-member Max Rosenblatt, Malden's assistant city solicitor. He made it plain he was disinclined to commit the riding public and the residential community in the vicinity of Hatch to a program that got beyond control, and said he would not vote for the use of the area for such a concert because "jazz is a kissin' cousin of rock and roll." He deplored the vandalism and hoodlumism that prevailed at the last concert, the presence of people smoking pot openly, and the beer and booze consumers, and all the riotous conduct that prevailed.

However, taking a different view, it will be the responsibility of the majority of the commission to demonstrate at the next permitted performance that its judgment was correct. But we see a hint of some doubt in the vote, and, as well, some further evidence that the commission decision some months ago to permit the consumption of alcoholic beverages on its beaches, parks and recreation areas—like the Hatch Shell and the Middlesex Fells—may turn out to have been a major mistake. Taxpayers in our area have a stake in such a decision, as already pointed out.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514
JUN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

Beverly girl soloist with Pops

BEVERLY —Marjorie Jill Kransberg, 12-year-old violinist, will be guest soloist with the Boston Pops orchestra on Wednesday morning, June 30, for the annual Children's Concert on the Esplanade at 10:15.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John N. Kransberg of Beaver Pond road, Marjorie attends the Juilliard Music school at Lincoln Center, N.Y. and is a pupil of Sally Thomas. She will perform the Haydn Concerto in C Major, first movement at the concert, which is under the baton of Harry Ellis Dickson.

This will be her second performance with the Boston Pops as she performed last year also.

Marjorie started her musical career with the Suzuki method at the age of five. When she was eight she began studying with Sarah Scriven at the Boston Community Music Center. She has twice attained national honors for the National Federation of Music clubs and received advanced honors at the Boston Music school at the age of ten.

Marjorie has performed with the Wellesley Symphony, the New Hampshire Philharmonic and the Boston Symphonia as well as with the Boston Pops.

Marjorie J. Kransberg

Globe 6-28

Daily calendar

"MARIGOLDS"—New Theater, 12 Holyoke st., Cambridge, at 7:30. Paul Zindel's Pulitzer Prize-winning drama about an embittered mother.

FESTIVAL OF OPERA, BALLET AND SYMPHONY FILMS—Garden Cinema, Arlington st. at Boylston. "Giselle" with American Ballet Theatre starring Carla Fracci and Erik Bruhn. At 2:15, 4, 5:45, 7:30, 9:15.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ESPLANADE ORCHESTRA—Hatch Shell at 8:30. Arthur Fiedler conducting. Works of Berlioz, Khachaturian, Beethoven.

NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
S. 24,000
JUN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

Storrow Drive Detour Set

BOSTON (AP) — Westbound traffic on Storrow Drive will be diverted from the Hatch Memorial Shell area this evening and every evening from 7:30 to 10 p.m. during the Esplanade Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The closed lanes from Charles Street Circle to the Berkeley Street on-ramp will be used for parking, the Metropolitan District Commission announced.

BULLETIN
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
D. 149,649
JUN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

Hub to Divert Cars For Concert Nights

Boston — (AP) — Westbound traffic on Storrow Drive will be diverted from the Hatch Memorial Shell area this evening and every evening from 7:30 to 10 p.m. during the Esplanade Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042
JUN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231
JUN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

Freedom Trail Week Celebrates 20th Year

The less "20th Anniversary Freedom Trail Week" begins Sunday, July 4, and Mayor Kevin H. White has invited "freedom-loving people everywhere" to the festivities, which will include parades, patriotic ceremonies and special concerts.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy commended the observance in an address before the Senate saying: "Boston, at once a cultural, intellectual, technological, as well as historic city, has taken steps to protect, preserve, and promote the public interest in places where our greatest patriots met, worked and lived.

"The Freedom Trail is a significant incentive toward inculcating in our youth and citizens from all points of this nation a sense of the color and the courage of our past."

Fourth of July festivities begin with flag-raising ceremonies at 9 a.m. at the City Hall Plaza, followed by a reading of the Declaration of Independence at the Old State House at 9:30 a.m. and oration exercises at Faneuil Hall, a tradition since 1783.

Arthur Fiedler will include "America," in the Esplanade Concert July 5 and Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct the Boston symphony musicians.

Summerthing will also sponsor special neighborhood events July 2-5.

Along the Freedom Trail red, white and blue markers will identify the 15 significant landmarks.

NEWS TRIBUNE
WALTHAM, MASS.
D. 16,641
JUN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

Hub Area Traffic to Be Diverted

BOSTON (AP) — Westbound traffic on Storrow Drive will be diverted from the Hatch Memorial Shell area this evening and every evening from 7:30 to 10 p.m. during the Esplanade Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The closed lanes from Charles Street Circle to the Berkley Street on-ramp will be used for parking, the Metropolitan District Commission announced.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540
JUN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

MDC to Divert Traffic During Pops Concert

The Metropolitan District Commission announced yesterday that westbound traffic on Storrow Drive, Boston, will be diverted from the Hatch Memorial Shell area every evening from 7:30 to 10 p.m., during the Esplanade Concerts by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra.

The concerts will be held tonight, tomorrow night, Friday and Saturday nights of this week and on July 5, 6, 9 and 10. During the Children's Concert Wednesday morning Storrow Drive will be closed westbound from 10 a.m. to noon.

During the concerts, the outbound lanes of Storrow Drive and Embankmant Road will be closed from Charles Street Circle to the Berkeley Street on-ramp. Parking for concertgoers will be permitted in the closed-off roadway in the first and second lanes, with the center lane left open.

NEWS
NEWPORT, R. I.
D. 15,205
JUN 28 1971
New England Newsclip

STORROW DRIVE CLOSED

BOSTON (AP) — Westbound traffic on Storrow Drive will be diverted from the Hatch Memorial Shell area this evening and every evening from 7:30 to 10 p.m. during the Esplanade Concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The closed lanes from Charles Street Circle to the Berkley Street on-ramp will be used for parking, the Metropolitan District Commission announced.

Storrow Drive partially closed for concerts

Outbound lanes of Storrow Drive and Embankment Road will be partially blocked off tonight and every night from 7:30-10 p.m. during the Esplanade Concerts by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Parking for concert goers will be permitted in the first and third lanes of the closed off roadway from Charles Street Circle to the Berkeley Street on-ramp.

R.A. 6-28

Hub Concerts Open Tonight

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler, again will bring its music outdoors with the first of its annual summer Esplanade concerts tonight on the banks of the Charles River.

The 8:30 concert is at Hatch Memorial Shell in conjunction with Summerthing. The concerts continue nightly at the Hatch Shell until July 10, except for Wednesday, 10:15 a.m. at the shell, and Bunker Hill, Charlestown, at 7:30 p.m.

Also, Towne Field, Dorchester, 7:30 p.m., Thursday; City Hall Plaza, noon, and Rogers Park, Brighton, 7:30 p.m., July 7; and Smith Field, Hyde Park, 7:30 p.m., July 8.

During the concert series westbound traffic on Storrow drive will be diverted between 7:30 and 10 p.m.

Outbound lanes will be closed from the Charles st. circle to the Berkeley street on-ramp.

Parking for concert-goers will be permitted in the closed off roadway.

92

H.T. 6-28

Pops at Hatch Shell

WEDNESDAY AT 10:15 A. M.
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conductor
Suite from "The Nutcracker" Tchaikovsky
Finale (Presto: Molto allegro e vivace) from the Piano Concerto No. 1 in G minor, Op. 25 Mendelssohn
Soloist: MICHAEL THOMOPOULOS
Hoe-Down, from "Rodeo" Copeland
First Movement (Allegro moderato) from the Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D major Haydn
Soloist: MARJORIE KRANSBERG
Two Sleigh Rides Mozart and Anderson
On the Esplanade, March Bodge

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
WEDNESDAY AT 7:30 P.M.
BUNKER HILL, CHARLESTOWN
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conductor
National Emblem March Bagley
Overture to "William Tell" Rossini
By the Beautiful Blue Danube, Waltzes Strauss
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gioconda" Ponchielli

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Victor Herbert Favorites arr. Sanford
"Sing Out" arr. Hayman
Bostonian Suite Brown-Langendone

Esplanade Concert

Arthur Fiedler, Conductor
Monday Evening, Junes 28, 1971
at 8:30 p. m.

Opening Night Program

Rakoczi March from "The Damnation of Faust" Berlioz

Concerto for Piano and Orchestra Khachaturian
I. Allegro ma non troppo e maestoso
II. Andante con anima
III. Allegro brillante
Soloist:
DONN-ALEXANDRE FEDER

The Star-Spangled Banner

Symphony No 5 in C minor, Op. 67 Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio
II. Andante con moto
III. Allegro
IV. Allegro

R.A. 6-28

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
JUN 29 1971
New England Newsclip

...Concerts and Chamber Music, Indoors and Out

The Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra continues the Esplanade Concerts now through July 10. The concerts are held at the Hatch Shell on the Charles River Esplanade in Boston and in five Boston neighborhoods. Arthur Fiedler, who founded the Esplanade Concerts in 1929, and Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct the concerts at the following times and locations: June 28, 8:30 p.m., Hatch Shell; June 29, 8:30 p.m., Hatch Shell; June 30, 10:15 a.m., youth concert, Hatch Shell; June 30, 7:30 p.m., Bunker Hill in Charlestown; July 1, 7:30 p.m., Towne Field in Dorchester; July 2, 8:30 p.m., Hatch Shell; July 3, 8:30 p.m., Hatch Shell; July 5, 8:30 p.m., Hatch Shell; July 6, 8:30 p.m., Hatch Shell; July 7, 12 noon City Hall Plaza, Government Center in Boston; July 7, 7:30 p.m. at Rogers Park in Brighton; July 8, 7:30 p.m., at Smith Field in Hyde Park; July 9, 8:30 p.m., Hatch Shell; July 10, 8:30 p.m., Hatch Shell.

The Cambridge Opera Workshop will appear in the Association for the Performing Arts Festival on the City Hall Plaza, Boston, on July 28, in a free performance of Mozart's "Impresario."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer season at Tanglewood in Lenox begins Friday through Aug. 22. The 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills has been the summer home of the Symphony and the Berkshire Music Festival since the 1930's. Concerts will be Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons in the Music Shed. Weekend preludes, held two hours before the Friday concert, present guest artists and BSO members in short recitals. Open rehearsals on Saturday mornings, with unreserved seats, offer a relaxed look at the conductor, orchestra, and guest artists in a practice session.

Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops at Tanglewood on Tuesday, Aug. 3 in a pension fund concert. Leonard Bernstein will conduct Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" on Sunday, July 25, in a concert in memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Tickets and program information available through the Berkshire Festival Ticket Offices at Symphony Hall, Boston, or at Tanglewood, Lenox.

At the Lenox Arts Center, a chamber music series will be presented on Sunday mornings. "Courtyard Concerts" will feature the Pennywhistlers, July 9; David Bromberg, July 30; the New York Bass Violin Choir, Aug. 6; the Art Ensemble of Chicago, Aug. 20. Information available from the Lenox Arts Center, Lenox.

Music Theater will return on a regular basis to the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in the newly restructured West Barn. The music theater project will present five musical stage works from different periods: Eric Saties' 1918 scenic cantata, "Socrates," which will be sung in English; Harrison Birtwhistle's "Down by the Greenwood Side," a 1969 parody of the traditional English pantomime; Ligeti's "Aventures et Nouvelles Aventures," a two-part work scored for three performers who sing the sounds of the phonetic alphabet instead of words; Offenbach's "Croquefer" a 1857 one-act operetta; and Kurt Weill's "Mahogany Songspiel," in its original German version. Performance dates and tickets available at the Berkshire Festival in Lenox.

The piano will be pre-eminent in the third Newport Music Festival of Romantic Music which opens July 29 and continues through Aug. 7. Pianists Peter Basquin, Raymond Lewenthal, Flavio Varani, and Marshall Williamson will play music by Scriabin, Herts, Rubinstein and Reinecke, among others. The Metropolitan Opera Studio will produce Pauline Viardot's two-act opera "Le Dernier Sorcier" and "Il Etait Une Bergere" by Marcel Lattes. Special events will include performances of the Joffrey II Ballet Company; a re-creation of a concert at the court of Prince Carl Egon von Furstenberg; a cruise concert on Narragansett Bay and an ascension of hot-air and gas balloons. A brochure with complete details is available from the Newport Music Festival, 23 Bridge St., Newport, R.I.

The Marlboro Music Festival, which brings together musicians from all over the world under Rudolf Serkin's direction each summer in Marlboro, Vermont, opens its 21st season on Sat., July 10. Chamber orchestra and chamber music concerts will be given on Saturdays at 8:30 p.m. and Sundays at 3 p.m. through Aug. 15, with three Friday concerts scheduled for July 23, Aug. 6, and Aug. 13, at 8:30 p.m. The concert on July 23 will feature a program of Bach Cantatas conducted by Blanche Honegger-Moyse The dates of concerts which Pablo Casals will conduct are not known in advance. Ticket information may be obtained from the Marlboro Music Festival, Box R, Marlboro, Vermont.

The Philadelphia Orchestra, under the direction of Eugene Ormandy, will be in residence at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, N.Y., Aug. 3-28, with nine guest-conductors. A performance with Patricia McBride and Edward Villella of the New York City Ballet is scheduled for Aug. 18. A Chamber Music Series will also be featured at Saratoga, Monday evenings, June 28-Aug. 23. Tickets available at Ticketron outlets and the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Classical soloists and chamber music will be offered at the Stratford Festival in Stratford, Ontario. Sunday Concerts: Alexandre Lagoya, guitarist, July 11; Jon Vickers, tenor, July 18; Gerard Souzay, Baritone, July 25; Alfred Brendel, pianist, Aug. 1; Janos Starker, cellist, Aug. 8; Lorin Hollander, pianist, Aug. 15; Jean-Pierre Rampal, flutist, Aug. 22. Chamber music concerts will be held Saturday mornings, July 10-Aug. 28. Ticket information available from the Stratford Festival, Stratford, Ont., Canada.

Phoenix 6-29

THE

Summerthing

Dates, times and locations are subject to change. For confirmation on the day of the performance, call 261-1600.

6:30 pm: Street Corner Group, Dix St, Dorchester.
7 pm: Art Dragon's Banjo Band, Union Park, South End.
8 pm: Rock Concert with the Sinclayrs, Whittier St. Playground, Orchard Park. Rock Concert, Prince St Gas House, North End.
8:30 pm: Moviebus— Legend of the Lone Ranger, Central Sq, East Boston.
Dusk: Outdoor Movie, Brighton St, Charlestown.

WED, June 30:
10 am: Tomorrowmobile, Fidelis Way, Allston - Brighton; Stage 1 Drama Workshop, O'Meara Ct, Charlestown; Carol & John, Quincy School Community Council, 34 Oak St, South End.
10:30 am: Plantmobile, Social Security Office, West Roxbury - Roslindale.
11 am: Street Corner Trio, Jersey & Queensberry Sts, Parker Hill - Fenway.
12 noon: Brass Band and Concert, City Hall Plaza, Back Bay - Beacon Hill.
1 pm: Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Jersey & Peterboro Sts, Parker Hill - Fenway.
1:30 pm: Plantmobile, West Newton & Tremont Sts, South End.
2 pm: Stage 1 Drama Workshop, Endicott & No Margin Sts, North End; Carol & John, Headstart Building, Bradshaw St, Dorchester; Tomorrowmobile, White & Putnam Sts, East Boston.
3 pm: Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Cooper Community Center, 719 Shawmut Ave, South End.
7 pm: Street Corner Group, VA Hospital, So Huntington Ave, Jamaica Plain.
7:30 pm: Art Dragon's Banjo Band, Neighborhood Youth Center, Call & William Sts, Jamaica Plain; Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Bunker Hill Monument, Charlestown. Chattin' Night, 1 pm.
8 pm: Latin Night, Athletic Field, Columbia Point; Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Singing in America, Sacred Heart School Yard, Poplar St, West Roxbury - Roslindale; Rock Concert, East Boston Stadium, Porter St, East Boston.
8:30 pm: Moviebus— Legend of the Lone Ranger, Call & Williams Sts, Jamaica Plain.

THURS, July 1:
10 am: Tomorrowmobile, Heath St Playground, Bromley-Heath; Stage 1 Drama Workshop, Ross Field, Hyde Park; Carol & John, Mission Ext, Annunciation Rd, Parker Hill - Fenway.
10:30 am: Plantmobile, Dorchester House, 1353 Dorchester Ave, Dorchester.
11 am: Street Corner Trio, Castle Sq, South End.
12 noon: Brass Band Concert, City Hall Plaza, Back Bay - Beacon Hill.
1 pm: Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Nazareth Children's Home, Pond St, Jamaica Plain.
1:30 pm: Plantmobile, Fenway in the grove, Parker Hill - Fenway.
2 pm: Stage 1 Drama Workshop, Heath St Playground, Bromley-Heath; Carol & John, Toddlers Workshop, 403 Meridian St, East Boston; Street Corner Ensemble, Lennox Camden Project, South End; Tomorrowmobile, Stop & Shop, Hyde Park; Concert for the Elderly, O'Meara Ct, Charlestown.
3 pm: Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Home for Italian Children, 1125 Center St, Jamaica Plain.
6:30 pm: Street Corner Group, Blackstone Park, South End.
7 pm: Rock Concert with Shadrag, Rogers Park, Allston - Brighton.
7:30 pm: Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Towne Field, Dorchester.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042
JUN 29 1971
New England Newsclip

AS NIGHT BEGINS TO FALL, THE 43d ANNUAL SERIES OF ESPLANADE CONCERTS BEGINS. ABOUT 15,000 PERSONS ATTENDED LAST NIGHT'S OPENING.

Esplanade Concerts open to an audience of 15,000

By Stephen Wermiel
Globe Staff

The signs read "Keep Off The Grass," but no one was fazed at the opening last night of the 43d annual Esplanade Concerts. The 15,000 people who spread out in front of the Hatch Shell along the Charles River were part of a Boston tradition — Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra have been at it ~~since 1928~~.

There was some apprehension about the first of eight performances at the shell as a result of extensive damage to the MDC park area during a rock concert more than a week ago.

But the crowd at the outdoor Pops concert seemed to make an extra effort to deposit rubbish in the "Keep America Beautiful" baskets placed around the oval.

Although the crowd was a mixed one, young and old, one MDC officer said, "There is a different element here . . . everybody is not carrying half-gallons of wine. It is a better crowd, willing to cooperate."

For the first time in the history of the concerts, the westbound traffic lane of Storrow drive was closed to cars. The lane was used for parking and emergencies. According to conductor Arthur Fiedler, the acoustics were improved considerably by the absence of "cars going by . . . there is no more hissing and tooting of horns; no more ambulances and sirens going off."

While the thousands of people enjoyed the free outdoor performance, it was a profitable night for Tom Hauber. Hauber has the MDC franchise for a refreshment stand at the rear of the oval, and he was fully prepared. He had on hand more than 1400 hot dogs, 60 cases of potato chips, and 300 cases of canned soda.

For many "regulars" at the Hatch Shell, the tradition was carried on with grace. For the first program Fiedler offered a Berlioz piece from "The Damnation of Faust," Khachaturian's "Concerto for Piano and Orchestra," Beethoven's "Symphony No. 5," and, of course, "The Star-Spangled Banner."

One elderly spectator, Mrs. Hazel Lowney, 68, of 1590 Massachusetts av., Cambridge, has come to every Esplanade Concert since the opening in 1929. Mrs. Lowney remembers "an older, more conservative crowd in the old days." She is not used to the people who arrived at 6 p.m. with picnic suppers and blankets.

When the program had ended there was a bit of nostalgia in the air. Most of those there last night would probably come back next year, and many for years to come.

ARTHUR FIEDLER conducts the Boston Pops Orchestra.

. . . AND SONG — Woman enjoys a glass of wine while waiting for the Esplanade Concert at the Hatch Shell to begin. (Ellis Herwig photos)

RA 6-29

Esplanade Concert for Tuesday

34 1971

Tuesday Evening, June 29, 1971, at 8:30
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting

Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" — Mozart
Symphony No. 4 in A major, Op. 90 ("Italian") — Mendelssohn
I. Allegro vivace
II. Andante con moto
III. Conmoto moderato
IV. Saltarello: Presto

THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER

Sinfoni Concertante for Violin and Viola in E flat, K. 364 — Mozart
I. Allegro maestoso
II. Andante
III. Presto

CSM 6-29

Music

HATCH SHELL—Esplanade concert, Harry Ellis Dickson conducting, with John and Joan Karman, soloists. 8:30.

Phoenix 6-29

Dorchester. FREE (5424308)
Esplanade concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler. Sponsored by seventeen corporations in cooperation with Summerthing. Thru SAT, July 10, 8:30 pm. FREE (266-1492)

HT. 6-29

Tonight's Esplanade Concert, 8:30 p.m.

HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conductor
Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" — Mozart
Symphony No. 4 in A maior, Op. 90 ("Italian") — Mendelssohn
THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER
Sinfonial Concertante for Violin and Viola in E flat, K. 364 — Mozart
Soloists: JOHN and JOAN KORMAN
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger" — Wagner

94

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042

JUN 30 1971 New England Newsclip

STRICTLY FOR KIDS — Children's concert this morning at Hatch Shell has Naomi Gendler (left) dancing but Butch Pash of Concord (right) takes a more serious approach. (Joseph Dennehy photos)

Children warm to Hatch Shell concert

By Ruth Hochberger Globe Correspondent

"See that big brown thing," explained one veteran five-year-old concert-goer to her friend, "That's where the music comes out of."

But rather than opera glasses, these music enthusiasts brought frisbees, blankets, picnic lunches and sunglasses to the Boston Symphony's Esplanade concert for children at the Hatch Memorial Shell this morning.

Hundreds of children with parents, grandparents, and day camp counselors thronged the Esplanade to hear Harry Ellis Dickson conduct the orchestra in six pieces chosen especially for young ears.

The river breeze helped make the audience more comfortable in the near-nineties sunshine, as Mr. "Try to concentrate on the "Try to concentrate on the music and forget about the sun."

To help them forget, he chose two sleigh ride pieces, by Mozart and Anderson, and the almost-forgotten sound of sleigh bells really did seem to keep the blazing sun off the children's minds.

"I don't think there's any such thing as children's music," Mr. Dickson remarked before the concert, "I just take into consideration that a child's listening span is short, especially when it's hot and they're outside."

"I try to pick pieces which are not only appealing to them, but also educational in some sense," he added.

Mr. Dickson also explained that the children's concert provided an ideal opportunity to introduce young talent, and today's program included a 17-year-old pianist and a 12-year-old violinist.

"They're a good audience and very attentive," he commented, and indeed they seemed to be as he invited them to clap, dance, or conduct as they pleased along with the orchestra.

Most of the children were delighted with a chance to participate, and many of them swayed to Tschaikovsky's Dance of the Flowers and joined an impromptu square dance for Aaron Coplands's Hoe-Down."

Even an infant banged a Crackerjack box on her mother's knee in time to the "March from the Nutcracker Suite."

RA-6:30

Harold Banks

Fiedler's 'Successor' Only 9!

Ed McCormack, at the testimonial dinner for Rev. Robert J. McEwen, S.J., the consumer crusader: "Ever since you became my top political adviser, I haven't won a campaign and, Father, my wife Emily thanks you for that." . . . The Irish camera crew here recently to film a documentary written by Eire's great short-story creator, Sean O'Faolian, couldn't put up at the Vendome, as he suggested, so they could "see what old Boston was like," because the hotel is being remodeled. But O'Faolian didn't have that problem. He stayed at his regular haunt here — the St. Botolph Club, diagonally across the street from the hotel.

★

The camera assistant at Bachrach's when Mayor White had his new campaign photos taken was Brooke Jones — niece of New York's Mayor Lindsay . . . Gambit publishers here have put Atty. Ed Swartz's book, "Toys That Don't Care," into a third printing . . . Nine-year-old Arthur Stivaletta, Jr., son of the Dedham contractor, will conduct the "Stars and Stripes Forever" at the end of the July 3 Esplanade concert. His father won the appearance for him on the Channel 2 auction.

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUN 30 1971 New England Newsclip

For the delight of 10,000 music lovers, Harry Ellis Dickson, assistant conductor of the Boston Pops Orchestra, leads his musicians in concert at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade.

Today's Summerthing

Globe. 6-30

Today's schedule for Summerething:

- Tomorrowmobile, Fidelis Way, Allston-Brighton, 10 a.m.
- Stage I Drama Workshop, O'Meara Ct., Charlestown, 10 a.m.

Carol & John, Quincy School Community Council, 34 Oak st., 10 a.m.

- Plantmobile, 99 Belgrade av., West Roxbury-Roslindale, 10:30 a.m.
- Street Corner Trio, Jersey and Queensberry sts., Fenway, 11 a.m.
- Brass Band Concert, City Hall Plaza, noon.
- Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Jersey and Peterboro sts., Fenway, 1 p.m.
- Plantmobile, W. Newton and Tremont sts., South End, 1:30 p.m.

Stage 1 Drama Workshop, Endicott and North Margin streets, North End, 2 p.m.

- Street Corner Ensemble, Academy III, Walnut street, Roxbury, 2 p.m.
- Carol & John, Headstart Bldg., Bradshaw street, Dorchester, 2 p.m.
- Tomorrowmobile, White and Putnam streets, East Boston, 2 p.m.
- Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Cooper Community Center, 719 Shawmut av., South End, 3 p.m.

Street Corner Group, V.A. Hospital, South Huntington avenue, Jamaica Plain, 6:30 p.m.

- Art Dragon's Banjo Band, Neighborhood Youth Center, Call and Williams streets, Jamaica Plain, 7:30 p.m.
- Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Bunker Hill Monument, Charlestown, 7:30 p.m.
- Latin Night, Athletic Field, Columbia Point, 8 p.m.
- Barber Shop Quartet, Sacred Heart School yard, Popular street, Roslindale, 8 p.m.
- Rock concert with Sweathog, East Boston Stadium, Porter street, East Boston, 8 p.m.
- Moviebus "The Legend of the Lone Ranger," Call & Williams streets, Jamaica Plain, 8:30 p.m.

Dates, times and locations are subject to change. For confirmation call 261-1660.

Daily calendar

Globe. 6-30

"JOHN BROWN'S BODY" — Regis College, Weston, at 8:30. Adaptation of Stephen Vincent Benet's drama of the Civil War.

"MARIGOLDS" — New Theater, 12 Holyoke st., Cambridge, at 7:30. Smotherhood — from Paul Zindel, whose drama won the Pulitzer Prize.

"JACQUES BREL IS ALIVE AND WELL AND LIVING IN PARIS" — Hotel Somerset's Musical Theater I, at 8:30. The hit musical that hates to say adieu.

"THE BURGHERS OF CALAIS" — Boston Center for the Arts, 541 Tremont st., at 7:30. Revival of Theater Company of Boston's production of Edgar White's drama about the Scottsboro Trials, directed by Paul Benedict and performed with the cooperation of the New African Company.

"I DO! I DO!" — Cape Cod Melody Tent, West Main Street Rotary, Hyannis (for showtimes, telephone 775-9100). Patrice Munsel and Stephen Douglas star in the musical.

"FORTY CARATS" — North Shore Music-Theater, Beverly, at 8:15. Barbara Britton is featured in a "frothy French farce," about a businesswoman who becomes romantically involved with a younger man.

"PLAZA SUITE" — South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset, at 8:30. Neil Simon's hit comedy, set in a famous New York hotel, stars Edie Adams and Tom Poston.

BEETHOVEN SYMPHONIES 6 & 9 — Garden Cinema, Arlington Street, at 2:15, 4, 5:45, 7:30, 9:15; one of a series of films from opera, ballet, and symphony.

NOON-TIME CONCERTS — Old West Church, 131 Cambridge st., at noon. Recording of Shostakovitch's Symphony No. 13.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ESPLANADE ORCHESTRA — Hatch Shell at 8:30. Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. Works of Mozart, Mendelssohn, Wagner.

JACOBS PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL, Lee — at 8:40. The Cincinnati Ballet Company; Susan Hendl and Edward Villella, "Winter's Traces," "Concerto," and two Pas de Deux to be announced.

R.A. 6-30

Wednesday's Summerthing

10 a. m. Tomorrowmobile, Allston-Brighton; Fidelis Way

10 a. m., Stage 1 Drama Markshop, Charlestown; O'Meara ct.

10 a. m., Carol & John, South End; Quincy School Community Council, 34 Oak st.

10:30 a. m., Planmobile, West Roxbury-Roslindale; Social Security Office, Roslindale

11 a. m., Street Corner Trio, Parker Hill-Fenway; Jersey & Queensberry sts.

Noon, Brass Band Concert, Back Bay-Beacon Hill; City Hall Plaza

1p. m., Suscan Linn Puppet Theater Parker Hill-Fenway; Jersey & Peterboro sts.

1:30 p. m., Plantmobile, South End; West Newton & Tremont sts.

2 p. m., Stage 1 Drama Workshop, North End; Endicott & No. Margin sts.

2 p. m., Street Corner Ensemble, Roxbury; Academy III, Walnut st.

2 p. m., Carol & John, Dorchester; Headstart Bldg., Bradshaw st.

2 p. m., Tomorrowmobile, East Boston; White & Putnam sts.

3 p. m., Susan Linn Puppet Theater, South End; Cooper Community ctr., 719 Shawmut ave.

7 p. m., Street Corner Group, Jamaica Plain; V. A. Hopsital, So. Huntington Ave., Jamaica Plain; Neighborhood Youth Center, Call & Williams sts.

7:30 p. m., Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Charlestown; Bunker Hill Monument

8 p. m., Latin Night, Columbia Point; Athletic Field

8 p. m., Society for the Preservation And Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America, West Roxbury-Roslindale; Sacred Heart School Yard, Poplar st.

8 p. m., Rock Concert, East Boston; East Boston Stadium, Porter st.,

8:30 p. m., Moviebus-Legend of the Lone Ranger, Jamaica Plain; Call & Williams sts.

Dates, times and locations are subject to change. For confirmation of performance, call 261-1660.

RA. 6-30

Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra

Wednesday Morning at 10:15
Harry Ellis Dickson Conducting

Suite from "The Nutcracker" Tchaikovsky
Ouverture Miniature—Marche—Danse de la Fee Dragee—Trepak—Danse des Mirlitons—Valse des Fleurs

Finale (Presto: Molto allergo e vivace from the Piano Concerto No. 1 in G minor, Op. 25 Mendelssohn

Soloist: Michael Thomopoulos
Hoe-Down, from "Rodeo" Copland

First Movement (Allegro moderato from the Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D major Haydn

Solist: Marjorie Kransberg

Two Sleigh Rides Mozart and Anderson

On the Esplanade, March Bodge

The Star Spangle Banner

HAMILTON-WENHAM CHRONICLE
HAMILTON MASS.
W. 4,010

JUN 30 1971

New England Newsclip

POPS SOLOIST

Miss Marjorie Jill Kransberg will be guest soloist with the Boston Pops orchestra under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson at the annual children's concert on the Esplanade at 10:15 this morning. Marjorie, the 12-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John N. Kransberg, former Wenham residents, will perform Haydn's Concerto in C. Major, first movement.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540

JUN 30 1971

New England Newsclip

Pops at Hatch Shell

WEDNESDAY AT 10:15 A. M.
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conducto
Suite from "The Nutcracker" Tchaikovsk
Finale (Presto: Molto allegro e vivace from the Piano Concerto No. 1 i G minor, Op. 25 Mendelssoh
Soloist: MICHAEL THOMOPOULOS
Hoe-Down, from "Rodeo" Cocelan
First Movement (Allegro moderato from the Concerto for Violin and Or chestra in D major Hayd
Soloist: MARJORIE KRANSBERG
Two Sleigh Rides Mozart and Anderso
On the Esplanade, March Bodg

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
WEDNESDAY AT 7:30 P.M.
CHARLESTOWN
BUNKER HILL, Conductor
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conductor
National Emblem March Basle
Overture to "William Tell" Rossi
By the Beautiful Blue Danube, Waltz Strau
Dance of the Hours, from "La Gi conda Ponchiel

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Victor Herbert Favorites arr. Santo
"Sing Out" arr. Haymi
Bostonian Suite Brown-Langendo

96

Sunshine and music

ON THE ESPLANADE — Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson helps soloist Marjorie Kransberg tune her violin (above) as yesterday's Esplanade concert for children gets underway. Intense interest is evidenced on the faces of many of those in attendance (below)

Joe Dennehy photos

Globe 7.1 P.3

ALLSTON-BRIGHTON
CITIZEN ITEM
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 8,900

JUL 1 1971

New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony highlights week of Summerthing

Allston-Brighton Summerthing will present the Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra this Wednesday, July 7 at 7:30 p.m. at Rogers Park in Brighton. This free concert highlights a week of music and drama produced for the Allston-Brighton area.

Scheduled festivities for the period from July 1 to July 7 also include a free rock concert featuring "Shad Rag" on Thursday, July 1 at Rogers Park at 7:30 p.m. Friday, July 2, there will be a magic show at 2:30 p.m. at Fidelis Way.

Also there will be a dance-band concert at Oak Square on Monday, July 5, from 6-8 p.m. Mayor Kevin White is scheduled to make an appearance at the free concert. Earlier that day there will be a performance staged by the People and Players Theatre Company at 2:30 p.m. at Faneuil Project.

The Players, a group of actors and singers and dancers, perform on mobile stages and offer skits and songs as part of their entertainment package.

Last Saturday at the MDC rink at Cleveland Circle, Allston-Brighton Summerthing held its first musical festival of the 1971 season. Featured for the free concert was "Shad Rag," a local rock group from the Allston-Brighton area. A mixed gathering of adults and teen-agers attended the concert.

Musical programs promise to be the primary thrust of Summerthing's efforts in the Allston-Brighton area. Programs ranging from the Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra to barbershop quartets and amateur rock groups will be presented throughout the summer.

Also part of Summerthing's planned activities with music there will be musical instruction and workshops in various instruments.

Helen Massirman, the program's director has indicated that there will be lessons available on drums, sax, clarinet, flute, piano, and guitar. The program for lessons will begin July 12. There will be no charge for the lessons, although rental instruments will be available.

Also included in the instruction program will be a special workshop for pre-schoolers which will feature instruction and appreciation in music. "Anyone interested in this program is urged to register at Summerthing's Brighton office at 20 Chestnut Hill Ave.," Mrs. Massirman said.

MUSIC ON A SUMMER EVENING — Some spectators sit, some stretch as Harry Ellis Dickson conducts members of the Boston Symphony in a concert at the base of Bunker Hill in Charlestown. Last night's program was the first of five to be presented in various sections of the city in cooperation with Summerthing. Others will be staged in Dorchester, Brighton, Hyde Park and at City Hall Plaza in addition to the regular concerts at the Hatch Shell. (Bill Brett photo)

Globe 7.1

Daily calendar

BOSTON SYMPHONY ESPLANADE ORCHESTRA — Towne Field, Dorchester at 7:30. Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. Works of Elgar, Suppe, Anderson, Strauss, Bodge, Loewe.

NOON-TIME CONCERTS — St. John the Evangelist Church, 33 Bowdoin st. at noon. Recording of Beethoven, Symphony No. 9.

FESTIVAL OF OPERA, BALLET AND SYMPHONY FILMS — Garden Cinema, Arlington street at Boylston. Verdi Requiem, La Scala production with Leontyne Price, Luciano Pavarotti, Fiorenza Cossoto, Nicolai Chiaurov, Herbert von Karajan conducting. At 2:15, 4, 5:45, 7:30, 9:15.

JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL — Lee, at 3 p.m. The Cincinnati Ballet Company; Susan Hendl and Edward Villella. "Winter's Traces," "Concerto," and two Pas de Deux to be announced.

"MARIGOLDS" — New Theater, 12 Holyoke st., Cambridge, at 7:30. Smotherhood — from Paul Zindel, whose drama won the Pulitzer Prize.

"GROOVE TUBE"—Video Theater, 24 Brighton av., at 7:30 and 9:30. Script-tease in living-room comfort.

"THE PROPOSITION"—241 Hampshire st., Inman sq., Cambridge, at 8. A-typical topical satire. A

"I DO! I DO!"—Cape Cod Melody Tent, West Main Street Rotary, Hyannis (for showtimes, telephone 775-9100. Patrice Munsel and Stephen Douglas star. A

"FORTY CARATS"—North Shore Music-Theater, Beverly, at 8:15. Barbara Britton is featured in a "frothy French farce," about a businesswoman who becomes romantically involved with a younger man.

"PLAZA SUITE" — South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset, at 8:30. Neil Simon's hit comedy, set in a famous New York hotel, stars Edie Adams and Tom Poston. A Student solos

Lynn Chang, Newton High School student, will perform the Paganini Violin Concerto in D-major with the ES B Esplanade Orchestra, July 9 at 8:30 p.m.

Globe 7-1

Entertainment timetable

Music

TOWNE FIELD, Dorchester — Esplanade Concert, Harry Ellis Dickson conducting BSO. 7:30.

CSM 7-1

The Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra will present a series of concerts June 28 through July 10. Concerts will be performed at the Hatch Shell every evening beginning at 8:30 p.m. except June 30 and July 1, 4, 7 and 8.

BAD 7-1

Pops Tonight

NT. 7-1

THURSDAY AT 7:30 P. M.
TOWN FIELD, DORCHESTER
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON, Conductor

Pomp and Circumstance, March No. 1 in D Major — Elgar
Overture to "Light Cavalry" — Suppe
Irish Suite — Anderson

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes — Strauss
Song Fest Medley — arr. Bodge
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe

Boston Symphony Program

Thursday Evening at 7:30
Towne Field, Dorchester
Harry Ellis Dickson Conducting

Pomp and Circumstance, March No. 1 in D Major — Elgar
Overture to "Light Cavalry" — Suppe
Irish Suite — Andersen
Irish Washerwoman — Minstrel Boy
The Last Rose of Summer — The Girl I Left Behind Me — Wearing of the Green — The Rakes of Mallow

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Tales from the Vienna Woods, Waltzes — Strauss

Song Fest Medley — arr. Bodge
Pack Up Your Troubles—Smiles—Till We Meet Again—In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree—My Wild Irish Rose—Take Me Out to the Ball Game—Sweet Adeline—Put On Your Old Gray Bonnet — There is a Tavern in the Town—Maine Stein Song—Let Me Call You Sweetheart
Selection from "My Fair Lady" — Loewe
Get Me to the Church on Time—Wouldn't It Be Loverly—I've Grown Accustomed to Her Face — I Could Have Danced All Night—On the Street Where You Live—The Rain in Spain—With a Little Bit of Luck

55 Record American, 7-1

RA. 7-1

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUL 1 1971

New England Newsclip

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUL 1 1971

New England Newsclip

Summerthing concert by the Boston Pops Orchestra draws music fans to Bunker Hill in Charlestown as Harry Ellis Dickson conducts. This is the first week of free concerts by the Pops throughout the Boston area. Tonight the orchestra plays at 7:30 p. m. on Town Field, Dorchester.

Staff Photo by Ray Lussier

RA. 7-1

Five-month-old Jesse Biddle of Cambridge finds program much to his taste as he and mom watch Pops Concert.

Staff Photo by Leo Tierney

Mother, Tot Concert Draws Soft Cheers Over Charles

The diaper and carriage set seems to really like good music.

Of course it makes some cry and puts others to sleep, but for the most part it contented them and when they were content their mothers were too.

There were about 1000 people, made up mostly of mothers and pre-school children relaxing at the Special Children's Concert given by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra.

The cheers from the playpens and carriages were not as loud as those at rock concerts, but everyone seemed to enjoy themselves at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade.

By Peter W. Main, photo staff

Youth Concert

An annual summer event at Boston's Hatch Memorial Shell is the Youth Concert. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, played several light classical works before a large morning audience. Above, Miss Marjorie Kransberg is violin soloist for a Haydn concerto. For two weeks the orchestra is playing four nights a week at the Hatch Shell. And in cooperation with Summerthing, five other concerts are being presented in other parts of the city.

98

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042

JUL 1 1971 New England Newsclip

Sunshine and music

ON THE ESPLANADE — Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson helps soloist Marjorie Kransberg tune her violin (above) as yesterday's Esplanade concert for children gets underway. Intense interest is evidenced on the faces of many of those in attendance (below)

Joe Dennehy photos

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042

JUL 1 1971 New England Newsclip

MUSIC ON A SUMMER EVENING — Some spectators sit, some stretch as Harry Ellis Dickson conducts members of the Boston Symphony in a concert at the base of Bunker Hill in Charlestown. Last night's program was the first of five to be presented in various sections of the city in cooperation with Summerthing. Others will be staged in Dorchester, Brighton, Hyde Park and at City Hall Plaza in addition to the regular concerts at the Hatch Shell. (Bill Brett photo)

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042

JUL 1 1971 New England Newsclip

ON THE ESPLANADE — Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson helps soloists Marjorie Kransberg tune her violin as Esplanade concert for children gets underway. (Joe Dennehy photos)

NEWS TRIBUNE
WALTHAM, MASS.
D. 16,641

JUL 1 1971 New England Newsclip

Young violinist at Esplanade

Lynn Chang, a June graduate of Newton High School, will be violin soloist at the Esplanade concert Friday evening, July 9. Arthur Fiedler will conduct.

This will be his fifth appearance with the Esplanade Orchestra. He will perform the Paganini violin concerto in D major.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

JUL 1 1971

New England
Newsclip

Esplanade Concerts Begin:

A Summer Tradition

By Camille Roman

The banks of the Charles River in Boston was a scene of modern Americana Monday night as thousands, dressed in jeans, pant suits, long dresses and conservative sports clothes, staked out claims on the grass in front of the Hatch Memorial Shell.

They lounged on blankets and in folding chairs waiting for Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra to open their 43rd season of free summer outdoor concerts.

Some had obviously arrived early to eat supper and relax without worrying about finding a good place to sit.

Arthur Fiedler and the orchestra could not disappoint the crowd. Their first program was solid. It included Rakoczi March, from "The Damnation of Faust" by Berlioz, Concerto for Piano and Orchestra by Khachaturian, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 5.

Enthusiasm For Arthur

With each number, the enthusiasm picked up momentum. The applause was deafening. But as soon as the baton gave the downbeat and the orchestra began playing, the crowd became silent. They wanted to hear each note, and whispering members of the audience were sent hostile glances. Beethoven's 5th Symphony seemed to pull the audience into a clamor, and at the end the applause was overwhelmed by pleas for 'More, More' and 'Bravo! Bravo!' Clearly it was another example of Boston's love for Arthur Fiedler and the Esplanade Orchestra.

The MDC had closed off a portion of Storrow Drive so that even the people near the street could hear the concert without the clamor of cars and sirens.

The Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra will be playing concerts every night, except Sunday, through July 10. Five of these concerts are scheduled in different neighborhoods throughout Boston as part of Summerthing. Concerts will be held on the Esplanade at 8:30 tomorrow night, Saturday, Monday, Tuesday and July 9, and 10.

The programs are a magical mixture of classical and popular music. Friday features both Tchaikovsky and selections from 'No, No Nanette.'' Gershwin and selections from "West Side Story" highlight Saturday's program.

A Delicate Balance

Mozart dominates much of the program on Monday and Tuesday and Paganini and Tchaikovsky lead the selections Friday. The closing concert on July 10 has been dubbed "Tchaikovsky Night."

Fiedler knows exactly how to combine classical and popular music on the same program. And it's this delicate balance that has brought crowds to the Esplanade for 43 years and established the series as a part of Boston's tradition.

Audiences come expecting to be entertained and Fiedler never lets them down.

100

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUL 1 1971

New England Newsclip

The Esplanade is crowded for Children's Concert at Hatch Shell

They dance to the music of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians.

Nicer People Like Nicer Music

By DAN McLAUGHLIN

The diaper and carriage set seems to really like good music.

Of course it makes some cry and puts others to sleep, but for the most part it contented them and when they were content their mothers were too.

There were about 1000 people, made up mostly of mothers and pre-school children attending the Special Children's Concert given Wednesday by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra.

The cheers from the playpens and carriages were not as loud as those at rock concerts, but everyone seemed to enjoy themselves at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade.

★

The 50 piece orchestra was under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson, and it was sponsored by the Massachusetts Port Authority.

Five-month-old Jesse Biddle, son of Mrs. Gerry Biddle of Kelly rd., Cambridge, started out singing in his own language in his carriage, then his eyelids got heavy and the music escorted him into dreamland.

"We read about the concert in the newspaper and it seemed to be a nice way to spend some time with my son," Mrs. Biddle said.

The music had been going on only about five minutes when three-year-old Pamela Nathanson turned to her mother, Mrs. David Nathanson of Randolph, and asked, "When is it going to be over?"

Andrew Kopp, also three, looked up at Dickson conducting the music, and asked his mother, Mrs. Eleanor Kopp of Canton, "Mommy, what is he doing up there?"

Mrs. Patricia Burdick of Centre st., Watertown, noticed her son, Jonathan, 11-months-old, was getting a little too much sun, so she used a copy of the Record American to protect him.

★

He just gurgled and cooed as he watched his sister, Lee Ann, 11, and his brother, Scott, 9, listen.

Sitting in the shade under some trees was a group of 46 senior citizens from the Hebrew Rehabilitation Center for the Aged in Roslindale.

They joined in with the clapping as a group of youngsters formed a circle and did a sort of a jump-up dance

The MDC had left litter boxes around the area and when the concert was over, it appeared nicer people like nicer music. They were not only well dressed and clean, they also left the Esplanade clean.

For Matthew Holmes, 2, a drink while listening.

Jennifer Fletcher, 1½, plays during the concert.

Staff Photos by Leo Tierney

Five-months-old Jesse, finds the program much to his liking, as does his mother, Mrs. Gerry Biddle.

TOWNSMAN
WELLESLEY, MASS.
W. 8,500

JUL 1 1971

New England Newsclip

Lazy Summer Days? If That's Your Style, Fine . . . Otherwise:

On this Fourth of July weekend you can celebrate by tuning in on the forty-second season of free outdoor concerts by the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra. Programs will be available for enjoyment every day until Saturday, July 10. Concerts in collaboration with the Mayor's Summerthing will be held tonight at 7:30 p.m. at Towne Field in Dorchester, in Boston on July 7 at 12:00 noon at the City Hall Plaza, in Brighton at Rogers Park on July 7 at 7:30 p.m., and in Hyde Park at Smith Field on July 8 at 7:30 p.m. Evening concerts will be conducted on July 2, 3, 5, 6, 9, and 10 at Hatch Memorial Shell on the Charles River Esplanade at 8:30 p.m.

Go to Camp Massasoit! There are openings in all four of the two week summer periods which began June 28 and will end August 20. Those eligible for enrollment are five to twelve-year-olds who will find a full schedule of physical and educational activities in this Newton Y.M.C.A. day camp. The camp day is Monday through Friday, 9:00 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. If you're a kid who wants to get away, or you're a parent who wants your kid to get away, call 244-6050 and ask for the Camp Massasoit office. Complete information on the day camp may be obtained by calling that number.

Those hooked on fishing might be interested to know that the Governor awards trophies to men, women and children from Massachusetts and out-of-state for catching salt water fish of notable size. Pins are awarded for 17 species of fish, each with minimum size requirements, and the Governor's Trophies go to the pin winners with the biggest fish of each of the 17 species.

The Children's Museum in Boston on the Jamaicaway has announced "wide-open house" through August 31 (except July 4) from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m. There are exhibits and activities for children and their parents to enjoy. For more information, call Carolyn Harrigan, 522-4800, ext. 58, who says that the Museum has many recipes for summer fun waiting to be tested.

You can see magnificent art most of the time at the Boston Museum, but it's seldom that you can see the quantity of works as will be shown for the next two weeks when "Cezanne: An Exhibition in Honor of the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Phillips Collection" will appear Wednesday through Sunday from 10 to 5, Tuesday from 5 to 9. Admission to the exhibition is 75¢, students and children 50¢, and members free. Museum admission is $1,00, Tuesday evening, 5 to 9, free and Sunday morning, 10 to 1, 50¢. Free at all times to members and children under 16.

What's in a name? You never can tell anymore. For instance, with a name like Theatre Two, you might imagine that the address would be 2 River street or 2 Anything street, etc., but not so. Theatre Two is a new two man company located at 330 A Newbury street in Boston which is going to tour Boston's entourage during the summer. Joel and Steven Polinsky, Joel acts and Steven directs, and the two of them say that they will bring "a wide variety of topical comedy and satirical pieces anyplace including your living room." The company performs at hospitals free of charge. Organizations may phone 536-1047 or write Theatre Two for information.

The Massachusetts Finals of the Miss American Teen-Ager Pageant have been moved up to October 22 and 23 at the Schine Inn in Chicopee, Massachusetts. Applications for this pageant, in which girls are judged on civic contributions, scholastic achievements, poise, personality, and appearance, may be obtained from Certification Headquarters, 126 Bunn Drive, Rockton, Illinois. Girls 13-17 are eligible to enter, but must be 17 on September 10 to qualify for 1972 finals.

Satisfaction comes from helping people. Consider giving your time as a volunteer for the Massachusetts Association For the Blind. Volunteers are needed to do things which require sight, like reading letters and books, grocery shopping, writing checks and letters for blind people. MAB volunteers attend a two-hour training session to learn about blindness, MAB services, and the Volunteer Services Program. Volunteers are matched against client request and assignments are made. To learn more, write or call MAB, 120 Boylston street, Boston, 1 02116 (542-3106.)

TODAY'S SUMMERTHING

Today's schedule for Summerthing:

— Tomorrowmobile, Heath Street Playground, Bromley-Heath, 10 a.m.

— Stage 1 Drama Workshop, Ross Field, Hyde Park, 10 a.m.

— Carol & John, Mission Ext., Annunciation rd., Parker Hill-Fenway, 10 a.m.

— Plantmobile, Dorchester House, 1353 Dorchester av., Dorchester, 10:30 a.m.

— Street Corner Trio, Castle Square, South End, 11 a.m.

— Brass Band Concert, City Hall Plaza, 12 noon.

— Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Nazareth Children's Home, Pond street, Jamaica Plain, 1 p.m.

— Plantmobile, Fenway in the Grove, Fenway, 1:30 p.m.

— Stage 1 Drama Workshop, Heath Street Playground, Bromley-Heath, 2 p.m.

Carol & John, Toddlers Workshop, 408 Meridian st., 2 p.m.

—Street Corner Ensemble, Lenox-Camden Project, South End, 2 p.m.

—Tomorrowmobile, YMCA, River st., Hyde Park, 2 p.m.

—Concert for the elderly, O'Meara court, Charlestown, 2 p.m.

—Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Home for Italian Children, 1125 Centre st., Jamaica Plain, 3 p.m.

—Street Corner Group, Blackstone Park, South End, 6:30 p.m.

—Rock Concert with Shadrag, Rogers Park, Allston, 7 p.m.

—Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Towne Field, Dorchester, 7:30 p.m.

—Associate Artists Opera Company "Don Pasquale," Hanover street, North End, 8 p.m.

—Moviebus "The Legend of the Lone Ranger", Beechland Project, West Roxbury-Roslindale, 8:30 p.m.

—Rock Concert, Walker Playground, Mattapan, 8 p.m.

Dates, times and locations are subject to change. For confirmation call 261-1660.

Globe 7-1

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

JUL 1 1971

New England Newsclip

By Peter W. Main, photo staff

Youth Concert

An annual summer event at Boston's Hatch Memorial Shell is the Youth Concert. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, played several light classical works before a large morning audience. Above, Miss Marjorie Kransberg is violin soloist for a Haydn concerto. For two weeks the orchestra is playing four nights a week at the Hatch Shell. And in cooperation with Summerthing, five other concerts are being presented in other parts of the city.

102

CSM 7-2-71

Battle music at Bunker Hill?

By Louis Snyder

Charlestown, Mass.

The Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra has joined up with Boston's "Summerthing" for the second season to play four concerts away from Hatch Shell on the Esplanade, in outlying neighborhoods where the Boston Symphony (or even the part of it that makes up this orchestra) has been a faraway legend. On Wednesday night, it returned to perform for a mass of humanity which covered the grassy west slope of Breed's Hill, on which Bunker Hill Monument stands, and depending where one sat or stretched himself out, the results were variable.

For those near the open spaces in front of the portable orchestral shell, the doings of a transient army of rambunctious small fry were continuously distracting. Higher up on the greensward, many young couples and better behaved children, and some senior citizens with their own chairs, drank in the sound with evident pleasure and respectful attention. Even the popcorn and balloon hawkers and the inevitable troupe of errant dogs moved through the lollers without causing any complaints. And the appearance of a hazy half moon and a pleasant cooling breeze as dusk fell were all on the plus side.

Harry Ellis Dickson, the conductor, had chosen a program which verged more toward Pops than Esplanade — the National Emblem March, some Rossini, Strauss (Johann), Ponchielli, and Victor Herbert, with a popularly received "Sing Out" of old favorites, rousingly led by the Pops' "singing waitress," the genial Ann Hayward. Two excerpts from Keith Brown's "Bostonia Suite" ended the evening, which reaped its share of applause and shouts of "More!" Up on the hill, the evening seemed a great success.

Outdoor perils

But musicians are very sensitive people, particularly dedicated members of famous orchestras. Their musical integrity is riled by inadequate acoustical provisions (mikes weren't in good working order on Wednesday), their pride is wounded by crank hornblowers (a demon was loose behind the shell during the "William Tell" Overture), and they ask why they should suffer capricious lighting and failed sanitary facilities to play for an audience which has even one stone-thrower in it. One musician did concede that "someone should do it, but not the Boston Symphony."

Last night, the orchestra played in Dorchester, and next week it will venture forth again to Brighton and Hyde Park. In all these places are people who will hear, perhaps for the first time live, what a first-rate orchestra sounds like under a leader concerned more with inspiring than amusing them. Under the most fortuitous circumstances, free alfresco concerts have built-in problems for both performers and listeners. It remains to be seen, despite the rather unique service they perform, whether members of the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra will find these irritations too hard to take in the future. But if they do, are they prepared to forfeit the respect of a new audience, just beginning to build?

Entertainment timetable

Music

HATCH SHELL — Esplanade concert, Arthur Fiedler conducting, with Marylou Speaker, violin, Lawrence Wolfe, double bass. 8:30.

Globe 7/2

Daily calendar

"JOHN BROWN'S BODY" —Regis College, Weston, at 8:30. Adaptation, with music and rear-screen projections.

"MARIGOLDS" — New Theater, 12 Holyoke st., Cambridge, at 7 and 10. "Smotherhood — from Paul Zindel, whose drama won the Pulitzer Prize.

"GROOVE TUBE"—Video Theater, 24 Brighton av., at 7:30, 9:30, and 11:30. Script-tease—in living-room comfort.

"THE PROPOSITION"—241 Hampshire st., Inman sq., Cambridge, at 9 and 11. A-typical topical satire.

CHILDREN'S PROGRAM & "GISELLE" — Garden Cinema, Arlington Street, at 2 for the children's production, and at 4, 5:45, 7:30, and 9:15 for "Giselle," part of a series of film from opera, ballet, and symphony.

"I DO! I DO" — Cape Cod Melody Tent, West Main Street Rotary, Hyannis (for showtimes, telephone 775-9100), final performance. Patrice Munsel and Stephen Douglas star in the "musical hit."

"FORTY CARATS" — North Shore Music-Theatre, Beverly, at 8:15. Barbara Britton is featured in a "frothy French farce," about a businesswoman who becomes romantically involved with a younger man.

"PLAZA SUITE" — South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset, at 8:30. Neil Simon's hit comedy, set in a famous New York hotel, stars Edie Adams and Tom Poston.

6-011 C. MULLEN

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL — Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. at 10:30 a.m. Open rehearsal of Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL — Lee, at 3 p.m. The Cincinnati Ballet Company; Susan Hendl and Edward Villella. "Winter's Traces," "Concerto," and two Pas de Deux to be announced.

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL—Tanglewood, Lenox, at 8:30. Boston Symphony Orchestra with Seiji Ozawa conducting. Mozart, Serenade for Winds, K. 388; Bernstein, Serenade for Violin (Joseph Silverstein); Berio, Serenade for Flute (Doriot Anthony Dwyer); Tchaikovsky, Serenade for Strings.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ESPLANADE ORCHESTRA — Hatch Shell at 8:30. Arthur Fiedler conducting. Works of Gould, Copland, Bernstein, Hayman, Gershwin, MacDermot.

H.T. 7/2

Pops Tonight

FRIDAY AT 8:30 P.M.
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36 Tchaikovsky
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Grand Duo Concertante, for Violin and Double Bass Bottesini
Violin: MARYLOU SPEAKER
Double Bass: LAWRENCE WOLFE
Selection from "No, No, Nanette" Youmans

CSM 7/3

Music

HATCH SHELL — Esplanade Concert, Arthur Fiedler conducting, with Leo Litwin piano.

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231
JUL 2 1971
New England Newsclip

People in the News

Compiled From AP and UPI News Services

Doctors in Yuba City, Cal., said hospitalized mass murder suspect Juan V. Corona, who suffered an apparent heart attack last month, complained of more chest pains yesterday.

Corona, 37, who was hospitalized June 18, has pleaded innocent to slaying 10 of the 25 middle-aged men whose hacked bodies were found in graves along the Feather river.

Dr. Thomas Leavenworth, medical director at Sutter County General Hospital, said Corona probably had first suffered a heart attack.

Corona, a farm labor contractor, is scheduled for a preliminary hearing July 13.

★

Philippines President Ferdinand E. Marcos filed an $8.3 million libel suit against Time, Inc. yesterday.

Marcos charged in the complaint that an article in the April 12 issue of Time "Employs the most abusive, the most vicious, the most malevolent calumny, fabrication and falsehood to deliberately and directly injure the president of the republic. . . and the people of the Philippines."

(In New York, A spokeman for the magazine said the legal papers filed by Marcos had not yet been received. "Time Magazine will certainly defend itself against the suit," he said.)

The complaint specifically said Time accused Marcos of being "A dishonest official," "a corruptor," and a "dictator" and of being "immoral."

Sammy Davis Jr., wearing a peace symbol pendant on a golden chain around his neck and an American flag pin on his lapel watched President Nixon sign a document which made him a member of the National Advisory Council on Economic Opportunity yesterday.

The President appointed the 45-year-old singer-dancer-actor to the 21-member council for the remainder of a term xpiring Sept. 22, 1972.

The President told the entertainer that he "will never forget" seeing Davis, his father and uncle perform

Arthur Stivaletta, 9

at a New York night club almost twenty years ago.

★

Nine-year-old Arthur Stivaletta, Jr., of Dedham, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Esplanade Concert, Saturday night.

A student at Oakdale Elementary School in Dedham, Arthur will conduct a rendition of "Stars and Stripes Forever."

The youth gained the opportunity through the generosity of his father, founder and chairman of the Wake Up America Committee. The Dedham contractor made the highest bid on Channel 2's recent auction.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
JUL 2 1971
New England Newsclip

Battle music at Bunker Hill?

By Louis Snyder

Charlestown, Mass.

The Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra has joined up with Boston's "Summerthing" for the second season to play four concerts away from Hatch Shell on the Esplanade, in outlying neighborhoods where the Boston Symphony (or even the part of it that makes up this orchestra) has been a faraway legend. On Wednesday night, it returned to perform for a mass of humanity which covered the grassy west slope of Breed's Hill, on which Bunker Hill Monument stands, and depending where one sat or stretched himself out, the results were variable.

For those near the open spaces in front of the portable orchestral shell, the doings of a transient army of rambunctious small fry were continuously distracting. Higher up on the greensward, many young couples and better behaved children, and some senior citizens with their own chairs, drank in the sound with evident pleasure and respectful attention. Even the popcorn and balloon hawkers and the inevitable troupe of errant dogs moved through the lollers without causing any complaints. And the appearance of a hazy half moon and a pleasant cooling breeze as dusk fell were all on the plus side.

Harry Ellis Dickson, the conductor, had chosen a program which verged more toward Pops than Esplanade — the National Emblem March, some Rossini, Strauss (Johann), Ponchielli, and Victor Herbert, with a popularly received "Sing Out" of old favorites, rousingly led by the Pops' "singing waitress," the genial Ann Hayward. Two excerpts from Keith Brown's "Bostonia Suite" ended the evening, which reaped its share of applause and shouts of "More!" Up on the hill, the evening seemed a great success.

Outdoor perils

But musicians are very sensitive people, particularly dedicated members of famous orchestras. Their musical integrity is riled by inadequate acoustical provisions (mikes weren't in good working order on Wednesday), their pride is wounded by crank hornblowers (a demon was loose behind the shell during the "William Tell" Overture), and they ask why they should suffer capricious lighting and failed sanitary facilities to play for an audience which has even one stone-thrower in it. One musician did concede that "someone should do it, but not the Boston Symphony."

Last night, the orchestra played in Dorchester, and next week it will venture forth again to Brighton and Hyde Park. In all these places are people who will hear, perhaps for the first time live, what a first-rate orchestra sounds like under a leader concerned more with inspiring than amusing them. Under the most fortuitous circumstances, free alfresco concerts have built-in problems for both performers and listeners. It remains to be seen, despite the rather unique service they perform, whether members of the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra will find these irritations too hard to take in the future. But if they do, are they prepared to forfeit the respect of a new audience, just beginning to build?

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540
JUL 2 1971
New England Newsclip

HUB-BUB

Money's Funny, Here's Why

By J. J. SMITH

Split-Second Sermonette: It's nice to see people with plenty of get-up-and-go—especially if some of them are visiting you!

SPARKS FROM THE SMITH'S ANVIL: "Money is funny," says Lou Dadasis of the 57 Carver restaurant. "Men get their pictures on it and women get their hands on it." . . . Fact: There are over six million overweight women in this country. Of course, these are round figures . . . Barbara Donchess of Canton sends in her favorite pithy Yankee expression: "A friend's no good if you can't use him." . . . Medford's Twin Drive-In Gen. Mgr. Harry Browning feels so neglected that he wishes somebody would tap his phone!

SMITH

RIBS 'N ROASTS: The report persists that a Boston restaurateur was about to jump from the center span of the Mystic-Tobin Bridge. Another Hub restaurant owner grabbed him and said, "Let's talk this over." They did. And a few minutes later they both jumped! . . . Today is officially Frank Fontaine Day in Pittsfield—and the rib-tickling comedian will give a free public show at 12:30 p. m. at the Colonial Hilton Inn . . . Musician-composer Johnny Christy of Belmont will portray a jazz musician in a "cameo role" to be filmed in Puerto Rico by producer Arthur Jacobs, formerly of Boston . . . You'll have to hurry if you want to see that man-made iceberg in that man-made lake at Snow Lake Hotel at Mount Snow, Vt. The iceberg (it's a real one) resulted from snow-removal operations there during the ski season . . . Pianist-Auditor Al Bruner of Wright Enterprises says, "Young people are learning that the one thing that comes to him who waits is whiskers." . . . Manager Nick Pontikas of the Branding Iron observes, "A beautiful girl is much easier to look at than listen to—but then who listens?" . . . Former teacher, now turned seminarian, Phil (Higgy) Higgins of Mansfield played two of his compositions at the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts in NYC. His piano virtuosity received kudos from leading music critics and a special "Bravo" from renowned pianist Autur Rubenstein, his idol.

On the way to the wings: Lee Ann DePietro of Wakefield says her husband is a "cad"—but it's all in fun because her husband, Carl Arthur DePietro, who operates A. C. Richards upholstery in Melrose, qualifies for Hub-Bub's initial-that-spell series, CAD . . . Norton High's director of special education Al Wagner is the kind of guy who doesn't blow his own horn. He has had such notables as Bobby Orr and Walt Disney movie actor Kurt Russell in to entertain his class of 19 "exceptional" children, much to their delight . . . Add Logan Airport's Sonesta Hotel to the water bed scene. . . . Boston native Linda Eskinas of "The Dirtiest Show In Town" reports that while touring the South she visited an old YWCA in which there was a sign reading, "Washington Slept Here. Not George—Martha!" . . . Excerpt from a Royal Navy officer's fitness report: "Although an able and competent officer, he brings a deeper and richer meaning to the word cad." . . . Al Hunt of the Lynnfield Lions Club reports this sign at an auto dealership off Route 128: "A penny for your thoughts—a dollar for your trade." . . . Hub composer Jordan Ramin reports hearing a conversation at Rattazzi's in NYC in which someone mentioned a movie titled, "There Was A Crooked Man." A nearby agent screamed, "I'll sue!"

EXIT LINES: A guy at The Jib plans to read "The Holiday Marriage" as soon as his wife goes on vacation . . . Ted Howard of Wayland has a unique arrangement with his milkman—the guy leaves the milk in the cellar refrigerator, and at week's end Ted leaves the exact cash for the bill. T'other day, Ted met the milkman coming in and he remarked, "I just want to tell you that in all my 20 years selling milk, you're the only customer who pays me COLD CASH!" . . . Would you believe—that noted actress Marlene Dietrich's favorite meal is a hot dog with champagne? . . . Hub publicist C. Paul Luongo spotted boarding a jet for a week's vacation in Acapulco . . . Arthur Stivaletta Jr., son of the "Wake Up America" man, will sub for Arthur Fiedler at the Hatch Shell tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. when he conducts "the Stars and Stripes Forever." Pop won the deal by his bid at that Channel 2 auction.

Daffy-nition: REPARTEE—An insult with its best bib-and-tucker on.

ADVERTISER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 415,231

JUL 4 1971

New England Newsclip

ARTHUR STIVALETTA, JR., 9, CONDUCTS BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
Chance-Of-Lifetime Was Result Of Bid Made By Dad On Channel 2 Auction
Staff Photo by John Landers, Jr.

Mini-Maestro Gets Standing Ovation

Nine-Year-Old Dedham Lad Conducts Boston Symphony

By TOM DONOVAN

A nine-year-old Dedham youth had the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra responding to his command and a crowd of 18,000 music lovers on their feet at the Esplanade Concert on the Charles River last night.

Arthur Stivaletta, Jr., was given the chance to conduct the internationally-known orchestra as a result of a bid made by his father on the recent Channel 2 auction.

The senior Stivalletta, founder of the Wake Up America Committee, said he bid for the privilege, "so Butch would have this moment to always remember."

★

And remember it he will. The blond youngster, patriotically clad in a blue blazer, red tie and white pants, stood before the podium and raised his baton with all the confidence of a veteran conductor.

He directed the musicians through a stirring rendition of "Stars and Stripes Forever" while the audience intermittently applauded the lad's showmanship.

The audience seemed particularly pleased when, half way through the number, the mini-maestro placed both hands on the baton and continued to direct the orchestra like a drum major at a football halftime.

The youngster had half the audience on their feet with the final swipe of the baton. But he really wowed them with his acknowledgement of the applause.

★

His first bow was played straight with a modest bending at the waist. When he returned to face the howling crowd the second time, he slipped in a little wave after the bow.

But on his third curtain call the youth signaled for his orchestra to stand and take a bow, much to the delight of the crowd.

Oh yes, there was another conductor by the name of Arthur watching from the wings. "The kid's OK," Maestra Fiedler smiled his approval.

ARTHUR FIEDLER ASKS FOR BATON
Maestro's Smile Means — A Job Well Done!

Globe 7/4

MUSIC

Today

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL — Tanglewood, Lenox, at 2:30 p.m. Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor; Joseph Silverstein, violin; Tanglewood Festival Chorus. Vivaldi, "The Seasons"; Monteverdi, Music from Vespers of 1610.
GARRICK OHLSSON, PIANO — Spanish Courtyard; Caramoor Festival; Katonah, N.Y., at 5:30 p.m. Works of Thomkins, Rossi, Soler, Bach-Busoni, Albeniz, Debussy, and Ravel.
AEOLIAN CHAMBER PLAYERS — Smith Auditorium; Bowdoin College; Brunswick, Maine, at 8:15 p.m.

Monday

ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Hatch Shell at 8:30. Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. Works of Rossini, Mozart, Ravel. With Paul Fried, flute.

Tuesday

BRUCE BENNET, ORGAN — First Congregational Church of Winchester at 8:15 p.m. Works of Clerambault, Bach, Franck, Diesler, McKinley, Dupre.
ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Hatch Shell at 8:30. Arthur Fiedler conducting. Tana Bawden, piano. Works of Handel, Mozart, J. Strauss, Bock, Lennon-McCartney.
WEST END CHAMBER ENSEMBLE — Hopkins Center; Dartmouth College; Hanover, N.H., at 8 p.m. Haydn, Part songs; Carter, Sonata for Flute, Oboe, Cello and Harpsichord; Ravel, Chansons Madecasses; Schubert, Piano Trio in B-flat major.
JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL — Ted Shawn Theatre; Lee, Mass., at 8:40 p.m. Norman Walker and Modern Dance Company; Jayne Hillyer and Bill Martin-Viscount; Sahomi Tachibana (classical Japanese Dances).

Wednesday

ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Boston City Hall Plaza at noon. Arthur Fiedler conducting. Works of Tchaikovsky, Brahms, Offenbach, Lai, Bacharach, Sousa.
ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Rodgers Park, Brighton at 7:30. Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. Works of Verdi, Suppe, Bizet, J. Strauss, Tchaikovsky, Bernstein, Lake, Wilson.
SUMMER SING WITH MASTERWORKS CHORALE — Temple Isaiah, 55 Lincoln st., Lexington, at 8 p.m. Open score-reading of Handel's "Judas Maccabeus" with Phyllis Isaacson, guest conductor.
GEORGE LAMPHEER, ORGAN — Methuen Memorial Music Hall, North Andover, at 8:30 p.m.

PIANIST — Ruth Laredo appears with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Friday at 8:30 in the Shed.

JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL — Ted Shawn Theatre; Lee, Mass. at 8:40. Norman Walker and Modern Dance Company, Jayne Hillyer and Bill Martin-Viscount; Sahomi Tachibana.
NORFOLK CONCERTS — Norfolk, Conn., Music Shed at 8:30. Mozart's "Ill Re Pastore."
MUSIC IN VERMONT — Saint Michael's College; Winooski, Vt., at 8 p.m. A harpsichord concert by Prof. George Todd to be held in college chapel.

Thursday

ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Smith Field, Hyde Park at 7:30 p.m. Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. Works of Bigelow, Rossini, Grainger, Offenbach, Strauss, Haynan, MacDermot.
JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL — Ted Shawn Theatre; Lee, Mass. at 3 p.m. Norman Walker and Modern Dance Company; Jayne Hillyer and Bill Martin-Viscount, Sahomi Tachibana.

Friday

ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Hatch Shell at 8:30. Arthur Fiedler conductor. Lynn Chang, violin. Works of Weber, Paganini, Bach, Rodgers-Anderson, Tchaikovsky.
BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL — Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., at 7 p.m. Weekend prelude with pianist Earl Wild. At 9 p.m., the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Leon Fleisher, conductor; Ruth Laredo, piano. Bartok, Romanian Folk Dances; Hindemith, "The Four Temperaments"; Mozart, Divertimento No. 15.
JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL — Ted Shawn Theatre; Lee, Mass. at 8:40 p.m. Norman Walker and Modern Dance Company; Jayne Hillyer and Bill Martin-Viscount; Tachibana.
CONNECTICUT COLLEGE AMERICAN DANCE FESTIVAL — New London, Conn., at 8 p.m. Lecture-demonstration. Ruby Perez Theatre.
BENJAMIN BRITTEN'S "CURLEW RIVER" — Spanish Courtyard; Caramoor Festival; Katonah, N.Y. at 8:30. With tenor Andrea Velis. Conducted by Julius Rudel.

Saturday

ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Hatch Shell at 8:30. Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. All-Tchaikovsky program.
BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL—Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., at 10:30 a.m. Boston Symphony Orchestra Open Rehearsal. At 8:30 p.m., the B.S.O.; Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor; Jules Eskin, cello. Bach, Suite, No. 4; Haydn, Cello Concerto in C; Brahms, Serenade No. 2.
JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL — Ted Shawn Theatre; Lee, Mass., at 3 p.m. and 8:40 p.m. Norman Walker and Modern Dance Company; Jayne Hillyer and Bill Martin-Viscount; Sahomi Tachibana.
WEST END CHAMBER ENSEMBLE — Hopkins Center; Dartmouth College; Hanover, N.H., at 8 p.m. Monteverdi and Gesualdo Madrigals; Stravinsky, Elegie for Viola, Three Songs from William Shakespeare, and Septet; Schubert, Piano Quintet in A-major (Trout).
CONNECTICUT COLLEGE AMERICAN DANCE FESTIVAL — New London, Conn., at 8 p.m. Performance by Ruby Perez Dance Theatre.
NORFOLK CONCERTS — Norfolk, Conn., Music Shed at 8:30. Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio."

THE AIR-CONDITIONED
E.M.LOEW'S
CENTER 426 0889
Now
2 BIG HITS IN COLOR
— JAMES GARNER —
SUPPORT YOUR LOCAL GUNFIGHTER
Burt Lancaster VALDEZ IS COMING

HT. 7/4

Boston Pops

THIS WEEK'S SCHEDULE

(Concerts take place at Hatch Shell at 8:30 p.m. unless otherwise indicated.)

MONDAY
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting
Overture to "Semiramide" — Rossini
Symphony No. 40 in G minor, K. 550 — Mozart

AMERICA
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Flute Concerto in D maior, K. 314 — Mozart
Soloist PAUL FRIED
Bolero — Ravel

TUESDAY
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
Suite from "The Water Music" — Handel-Harty
Piano Concerto No. 23 in A maior, K. 488 — Mozart
Soloist: TANA BAWDEN
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Wine, Woman and Song, Waltzes — J. Strauss, J
Selection from "Fiddler on the Roof" — Bock
Two Beatle Tunes — Lennon-McCartney

WEDNESDAY
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
Boston City Hall Plaza, Government Center, 12 noon
Polonaise, from "Eugen Onegin" — Tchaikvsky
Academic Festival Overture — Brahms
Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" — Offenbach
Love Story — Lai
Medley of Burt Bacharach Tunes — arr. Knisht
The Stars and Stripes Forever — Sousa
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

WEDNESDAY
Rodgers Park, Brighton, 7:30 P.M.
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting
Triumphal March, from "Aida" — Verdi
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" — Suppe
Suite from "Carmen" — Bizet
Wine, Woman and Song, Waltzes — J. Strauss, J.

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Marche Slave — Tchaikovsky
Selection from "West Side Story" — Bernstein
Old Timers' Night at the Pops — arr. Lake
76 Trombones, from "The Music Man" — Willson

THURSDAY
Smith Field, Hyde Park, 7:30 P.M.
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting
Our Director, March — Bigelow
Overture to "William Tell" — Rossini
Irish Tune from County Derry (Londonderry Air) — Grainser
Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" — Offenbach

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Emperor, Waltzes — Strauss
Dancing Through the Years — arr. Hayman
Selection from "Hair" — MacDermot

FRIDAY
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
Overture to "Der Freischutz" — Weber
Violin Concerto No. 1, Op. 6 — Paganini
Soloist: LYNN CHANG

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Little Fugue in G minor — Bach
Richard Rodgers Waltzes — Rodgers-Anderson
1812, Ouverture Solennelle — Tchaikovsky

SATURDAY
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting
ALL TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM
Polonaise, from "Eugen Onegin"
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, Op. 23
Soloist: ANTHONY PARATORE

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Capriccio Italien
Marche Slave
Prayer of Thanksgiving — Valerius

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 260,961

JUL 4 1971 New England Newsclip

(Herald Traveler Staff Photo by George Dixon)

CONDUCTOR Arthur Fiedler gives Arthur Stivaletta Jr., 9, of Dedham, a few pointers before the youngster led the orchestra at the Esplanade concert last night during the rendition of the "Stars and Stripes Forever." The boy, son of the chairman of the "Wake Up America Committee" gained the chance to conduct when his father made the highest bid on Channel 2's recent auction.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 581,160

JUL 4 1971 New England Newsclip

"SUM-MER TIME" — Music-lovers lounge on Charlestown's Bunker Hill as they listen to a Boston Symphony Orchestra evening concert, Harry Ellis Dickson conducting, as one of a Summerthing series that will be brought to various neighborhoods of the city and City Hall Plaza this season. (Globe photo by Bill Brett)

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 581,160

JUL 4 1971 New England Newsclip

'Butch' Stivaletta, 9, leads Boston Pops playing Sousa

Nine-year-old Arthur Stivealetta Jr. conducted Arthur Fiedler's Boston Pops Orchestra on the Hatch Shell Esplanade last night.

With his mother in the front row and his father backstage, "Butch" Stivaletta carried the orchestra through a spirited rendition of John Philip Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Dressed in white pants, blue sports jacket and red tie, the boy silently watched Fiedler's every move as he opened the concert.

His father, who was similarly dressed, described the event as "the thrill of my son's life."

Butch conducted because of his father's winning bid at the Channel 2 auction several weeks ago.

Stivaletta is a Dedham contractor and chairman of the Wake Up America Committee. He said the evening would provide the family with pride for years.

The idea of having his son conduct the orchestra occurred to him a few months ago, when Merv Griffin mentioned to him that he had always wanted to conduct the orchestra.

Butch is a pupil at Oakdale Elementary School in Dedham. His father described him as "a great athlete," active in many hobbies, skiing, swimming, pee-wee hockey and football. He has been taking organ lessons for about two months.

In preparation for last night. Stivaletta and his son practiced holding and waving a conductor's baton to a recorded version of "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Although the event was not associated with Wake Up America, Stivaletta said the choice of song was very "appropriate."

Stivaletta described his son as aggressive and outgoing, despite a reluctance on Butch's part to comment on his big moment. Stivaletta told of his son's initiative in once grabbing a chair next to Bob Hope with thousands of people watching.

BOSTON POPS conductor Arthur Fiedler instructs Butch Stivaletta before Butch's conducting the orchestra at Hatch Shell last night. (Donald Preston photo) of Haydn, Carter, Ravel and Schubert; Hopkins Center, Dartmouth College, Hanover, N.H., 8 p.m.

Vermont Symphony, Alan Carter conducting, with pianist Eugene List and violinist Carroll Glenn; works of Mendelssohn, Copland, Schubert and Tchaikovsky; Memorial Field House, Middlebury, Vt., 8:15 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

Summer Sing: Allen Lannom and Masterworks Chorale in a public-participation reading of Handel's "Judas Maccabeus"; Temple Isaiah, 55 Lincoln St., Lexington, 8 p.m.

George E. Lamphere, organ, in works of Widor, Bach, F. Couperin, Franck, Brahms and Mendelssohn; Methuen Memorial Music Hall, Methuen, 8:30 p.m.

George Todd, harpsichord; St. Michael's College, Winooski, Vt., 8 p.m.

R. Rice Nutting, organ, in works of Lidon, Byrd, Schumann, Thomson and Langlais; Park St. Church, 6:45 p.m.

THURSDAY

Hartford Symphony String Quartet in works of Haydn, Beethoven and Borodin; Bowker Aud., U. Mass., Amherst, 8 p.m.

Aeolian Chamber Players; Smith Aud., Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me., 8:15 p.m.

FRIDAY

Copenhagen YMCA Choir in works of Brahms, Rorem, Bartok, Britten and Danish composers; New England Life Hall, 8 p.m.

Earl Wild, piano; Tanglewood, Lenox, 7 p.m.

Boston Symphony, Leon Fleisher conducting, with piano soloist Ruth Laredo; works of Bartok, Hindemith and Mozart; Tanglewood, Lenox, 9 p.m.

SATURDAY

Boston Symphony open rehearsal; Tanglewood, Lenox, 10:30 a.m.

Boston Symphony, Michael Tilson Thomas conducting, with cello soloist Jules Eskin; works of Bach, Haydn and Brahms; Tanglewood, Lenox, 8:30 p.m.

Kenneth Wilson, organ, in a summer pops program; Hammond Castle, Gloucester, 8:30 p.m.

Berkshire Quartet with pianist Natasha Magg in works of Boccherini, Stravinsky and Brahms; Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., 3 p.m.

West End Chamber Ensemble in works of Monteverdi, Gesualdo, Stravinsky and Schubert; Hopkins Center, Dartmouth College, Hanover, N.H., 8 p.m.

NEXT SUNDAY

Boston Symphony, Bruno Maderna conducting, with piano soloist Earl Wild; works of Schubert, Schoenberg and Chopin; Tanglewood, Lenox, 2:30 p.m.

Berkshire Quartet with pianist Lawrence Smith in works of Schubert, Bach and Haydn; Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn., 4 p.m.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 260,961

JUL 4 1971

New England Newsclip

Music

Classcal

TODAY

Boston Symphony, Michael Tilson Thomas conducting, with violin soloist Joseph Silverstein; works of Vivaldi and Monteverdi; Tanglewood, Lenox, 2:30 p.m.

Vermont Symphony, Alan Carter conducting a pops concert; Tram House, Jay Peak, Vt., 7:30 p.m.

R. Rice Nutting, organ, in works of Lidon, Byrd, Schumann, Thomson and Langlais; Park St. Church, 6:45 p.m.

TUESDAY

Bruce Bennet, organ, in works of Clerambault, Bach, Franck, Dupre and others; First Congregational Church, Winchester, 8:15 p.m.

West End Chamber Ensemble in works

Boston Pops

THIS WEEK'S SCHEDULE

(Concerts take place at Hatch Shell at 8:30 p.m. unless otherwise indicated.)

MONDAY
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting
Overture to "Semiramide" — Rossini
Symphony No. 40 in G minor, K. 550 — Mozart

AMERICA
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Flute Concerto in D maior, K. 314 — Mozart
Solist PAUL FRIED
Bolero — Ravel

TUESDAY
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
Suite from "The Water Music" — Handel-Harty
Piano Concerto No. 23 in A maior, K. 488 — Mozart
Soloist: TANA BAWDEN
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Wine, Woman and Song, Waltzes — J. Strauss, J
Selection from "Fiddler on the Roof" — Beck
Two Beatle Tunes — Lennon-McCartney

WEDNESDAY
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
Boston City Hall Plaza, Government Center, 12 noon
Polonaise, from "Eugen Onegin" — Tchaikvsky
Academic Festival Overture — Brahms
Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" — Offenbach
Love Story — Lai
Medley of Burt Bacharach Tunes — arr. Knight
The Stars and Stripes Forever — Sousa
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

WEDNESDAY
Rodgers Park, Brighton, 7:30 P.M.
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting
Triumphal March, from "Aida" — Verdi
Overture to "Poet and Peasant" — Suppe
Suite from "Carmen" — Bizet
Wine, Woman and Song, Waltzes — J. Strauss, J.

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Marche Slave — Tchaikovsky
Selection from "West Side Story" — Bernstein
Old Timers' Night at the Pops — arr. Lake
76 Trombones, from "The Music Man" — Willson

THURSDAY
Smith Field, Hyde Park, 7:30 P.M.
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting
Our Director, March — Biselow
Overture to "William Tell" — Rossini
Irish Tune from County Derry (Londonberry Air) — Grainger
Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" — Offenbach

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Emperor, Waltzes — Strauss
Dancing Through the Years — arr. Hayman
Selection from "Hair" — MacDermot

FRIDAY
ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
Overture to "Der Freischutz" — Weber
Violin Concerto No. 1, Op. 6 — Paganini
Soloist: LYNN CHANG

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Little Fugue in G minor — Bach
Richard Rodgers Waltzes — Rodgers-Anderson
1812, Ouverture Solennelle — Tchaikovsky

SATURDAY
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting
ALL TCHAIKOVSKY PROGRAM
Polonaise, from "Eugen Onegin"
Piano Concerto No. 1 in B flat minor, Op. 23
Soloist: ANTHONY PARATORE

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Capriccio Italien
Marche Slave
Prayer of Thanksgiving — Valerius

106

LIFE IN THE CITY

Music and painting make the hot concrete of downtown Boston bearable

By Ann Mary Currier
Globe Staff

Gail Walsh of West Roxbury dreads the days she must go downtown to do errands. It's so crowded and, in the hot weather it's especially trying.

But the other day, after a trip to the Passport Office, Gail stayed in town longer than usual — all because of the city-sponsored entertainment in Government Center plaza.

It was hot at high noon and the bubbling fountain, the music of The Grenadiers band from St. Joseph's parish, Medford, and the hundreds of seemingly happy people on the plaza were too tempting to resist.

After she dangled her feet in the fountain and read for a while, Gail felt refreshed and even a little convinced that it can be pleasant to live in the city.

She was only one of hundreds of workers and shoppers who listened to The Grenadiers, and the performance itself was just one of a series of events planned by the city administration to make City Hall and its plaza a living, human place.

On Wednesday, at noon, workers and shoppers will be able to hear the Boston Pops Orchestra.

Meanwhile, inside City Hall, the stark concrete walls have been adorned with pop art by the faculty and students of the Museum of Fine Arts School photographs of the Boston Flea Market and Wendy Snyder's pictures of Haymarket Square. In the coming months, exhibits of photography, sculpture, tapestries and oils are planned. All those who plan the project and exhibits are volunteers.

Many citizens who have business at City Hall don't even notice the exhibits, but Betty Cook, program director for the city is trying to make City Hall more exciting.

"We are interested in getting as many things happening down here as possible," she says. "We are trying to make a public building live. This should be a really human place."

And that was just how those at The Grenadiers concert regarded it. Each was able to do his or her own thing.

Manuel Sanchez of Hanover, Roy Sodano of Fitchburg and Michael Rizzo of East Boston, all employees of the Manpower Administration, listened to the music as they sat on the steps of the Kennedy Building munching sandwiches and sipping coffee.

The men often eat outdoors in warm weather but they find it especially pleasant when a band is playing and crowds gather.

Other people were sitting around the fountain, cooled by the water spurting from it. Children wandered into the fountain, while adults simply soaked up the sunshine.

Robert Mongrain of Sherborn, an engineer with H. W. Lochner, Inc., posed like Rodin's sculpture "The Thinker" as he stared at the fountain. "Flowing water makes you think," he explained.

The thing people missed most on the plaza were trees. Many sat under the few along the side of the JFK building and near the fountain. But others had to stand in the heat, intensified by the stone buildings and the brick plaza.

And, the activity was short-lived. By mid-afternoon, there were only a few people on the plaza, giving it scarcely more life than on a winter's day.

Globe 7.5

Daily Calendar

"MARIGOLDS" — New Theater, 12 Holyoke st., Cambridge, at 7:30. 'Smotherhood — from Paul Zindel, whose drama won the Pulitzer Prize.

"THE SOUND OF MUSIC"—North Shore Music-Theater, Beverly (for show time, telephone 922-8500). Jane Powell stars in the popular musical about the celebrated Trapp family.

"HELLO DOLLY" — South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset (telephone 343-1400). Betsy Palmer is featured in one of the world's most popular musicals, concerning the trials and tribulations of a marriage broker.

"FORTY CARATS" — Cape Cod Melody Tent at West Main Street Rotary, Hyannis, (telephone 775-9100). Barbara Britton is starred in a "frothy French farce," about a businesswoman who becomes romantically involved with a much younger man.

ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Hatch Shell at 8:30. Harry Ellis Dickson conducting Works of Rossini, Mozart, Ravel. With Paul Fried, flute.

"THE DYNAMIC DESATATIONS" —at 8 p.m. in Elma Lewis Playhouse in the Park, Franklin Park; free concert.

Globe 7/5

R.A. 7/5

Record

Boston Symphony's Esplanade Concerts

Esplanade Mon. RA Drama

Monday at 8:30
Harry Ellis Dickson, Conducting
Program
Overture to "Semiramide" — Rossini
Symphony No. 40 in G minor, K. 550 — Mozart
I. Molto allegro
II. Andante
III. Minuetto: Allegretto
IV. Allegro assai
America
The Star-Spangled Banner
Flute Concerto in D major, K. 314 — Mozart
I. Allegro aperto
II. Andante ma non troppo
III. Allegro
Soloist: PAUL FRIED
Bolero — Ravel

In and About Boston Today

HATCH MEMORIAL SHELL — 8:30 p.m. free concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Esplanade Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting.

CHILDREN

CYPRESS PLAYGROUND, BROOKLINE—2 p.m. free performance of "Cinderella" by the Boston Children's Theater "Stagemobile."

Send items for daily listing—one week in advance—to "In And About Boston" Boston Herald Traveler, 300 Harrison Ave. Boston 02106.

H.T. 7/5

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUL 6 1971

New England Newsclip

Today's Living

BSO's Dickson: Man for All Seasons

Seen through opera glasses, Harry Dickson conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Staff Photo by Earl Ostroff

- 'The greatest joy I have in life is meeting people who have never been to the Symphony before, who think that kind of music isn't for them.'

By ANN M. BEIERFIELD

If dynamic musician Harry Ellis Dickson writes another book — he's already produced a grand memoir of his many years with the Boston Symphony — it will be called "My Life With Danny Kaye."

Dickson, assistant conductor of the Pops and Esplanade concerts, and conductor of the Symphony's Youth Concerts, has been a longtime friend and often, international tour guest, of the famed comedian.

He likes to recall the time he visited Danny on the Paramount lot during the filming of "Me and the Colonel." The two of them were lunching in the studio commissary and the actor was pointing out celebrities at nearby tables.

"When I was with Danny I got a kick out of pretending I was a yokel from the sticks who didn't know anyone or anything," Dickson reminisces.

"He said to me, 'See that guy over there? That's Robert Taylor!'

★

"I said, 'Oh yes, of course, the very fine cello player!' Danny said, 'Are you crazy? That's Robert Taylor, the movie star!' And he took me over to the table and introduced us.

"Then he said to Taylor, 'Hey, you know what this guy thought you were? A cello player!' And Taylor said: 'Well, I am!'

"You see, I'd read somewhere that Taylor had taken some cello lessons from an excellent symphonic musician and really loved the instrument. This, of course, was all news to Danny, who just stood there with his mouth open!"

Danny is only one of many, great and small, young and old, who have been captivated by Dickson and his plain-spoken, gruffish, lively charm, the intensity of his love for music, his pride in the splendid aggregation of artists he belongs to, and his wonderfully stubborn intention of turning everyone on to the classics.

Or, at least, seeing that everyone gets a chance to hear them.

"The greatest joy I have in life is meeting people who have never been to the Symphony before, who think that kind of music isn't for them. Then they come to a concert, and maybe they'll come again, and before they know it, they're addicted!

People

"Music is like certain foods! Maybe at first you don't like these foods at all. The second time you like them a little more. Pretty soon they start to grow on you, and then you crave them."

Born in Cambridge a tailor's son, young Dickson was performing and conducting in vaudeville at age 12, part of a Keith circuit act called "Grace Hushen and Her Melody Boys."

★

A graduate of Somerville High and the New England Conservatory, he received further musical education in Berlin, returning to America in the midst of the Depression. He immediately plunged into work with the old Community Services Inc., an organization which, with the aid of a WPA grant, was setting up symphony orchestras and putting much-needed bread into the mouths of some 600 of Boston's finest musicians.

In 1938 he auditioned for a violin chair in the Boston Symphony, his accompanist being none other than Arthur Fiedler. Shortly after, he was handpicked for the orchestra by its late maestro Serge Koussevitzky, immortalized in Dickson's great book "Gentlemen, More Dolce, Please."

He has come a long way since that first, admittedly trembling, tryout. Under his baton, the Symphony has performed for throngs of music-lovers on the Esplanade and at the Youth Concerts, and lately, in the Summerthing concerts that tour the city. In these, the circumstances are not always conducive to tranquil undisturbed performing, and often, says Dickson, his musicians have been upset and disgruntled.

"Some feel we should not bring music into these areas. The stages are crowded, the amplifiers are faulty, and often the kids are unruly and push close to the stage, not because they are bad, but simply because they don't know how to behave at concerts.

"So some feel we should simply let people come hear us at the Esplanade. But unfortunately, these people will not always go to the Esplanade. Perhaps they think our music is not for them. But if we bring it to them and they hear it, they find that they love it. I got beautiful letters last year after the Charlestown concert."

(He conducts two more Summerthing performances — Wednesday evening at Rogers Park, Brighton, and Thursday evening at Smith Field in Hyde Park.)

A Brookline resident and father of two daughters — Mrs. Jinny Shain of Westwood and Mrs. Kitty Dukakis, wife of recent candidate for lieutenant governor, Michael Dukakis — Dickson believes the day must come when government will be obliged to resuce the arts financially.

★

"I am not optimistic about the future of the arts in this country. I don't see how we can survive without government subsidy, and politicians must become aware of this need. One reason I'm proud of Mike is that he started the Massachusettts Council on the Arts, as a legislator."

But he is thrilled with the response of young people to good music (though he deplores rock). He recalls: "Last year at a youth concert we celebrated the 200th anniversary of Beethoven's birth. We did the Ninth Symphony, with a chorus of boys from English High and girls from Jeremiah Burke School in Dorchester. Eighty percent were black, 5 percent could not read music.

"But how they loved to sing the 'Ode to Joy!' The boys would come dashing into rehearsals still in their football helmets.

"They begged to hear some concerts, so we saw to it that tickets for the rehearsals were made available to them. But the greatest thing of all happened after that performance.

"There was a big party, and they'd had a huge cake baked just for the occasion.

"And it had an inscription that read: 'Right On, Beethoven!' "

Daily calendar

Glob 7/6

"MARIGOLDS" — New Theater, 12 Holyoke st., Cambridge, at 7:30. 'Smotherhood — from Paul Zindel, whose drama won the Pulitzer Prize.

"THE BURGHERS OF CALAIS" — Boston Center for the Arts, 541 Tremont st., at 7:30. A revival of Theater Company of Boston's production of Edgar White's drama about the Scottsboro Trials.

"JOHN BROWN'S BODY" — Regis College, Weston, at 8:30, through Sunday. Adaptation of Stephen Vincent Benet's drama of the Civil War, with seven actors portraying 42 characters.

VERDI REQUIEM — Garden Cinema, Arlington Street, at 2:15, 4, 5:45, 7:30, 9:15: one of a series of films from opera, ballet, and symphony.

"MRS. WARREN'S PROFESSION" —Loeb Center, Cambridge, at 8. Bernard Shaw's comedy presented by Harvard Summer School Theater.

"THE SOUND OF MUSIC"—North Shore Music-Theater, Beverly (for show time, telephone 922-8500). Jane Powell stars in the popular musical about the celebrated Trapp family.

"HELLO, DOLLY" — South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset (telephone 383-1400). Betsy Palmer is featured in one of the world's most popular musicals, concerning the trials and tribulations of a marriage broker.

"FORTY CARATS" — Cape Cod Melody Tent at West Main Street Rotary, Hyannis (telephone 775-9100). Barbara Britton is starred in a "frothy French farce," about a businesswoman who becomes romantically involved with a much younger man.

WEST END CHAMBER ENSEMBLE — Hopkins Center; Dartmouth College; Hanover, N.H., at 8 p.m. Haydn, Part songs; Carter, Sonata for Flute, Oboe, Cello and Harpsichord; Ravel, Chansons Madecasses; Schubert, Piano Trio in B-flat major.

BRUCE BENNET, ORGAN — First Congregational Church of Winchester at 8:15 p.m. Works of Clerambault, Bach, Franck, Diesler, McKinley, Dupre

ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Hatch Shell at 8:30. Arthur Fiedler conducting. Tana Bawden, piano. Works of Handel, Mozart, J. Strauss, Bock, Lennon-McCartney.

JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL — Ted Shawn Theatre; Lee, at 8:40 p.m. Norman Walker and Modern Dance Company; Jayne Hillyer and Bill Martin-Viscount; Sahomi Tachibana (classical Japanese Dances).

PEARL REAVES & FATHER TIME — at 8 p.m. in Elma Lewis Playhouse in the Park, Franklin Park; free concert.

Boston Symphony Esplanade Concerts

RA 7/6

Arthur Fiedler, Conductor
Saturday Evening at 8:30
PROGRAM

American Salute — Gould
(When Johnny Comes Marching Home)
An Outdoor Overture — Copland
Selection from "West Side Story" — Bernstein
I Feel Pretty — Maria — Something's Coming — Tonight — One Hand, One Heart—Cool—America
Dancing Through the Years — arr. Hayman
Cakewalk — Charleston — Tango—Square Dance—Waltz—Polka—Rumba Jitterbug — Swing — Mexican Hat Dance — Cha-cha-cha — Rock 'n Roll

The Star-Spangled Banner
Rhapsody in Blue — Gershwin for Piano and Orchestra
Soloist: Leo Litwin
Selection from "Hair" — MacDermot
Aquarius — Donna — Frank Mills—Initials — Ain't Got No — Hair—Hare Krishna — Air — Good Morning Starshine — Let the Sunshine In Polydor and RCA Records — Baldwin Piano

Esplanade Concert Hatch Shell, 8:30 p.m.

H.S. 7/6

ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor
American Salute (When Johnny Comes Marching Home) — Gould
An Outdoor Overture — Copland
Selection from "West Side Story" — Bernstein
Dancing Through the Years arr. Hayman

THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Rhapsody in Blue for Piano and Orchestra — Gershwin
Soloist: LEO LITWIN
Selection from "Hair" — MacDermot

Boston Symphony's Esplanade Concerts

7/6 R.A.

Tuesday at 8:30

Program

Suite from:
"The Water Music" — Handel-Harty
I. Allegro
II. Air
III. Allegro decisio

Piano Concerto No. 23
in A major, K. 488 — Mozart
I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Presto
Soloist: Tana Bawden

The Star-Spangled Banner

Wine, Woman and Song, Waltzes — J. Strauss

Selection from:
"Fiddler on the Roof" — Bock
Fiddler on the Roof—Matchmaker, Matchmaker—Far from the Home I Love—Miracle of Miracles—Sunrise, Sunset — Anatevka — To Life

Two Beetle Tunes — Lennon-McCartney
Michelle
Yellow Submarine

ton, its tree.

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S ESPLANADE ORCHESTRA: at the Hatch Shell, (unless stated otherwise) MON. July 5 at 8:30: Harry Dickson conducting. TUES. July 6 at 8:30: WED. July 7, at noon, Boston City Hall Plaza, Gov't. Center; WED. July 8 at 7:30 pm in Rogers Park, Brighton: Harry Dickson conducting. THURS. July 8 at 7:30 pm, at Smith Field, Hyde Park: Harry Dickson conducting.
FRI. July 9 at 8:30: Arthur Fiedler conducting.
SAT. July 10 at 8:30 pm: Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. BAD 7/6

108

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUL 6 1971

New England Newsclip

An Evening Picnic at the Boston Pops

The James Esselstyn family of Acton and the Robert Burton family, visiting here from Colorado Springs, picnic on the Charles River Esplanade prior to Boston Pops concert last night. Arthur Fiedler conducts tonight ~~at 8:30 p.~~ m.

Staff Photo by Ray Lussier

PARKWAY TRANSCRIPT
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY CIRC. 6400
JUL 7 1971
New England Newsclip

A.T. 7/7

Summerthing

9-11:30 a.m.—Craftsmobile I, Columbia Point: Playground
9-11:30 a.m.—Craftsmobile II, Hyde Park: Chittick Sch., Ruskindale road
10-11 a.m.—Stage I Drama Workshop, South End: Playground at Mass Ave. & Columbus St.
10-10:30 a.m.—Tomorrowmobile, Allston-Brighton: Oak Sq. Plygd.
10-11 a.m.—Concert with Mallory Walker, South Boston: 185 W. 9th
10-11 a.m.—People & Players Theater Company, Hyde Park: St. Pius Prk. Lot
10:30-12 noon—Plantmobile, Bromley-Heath: Heath St. Plygd.
11-12 noon—Street Corner Trio, Charlestown: O'Meara Ct.
12 noon—The Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, City Hall Plaza
1-2 p.m.—Susan Linn Puppet Theater, Roxbury: Trotter School
1-2 p.m.—The Dance Company, Dorchester: Franklin Hill Project Prk. Lot
1:30-3 p.m.—Plantmobile, Mattapan: Almont Plygd.
2-4:30 p.m. — Craftsmobile I, Parker Hill-Fenway: Symphony Rd.
2-4:30—Craftsmobile II, West Roxbury-Roslindale: Beechland Project
2-3 p.m.—Street Corner Ensemble, East Boston: Maverick Sq.
2-3 p.m.—Stage I Drama Workshop, Jamaica Plain: Youth Ctr. at Call & Williams Sts.
2-3 p.m.—People & Players Theater Company, North End: North Sq.
2-3 p.m.—Tomorrowmobile, V.A. Hospital, VFW Parkway, West Roxbury
3-4 p.m. Susan Linn Puppet Theater, West Roxbury-Roslindale: Archdale Project
6:30-7:30 p.m.—Street Corner Group, Mattapan: For location, call 261-1660
6:30-8:30 p.m.—Band Concert, North End: Prado
7:30 p.m.—The Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Allston-Brighton: Rogers Park
7:30-8:30 p.m.—The Dance Company, Dorchester: Blake House Park
8 p.m.—The Boston Ballet Company, Charlestown: Bunker Hill Monument
8 p.m.—Rock Concert, East Boston: American Legion Field
8 p.m.—Record Hop & Show, Roxbury: MDC Rink
8:30 p.m.—Moviebus-Spoilers, Dorchester: Cronin Plygd., Wainwright St.
Dates, times and locations are subject to change. For confirmation on the day of performance, call 261-1660.

Tourists Find Boston Steeped In Tradition

By MURRAY J. BROWN

Despite what you may have heard, Boston is more than the home of the bean and the cod where the Lowells speak only to the Cabots and the Cabots talk only to God.

It's an interesting city which can offer visitors a wide variety of attractions and activities.

I found out that out again during a recent visit to Boston which, while growing into a modern metropolis, has jealously preserved its links to its proud past.

You don't have to be a history buff to enjoy walking along the meandering Freedom Trail through downtown.

The Trail starts at Boston Common, the country's oldest public park, where witches and criminals were hanged and "scolds and Into Frog Pond in the olden days.

In the southwest corner is the Central Burying Ground, the last resting place of British redcoats killed during the Revolution and of Gilbert Stuart, the famed portraitist of George Washington and his contemporaries.

On the hill overlooking the Common stands the golddomed "New State House, dating back to 1795, designed by Charles Bulfinch of Boston, who was one of the finest archetects of his time.

Across the street from the Common is the Park Street Church, where abolitionist William Lloyd Garrison spoke out so strongly against slavery, and the Granery Burying Ground. The headstones read like history — Samuel Adams, John Hancock, Paul Revere, victims of the Boston Massacre of March 5, 1770, Benjamin Franklin's parents, Mary Goose, known to the world as "Mother Goose."

Them there is the King's Chapel, with its square tower, built in 1754 — the first Episcopal church in Boston and, after the War of Revolution, the first Unitarian church in the new United States. Gunpowder was stored in its cellars during the War of 1812.

A marker on School St. denotes the site of the country's first public school, whose pupils included young Ben Franklin, Cotton Mather and Ralph Waldo Emerson. Nearby is the Old South Meeting House, which dates back to 1728, where angry colonists hatched the Boston Tea Party to protest on without representation."

Other Features

Other highlights on the Trail include the Old State House with a ring of stones outside circling the site of the Boston Massacre; Faneuil Hall, known as "The Cradle of Liberty" because it was the favorite meeting place of the rebels; the 17th century Paul Revere House — oldest dwelling in Boston — and the Old North Church, where two lanterns were hung in the steeple the night of April 18, 1775 to signal the British were attacking by sea and send Revere off on his ride to alert the countryside.

Lovers of old archetecture should not miss Beacon Hill, designated a National Historic Landmark by the Federal government to preserve the centuries - old brick and brownstone houses, cobbled streets and brick sidewalks. Some of the stately mansions are open to the public.

For the culturally inclined there is the world - renowned Boston Symphony Orchestra, out of which grew the Boston Pops Orchestra which gives free concerts during the summer on the banks of the Charles River.

There eight museums, including the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, rated as one of the finest in the United States.

For women, at least, no visit could be complete without a shopping expedition to Filene's famous bargain basement where designer clothes go for a fraction of their original cost. On Washington St., too, is the world's largest Woolworth Filled with every imaginable line of merchandise, a fine restaurant and ramps of parking space with elevators directly to the sales floors.

There are elegant shops and boutiques on nearby Back Bay streets where the atmosphere reminds one of Paris or London. Many of New York's finest shops operate branches here. Antique hunters can browse through at least a dozen shops along Charles Street on the river.

For the sportsminded, there are professional baseball, football, basketball and hockey games in season. And there are beautiful beaches and mountains, with all kinds of outdoor activities, only a short distance away.

Boston has fine restaurants with menus featuring the world's major cuisines although seafood — and Boston baked beans — are specialties here. A wide range of accommodations are also available, from low - priced tourist homes to moderate - to - expensive motels, motor hotels and hotels in and around the city.

TRANSCRIPT
WEST ROXBURY, MASS.
W. 7,000
JUL 7 1971
New England Newsclip

Tourists Find Boston Steeped In Tradition

Globe 7/7

SUMMERTHING SCHEDULE

— Craftsmobile 1, Columbia Point playground, 9-11:30 a.m.

Craftsmobile 2, Chittick School, Ruskindale road., Hyde Park, 9-11:30 a.m.

—Stage 1 Drama Workshop, playground Mass. avenue and Columbus av., South End, 10-11 a.m.

—Tomorrowmobile, Oak square, Playground, Allston, 10-10:30 a.m.

—Concert with Mallory Walker, 185 W. 9th st., South Boston, 10-11 a..

—Peoplle and Players Theatre Company, St. Pius Parking Lot, Hyde Park, 10-11 a.m.

— Plantmobile, Heath street Playground. Bromely-Heath, 10:30-noon.

— Street Corner Tio, O'Meara Court, Charles-

— Boston Symphony's town, 11-noon.

Esplanade Orchestra, City Hall Plaza, noon.

— Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Trotter School, Roxbury, 1-2 p.m.

8 dance Company, Franklin Hill Project parking lot, Dorchestedr, 1-2 p.m.

— Plantmobile, Almont Playground, Mattapan, 1:30-3 p.m.

— Craftsmobile 1, Parker Hill-Fenway, Symphony road, 2-4:30 p.m.

— Craftsmobile ii, Beachland Project, West Roxbury-Roslindale, 2-4:30 p.m.

— Street Corner Ensemble, Maverick Square, East Boston, 2-3 p.m.

— Stage 1 Drama Workshop, Youth Center at Call and Williams streests, Jamacia Plain, 2-3 p.m.

— People & Players Theatre Company, North Square, North End, 2-3 p.m.

— Tomorrowmobile, VA Hosptial; VFW Parkway, West Roxbury, 2-2:30 p.m.

— Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Archdale Project, West Roxbury, 3-4 p.m.

—Band Concert, North End, Prado, 6:30-8:30 p.m.

—The Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Allston, Rogers Park, 7:30 p.m.

—The Dance Co., Blake House Park, Dorchester,

—The Dance Co., Blake House Park, Dorchester, 7:30-8:30 p.m.

—The Boston Ballet Co., Bunker Hill Monument, Charlestown, 8 a.m.

—Rock Concert, American Legion Field, East Boston, 8 p.m.

—Record hop and show, MDC Rink, Roxbury, 8 p.m.

—Moviebus, "The Spoilers," Cronin Playground, Wainwright street, Dorchester, 8:30 p.m.

Daily calendar

"MARIGOLDS" — New Theater, 12 Holyoke st., Cambridge, at 7:30, through Sept. 4. Smotherhood — from Paul Zindel, whose drama won the Pulitzer Prize.

"THE PROPOSITION" — 241 Hamshire st., Inman sq., Cambridge, at 8, indefinite run. A typical topical satire, with musical accompaniment.

"THE BURGHERS OF CALAIS" — Boston Center for the Arts, at 7:30, through July 25. Revival of Theater Company of Boston's production of Edgar White's drama about the Scottsboro Trials.

CHILDREN'S PROGRAMS & BEETHOVEN'S SYMPHONIES 6 & 9 — Garden Cinema, Arlington Street, at 2 (for the young), and at 4, 5:45, 7:30, and 9:15 (for grown-ups); part of a series of films from opera, ballet, and symphony.

"MRS. WARREN'S PROFESSION"—Loeb Center, Cambridge, at 8. Bernard Shaw's comedy presented by Harvard Summer School Theater.

"THE SOUND OF MUSIC" — North Shore Music-Theater, Beverly (for show time, telephone 922-8500). Jane Powell stars in the popular musical about the celebrated Trapp family.

"HELLO, DOLLY" — South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset (telephone 343-1400). Betsy Palmer is featured in one of the world's most popular musicals, concerning the trials and tribulations of a marriage broker.

"FORTY CARATS" — Cape Cod Melody Tent at West Main Street Rotary, Hyannis. (telephone 775-9100). Barbara Britton is starred in a "frothy French farce," about a businesswoman who becomes romantically involved with a much younger man.

THE EVERYDAY PEOPLE — at 8 p.m. in Elma Lewis Playhouse in the Park, Franklin Park; free concert.

ESPLANADE CONCERTS — Boston City Hall Plaza at noon. Arthur Fiedler conducting. Works of Tchaikovsky, Brahms, Offenbach, Lai, Bacharach, Sousa.

ESPLANADE CONCERTS—Rodgers Park, Brighton at 7:30. Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. Works of Verdi, Suppe, Bizet, J. Strauss, Tchaikovsky, Bernstein, Lake, Wilson.

SUMMER SING WITH MASTERWORKS CHORALE — Temple Isaiah, 55 Lincoln st., Lexington at 8 p.m. Open score-reading of Handel's "Judas Maccabeus" with Phyllis Isaacson, guest conductor.

GEORGE LAMPHEERE, ORGAN — Methuen Memorial Music Hall, North Andover, at 8:30 p.m.

JACOB'S PILLOW DANCE FESTIVAL — Ted Shawn Theatre; Lee, Mass. at 8:40. Norman Walker and Modern Dance Company, Jayne Hillyer and Bill Martin-Viscount; Sahomi Tachibana.

NORFOLK CONCERTS — Norfolk, Connecticut, Music Shed, at 8:30. Mozart's "Il Re Pastore."

MUSIC IN VERMONT — Saint Michael's College; Winooski, Vermont at 8 p.m. A harpsichord concert by Prof. George Todd to be held in college chapel.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540
JUL 7 1971
New England Newsclip

CSH 7/7

Entertainment timetable

Music

CITY HALL PLAZA—Esplanade Concert, Arthur Fiedler conducting. 12 noon.
ROGERS PARK, BRIGHTON — Esplanade Concert, Harry Ellis Dickson conducting. 7:30.

Pops Concert Today At City Hall Plaza

A lunch-hour concert by the Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler, will be presented for Summerthing today at City Hall Plaza beginning at noon.

The concert is the third of five being presented for Summerthing in Boston neighborhoods. The remaining concerts will be played at Rogers Park, Brighton, at 7:30 tonight and at Smith Field, Hyde Park, at 7:30 p.m. tomorrow.

RA 7/7

summerthing

9 a. m. — Craftsmobile I, Columbia Point: Playground.

9 a. m.—Craftsmobile II, Hyde Park: Chittick Sch., Ruskindale Road.

10 a. m.—Stage 1 Drama Workshop, South End: Playground at Mass Ave. & Columbus St.

10 a. m. — Tomorrowmobile, Allston-Brighton: Oak Sq. Plygd.

10 a. m.—Concert with Mallory Walker, South Boston: 185 W. 9th.

10 a. m.—People & Players Theatre Company, Hyde Park: St. Pius Prk. Lot.

10:30 a. m. — Plantmobile, Bromley-Heath: Heath St. Plygd.

11 a. m.—Street Corner Trio, Charlestown: O'Meara Ct.

12 noon—The Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, City Hall Plaza.

1 p. m.—Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, Roxbury: Trotter School..

1 p. m.—The Dance Company, Dorchester: Franklin Hill Project Prk. Lot.

1:30 p. m.—Plantmobile, Mattapan: Almont Plygd.

2 p. m.—Craftsmobile I, Parker Hill-Fenway: Symphony Rd.

2 p. m.—Craftsmobile II, West Roxbury-Roslindale: Beechland Project.

2 p. m.—Street Corner Ensemble, East Boston: Maverick Sq.

2 p. m.—Stage 1 Drama Workshop, Jamaica Plain: Youth Ctr. at Call & Williams Sts.

2 p. m.—People & Players Theatre Company, North End: North Sq.

2 p. m.—Tomorrowmobile, V. A. Hospital, VFW Parkway, West Roxbury.

3 p. m.—Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, West Roxbury-Roslindale: Archdale Proj.

6:30 p. m.—Street Corner Group, Mattapan: For location, call 261-1660.

6:30 p. m.—Band Concert, North End: Prado

7:30 p. m.—The Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Allston-Brighton: Rogers Park.

7:30 p. m.—The Dance Company, Dorchester: Blake House Park.

8 p. m.—The Boston Ballet Company,

Boston Symphony

Arthur Fiedler, Conductor
Wednesday at 12 noon

Boston City Hall Plaza, Gov. Center
Polonaise, from "Eugen Onegin" — Tchaikovsky
Academic Festival Overture — Brahms
Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" — Offenbach
Overture—Allegro brillante—Polka—Galop—Valse—March—Can-Can—Finale
Love Story — Lai
Medley of Burt Bacharach Tunes — arr. Knight
I Say a Little Prayer—Alfie—What the World Needs Now Is Love— Wives and Lovers (Hey, Little Girl)—The Look of Love—Promises, Promises
The Stars and Stripes Forever — Sousa
The Stars Spangled Banner — Souza

110

Summerthing schedule

Globe 7/8

TODAY

The schedule for Summerthing, Boston's neighborhood festival, follows:

— Craftsmobile I, Port Norfolk, Dorchester, 9-11:30 a.m.

— Craftsmoblie II, North square, North End, 9-11:30 a.m.

— Tomorrowmobile Columbia Point Playground, Dorchester, 10-11 a.m.

— Concert: Mallory Walker, Mission Church Rectory Music Room, Roxbury 10-11 a.m.

— Stage I Drama Workshop, St. Puis X parking lot, Hyde Park, 10-11 a.m.

— Carol & John, Conley School yard, Roslindale, 10-11 a.m.

— Plantmobile, Parents-children Center, Eliot square, Roxbury, 10:30 a.m.-noon.

— Street Corner Trio, Marian Manor, South Boston 11a.m.- noon.

—The Dance Company, Dorchester House, Dorchester, 1-2 p.m.

—Susan Linn Puppet Theater, Perkins School yard, South Boston 1-2 p.m.

—Carol & John, Jewish Rehabilitation Center, West Roxbury, 1-2 p,m.

—Plantmobile, Wensley street., Roxbury 1:30-3 pm

—Craftsmobile I, Summer and Lamson streets, East Boston, 2-4:30 p.m.

—Craftsmobile II, Medford street and Walford way, Charlestown, 2-4:30 p.m.

Zoomobile, Green Street Swim Pool, Jamaica Plain, 2-4 p.m.

—Street Corner Ensemble, Carver Nursing Home, South Boston, 2-3 p.m.

—Stage I Drama Workshop, McLaughlin Playground, Roxbury, 2-3 p.m.

—Tomorrowmobile, North End Branch Library, 2-2:30 p.m.

—The Dance Company, Billings Field, West Roxbury, 3-4 p.m.

—Street Corner Group, Bayside Apartments, South Boston, 6:30-7:30 p.m.

—Band Concert, Prado, North End, 6:30-8:30 p.m.

—Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Smith Field, Hyde Park, 7:30 p.m.

—Boston Ballet Company, Central square, East Boston, 8 p.m.

—Rock Concert, playground behind Lamartine street, Jamaica Plain, 8 p.m.

—Rock Concert, Walker Playground, Mattapan, 8 p.m.

—Soul Concert, Columbia Point Playground, Dorchester, 8 p.m.

—Teen Dance, MDC Rink, Charlestown, 8 p.m.

—Moviebus: Spoilers, Orchard Park Playground, Roxbury, 8:30 p.m.

(Dates, times and locations are subject to change. For confirmation call 261-1660.)

Esplanade H.T. 7/8

THURSDAY
Smith Field, Hyde Park, 7:30 P.M.
HARRY ELLIS DICKSON Conducting
Our Director, March — Bigelow
Overture to "William Tell" — Rossini
Irish Tune from County Derry (Londonderry Air) — Grainger
Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" — Offenbach
THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER
Emperor, Waltzes — Strauss
Dancing Through the Years — arr. Hayman
Selection from "Hair" — MacDermot

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUL 8 1971
New England Newsclip

Sounds of Summer

Conductor Arthur Fiedler leads the Boston Pops during a noon concert at Boston's City Hall Plaza. The Esplanade program was the third of a series of five in city's Summerthing concerts. Good weather shone on the crowd.

UPI

The Boston Globe

THURSDAY MORNING, JULY 8, 1971 ®

ARTHUR FIEDLER CONDUCTS A LUNCH HOUR CONCERT AT CITY HALL PLAZA. (Jack Sheahan photo)

A day in Boston--sound of music . . . smell of smoke

For an hour yesterday, music filled Boston's City Hall Plaza while Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops whiled away the lunch hour for several thousand spectators. It was the third of five Summerthing-sponsored series of concerts.

But a few hours later and long after the music and listeners had disappeared, a cloud of heavy black smoke lay over the city from a general alarm fire which destroyed the Prison Point Bridge in Cambridge, near the Charlestown line, and severely damaged an adjacent waste disposal plant. Story, Page 48.

Elsewhere, another fire damaged 250 feet of MBTA trestle between Charlestown's Sullivan square and Everett, and a blaze in two ground-floor storage rooms forced the evacuation of 42 persons at the Motel 128 in Dedham.

RA. 7/8

Boston's Summerthing Schedule for Thursday

9 a.m.—Craftsmobile I, Dorchester: Port Norfolk.

9 a.m.—Craftsmoblie II, North End: North Sq.

10 a.m.—Tomorrowmobile, Columbia Point: Playground.

10 a.m. — Concert with Mallory Walker, Parker Hill-Fenway: Mission Church Music Room in Rectory.

10 a.m.—Stage I Drama Workshop, Hyde Park: St. Pius Parking Lot.

10 a.m.—Carol & John, West Roxbury-Roslindale: Connolly School Yard.

10:30 a.m.—Plantmobile, Roxbury: Parents/Children Center, J. Eliot Sq.

11 a.m.—Street Corner Trio, South Boston: Marion Manor, 40 Old Harbor St.

1 p.m.—The Dance Company, Dorchester: Dorchester House, 1353 Dorchester Ave.

1 p.m.—Susan Linn Puppet Theatre, South Boston: Perkins School Yard.

1 p.m.—Carol & John, West Roxbury-Roslindale: Jewish Rehabilitation Center.

1:30 p.m.—Plantmobile, Parker Hill-Fenway: Wensley & Long Sts.

2 p.m.—Eraftsmobile I, East Boston: Summer & Lamson Sts.

2 p.m.—Craftsmobile II, Charlestown: The Prolects Playground, Medford, Walford Way.

2 p.m.—Street Corner Ensemble, South Boston: Carver Nursing Home.

2 p.m.—Stage 1 Drama Workshop, Parker Hill-Fenway: McLaughlin Playground.

2 p.m.—Tomorrowmobile, North End: North End Branch Library.

3 p.m.—The Dance Company, West Roxbury-Roslindale: Billings Field.

6:30 p.m.—Street Corner Group, South Boston: Bayside Apts.

6:30 p.m.—Band Concert, North End, Prado.

7:30 p.m.—Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra, Hyde Park: Smith Field.

8 p.m.—The Boston Ballet Company, East Boston: Central Sq.

8 p.m.—Rock Concert, Bromley-Heath: Playground behind Lamartine St.

8 p.m.—Rock Concert, Mattapan: Walker Playground.

8 p.m.—Soul Concert, Columbia Pt: Playground.

8:30 p.m.—Moviebus: Spoilers, Orchard Park: Orchard Park Playground.

8 p.m.—Teen Dance, Charlestown: MDC Rink, Union & Washington Sts.

Dates, times and locations are subject to change. For confirmation on the day of performance, call 261-1660.

THURSDAY

BACK BAY LEDGER-BEACON
HILL TIMES
BROOKLINE, MASS.
W. 8,500

JUL 8 1971 New England Newsclip

ARTHUR FIEDLER (on right), conductor of the Boston Pops, concentrates on the strains of George Gershwin's classic, "Rhapsody in Blue" at a concert in the Hatch Shell Saturday night. The piano soloist is Leo Litwin. (Photo by Frank Moy)

HYDE PARK TRIBUNE
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 5,300

JUL 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Pops

The Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra will give a ~~free concert~~ at 7:30 tonight at Smith Field as part of Hyde Park's Summerthing. Conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, the concert will include: Our Director, March, by Bigelow; Overture to "William Tell", by Rossini; Irish Tune from County Derry (Londonderry Air) by Grainger; Suite from "Gaite Parisienne" by Offenbach; Emperor, Waltzes, by Strauss; Dancing Through the Years (Cakewalk, Charleston, Tango, Square Dance, Waltz, Polka, Rumba Jitterbug-Swing, Mexican Hat Dance, Cha-Cha-Cha, and Rock 'n Roll); arranged by Hayman; and Selections from "Hair" (Aquarius, Donna, Frank Mills, Initials, Ain't Got Not Hair, Hare' Krishna, Air, Good Morning Starshine, and Let the Sunshine In) by MacDermot.

Under the baton of Arthur Fiedler, the Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra plays for a lunchtime crowd of 7500 on the Boston City Hall Plaza. Presentation was part of the city's continuing Summerthing program. The orchestra performs tonight at Smith Field, Hyde Park, at 7:30 p. m.

Staff Photo by Dennis Breorley

R.A. 7/8

WOMEN TODAY

Melted popsicles, sticky fingers, discarded sandals — and music everywhere

To the Esplanade — and a world of beauty

Little people invade Esplanade

All pictures by Pete Main, photo staff

Each year, the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra welcomes a very young audience to the banks of the Charles River for its annual Children's Concert. The sparkling melodies of great composers, as performed by promising young talent, fill the summer air and spark an informal counterpoint of joy and laughter from an audience that truly participates.

12-year-old violinist Marjorie Kransberg

Tuned up and awaiting her cue

By Nanci Robb

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Boston

Chocolate - covered toddlers and bigger brothers and sisters momentarily forgot their dripping ice cream to dance to the "Waltz of the Flowers."

Others hummed "Dashing Through the Snow," while their sizzling toes made circles in the Charles River.

Melted popsicles, discarded sandals, and moms fanning themselves from the 90 degree morning sun marked the annual Children's Concert of the Boston Symphony's Esplanade Orchestra.

Bare toes and sticky fingers abounded as the little people invaded the grounds around the Hatch Memorial Shell to enjoy the music, one of eight free summer concerts.

The laughter of children and the melodies of Tchaikovsky, Mendelssohn, and Haydn, plus many popular tunes, drowned out the usual chatter of birds along the river.

"The square dance was best," lisped a toothless befreckled strawberry - blonde. Others liked the Christmas carols or "them fairy deals" (the Nutcracker Suite).

"We danced!" exclaimed a blond five-year-old, peering through a bite in her bread-and-butter sandwich.

Others sat on the ground, tapping time to the music, or lolling in the shade along the river, watching the antics of a mother duck and her ducklings. One pair of chubby legs toddled alone, the owner engrossed in a pop can clasped in plump fingers.

But the music was everywhere. In the midst of a bite of bologna sandwich or a slurp of pop, youngsters would burst into claps or jump up to shake a leg.

Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson encouraged the kids to clap and dance along.

"It's real cute the way the conductor bounces up and down," commented Joyce Lewis, who took a train in from Roxbury with her brother and sister.

Young and old alike came from all over the Boston area and some from as far away as New Hampshire. Buses nuzzled their way into the park, filled with schoolchildren, and groups of retarded and handicapped.

Eighty-one year old Bella Glenfield was one of 40 members of the Resident's Club of the Hebrew Rehabilitation Center, seated in the shade tapping time to the music. Her tanned face beamed from beneath a small straw hat. "It's so marvelous—the music, the weather, the children," she said.

She and her friends especially enjoyed the solos by 12-year-old violinist Marjorie Kransberg and 17-year-old pianist Michael Thomopoulos.

"But I wouldn't mind a little dip in the Charles?" twinkled her 80-year-old neighbor.

Nobody counted the crowds. Except maybe Peter Woodruff, who manned the concession stand.

"With swarms of them kids all askin' me, 'Mister, wdja have for a nickel?' it seemed like there were ten thousand," he reflected.

Actually, closer to 1,000 nearly "cleaned out" his best-sellers: candy, popsicles, and ice cream.

The vanilla flecked grass near the Hatch Shell may never be the same—till next year.

114

CSM 7/9

Entertainment timetable

Music

HATCH SHELL — Esplanade Concert, Arthur Fiedler conducting, with Lynn Chong, violin. 8:30.

Theater

NEW THEATER, 12 Holyoke St., Cambridge—"The Effect of Gamma Rays on Man-in-the-Moon Marigolds," with Betty Field, 7:30; Mat. Wed. 2. Sat., 7, 10.

THEATER COMPANY OF BOSTON, 541 Tremont St. — "The Burghers of Calais," with the New African Company. Tues.-Fri. 7:30; Sat. 6, 9:30; Sun. 5, 8:30.

Films

ABBEY CINEMA 1—"Drive He Said," 2:30, 4:15, 6, 8, 10.

ABBEY CINEMA 2 — Dr. Strangelove," 2:30, 6:15, 10; "Repulsion," 4:15, 8.

ASTOR — "Who Is Harry Kellerman and Why Is He Saying Those Terrible Things About Me?" 10, 12, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10; Sun., 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30.

BRATTLE—"That Man from Rio," 9:35; "The Ugly American," 7:30.

CENTER—"Dr. Phibes," 11:25, 2:45, 6:10, 9:30; "Count Yorga, Vampire," 9:45, 1:05, 4:25, 7:50.

CENTRAL 1 — "Give Her the Moon," 8:15; "King of Hearts," 6:30, 9:45; Weekend mats., 4:55.

CENTRAL 2 "5 Easy Pieces," 6:45, 9:55; "I Never Sang for My Father," 8:25; weekend mat. 5:10.

CHARLES CINEMA—"The Last Run," 2, 4, 6, 8, 10.

CHERI THEATERS COMPLEX—"The Seven Minutes," 1:20, 3:30, 5:40, 7:55, 10; Sun., 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30. "Summer of 42," 1, 2:40, 4:20, 6:15, 8:10, 12. "Death in Venice," 1, 3:10, 5:20, 7:30, 9:45.

CINEMA KENMORE SQUARE—"The Crook," 2, 7:30, 9:30.

CINEMA 733, Boylston St.—"My Night at Maud's," 6, 8, 10.

CIRCLE THEATER — "Plaza Suite," 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:40, 9:55.

COOLIDGE CORNER — "Lawrence of Arabia," 2:10, 8:25, Sat. 3:40, 8:45, Sun. 3:35, 8:25; "A Walk in the Spring Rain," 12:30, 6:45, Sat. 2:00, 7:00, Sun. 1:55, 6:45.

EXETER—"Blue Water, White Death," 2, 3:45, 5:30, 7:35, 9:30.

GARDEN CINEMA—"Giselle," 2:15, 4:00, 5:45, 7:30, 9:15.

GARY—"What's the Matter with Helen?" 12, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10.

HARVARD SQUARE—"Claire's Knee," 3:05, 6:25, 9:50; "Casque D'Or," 1:30, 4:50, 9:50.

MUSIC HALL — "Le Mans," 10, 12, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10; Sun., 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30.

NEW ENGLAND LIFE HALL —Films of Japan: "Onibaba," 12, 2:10, 8:10; "Sword of Doom," 2:15, 6:15, 10:05.

ORSON WELLES CINEMA 1—"Five Million Years to Earth," 4, 7:20, 10:30; "The Incredible Shrinking Man," 5:40, 9.

ORSON WELLES CINEMA 2—"Dr. Phibes," 4, 7:10, 10:20; "Count Yorga, Vampire," 5:35, 8:45.

PARAMOUNT — "Big Jake," 9:30, 11:30, 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, 9:30; Sun., 1, 3:10, 5:20, 7:30, 9:30.

PARIS—"Carnal Knowledge," 2, 4, 6, 8, 10.

PARK SQUARE — "Dinah East," 1:30, 3:30, 5:30, 7:20, 9:15.

PI ALLEY — "McCabe and Mrs. Miller," 1:30, 3:40, 5:50, 8, 10; Sun. 1, 3:10, 5:20, 7:30, 9:40.

PLAZA, Brookline Village — "Her Fall and Rise," 8; "Ninotchka," 9:30.

SAVOY — "Escape From the Planet of the Apes," 10, 12, 2, 4, 6, 8, 10. Sneak Preview, Fri. and Sat. 8:30.

Weekend Events in Boston Area

TODAY

CHILDREN

ALLSTON BRANCH LIBRARY—3:30 p.m. story hour.

SLUTH BOSTON BRANCH LIBRARY —3:30 p.m. story hour.

MEETING

ROSLINDALE BRANCH LIBRARY—10 a.m. Summer Reading Cliub.

SHEA RINK, QUINCY—11 a.m. and 2 p.m. free performance by the Boston Children's Theatre Stagemobile.

TOU

BOSTON CENTER FOR THE ARTS, 539 TREMONT ST.—11 a.m. and 2 p.m. tour.

DRAMA

LOEB DRAMA CENTER, 64 Brattle St. Cambridge—8 p.m. Harold Pinter's "The Birthday Party" by the Harvard Summer School Repertory Theater.

PROPOSITION—8 p.m. at 241 Hampshire St. Inman Square, Cambridge.

TUFTS ARENA THEATER—8:15 p.m. Oscar Wilde's "Lady Windermere's Fan."

MUSIC

HATCH MEMORIAL SHELL—8:30 p.m. free concert by theBoston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra, conductor Arthur Fiedler.

DRAMA

LOEB DRAMA CENTER, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge—8 p.m. Harold Pinter's

The Birthday Party" by the Harvard Summer School Repertory Theater.

PROPOSITION—9 p.m. and 11 p.m. at 241 Hampshire St. Inman Square, Cambridge.

TUFTS AREAN THEATER—8:15 p.m. Oscar Wilde's "Lady Winderemere's Fan."

MUSIC

HAMMOND CASTLE, GLOUCESTER—8:30 p.m. organist Kenneth Wilson in summer pops program.

HATCH MEMORIAL SHELL—8:30 p.m. free concert by the Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra, conductor Arthur Fiedler.

WORKSHOPS

POLYARTS, 1½&3¼ BROADWAY, CAMBRIDGE—10:30 a.m. free workshops for children and adults.

...ates of none

In concert

SUPREMES REVUE. Fri. & Sat., 8:30 p.m., Aquarius Theatre, 413 Washington st.; all seats reserved, $5 & $6.

AL HIRT. Sun., 8 p.m., So. Shore Music Circus, Sohier st., off Rte. 3A, Cohasset; tickets adv., $5.50, at door $6.50.

BLUES EVENING WITH MUDDY WATERS, BIG MAMA THORNTON & JESSIE FULLER. Sat., 7:30 p.m.; adm. $4; RICHARD HOWARD & MARK STRAND (poetry), Sun., 5:30 p.m. (donation), Lenox Arts Center (5 min. from Tanglewood).

NATIONAL CYO DRUM & BUGLE CORPS INVITATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP. Thurs., 7 p.m., Lowell Cawley Memorial Stadium, Lowell; res. seats $5, $4, gen. adm. $2.

FOURTH ANNUAL FOLK JUBILEE. Thurs., 7:30 p.m., Hatch Shell, Charles River Esplanade; sponsored by re-Creation 71 and Costa do Sol(*).

COPENHAGEN YMCA CHOIR of 65 mixed voices, Fri., 8 p.m., N.E. Life Hall, Clarendon & Boylston sts.; for benefit of counseling service YMCA of Greater Boston and its world service abroad; subscription $3 (phone 536-7800, ext. 253).

SUMMERTHING, neighborhood musical presentations; please check listings daily in newspaper(*).

BOSTON SYMPHONY ESPLANADE ORCHESTRA. Hatch Shell, Charles River, generally nightly Mon.-Sat., Thurs. possibly excepted for re-Creation 71-Costa do Sol free concerts(*).

Continued on the next page

Globe July 9

H.T. 7/9

PRESS
BRISTOL, CONN.
D. 18,000

JUL 9 1971

New England Newsclip

MUSIC AT NOON: Conductor Arthur Fiedler (c) leads Boston Symphony's Esplanade orchestra during noon concert yesterday at City Hall Plaza. (UPI Telephoto)

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 199,160

JUL 11 1971

New England Newsclip

Fiedler Conducts at Plaza

Conductor Arthur Fiedler leads Boston Symphony's Esplanade orchestra during noon concert Wednesday at City Hall Plaza in Boston (UPI).

CHRONICLE-CITIZEN
BROOKLINE, MASS.
W. 10,200

JUL 15 1971 New England Newsclip

ENCORE — Mayor Kevin White presents a map of old Boston to Brookline's Arthur Fiedler at the Boston Symphony Esplanade Orchestra last week on City Hall Plaza in conjunction with Summerthing. For the past two years Summerthing has arranged for concerts in several Boston neighborhoods as well as on City Hall Plaza.

BACK BAY LEDGER-BEACON
HILL TIMES
BROOKLINE, MASS.
W. 8,500

JUL 15 1971 New England Newsclip

ALLSTON-BRIGHTON
CITIZEN ITEM
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 8,900

JUL 15 1971 New England Newsclip

Brighton crowd appreciated concert

To the Editor:

Last night (July 7), I, as were hundreds of other Brightonites, was fortunate in having the opportunity of enjoying a most beautiful evening at Rogers Park listening to the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson.

To see so many people, young and old alike, enjoying a beautiful July evening was something that has to be a credit to the Summerthing program.

Possibly the most enjoyable part of the evening to me personally was that during conversation with Harry Dickson, Leo Litwin, Thomas Perry, and other Symphony officials following the program, they told me that the audience was one of the most appreciative and attentive audiences for which the orchestra has performed during their summerthing community engagements.

As one who is involved with music and a lifelong Brightonite, this observation by them certainly made me proud of my neighbors.

Sincerely,
Peter C. Siragusa
Director of Music Education
Boston Public Schools

BACK BAY LEDGER-BEACON
HILL TIMES
BROOKLINE, MASS.
W. 8,500

JUL 15 1971 New England Newsclip

LEADER OF THE BAND — Nine-year-old Arthur Stivaletta Jr. of Dedham took the baton Saturday night to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Pops concert at The Hatch Shell. Arthur's dad had bid for his son's symphony debut at the recent Channel 2 auction. (Photo by Frank Moy)

ALLSTON-BRIGHTON
CITIZEN ITEM
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 8,900

JUL 15 1971 New England Newsclip

TWO SMILES - a shy one on the boy and a wide one on his balloon -- were shown a few minutes before the beginning of the Boston Symphony concert at the Hatch Shell on the Charles River. (Photo by Frank Moy)

AUDIENCE LISTENS to Pops/Summerthing concert at Rogers Park last week. (Photo by Ted Breslin)

TRANSCRIPT
DEDHAM, MASS.
WEEKLY 6,947

JUL 15 1971 New England Newsclip

MAESTRO ARTHUR FIEDLER gives 9-year-old Arthur Stivaletta Jr. of Dedham a few instructions before the youngster went on stage to lead the Boston Pops Orchestra at a Charles River Esplanade Concert one recent evening. Before an estimated 20,000 persons, Arthur Jr., son of the founder of the Wake Up America Committee, led the orchestra in Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever." Arthur gained the unique opportunity when his father offered the high bid for it on the Channel 2 auction of last month.

116

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUL 17 1971 New England Newsclip

"Superstar" Scare Sets Wheels Turning

By DAVE O'BRIAN

Jesus Christ may be hazardous to your health.

That, at least, seems to be the city of Boston's official position. Or, to be more precise, an outdoor showing of a "reverent rock opera" at Suffolk Downs, according to the city, could result in "the safety of the public being endangered."

However, an indoor performance of the same rock opera at Boston Garden is perfectly all right.

In case you've been living in a cave for the past six months and don't know what this is all about, a piece of religious propaganda disguised as rock music in order to bring the kids back into the fold, called "Jesus Christ Superstar," has, as they say, taken the country by storm.

★

While the show has been a commercial success, and while songs from the score have risen on the pop music charts, the show has not had much of an impact on the "black sheep" for which it was intended, the kids who have, as they also say, strayed from the paths of righteousness.

In other words, the "crazies" who rioted at the Newport Jazz Festival would be as likely to attend a Billy Graham Crusade as they would be to gate-crash at a performance of "Jesus Christ Superstar."

Comr. Sears

But the city of Boston, specifically its Police Dept. and its Licensing Division, got scared.

They saw that someone was requesting a permit to hold a "reverent rock opera" at Suffolk Downs on July 23. They only saw the word, "rock," ignored the words, "reverent," and "opera," and panicked. The permit was denied.

Later, the same permit was approved for Boston Garden, however. The feeling of the Licensing Division was that "large, unruly crowds are much easier to control indoors."

So, while the troublemakers haven't been fooled by Jesus Christ Superstar and won't be going, the police have been fooled and are expecting the troublemakers.

★

Meanwhile, the promoters of this show and two other concerts are upset because they would have lost $20,000 in advertising and contract fees if the Boston Garden permit had been denied, and still stand to lose something, because the Garden seats about 11,000 fewer paying customers than Suffolk Downs.

One of the promoters, Frank Valenti, who's admittedly more comfortable promoting boxing shows than rock operas and probably wishes he had stuck with the far less complicated business of promoting people beating each other's brains out, mildly disagrees with the city's action.

"I wish they'd let us go into Suffolk Downs with 'Jesus Christ Superstar,'" Valenti said, "and see what happens. I think it will be a nice, quiet group."

But the city's decision is final — religious performances at Suffolk Downs are dangerous and the track must be reserved for gamblers exclusively.

By the same logic, it would seem that the city is still sticking its neck out in other areas.

Performances of the Boston Pops, for example, are held outdoors at both City Hall Plaza and the Hatch Shell.

★

Mayor White is already on record as opposed to rock music there, and MDC Comr. John Sears has canceled a folk concert at the Hatch Shell to allow for a cooling off period."

But the Pops, although admittedly not all that religious, still do play popular music, sometimes even Beatles songs that could be classified as "rock." Watch it, Arthur Fiedler.

And organ music is frequently played between innings at Fenway Park, creating a series of outdoor concerts before an excitable crowd and some pretty tense baseball players. And some of that organ music is pretty jumpy.

In fact, even some indoor performances, like those of the Bruins and Celtics, are likely to excite large crowds into a destructive frenzy.

And, talk about destruction, have you ever seen a horse player tearing up his mutuel tickets in a rage after his horse trailed the field?

You're kidding! You've never been to Suffolk Downs?

PEDDLER
BROOKLINE, MASS.
13,000

JUL 17 1971 New England Newsclip

LEADER OF THE BAND — Nine-year-old Arthur Stivaletta Jr. of Dedham took the baton Saturday night to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Pops concert at the Hatch Shell. Arthur's dad had bid for his son's symphony debut at the recent Channel 2 auction. (Photo by Frank Moy)

RECORD AMERICAN
(ALL DAY)
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 415,231

JUL 19 1971 New England Newsclip

Anthony LaCamera

A Matter of Leaving No Rock Unturned

Much has been said pro and con, in print and over the airwaves, about the Boston licensing division decision to refuse a license for the outdoor performance of the moving rock opera, "Jesus Christ, Superstar," and yet to allow the same show to be booked indoors at Boston Garden.

What most people seem to have missed, though, is that the local promoters submitted applications to the licensing bureau for a series of THREE rock concerts, INCLUDING the uniquely reverent "Jesus Christ, Superstar," at Suffolk Downs. On police recommendation and because of many protests from the already-beleaguered East Boston residential community, all three requests for the outdoor site were turned down. It wasn't a simple turndown of "Jesus Christ, Superstar," which in itself, is surely not riot material.

Anthony La Camera

Concerning rock concerts in general, police maintain it is easier to handle an impressionable crowd in indoor surroundings than outdoors, and, having had no experience along these lines, I'm not about to argue the point. Since the police have lived with this sort of thing for many a year, though, I must marvel at those who scoff at their experienced judgment. I must marvel, too, at those who equate an outdoor rock concert with an everyday sports event.

★

In that radio station editorial of last week, for instance, was the following specious statement: "Just once we'd like to hear of the cancellation of a Bruins hockey game because a few heads were busted in the grandstand of Boston Garden at a game the night before!" The superficial implication here is that spectators' heads are busted at hockey games, but I wish somebody would tell me how often, if at all, that has happened in recent memory. Players' heads, sometimes, and that's to be deplored.

Meanwhile, others are trying to equate rock festivals with just about every other event that occurs in these parts — the Pops concerts at the Hatch Shell, the baseball games at Fenway Park, the horse and dog races at the North Shore tracks. Such benign comparison is rediculous on the face of it.

Ask the police which assignment they would prefer from a personal security standpoint—a ball game or a rockfest. Ask objective young people who have survived a riotous rock scene where they would feel safer — at a hockey game or a replay of their rock experience. Let's face it, such factors as audience, attitude, mood, environment and stimulation are not the same for all events.

Although I read the sports pages every day with fanatic interest, I can't seem to recall any recent stories of anti-riot squads being rushed out to quell excited fans. More in line with my own field, I also read Variety, the show business bible, with weekly devotion. In the past few weeks it has run several stories about rock concerts in this country and elsewhere, and in one line it diagnoses "festivalitis" as a "virulent teenage summer disorder." Now I didn't say that; the publication did.

Here are some Variety headlines: "Dream of New Woodstock in La. Becomes Nightmare for Fans and Promoters," "Ban Pop Concerts in Regina Park After Riot," "Italo Concerts a War Zone; Mass Violence Shakes Artists." And it's even news when there's a minimum of problems; "St. Paul Rock Fest Draws Record 25,000, and Hardly Any Trouble."

Perhaps the Variety story on the off-again-on-again "Celebration of Life" rock festival in McCrea, La., makes a point. Summing up that wild affair, one paragraph stated:

"Between 50,000 and 100,000 youngsters here were taught the hard way. Sanitary facilities were inadequate, food prices were highway robbery, the sound was lousy, and the drug scene was frightening. The final score was dismal; two dead by drowning in the nearby river and some 100 arrests on drug raps. Also in the reckoning were the numerous batterings of kids by members of local motorcycle gangs hired for 'security' purposes."

That doesn't sound at all like baseball to me. So gimme shelter, please!

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 125

Tanglewood

1971

TANGLEWOOD 1971

page

I Pre-season clips..... 1

II BSO concerts..... 23

1st weekend...p23 5th weekend...p67

2nd.....35 6th.....76

3d.....43 7th.....84

4th.....52 8th.....92

III Berkshire Music Center.....1o6

BMC programs.....1o6

Articles about BMC students.....113

Grants to BMC.....121

"Music Theatre Project".....122

Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music.....129

Contemporary Trends Concerts.....131

"Tanglewood On Parade".....139

IV Friends of Tanglewood and "Day In The Arts" program.....145

V Boston Pops Pension Fund Concert.....146

VI Personnel and personalities at Tanglewood.....149

VII Post season clips.....162

PRE SEA- SON

Tanglewood: the Beginning

Tanglewood's first year: 1934

Parking was tight, even in 1937

A muddy night — Aug. 12, 1937

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

AUG 21 1971

New England Newsclip

2

TS

the ARTS

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
S. 207,211

MAY 30 1971

New England Newsclip

RELAXING AT TANGLEWOOD: This year it will open July 2.

1 Tanglewood
2 Saratoga
3 Newport
4 Block Island
5 South Mountain
6 New Marlboro
7 Charlmont
8 Norfolk
9 Falls Village
10 New Canaan
11 Marlboro
12 Winooski
13 Bennington
14 Jaffrey
15 Hanover
16 Brunswick
17 Blue Hill
18 Waterville
19 Lee
20 New London
21 Barnstable

Safford

Anywhere you go, you'll find a music festival nearby

TS

the ARTS

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
S. 207,211

MAY 30 1971

New England Newsclip

RELAXING AT TANGLEWOOD: This year it will open July 2.

1 Tanglewood
2 Saratoga
3 Newport
4 Block Island
5 South Mountain
6 New Marlboro
7 Charlmont
8 Norfolk
9 Falls Village
10 New Canaan
11 Marlboro
12 Winooski
13 Bennington
14 Jaffrey
15 Hanover
16 Brunswick
17 Blue Hill
18 Waterville
19 Lee
20 New London
21 Barnstable

Safford

Anywhere you go, you'll find a music festival nearby

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(E) 30,100

MAR 31 1971

New England Newsclip

CONTINUED FROM PRECEEDING PAGE

ON YOUR MARK, get set, go! The summer music festival season again is at hand. You can take off in almost any direction. You will be bound to strike one festival or another, probably several.

If your interest is in the glamorous, large symphony orchestra the nearest is the Berkshire Festival, on the grounds of Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Here the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its eight week series July 2, to run on weekends through Aug. 22.

There are extra added attractions at Tanglewood, too. Weekend prelude recitals by visiting artists precede the big show Friday evenings at 7. There are open rehearsals by the orchestra Saturday mornings at 10:30. In the middle of August the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, with the Fromm Music Foundation, shows off young people performing the Festival of Contemporary Music and this is extraordinary even when the music may not be.

The next nearest large orchestra is not really too much further. That is the Philadelphia Orchestra, to take up residence at the Saratoga (N.Y.) Performing Arts Center Aug. 4 through 28. For the first time the Philadelphians and Bostonians will exchange summertime concert platforms, Aug. 20, the Academy of Music crowd to be at Tanglewood and vice versa.

One word of warning: August in Saratoga is horse race month. Plan to stay somewhere else nearby where lodging rates are lower.

Music for small ensemble looms still larger than orchestras throughout New England in the summer. That is the code of the Newport Music Festival, of course, which again, July 29 to Aug. 7, will concentrate on the romantic era at the Breakers, Marble House and the Elms. Repeats of last summer's balloon ascensions and a cruise concert will take place as well.

The Block Island Musical Society will have recitals once more at the Spring House. Details have yet to arrive at this desk, but when they do they will be passed on.

Moving into Massachusetts you will find the South Mountain chamber concerts near Pittsfield (June 26-Oct. 3); the same at New Marlboro's Red Fox Music Barn (July 10-Aug. 14); and the Mohawk Trail chamber concerts in Charlemont's Federated Church (July 24-Aug. 28).

In Connecticut there are Hart College's chamber series at Hartford (June 20-Aug. 15); the Yale Concerts at Norfolk, off in the Litchfield Hills (July 2-Aug. 22); the Music Mountain chamber concerts at Falls Village (July 3-Sept. 4); and the Silvermine Guild Chamber Music Festival in New Canaan (July 11-Aug. 29).

Vermont has the outstanding Marlboro Music Festival at Marlboro (July 10-Aug. 15); chamber concerts at St. Michael's College, Winooski (July 7-21); and the Bennington Composers Conference and Chamber Music Center (Aug. 15-29).

A well recommended New Hampshire series is called simply Monadnock Music, centered at Jaffrey but circulating through the area (July 21-Sept. 4); at Hanover there are Dartmouth's Hopkins Center chamber concerts (July 6-Sept. 4); and out of Center Harbor the New Hampshire Music Festival tours the Lakes Region (July 11-Aug. 21).

Notes and Footnotes

FINE FETTLE: With summer almost sure to arrive, we felt it was time to dwell on some of the advantages, aside from the warm, often sunny days. One of the big features, of course, will be Tanglewood and its culture crowds. Despite its rather artistic nature, Tanglewood contains a lot of sound (not a pun) commercial good sense for the Berkshires. This also has been revealed by some Berkshire Life Insurance Co. people in a piece in the firm's newsletter, the result of delving by President Lawrence W. Strattner Jr., John Nadeau and John W. Talbot, also members of the community relations committee of Tanglewood Friends. Artists must live, so Tanglewood buys $500,000 worth of goods and services during the 10 weeks the orchestra and school are here in residence. The Boston Symphony each summer brings more than 100 members and staff who may not be big spenders individually but, as a whole, they shell out all of $150,000 while here. Furthermore, Tanglewood voluntarily pays property taxes, which it needn't do, totaling more than $10,000 every year . . . Such a predicament at the Sub 'n Beef restaurant on North Street the other day. Instead of beef, its specialty, the wholesalers delivered a load of veal. It had to go back. As the proprietors whose special is Big Beefies, said, "How could we sell Big Vealies?" The mistake was corrected in time for lunch . . . See that the Railroad Enthusiasts of Methuen will embark on an excursion May 2 from North Station, Boston, over the B&M line for an all-day zigzag run to include a last trip over the Ayer-to-Greenville branch and the Milford line abandoned in 1942 which should be an experience! Tickets on sale from Railroad Enthusiasts, Inc., P.O. Box 136, Ward Hill, Mass . . . Frank Couch in the Tyringham Topics church newsletter for spring (whatever that is) praises the road superintendent and his crew for clearing the roads promptly after each of the winter's many storms, "far better than those in other parts of the county," which we can well believe . . . Definition: Candidate: a politician who stands for anything he thinks people will fall for.

JUST HEARD about the school administrator visiting a classroom, and who became annoyed at the racket in the next room. He burst in, saw one boy taller than the rest who was talking an awful lot, and marched him into another room. He stood him in a corner and told him to be quiet. Before long a small head appeared around the door and a meek voice asked, "Please, sir. May we have our teacher back?"

HERE'S ONE about the employe who was talked into buying stock in the firm where he worked. "It's made me a nervous wreck," he lamented. "I keep worrying about the lousy work I'm turning out.

EVER THINK how odd is the English language? A slim chance and a fat chance mean the same thing.

RICHARD V. HAPPEL

4

Here's What Tanglewood Does For The Berkshires

by George A. Wells

Man does not live by bread alone; and a vocal advocate of what culture, in the musical sense, means is the gentleman who directs the development and tourism promotion for the Berkshire Hills Conference. Like thousands of others, he is a

John V. Geary
Executive Director, Berkshire Hills Conference.

staunch booster for the famed Tanglewood Music Festival.

He is John Vincent Geary, Executive Director of the Berkshire Hills Conference, and a

Panorama In Music

An aerial view of Tanglewood where thousands come each year to hear fine music and to help swell the economy of the Berkshire area. To John V. Geary of the Berkshire Hills Conference this is a "most remarkable place."

They Came! They Listened! They Enjoyed!

Part of the more than 200,000 people who come to the Tanglewood Festival annually are shown above listening to the music of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the pastoral setting of the green grass of the Berkshires.

Tanglewood — Berkshire County's Largest Tourist Attraction

(Continued from page one)

man credited with being responsible for many projects which have helped the economy of the Berkshire area and of the total Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

"Tanglewood is solid!" enthuses Geary. "In some quarters there seems to be an impression that the Tanglewood people arrive each summer like gypsies, all music and glitter and outstretched palms; and then, around the end of August, after filling their pockets with local money, take off again and aren't heard from until the next year. The question is raised here and there by year-round Berkshirites: What does Tanglewood do for us?"

We went along with the movement and asked Geary to outline what he feels Tanglewood does for the Berkshires.

"Quite a lot!" was his blunt and immediate reply. Then, in a manner he is expert at from long experience, he proceeded to tick off a few facts he said should be considered:

Tanglewood buys a half-million dollars' worth of goods and services in the Berkshires each summer.

Tanglewood brings well over a hundred of its own people — the members and staff of the Boston Symphony Orchestra — in to the Berkshires to live, work and spend money for ten weeks each year. If each spends $1500 in those ten weeks, that's more than $150,000 pumped into the Berkshire economy.

Tanglewood employs numerous local residents on a full-time or part-time basis.

Tanglewood voluntarily pays local property taxes which, as a tax-exempt non-profit organization, it is not required to do. This amount is reported to be in the neighborhood of some ten thousand dollars a year.

Tanglewood is responsible for nearly forty members of the Boston Symphony buying or building homes in the Berkshires and becoming tax-paying property owners.

Tanglewood is by far the largest single Berkshire County tourist attraction each summer, alone accounting for approximately 25 per cent of the County's annual tourist income, (Tourism remains Berkshire County's second largest industry and is still growing.)

We noted to Mr. Geary that we felt these facts were quite significant and interesting.

"Let's amplify this a bit," he suggested. "The Berkshire Hills Conference, dedicated to promoting tourism in this County, recently took a survey which indicated unmistakably the importance of Tanglewood to a summertime tourism. Over 90 per cent of those surveyed said Tanglewood was the primary reason for their coming to Berkshire County."

The figures on record back up the statements of Mr. Geary. Over 200,000 people come to Tanglewood each summer. The Berkshire Hills Conference estimates that 60% of them — 120,000 — stay in the area at least two and a half days and spend about $30 a day. This totals up to a whopping $9 million for the Berkshire economy.

"Remember too," says Geary, "This money really circulates. It starts with the hotel, motel, and restaurant owners; but part of it goes into the banks (which use it) and more of it goes to doctors, lawyers, food people, laundry people, insurance, public utilities, and all our local businesses seemingly not related directly to the tourist industry, ad infinitum."

He has another point of emphasis regarding this "circulation" of money and here is how he puts it:

"No one can convince me that a single tourist dollar does not pass throughout more than ten hands, nor can we really measure when the value of it stops. It is unending. It is the soundest dollar to add to the Berkshire economy."

Geary pointed out to us that Tanglewood now costs the Boston Symphony Orchestra over a million dollars annually to maintain and operate, which is more than they can possibly recover at the box office in eight weeks. Tanglewood accounts for 40 per cent of the Boston Symphony's annual deficit and that share represents hundreds of thousands of dollars. All of us are increasingly aware, incidentally, that our great performing arts organizations cost more to maintain than they can ever earn directly.

"This indicates that Tanglewood puts in a good deal more than it takes out. It benefits many more local residents than those who seem to profit directly by its presence," Geary explains. "And," he says, "there's much more!"

More? We had to ask: What more?

And here's the "More" as Geary outlines it:

There's the pleasure of the music itself, and there's the delight of picnicking on the lawn, plus the relaxed friendliness of the mid-week Friend's Concerts, enjoyed almost solely by Berkshire residents, who can hear forty or more varied programs by joining the Friends of Music at Tanglewood or making a small donation at the gate.

There are the "Youth Concerts" open to all the young people of the area.

And there's suspense, watching the young musicians of Tanglewood's school — the Berkshire Music Center — and wondering which one will be the next Leonard Bernstein. As an example, Geary reminds how three summers ago, a young man named Michael Tilson Thomas came to Tanglewood as a student. By the following summer, he was the Boston Symphony's Assistant Conductor; and, by the following year, he was its Associate Conductor, leading it in its newest recordings. Now he is sought after by the most important orchestras around the world — London, Tokyo, Madrid and Israel, for example, as a guest conductor. He has also added the job of Music Director of the Buffalo Philharmonic to his Boston duties.

Tanglewood alumni make up ten per cent of all the musicians in America's major orchestras, as conductors or players around the world, including the conductors of thirteen of this nation's major symphony orchestras.

We had to agree that this collection of fact, gathered by this devoted man, proves that Tanglewood is indeed a remarkable place and a great asset, not only to the Berkshire area, but to the entire Commonwealth.

Summing it up, John Vincent Geary put it this way: "We are enthused over Tanglewood's impact on the Berkshire economy. In economic terms, it says one thing loud and clear: Tanglewood puts in a good deal more than it takes out!"

The man, we agree, has proved his point.

SUMMER TRAVEL

Berkshire summer: Ins, outs and arts

BY JUDY STARK

Berkshire County, Massachusetts, is a huge expanse of woodlands, farms, mountains, sleepy villages and first-rate performing arts festivals at the end of the Massachusetts Turnpike—about 150 miles west of Boston. What it doesn't have are singles' weekend hotels, noisy boardwalks or a lot of air pollution. What it does have is a restful, rather wealthy atmosphere; and plenty of things to do if you have a car to get around to them and if they're the kinds of things you like to do.

There are three good reasons for visiting the Berkshires. First, there are performances at the arts festivals — Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; Stockbridge, home of the Berkshire Theatre Festival; Lenox, where a new multi-media arts center is taking root this summer; Lee, scene of Ted Shawn's famous Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival; and Williamstown, where the Williamstown Theatre brings back famous actors season after season.

Second, the Berkshires are beautiful. This is a green, clean area, with 30 lakes and ponds for fishing and swimming, and eight state forests, plus acres of rolling farmland. On a hot afternoon when there's nothing else to do, you can walk along the stream bank in Stockbridge and watch a night hawk swoop out of the sky after butterflies.

Third, Berkshire County is full of literary, historic and religious associations, with many museums and appropriately marked sites. Mark Twain summered here; William Cullen Bryant celebrated the area's beauty in poetry. Early suffragist Susan B. Anthony was born in Pittsfield. Fiery preacher Jonathan Edwards brought the gospel to the Indians in Stockbridge.

It's a spread-out area, though, and a car is really necessary for getting around. There is bus service from Boston (see below), but you may arrive at your destination hours before that evening's performance starts and discover that most of the other attractions—museums, gardens, etc.—are just too far away on foot. And none of the Berkshire towns has yet attained the reputation of a Harvard Square of the West: you're more likely to find an A & P and a hardware store in the center of town than a string of boutiques.

The people of Berkshire County are eager to make their home as accessible and welcoming as possible, and they provide lots of assistance for visitors. By writing to the Berkshire Hills conference (P.O. Box 1170, Pittsfield 01201) or calling (413-443-9186), you can get free a thick envelope full of maps, hotel and restaurant guides, National Geographic full-color reprints, schedules and museum brochures.

Another useful guide is Berkshire Week, a locally published tabloid paper which contains reviews, photographs, listings and features of all activities during the current week. This is available free everywhere in the county—drugstores, food stores, hotels, theatres, bus stations.

Both the materials from the Berkshire Hills Conference and the advertisements in Berkshire Week provide the names, addresses and phone numbers of literally hundreds of hotels, motels, inns and guest houses in the area. The Conference will make tentative reservations for you for stays of at least two nights. Nearly every village has its tourist information booth in the center of town, where you can get information on where to stay (often townspeople rent out rooms in their homes at far lower rates than commercial hotels). It's usually easy to find a place to stay early in the week, but weekends are very crowded, and it's best to have reservations.

Following is a brief discussion of some of the scenic, artistic, literary and historical points of interest in Berkshire County, then a discussion of the offerings in four major locations: Lenox (Tanglewood and the Lenox Arts Center); Stockbridge (Berkshire Theatre Festival); Lee (Jacob's Pillow); and Williamstown (Williamstown Theatre). No attempt has been made at an all-inclusive guide.

How to get there: Bus service is offered from Boston's Trailways Station (Park Square) via Peter Pan bus lines to Springfield, where you change for buses to Lee and Lenox. There is no direct bus to Stockbridge; you have to take either the local taxi (inexpensive) or the local bus (infrequent; out on strike all last summer). The one-way fare from Boston to Lee is $5.35. Phone 482-6620 for information. Buses to Williamstown leave from the Greyhound terminal on St. James's St.; the one-way fare is $6.60. Phone 423-5810.

SCENIC SPOTS

Natural Bridge and Chasm. The only natural marble water-eroded bridge in North America is located along Route 8 North in North Adams. The rock formation is estimated to be about 150 million years older than the formations at Niagara Falls. The natural marble bridge is 30 feet wide, 15 feet thick, and spans a chasm 45 feet deep. The walls of the chasm are marked with potholes carved by whirling stones cast up by rushing waters. This chasm contains a 30-foot marble "waterfall," kept pure white by a continuous flow of water over it.

Hairpin Turn and Tower. Along the Mohawk Trail just outside North Adams, and a hairpin turn it is. There's also an observation tower from which excellent views of the mountains of Southern Vermont and Northwestern Massachusetts can be seen.

Mt. Greylock. Highest peak in the commonwealth—3491 feet—and located near North Adams. At the top of the mountain is a 90-foot granite tower, memorial to Massachusetts veterans of all wars, erected in 1932.

Pleasant Valley Wildlife Sanctuary, near Tanglewood, Lenox. Hundreds of plants and animals; walking trails.

Berkshire Garden Center, Stockbridge. Exhibits of flower arranging; extensive library of gardening books and pamphlets. Landscaped grounds laid out in gardens—flower, vegetable, shrub, fruit and vineyards—where new species are developed. Open weekdays 9-5; Sundays and holidays 10-12:30, 2-5:30. Free.

ART MUSEUMS

Chesterwood, in Glendale, near Stockbridge, is the studio home of sculptor Daniel Chester French, who carved the Lincoln Memorial, the Minute Man and other famous statues and busts. Sculpture, painting, gardens, nature trail. Open daily 10-5. Adults, $1; children, 25 cents.

Naumkeag, Stockbridge, is a palatial country home designed by famous architect Stanford White. Original furnishings, landscaped gardens, fountains, terraces. Open daily except Monday, 10-5:30. House and garden, $1.50; garden only, 75 cents.

The Old Corner House, Stockbridge, is the scene of a permanent though changing exhibit of paintings by Stockbridge artist Norman Rockwell. Open daily except Tuesday, 10-5. Adults, $1; children, 25 cents.

Sterling and Francine Clark Art Institute, Williamstown, houses an excellent collection of French 19th-century painting, plus Italian, Dutch and Flemish works of the Old Masters. Collection also includes prints, drawings, silver, furniture, china and sculpture. Open daily except Monday, 10-5. Free.

LITERARY LOCATIONS

Herman Melville Room, Berkshire Athenaeum, Pittsfield. This is the national center for Melville studies and includes a collection of books, pictures, letters and memorabilia. In nearby Dalton is Arrowhead, Melville's home for 13 years, where he wrote Moby Dick in 1850. Open Mon., Wed., Fri., 9-9; Tues., Thurs., Sat., 9-6. Free.

Lanesboro is the birthplace of American humorist Josh Billings, who is buried in the village cemetery.

William Cullen Bryant House, Great Barrington. The poet practiced law and served as town clerk here, and the house contains many of his mementos.

HISTORICAL SITES

Shaker Village, in Hancock, is worth a visit of several hours. The Shakers were an offshoot of the Quakers who believed religious and secular concerns should not be separated, and this village (settled in 1780) is one of 18 communities established by the sect. The Village includes restored gardens and fields, barns, tanneries, meeting houses, machine shops and residence halls. Last summer an exhibit of the famous "spirit paintings"—visions transmitted to members of the sect while in religious trances—was on display. One fascinating building is the round stone barn, which operates on three levels—a top level, entered by a sloping dirt driveway, was for hay wagons, which could move into the barn on a balcony to dump their hay into the central feeding column. Cattle stood in stanchions on the circular second level, and manure was gathered on the bottom level. Helpful but non-effusive guides are stationed throughout the complex.

Scattered throughout Berkshire County are many smaller museums housing collections of silver, housewares, furnishings, clothing and books relating to the area's history. Open 9:30-5. Adults, $1.50; children, 50 cents.

Crane Museum, Old Stone Mill, Route 8, Dalton. Crane and Co. is one of the oldest and finest paper-making firms in the country, and manufactures all-rag papers for stock certificates, correspondence, tracing and carbon papers. They also make the paper that U.S. currency is printed on. Free guided tours through the mill. Open from 2 to 5 Monday through Friday.

Lenox Arts Center includes music, art, theatre and film, all happening on an estate in the Berkshires.

LENOX: THE ARTS CENTER AND TANGLEWOOD

When Off-Broadway producer Lyn Austin broke with the Berkshire Theatre Festival last summer, she moved a few miles away to Lenox, where she set up the beginnings of a new entertainment location on a 100-acre estate. That location will become the Lenox Arts Center this summer, produced by Miss Austin and Oliver Smith, with music, poetry, theatre, film-making, ecology studies and special events scheduled July 1 through Labor Day, and involving some of the biggest names in entertainment.

"Unlike other centers that specialize in one field," says Miss Austin, "this one will bring various forms of creative expression in close touch. Artists in allied fields feel the need for contact with each other. They know that these associations often make for an electric creative atmosphere and often offer the connective links so essential to development."

The estate on which all this will take place was designed as a French farm village in 1894 and includes estate houses, barns, an amphitheatre and other structures. The area is laid out so that several different kinds of performances can go on simultaneously.

Events planned for the summer include the following:

Guitar seminars in song writing, playing and singing, led by Martin Best, Arthur Miller and Frederic Grunfeld. These will cover classical, folk and rock guitar, and will take the form of four sessions per week (at $5 per session) for eight weeks. Informal performances will be given in the estate's Cafe at midnight.

Folk, blues and country concerts: Boston's music promoter Manny Greenhill will present the Summer Folklore Concert Series at the Center: July 3, Pete Seeger; July 10, blues evening with Muddy Waters and friends; July 17, Ravi Shankar; July 24, Judy Collins; July 31, The Byrds; August 7, Mary Travers; and a performance by Joan Baez to be scheduled. All performances are scheduled for 7:30 p.m. and will cost $4.

Theatre: Jack MacGowran's acclaimed evening of readings from Beckett will start off the season July 1-4 and 8-11. A collage of music, poetry, politics and joy is "A Long Time Coming and Long Time Gone," based on the works of Richard Farina, scheduled for July 15-18 and 22-25. Martin Best of the Royal Shakespeare Co. and other performers will present an evening of "Shakespeare and Song" July 29-August 1 and August 5-8. And "a musical strategy for 28 performers," known as "Dream Tantras for Western Massachusetts," by

—continued on page S-10

Berkshires...

—continued from page S-8

Stanley Silverman and Richard Freman, will be presented August 12-15 and 19-22. Performances are Thursdays and Sundays at 9:30 p.m., Fridays and Saturdays at 10:30, all tickets are $2.

Poetry: a special marathon reading by local poets will open the season on July 3. Other readings: July 4, Diane Wakoski and Galway Kinnell; July 11, Richard Howard and Mark Strand; July 18, Richard Wilbur; July 25, John Perreault and Ira Joel Haber; August 15, Bert Lucarelli; August 22, W. D. Snodgrass. Still to be scheduled in August are Dozer and Dozetti, Maxine Kumin, C. K. Williams and Sam Cornish of Cambridge. All these readings take place Sundays at 5:30 p.m. and cost $1.50.

Chamber Music: July 4, Veronica Gochum Von Moltke, pianist; July 18, the Sine Nomine Singers conducted by Harry Saltzman; July 25, Veronica Gochum Von Moltke and jazz trio; August 1, Monique Du Phil, pianist; August 8, Aaron Rosland and Eileen Flissler, violin and piano; and August 15, Sue Kahn Saltzman and Harriet Rothstein, flute and piano. These performances are all Sunday at 11 a.m.; tickets, $2.

Film: an intensive eight-week course in Super-8 filmmaking, with group and individual instruction. All Super-8 equipment will be supplied for live-action sound films. Video tape will be available. All ages and levels of experience are eligible. Fee: $200 plus roughly additional $100 for developing cost. Enrollment limited to 20; two scholarships available.

There'll also be a B.O.L.D. Outward Bound Program, plus an Ecology Event conducted by world leaders August 23 through Labor Day.

For information, reservations or to make application for any of these courses, contact the Lenox Arts Center at P.O. Box 615, Lenox. Telephone 413-637-2242, 2261, or 2200.

Tickets are available at the Festival Ticket Office at Tanglewood, telephone 413-637-1600, and through Ticketron outlets, of which Boston After Dark is one.

TANGLEWOOD

A few miles away, still in Lenox, is the 210-acre former estate known as Tanglewood, now the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for their Berkshire Festival. Tanglewood is also the home of the Berkshire Music Center, the BSO's summer academy for young musicians.

The BSO concerts at Tanglewood are organized around weekends. Every Friday at 7 p.m. there's a Weekend Prelude recital, free to ticketholders for the Friday night concert. On Saturday mornings there are open rehearsals (tickets: $2.50), which benefit the orchestra's pension fund. Festival concerts are Friday and Saturday nights at 9 p.m. and Sunday afternoon at 2:30. Tickets for the festival concerts are $3 to sit on the lawn and $3.50-$8 for a seat inside the huge Music Shed.

Unless you're interested in watching the performers and soloists closely, you'll probably be more comfortable bringing a blanket and sitting outside. The grounds are beautiful and are an ideal place for a pre-concert picnic. Come prepared, though, for a cool evening.

For full information on who's playing what and when this summer at Tanglewood, turn to the music section, where Ben Gerson has all the details.

STOCKBRIDGE: THE BERKSHIRE THEATRE FESTIVAL

Stockbridge is the home, at least in the summer, of some famous people, like Anne Bancroft and George Tabori and William Gibson. It is the location of the Austin Riggs Mental Health Clinic, where James Taylor spent some time a few years back and where he wrote "Fire and Rain." It was also the scene of an interesting Thanksgiving Day celebration, commemorated in talking blues by Arlo Guthrie (indeed, the original Alice's Restaurant is still in business).

Stockbridge is also the home of the Berkshire Theatre Festival, now in its seventh year, which has had its ups and downs as the years have gone by, culminating last summer in the split between two factions involved in the theatre's artistic and financial management. William Gibson, then president of the BTF, wanted to do new American plays and to encourage young playwrights, and he envisioned not only four summer productions, but an ongoing winter series of workshops and readings, which might produce usable scripts for the following season, as well as giving much-needed help to new writers.

BOSTON AFTER DARK
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 70,000

JUN 29 1971

PRESS
ENFIELD, CONN.
W. 7,470
MAY 13 1971
New England Newsclip

Plan To Visit Tanglewood

With the approach of summer, practically every family is beginning to think in terms of vacation plans and weekend outings. Some people prefer the sporty side of life; others may be more inclined toward the cultural aspects of life as related to relaxation. Some readers may delight in gift shop hopping and sightseeing. Others may prefer music and art.

Both preferences can be satisfied any weekend with an outing to the western part of the state of Massachusetts. The Great Barrington area, the cultural activities of which are considerably varied, flourishes during the summer months with the opening of Jacob's Pillow and Tanglewood.

A day's excursion, of antique hunting shopping and sightseeing can be gloriously climaxed with afternoon or evening attendance at a performance at Tanglewood. Tickets are available in all price ranges. The most zealous of music lovers, of course, prefer the box seats, within the pavilion enclosure. Novice music fans and enthusiastic visitors often prefer the less expensive, so-called "lawn seats." These "seats" consist of a blanket or beach chair that the visitor himself brings to relax upon.

Many tourists in the Great Barrington area like to pack a picnic supper, often complete with wine and candlelight, to eat on the lawn prior to the performance.

The atmosphere is congenial and most relaxing; the music fantastic. Tanglewood, itself, is an estate of 210 acres in the Berkshire Hills, given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 1930's. The area is now world famous as the summer home of the Boston Symphony, its Berkshire Festival and its unique Berkshire Music Center. Nathaniel Hawthorne once lived on the Tanglewood grounds and wrote that he could barely work in the presence of such scenic beauty. Today it is nearly unchanged.

This year the Berkshire Festival will open July 2 and continue until August 22. Seiji Ozawa, a brilliant young Japanese conductor who is the Music Director of the San Francisco Symphony, and Gunther Schuller, distinguished composer, writer and educator, are the Artistic Directors of Tanglewood. The reknown Leonard Bernstein, Conductor Laureate of the New York Philharmonic, is Advisor to Tanglewood. Michael Tilson Thomas is Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony and also the newly-appointed Music Director of the Buffalo Philharmonic.

Together, these men add luster to the Tanglewood tradition that has steadily grown since the Boston Symphony's first concerts there under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky, its Music Director for 25 years and guiding spirit in the development of Tanglewood into one of the world's leading music centers.

During the course of the summer 23 performances will be conducted. History will be made on August 20, when for the first time, two leading American music festivals exchange concerts. The Boston Symphony plays at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center while the Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Tanglewood.

The famed Boston Pops will appear at Tanglewood, with Arthur Fiedler conducting, on Tuesday, August 3 at 8:30 p.m.; Leonard Bernstein will conduct "Missa Solemnis" on Sunday, July 25, at 2:30 p.m.

The Tanglewood grounds are open two hours prior to each major concert. The cafeteria is open to ticket holders, who are cordially invited to picnic on the lawn. Please note, however, that children, regardless of their age, must have tickets.

Prior to the opening of the season at Tanglewood, the Press will list the various concerts and the dates on which they will be presented. Meanwhile, plan ahead, include a relaxing, summer weekend, a day's excursion to the historical, beautifully scenic area of the Berkshire Hills, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUN 25 1971
New England Newsclip

Mutual Admiration Society Breaks Bread at Tanglewood

By ANNE-GERARD FLYNN

It was get-acquainted night for members of the Berkshire Hills Conference and the Tanglewood management as representatives from both groups gathered in last evening's late sunlight for a buffet under Tanglewood's gay yellow and white tent. The affair was a first for Tanglewood and was designed to thank members of the county's tourist promotion board for popularizing the Boston Symphony concerts. A survey taken by the Berkshire Hills Conference in 1968 indicated that Tanglewood is the No. 1 tourist attraction in the area.

Funds Needed

An open bar and a spread of crabmeat, chicken and tuna sandwiches enhanced the pastoral setting, but the social atmosphere needed little encouragement. Jack F. Fitzpatrick, vice president of the BHC and owner of the Red Lion Inn in Stockbridge, noted that "if it weren't for Tanglewood, we would be out of business." He urged BHC members to help the Boston Symphony in the orchestra's effort to raise funds to combat its operating deficit, and said letters of appeal would be forthcoming from James Sloane and Curtis Buttenheim, members of the Tanglewood Friends board.

Thomas Perry, manager of the BSO, and his wife were present. An assortment of restaurant and hotel owners, looking as chipper and colorful as the tourists they serve, were also in attendance. Mrs. Margaret Bristol, who operates a guest home in Richmond, commented that 85 per cent of her tourists come up specifically for Tanglewood. The other 15 per cent, she explained, come up for parents' weekend at area camps.

Business Inteferes

Although 150 people had been invited, the turnout fell below this mark. John V. Geary, executive director of the BHC and one of the coordinators for the affair, attributed this to the Veterans of Foreign Wars convention, currently being celebrated in the city. "Many of our members just had to stay home and take care of the shop," he observed. However, before the last sandwich was downed, Geary already had plans in the works and promised that next year's get-acquainted night would be "bigger and better."

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
AUG 6 1971
New England Newsclip

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA PHOTOS taken during the European tour in the spring are being exhibited at the Berkshire Museum. Violinist Fredy Ostrovsky is shown at Vienna's Musikvereinsaal, where he made his debut many years ago after his graduation from the Vienna Academy of Music.

BSO European Tour Photos Are on Exhibit at Museum

Twenty-five photographs taken in April during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first European tour in 15 years are on view at the Berkshire Museum for the month of August. They were taken by Edward Fitzgerald, head photographer of the Boston Globe.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which traveled in two specially named Pan American 707s, the Clipper Boston Symphony and the Clipper Boston Pops, needed seven Pan Am freight modules to transport 8½ tons of belongings. These included wardrobe trunks, instruments and cases, music and the like.

The 12,000-mile tour included concerts in London, England; Stuttgart, Wuppertal, Berlin, Hanover, Hamburg, Frankfurt and Bonn, Germany; Vienna, Austria; Rome, Italy; Barcelona, Spain; and Paris, France. The European tour also saw the continental debut of the Boston Pops Orchestra, conducted by Arthur Fiedler. The Pops gave its first concerts abroad in London and in Bonn. Chamber players concerts were also given before and after the BSO concerts.

Diplomatic receptions took place in many of the tour cities and scenes at some of them were also recorded in photos.

FREE PRESS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
W. 1,890
JUL 24 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Is Relaxation

Tanglewood in the Berkshires offers one of the finest musical organizations in the world, the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Concerts by the Symphony are held Fridays, Saturdays, and Sunday afternoons. Tanglewood has a sprawling green lawn surrounding by a wall-less shed.

There is also a school called the Berkshire Music Center, and its creation in 1940 fulfilled the sustaining dream of the late Serge Koussevitsky.

The Center's appeal is international. Applications for entrance come from all parts of the world. Only the finest students are selected. Leonard Bernstein and Lukas Foss are two of its most famous alumni.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
W. 3,650
JUN 24 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Seeks Summer Volunteers

LENOX-Berkshire students who wish to work in musical surroundings, and who enjoy contact with the public may apply to join the Music Volunteers at Tanglewood this summer. The Boston Symphony management is introducing a program for staff assistants, under the name "Music Volunteers", comprised of teen-age students of the Berkshire area. The Tanglewood management hopes to enlist the help of these young people on a volunteer basis, supplementing the colloegage Guide Staff. Each Music Volunteer will be expected to contribute at least twenty hours each week and will assist the administration wherever needed: helping tourists, performing office duties and working in the theatres at rehearsals and concerts. In addition, some Music Volunteers will be asked to work with city children in the Days in the Arts programs; others will assist in the Music Theater Project as apprentices.

Each Music Volunteer will be given a gate pass for the summer, allowing him or her to be on the grounds at any time, for any event, free of charge, and will be invited to participate in the social life of Tanglewood. Anyone in the area who is interested in finding out more about the Music Volunteer program, or who wishes an interview, should call Beth Morgan at the Tanglewood number 637-1600 during the week of June 21 to the 27th, between 9:00 and 5:00 p.m.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 260,961

JUL 18 1971 New England Newsclip

THE FAMILY

"In spite of exploding plumbing, ants, humidity and monsoon weather, music under the spreading trees, the sparkling stars is something to be looked forward to, something special, and that, after all, is what Tanglewood is."

Tanglewood: life with the three B's

Cont 1

by Helen M. Salkowski

At this time of year the thoughts of various members of the Boston Symphony turn to Tanglewood. This eight-week festival of music in the mountains is different things to different people.

To the average music-lover from either Boston, New York, or elsewhere, the scenic drive through the beautiful Berkshires, settling-in at a comfortable motel, and a gourmet dinner are all part of the prelude to the unforgettable experience of the blending of music and nature which is uniquely Tanglewood.

To the musician setting out for his "vacation" in a car filled with wife, children, dog, cat, parakeet, linens, clothing, bathing gear, music stands, string bass or tuba, charcoal grill, and a monumental mound of raincoats, the situation may be somewhat different.

Along about the end of June many of our friends bring up the subject of our annual summer "holiday" in the Berkshires, and comment on how nice it must be to have such an arrangement. They are right, of course; it is a fine, fun, and worthwhile experience. But sometimes one wonders if people really understand, or would believe, what life with the Three B's—Brahams, Beethoven and the Berkshires—can be like.

To answer some of the most-often asked questions: Those involved with the BSO either purchase a cottage or house somewhere in the area of Tanglewood, or rent a cottage, or even camp in tents at the Tanglewood campsite.

The whole family generally goes along for the six or eight weeks.

Orchestra members have five rehearsals, one open rehearsal and three concerts each week. It's not really a vacation, but a change-of-pace.

As I think of this "change-of-pace," my thoughts wander back three years to our second season at Tanglewood.

At the end of the previous summer, we purchased an 8 x 40 foot mobile home, which we moved to its present site on the bank of a pleasant creek and marsh near Tanglewood.

As we were anxious to return to our Boston home after six weeks absence, we shortened the time of installing the trailer in its new location by merely throwing all extraneous and miscellaneous objects and artifacts, such as pipes, hoses, electrical cords, fencing, wooden stairway, etc., inside the door; and giving the pipes a quick but (we thought) adequate, draining. Then, making a mental note of where we would be living the next summer, we whistled our way back home.

When the following summer arrived we wrote ahead to make arrangements to have the water and electricity turned on. What a joy this summer would be, we congratulated ourselves. By purchasing our own little abode, we had saved ourselves the chore of a special trip to the Berkshires in the spring to seek out adequate accomodations for rent at a reasonable rate (a harder task than one might imagine). Now all we had to do was pack up our few belongings and move right in.

"Packing up our few belongings" turned out to be, as anyone who has stocked up a summer cottage for the first time may know, a larger job than expected. The results, together with man, wife, and cat, completely filled one compact car. Placing our "Tanglewood or Bust" sign on the bumper, we bid adieu to Boston and sped off.

An interesting feature of the day was that it was my birthday, which we planned to celebrate in some unique way upon our arrival in Tanglewood.

After a somewhat cramped two-hour drive, with the cat in a state of panic and alternately trying to leap from the window or bury himself alive in the stack of blankets on the back seat of the car, we arrived at our summer home.

The view from the outside proved reassuring. All was obviously well, although the paint needed a little touching up.

Our plan of action was to open the door of the trailer; haul out the wooden flight of steps and set them up; remove from the inside all the hoses, pipes, etc.; give the trailer a preliminary brushing out; then unpack the car, and be fairly well set up before noon.

Funny how one can forget, or is it that one's mind changes things to suit one's wishes? Neither of us remembered putting "that much" stuff inside the trailer before we left last summer.

Threading my way through the assembled debris, I found myself pushing some irritating filmy substance away from my face. What was this—Spanish moss hanging from the ceiling of a trailer? Not exactly. The roof, it seemed, had developed a few leaks, and the seepage had turned the varnish on the ceiling into long, dangling transparent fronds which lent the spooky atmosphere of a cave to the interior of our dwelling. Nothing to get excited about, though. When we painted the exterior of the trailer, we could fix the roof and touch up the ceiling.

John, my husband and the musician of the family, suggested that he turn on the water, we wash up, and then go get something to eat.

Some time later, a disheveled, disheartened, and even dirtier John reappeared from beneath the trailer and went off to discuss the matter of no water with the man who was to have turned it on.

But he had turned it on, declared the offended man, last week, as a matter of fact.

Back to the trailer they both came. After some experimentation, we found that the man was right. He had turned on the water. However, he had somehow made a mistake in connections, and we, in our efforts, had filled up the oil burner with water.

For steam heat this arrangement might have been all right, but for drinking it presented problems! Finally we turned on the water—to find that the bathroom sink leaked, the piping for the bathtub leaked, the toilet leaked, the kitchen sink leaked. In 10 minutes we practically flooded the trailer.

It was immediately obvious that our job of draining the pipes the previous summer had not been quite as good as we had thought. Water must have remained in the piping system somewhere, frozen over the winter and burst the pipes.

At this point, John announced that, immediately following the mop-up he was taking me out for my birthday lunch.

John's very good friend, a trumpet player in the orchestra and somewhat of a gourmet, had told him of a truck stop near-by which served nice meals. "We'll go there," said John. "Gerry is very fussy, so it must be all right."

How is it that on days when things go wrong, all things go wrong? We followed Gerry's directions to the truck stop, but somehow the truck stop we found was not the one he meant. We ordered meat ball sandwiches, the best-sounding item on the grease-spattered menu. Have you ever eaten handballs on white sponge, covered with red paint, and garnished with pepper flakes? On one's birthday it is even more depressing.

All afternoon we struggled with the pipes, as the temperature continued in the high nineties. We devised somewhat of a system, based on an arrangement of goldfish bowl, old Crisco can, and assorted other containers, whereby the kitchen faucet might be used for brief periods.

As the dinner hour approached, fear of the truck stop led me to experiment with the stove. It came as no surprise at this point to find that, even though we had written to the gas company to fill the tanks, the stove was not working.

We were too dirty to attempt a restaurant, so John set off for the local grocery, whose butcher proudly displayed the sign "Barb-qued Chicken." He returned with one bar-b-qued chicken, one pound of macaroni salad, and the news that he had invited some friends over for coffee and cake to celebrate my birthday.

The manipulations that ensued to provide the birthday party were: unpack brand new coffee pot; unpack new dishes and remove the correct number of cups, saucers, cake plates from their bed of shredded paper; run to bedroom of trailer, lie down on floor, push back door open with head, reach arm under trailer and turn knob which let water into pipes, rush back to kitchen, turn on faucet, wash off cups, saucers, plates, pot, fill pot, race back to bedroom and resume position on floor, reach out and turn knob to cut off water supply, hurry back to mop up, then serve coffee, cake, and unruffled conversation.

As the shades of night fell, two exhausted people, not to mention grimy, managed to unpack the car sufficiently to get out the bedding needed for their tired bodies. The heat, the humidity, and the mattress all conspired to make the experience comparable to reclining in a damp marshmallow. But, to the croaking tune of the frogs in the creek, sleep came fast.

Morning brought the first rehearsal of the summer season, and John drove off, promising to find a plumber on his way home. I devoted myself to the task of washing dishes and the cabinets in which to put them.

John arrived home with the news that there wasn't a plumber to be had for miles around, and that a trip to the gas company was in order if we were ever to be able to cook. This expedition took the whole afternoon, followed by another bar-b-qued chicken and another pound of macaroni salad, then an evening ankle-deep in water.

"So far," I thought to myself but refrained from commenting to my spouse, "this owning your own summer home leaves a lot to be desired."

The next morning as the head of the family was eating his bowl of sugar-coated crisps and compiling a list for the hardware store (the first of several hundred dollars worth of such lists), he gave the place mat a swat, then another, then finally slapped himself on the side of the head.

"Helen," he said in an unusually calm voice, "how can I have an ant in my ear?"

I said nothing, but when he left for rehearsal, peered into the depths of the cereal box. The local ant population had moved in.

Some voice from within led me to open the cabinets containing the just-washed dishes. There, walking all over the crockery, in pairs and companionable groups, were throngs of tiny ants!

Since crying would merely have added to the general dampness of the scene, there was nothing to do but shut the cabinet door, hike to the hardware store for ant traps and sprays, hike home, empty cabinets, employ the insect repellents, and rewash everything—just in time to serve lunch to the starving bass player driving up in a car still half-packed with linens and clothing, the other half containing at least 10 miles of copper piping from the hardware store.

That afternoon, and the next five or six, were spent standing in the middle of the surrounding field in the broiling sun, uncoiling yard after yard of copper tubing.

Day after day the two-man team toiled on in this fashion. When we had finished all but approximately the last three feet of piping, a plumber finally did arrive on the scene, although at this point we really were more in need of a psychiatrist.

The gas company did deliver two tanks of gas in time to prevent our becoming victims of bar-b-que syndrome.

The ants, however, became a permanent feature of our home, for that summer.

The fact that the washing machine required $37 worth of repairs in order to operate was, as I stood up to my knees in soapy waves, no real surprise.

The unusual heat finally subsided into an August in which night time temperatures sank into the low thirties, and the purchase of an electric heater became an absolute necessity.

The outside of the trailer never did get painted that summer. It waited, peeling the more, until the next year.

And the ceiling inside never did receive that coat of varnish, although the floating fronds have long since vanished.

Now another Tanglewood season is upon us, bringing not only memories of summers past but anticipation for the summers coming. In spite of exploding plumbing, ants, humidity and monsoon weather, music under the spreading trees and sparkling stars is something to be looked forward to, something special, and that, after all, is what Tanglewood is.

8

Bring Your Picnic Basket And Relax on the Spacious Lawn

Tanglewood Is More Than Music

SUNDAY CATCH-UP — People come as much to catch-up on reading, snack, or sew hems as to hear good music.

Special to The News

LENOX — Visitors, and there are hundreds who come here on foot and by automobile each summer, say there's no place like Tanglewood, one of the most picturesque and musically oriented spots in the world.

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra in residence, presenting concerts Friday nights at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 8:30 p.m., and Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m., visitors come for miles to picnic on the spacious green lawn which surrounds the shed and stage..

Picnic baskets, blankets, beach chairs and umbrellas are all part of the scene for eight weeks each year as lovers of Brahms, Beethoven or the moderns, arrive prepared for an unbeatable atmosphere of good music, food and total relaxation—and all for $3.. That's for a "seat" on the spacious lawns — and be sure to pack a blanket or two with your picnic basket.

If you choose to skip the tan, preferring instead a better view of the guest conductors and soloists, it can be arranged for seating in the shed at fixed prices anywhere from $3.50 to $8.50

Creative artists such as Leonard Bernstein are among the alumni of the neighboring internationally famous Berkshire Music Center, established by the late Serge Koussevitsky in 1940.

Scores of young musicians, carefully selected on the basis of their potential, meet here each summer to study and train for professional careers with experts in their fields as instructors. During the week, the public is treated to performances by these aspiring musicians.

The visitor at Tanglewood has the option of confining his visit to this magnificent spot, with its leisurely approach to good living, or to move on to other neighboring historic areas.

History buffs can visit the famed Nathaniel Hawthorne cottage, a replica of the "Little Red House" where Hawthorne lived from 1850-51, adjacent to Tanglewood. It is open without charge.

It was here that Hawthorne wrote the "Wonder Book" and sketched "The House of the Seven Gables'' and "Tanglewood Tales."

If you take the Massachusetts Turnpike—and why not? it's all only two hours away—get off at Lenox or Stockbridge, the last two exits.

Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival is another popular spot. It is situated in the summer and ski resort town of Lee.

Performances are given nearly every night at 8:40. Price of tickets is $4.50 and $5, with $2 charged for the special Sunday programs at 8:30 p.m.

Open until Oct. 15 are the restored buildings and exhibit of the Shaker culture at the Hancock Shaker Village, north on Route 20 in Pittsfield. The Village is open from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. and admission is $1.50 for adults and 50 cents for children.

The admission to "Chesterwood," the studio of Daniel Chester French, the man who sculpted the famous Minute Man statue in Concord and Lincoln seated in the Washington, D.C. Memorial is $1 for adults and 25 cents for children.

Located a few miles south of Lenox, at Stockbridge, the studio, gallery, gardens and nature trail are open weekends from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

MUSIC AND SUNSHINE — Listener studies program under shade of umbrella.

COMPOSER CHUCK ISRAELS AND HIS DAUGHTER, SARAH . . . enjoying a casual afternoon after a concert at Tanglewood.

NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
S. 24,000

JUL 25 1971

New England Newsclip

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042
JUN 16 1971
New England Newsclip

A Look at the Berkshires

For summer visitors to the Berkshires, a varied and interesting program awaits.

At Williamstown, the Clark Art Institute offers an exhibit of lithographs with the theme, "Springtime in Paris." The lithographs are large and in color. Artists were Bonnard, Denis, Roussel and Duillard, and the period is the 1890s. The exhibit will remain all summer. Also new this year are a display of woodcuts by Homer which he made for magazines in the 1860s and 1870s. Most of them appeared in Harper's, and the exhibit is in the institute lounge.

Ted Shawn and John Christian, directors of Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, will open this year's 39th anniversary June 24 with the Northeast Regional Ballet Festival, with guests stars Marina Eglevsky and Salvatore Aiello. There will be four performances June 24, 25 and 26. In all, the festival will run 10 weeks through August 28.

For the second week, June 29 through July 6, Edward Villella will dance, and the Cincinnati Ballet Company will perform. The third and fourth weeks, Norman Walker and his company will dance, sharing the programs with Tania Karina, Miljenko Banovic and Sahomi Tachibana. Luis Rivera and company are slated July 20 through 24, and the following week the Minnesota Dance Theatre and Claude Kipnis Mime Theatre will share the program. The Boston Ballet will dance the two weeks of Aug. 3-8 and August 10-14. Lar Lubovitch and company and Ritha Devi play the ninth week and season closes with the Jacob's Pillow Dancers in a new work by Mr. Walker.

The Berkshire Museum in Pittsfield presents paintings by Eric Sloane June 5 to 30, an artist who specializes in painting old barns and tools, and has authored and illustrated a number of excellent books. In July the Museum will show works by Arthur Bety who is especially famous for the many unusual covers he has painted for the New Yorker magazine. Emily Rose's Pottery also will be displayed, as well as photographs by Daniel Farber of Worcester, Mass. And in August an exhibit of paintings by Mrs. Thomas B. Blodgett of New York City will be shown.

The Little Cinema at the museum opens June 23 for the 23rd season, with programs nightly through early September, and matinees Wednesdays through August. Shown at the Little Cinema will be the more unusual foreign and American movies, but none that are X rated. Junior Movie Club programs are for boys and girls 6 to 14 years old. Carefully selected color feature films are shown Thursdays at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m. Attendance is free to Museum members.

New this season in Savoy is the Shady Pines campground and picnic area, open from May 1 to Oct. 31. An enclosed swimming pool has been built, and there are 150 campsites. Each site has electricity, picnic tables and fireplace with free wood. There are 45 wooded and 20 open acres, children's playground, hiking, nature walks and a store.

Biggest tourist attraction in the Berkshires, the Music Festival at Tanglewood, opens Friday, July 2 at 8 p.m. with a concert conducted by artistic director Seiji Ozawa. The two other concerts of the opening weekend will be conducted by him and associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas. William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will conduct four concerts during the summer, July 16, 17, 23 and 24. Other concerts will be presented each weekend; Friday and Saturday evenings at 8 and 8:30 p.m. respectively, and Sundays at 2.30 p.m. through Aug. 22. For the first time in its history, Tanglewood will switch places with another orchestra, exchanging concerts with the Philadelphia Orchestra which appears during August at the Saratoga, New York Performing Arts Center. Saturday evening, Aug. 7, the Boston Symphony will play at Saratoga, and the Philadelphia orchestra comes to Tanglewood. As customarily, there will be a 7 p.m. prelude every Friday.

BERKSHIRES, Page 12

Shakers open 10th season

★ BERKSHIRES
Continued from Page 10

From June 1 through Oct. 15, the Hancock Shaker Community just west of Pittsfield will be open for its 10th season. This is a collection of restored Shaker buildings housing a rare collection of Shaker furnishings, tools and other objects. And for the eighth season, the popular public Shaker Kitchen Festival will be conducted the week of Aug. 2 through 5, preceded Aug. 1 with a World's Peoples dinner at noon.

In Northern Berkshire, the Williamstown Summer Theatre opens its doors for the 17th season on July 1, and will present eight weeks of entertainment. Performances are given in the air-conditioned Adams Memorial Theatre on the Williams College campus, and will include classical and modern plays, and one musical show. Heading it for many years is Nikos Psacharopolous, and this year Peter Hunt will return as director after winning a Tony award for his direction of the New York hit, "1776."

New this season is the Lenox Arts Center on the grounds of Music Inn, which will offer a unique program combining folk guitar concerts by leading popular folk artists, four productions of new plays, film and guitar workshops, poetry and chamber music presentations, and an ecology conference. The season runs from July 1 through Labor Day, and the new directors are New York producer Lyn Austin and Oliver Smith.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y.
POST STAR
D. 18,500
FEB 22 1971

Exchange Concerts Planned At Performing Arts Center

Another first for Saratoga Performing Arts Center has been announced for this summer when the Philadelphia Orchestra and the Boston Symphony Orchestra offer exchange concerts.

On Saturday, Aug. 7, the Philadelphia Orchestra with Eugene Ormandy, conductor, will leave its summer home at SPAC to journey to Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., for a concert.

The same night, the Boston Symphony with William Steinberg, conductor, comes to SPAC for its first concert. This marks the first time these famed orchestras will participate in a major summer festival exchange and plans have been underway for nearly a year on the project. SPAC officials indicated it is hoped this will become an annual concert exchange.

Philadelphia Orchestra has been at SPAC since 1966 and the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood since 1937.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y.
SARATOGIAN
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
D. 11,000
FEB 20 1971

Boston-SPAC switch slated

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra will exchange concerts this summer, each traveling to the other's customary summer home for a single performance.

The Boston Symphony plays at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center while the Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Saturday, Aug. 7. Each orchestra will be conducted by its respective music director, William Steinberg, Boston, and Eugene Ormandy, Philadelphia.

Although both orchestras have played during the summer in concert halls other than their own, this is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts. Saratoga Springs has been the Philadelphia Orchestra's summer home since 1966. Tanglewood has been the scene of the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival since 1937.

Commenting on the announced exchange, which has been under discussion for over a year, William Steinberg said, "I am delighted that plans have come to fruition and that, in a spirit of good neighborliness, Maestro Ormandy and I can go visiting with our orchestras. The marvelous Philadelphia Orchestra will have a triumph at Tanglewood, I know, and am sure the Boston Symphony will enjoy no less success at Saratoga Springs."

Eugene Ormandy commented, "This exchange of concerts between our two festivals and orchestras is a source of special satisfaction to me personally. I am a long-term admirer of both the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Festival. In a very real sense Tanglewood blazed the trail for our own Saratoga Festival. William Steinberg and Seiji Ozawa are wonderful colleagues of mine as well as favorite guest conductors of the Philadelphia Orchestra. I hope the exchange of performances we shall institute in 1971 may prove to be a permanent event and a permanent symbol of the friendly ties that binds us."

The Boston Symphony and Philadelphia Orchestra programs for their August 7 concerts will be announced shortly.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
FEB 22 1971

Saratoga, Tanglewood To Switch Orchestras

An orchestral exchange program has been initiated for this summer between the Saratoga Performing Arts Center and the Tanglewood Festival in Lenox, Mass. The two musical centers will exchange their resident orchestras for single performances on Aug. 7.

Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra, summer residents at SPAC since 1966, will travel to Tanglewood, and the Boston Symphony will take a night off from its Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood to give a single concert at SPAC.

The Boston Symphony will be conducted at SPAC by its musical director William Steinberg. Each orchestra has ventured to other concert halls during their summer seasons, but this will mark the first time two major festivals have agreed to exchange concerts.

Steinberg said he was "delighted" that the exchange could be arranged. "The marvelous Philadelphia Orchestra will have a triumph at Tanglewood and I am sure the Boston Symphony will enjoy no less a success at Saratoga."

Stating that the concert exchange gave him "special satisfaction," Ormandy concurred that the symphonies would each succeed on the other's home ground.

He commended Steinberg as a colleague and favorite guest conductor of the Philadelphia, and noted that Tanglewood, had, "blazed a trail," for the Saratoga Festival.

"I hope the exchange may prove to be a permanent event," he added. Neither orchestra has as yet announced their programs for the exchange appearances.

SUN
WESTERLY, R. I.
(E) 9,900 (S) 9,950
FEB 24 1971
New England Newsclip

Symphonies to Switch Sites

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra will exchange summer concert platforms on Saturday evening, Aug. 7.

The Boston symphony will give up a date at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., where it has been performing since 1937, to present a concert at the Saratoga Springs, N.Y., Art Center, the summer home of the Philadelphia orchestra since 1966. The Philadelphia orchestra will entertain at Tanglewood.

The regular conductors, William Steinberg of Boston and Eugene Ormandy of Philadelphia, will direct at the unique exchanges.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
(E) 14,900
FEB 24 1971
New England Newsclip

Philadelphia Orchestra To Play At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra will exchange concerts this summer, each traveling to the others customary summer home for a single performance.

On the evening of Aug. 7, the Boston Symphony plays at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, N.Y., while the Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Tanglewood in Lenox. Each orchestra will be conducted by its respective music director, William Steinberg, Boston, and Eugene Ormandy, Philadelphia.

Although both orchestras have played during the summer in concert halls other than their own, this is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Saratoga has been the Philadelphia Orchestra's summer home since 1966. Tanglewood has been the scene of the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival since 1937.

Commenting on the announced exchange, which has been under discussion for over a year, William Steinberg said "I am delighted that plans have come to fruition and that, in a spirit of good neighborliness, Maestro Ormandy and I can go visiting with our orchestras. The marvelous Philadelphia Orchestra will have a triumph at Tanglewood, I know, and am sure the Boston Symphony will enjoy no less success at Saratoga."

Eugene Ormandy commented, "This exchange of concerts between our two festivals and Orchestras is a source of special satisfaction to me personally. I am a long-term admirer of both the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Festival. In a very real sense Tanglewood blazed the trail for our own Saratoga Festival.

William Steinberg and Seiji Ozawa are wonderful colleagues of mine as well as favorite guest conductors of the Philadelphia Orchestra. I hope the exchange of performances we shall institute in 1971 may prove to be a permanent event and a permanent symbol of the friendly ties that bind us."

The Boston Symphony and Philadelphia Orchestra programs for their August Seven concerts will be announced shortly.

10

Masterworks Chorale to perform at Cambridge

By ALFRED BURKE

Sun Music Critic

Music

LOWELL — On Sunday evening, March 7, at 8 p.m., Sanders Theater in Cambridge will be the setting for a concert by the Masterworks Chorale of Lexington.

The program titled "In Celebration of Sonority", will be devoted to the various approaches to the exploitation of sheer sound excitement in choral music. Directing will be Allen Lannon. The conductor who is a professor of music at Boston University, has selected a program representing several periods of creative writing.

Polychoral music of Gabrieli and Schutz will be one phase. There will be the 19th century creations of Tehaikowski and Gretohaninoff; the German choral music of Brahms and Bruckner, and from the 20th century, compositions by Milhaud and William Schuman.

This excellent musical organization numbers 140 trained singers. Some of the members are professional singers. Among the members who are students of the vocal art are scientists, physicians and salesman.

The organization was formed in 1940. One of the established policies is the one concerned with auditions. Each member is required to reaudition periodically.

Members come from several communities and there are also members from neighboring states. The present name was adopted in 1969 to reflect the widespread community area covered.

THE ORCHESTRAS representing Boston and Philadelphia are going visiting this summer. What will actually happen is that the Boston Symphony will give a single concert at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, and the Philadelphia will present a program at Tanglewood.

WILLIAM STEINBERG
... Boston Symphony director

Comment on the exchange, Boston director, William Steinberg said: "I am delighted that plans have come to fruition and that, in a spirit of good neighborliness, Maestro Ormandy and I can go visiting with our orchestras. The marvelous Philadelphia Orchestra will have a triumph at Tanglewood, I know, and am sure the Boston Symphony will enjoy no less success at Saratoga."

Eugene Ormandy commented "this exchange of concerts between our two festivals and Orchestras is a source of special satisfaction to me personally. I am a longterm admirer of both the Boston Symphony and the Berkshire Music Festival. In a real sense Tanglewood blazed the trail for our Saratoga Festival. William Steinberg and Seiji Ozawa are wonderful colleagues of mine as well as favorite guest conductors of the Philadelphia Orchestra. I hope the exchange of performances we shall institute in 1971 may prove to be a permanent event and a permanent symbol of the friendly ties that bind us."

It was also announced that the Boston Symphony and Philadelphia Orchestra programs for their August 7 concerts will be announced shortly.

THE Metropolitan Opera's Opera's spring season in Boston which opens on Monday evening, April 19, with a performance of Verdi's "Aida" promises one of the best seasons in years. From a local viewpoint, the highlight is slated for the Saturday evening performance of Mozart's "Don Giovanni" with Rosalind Elias cast as Zelina. The Mozart score is regarded in music history records as the greatest opera ever written. This will climax the brief stay by the world famous opera organization, and will be well in keeping with the factor of Verdi's masterpiece being listed for the opener. Great names will dot both casts. In the "Aida" Franco Corelli" will sing Rhadames and in the "Don" Cesare Seipe will be top name. What else can opera fans expect?

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

FEB 25 1971 New England Newsclip

BSO, Philadelphia Exchange Concerts

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra will exchange concerts this summer, each traveling to the other's customary summer home for a single performance. On Saturday evening, Aug. 7, the Boston Symphony plays at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, New York, while the Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Tanglewood, Lenox. Each orchestra will be conducted by its respective Music Director, William Steinberg, Boston and Eugene Ormandy, Philadelphia.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 3,050

FEB 25 1971 New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony And Philadelphia Orchestra To Exchange Concerts

LENOX—The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra will exchange concerts this summer, each travelling to the other's customary summer home for a single performance. On Saturday evening, Aug. 7, the Boston Symphony plays at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, while the Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Tanglewood. Each orchestra will be conducted by its respective music director, William Steinberg, Boston, and Eugene Ormandy, Philadelphia.

Although both orchestras have played during the summer in concert halls other than their own, this is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts. Saratoga has been the Philadelphia Orchestra's summer home since 1966. Tanglewood has been the scene of the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival since 1937.

HERALD
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
(E) 33,518

FEB 25 1971 New England Newsc

Out of town

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra will play exchange concerts this summer. On Saturday evening, Aug. 7, each orchestra will travel to the other's customary summer home. The Boston Symphony will play that night at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, N.Y., and the Philadelphia Orchestra will play at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

The Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, Inc., Lee. Mass., has announced its 1971 summer schedule. There will be a six week and a nine week course, both beginning on June 28. The resident student body is limited to 70 students, who in addition to classes, attend one performance of every festival program, dress rehearsals and lectures by authorities in various areas of dance.

SUN
LOWELL, MASS.
(E) 48,850 (S) 39,575

FEB 28 1971 New England Newsclip

TIME
GREENWICH, CONN.
(E) 11,791

FEB 25 1971 New Englan Newscl

Noted Symphony Orchestras To Exchange Dates

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra will exchange concerts this summer, each travelling to the other's customary summer home for a single performance.

On Saturday evening, Aug. 7, the Boston Symphony plays at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs, N.Y., while the Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Each orchestra will be conducted by its respective music director, William Steinberg, Boston and Eugene Ormandy, Philadelphia.

Although both orchestras have played during the summer in concert halls other than their own, this is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts. Saratoga has been the Philadelphia Orchestra's summer home since 1966.

NEWS
FRAMINGHAM, MASS.
(E) 19,654

FEB 25 1971 New England Newsclip

Concert Exchange Planned

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y. and LENOX, MASS. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra will exchange concerts this summer, each traveling to the other's customary summer home for a single performance.

On Saturday evening, Aug. 7, the Boston Symphony plays at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs while the Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Tanglewood, Lenox. Each orchestra will be conducted by its respective music director, William Steinberg, Boston, and Eugene Ormandy, Philadephia.

Although both orchestras have played during the summer in concert halls other than their own, this is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts. Saratoga has been the Philadelphia Orchestra's summer home since 1966. Tanglewood has been the scene of the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival since 1937.

SUN
WESTERLY, R. I.
(E) 9,900 (S) 9,950

FEB 24 1971 New England Newsclip

Symphonies to Switch Sites

The Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra will exchange summer concert platforms on Saturday evening, Aug. 7.

The Boston symphony will give up a date at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., where it has been performing since 1937, to present a concert at the Saratoga Springs, N.Y., Art Center, the summer home of the Philadelphia orchestra since 1966. The Philadelphia orchestra will entertain at Tanglewood.

The regular conductors, William Steinberg of Boston and Eugene Ormandy of Philadelphia, will direct at the unique exchanges.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(M) 77,427
DEC 18 1970
New England Newsclip

Hub Symphony Brings Out Newsletter

BOSTON — A new publication is being issued from the press office of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It carries the logotype "Tanglewood News."

The first issue is four pages on 8½ - by - 11 paper and carries 12 pictures and 13 short articles.

Major announcement is that Seiji Ozawa and Gunther Schuller will again be artistic directors and Leonard Bernstein adviser.

Seiji Ozawa and Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct. Leonard Bernstein may conduct a concert at the time of Koussevitzky's birthday. William Steinberg will again conduct two weekends of Beethoven.

Subjects covered include the Council of Tanglewood Friends, the orchestra's trustees, notes on the winter concert season in Boston, the orchestra's new recording contract with Deutsche Grammophon, identification of nine new orchestra members, notes on the Pops and Arthur Fiedler, radio broadcasts of BSO concerts and the 5066 new seats installed in Tanglewood's Shed last spring.

Those interested in receiving copies of the newsletter may write to the Friends, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
W 2,200
MAY 27 1971
New England Newsclip

Tickets on Sale For Tanglewood

Tickets for the 1971 Berkshire Festival Concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are on sale at the Festival ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston. Also available is the current season brochure listing conductors, soloists and complete programs for the summer. the brochure also is available at the Main Gate at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Conference office, 107 South St., Pittsfield, and at motels, hotels and restaurants throughout Berkshire County.

Among the season's highlights will be a special performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of the late conductor Serge Koussevitsky, and Arthur Fielder conducting the Boston Pops. The Tanglewood box office opens June 14.

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
D. 13,225
MAY 12 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood tickets now on sale

Tickets for the 1971 Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood are now on sale at the Festival ticket office at Symphony Hall in Boston. Also available is the 1971 Tanglewood brochure listing conductors, soloists and complete programs by the orchestra for the summer.

The Tanglewood brochure is available at the Main Gate at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Hills Conference at 107 South St., Pittsfield, and at motels, hotels and restaurants in the Berkshire area. The brochure lists complete programs by the Boston Symphony for the summer, plus many of the special events such as Arthur Fiedler conducting the Boston Pops at Tanglewood, the special performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, and the exchange concert between the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra. The brochure contains a mail order form for ordering tickets in advance from the Festival Ticket Office at Symphony Hall in Boston. The Tanglewood box office will open June 14.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
MAY 12 1971
Buffalo

Tanglewood is accepting orders for tickets for the season—write to Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115, for a brochure.

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 154,165 SUN. 311,112
JUN 27 1971
Buffalo

Tanglewood Provides Bus Excursion Service

LENOX, Mass. — Sponsored this year for the first time by the Tanglewood management will be bus excursion service for people without cars. Vehicles will leave from Boston, Worcester, Natick and Springfield, scheduled to arrive at Tanglewood one hour before all concerts, both matinee and evening, and starting the return trip 30 minutes after the concert closes.

Also Tanglewood will extend its traditional eight-week season by presenting a ninth week program Aug. 30 and 31 with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Festival Orchestra.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUN 24 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Posts New Bus Service

Tanglewood is scheduling a new bus excursion service that will provide people with round-trip transportation to the Berkshire Music Festival concerts from terminals in Boston, Worcester, Natick and Springfield. Buses will arrive at Tanglewood one hour before all concerts, both matinee and evening, and will start the return trip 30 minutes after the concerts.

The Miami Herald
MIAMI, FLA.
D. 352,009 SUN. 443,090
AUG 1 1971
Buffalo

Paying Up in Acorns

ALAN PRINCE

Lafayette, Louisiana, is headquarters of the Live Oak Society. Organized for the preservation of live oaks in the Bayou State, its membership is restricted to trees a century old or older and, says the Louisiana Tourist Commission, annual dues of 25 acrons per member are collected . . . There are some amusing and informative travel chapters in the newly published "Doesn't Everybody?" Written by Roselyn Yoder of Fort Lauderdale and published by Hanson Publications of New York City, the soft-cover book ($1.95) deals with etiquette here and abroad . . . Most popular alcoholic beverage on both foreign-based and domestic airlines is Scotch whisky, which leads more than 2 to 1 over second-place bourbon . . . The Tanglewood Music Festival in Massachusetts is offering bus service for persons who do not want to drive their cars to the concerts. Vehicles leave from Boston, Worcester, Natick and Springfield, arriving at Tanglewood one hour before the matinee and evening concerts and beginning the return trip one-hour after the final note . . . Conduct-A-Child, 2279 Younge St., Toronto, Canada, arranges sightseeing tours, entertainment and baby-sitting for children of tourists there.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUN 25 1971
Buffalo

Tanglewood Concerts on WAMC Radio

For the sixth consecutive year WAMC, the FM radio station at Albany Medical College, will present live broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The opening concert of July 2 will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa and will feature a performance of Bach's "Magnificat."

Concerts will be aired at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8:30 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays.

WAMC is located at 90.3 on the FM dial.

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
D. 13,225
JUL 3 1971
New England Newsclip

FM station to air Lenox concerts

ALBANY, N.Y. —. For the sixth consecutive year, WAMC, the FM station of the Albany Medical College, will carry "live" broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The 1971 season concludes on Sunday, August 22. Concerts will be aired at 9 p.m. on Fridays, Saturdays at 8.30 p.m., and Sundays at 2.30 p.m.

The opening concert on July 2 was conducted by Seiji Ozawa, and featured a performance of Bach's Magnificat. Mr. Ozawa and Gunther Schuller are serving as artistic advisers to Tanglewood; Leonard Bernstein is adviser, and William Steinberg is music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Founded in 1934, the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood is the nation's oldest major music festival.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUN 25 1971
Buffalo

Tanglewood Concerts on WAMC Radio

For the sixth consecutive year WAMC, the FM radio station at Albany Medical College, will present live broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The opening concert of July 2 will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa and will feature a performance of Bach's "Magnificat."

Concerts will be aired at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8:30 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays.

WAMC is located at 90.3 on the FM dial.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUN 29 1971
New England Newsclip

Radio To Broadcast Tanglewood Concerts

WAMC (90.3 mc), the FM station of the Albany Medical College, will give live coverage to the Boston Symphony Tanglewood concerts. This is the sixth season the station has been broadcasting the concerts, which are aired Friday at 9, Saturday at 8:30 and Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,628
JUN 30 1971
Buffalo

THE AISLE SEAT

By BERNIE DECKER

The music was constant and consistent at the Glorious Greek's Sunday night. Sam Huban's Cissy's Route 9, Clifton Park, had few silent monents as musician after musican contributed to an outstanding evening of jazz. When the scheduled players were not at it, someone from the audience would step up and blow.

A very enjoyable evening for all.

Sam has another planned for this Sunday, beginning about 7:30. It will be Dixieland, with the Riverboat Jazz Band celebrating the Fourth.

THE TRI-CITY Council on Community Theater has chosen its officers for the 1971-72 season. Gioia Ottaviano of the Schenectady Light Opera

CHARLES BUCKLEY
Theater Group Officer

Company will be president; Charles Buckley of Latham Community Players, vice president; Diane Buckley, Schenectady Light Opera, secretary; Joann Jamison, Slingerlands Community Players, treasurer. Other organizations affiliated with the group are the Albany Civic Theater and Schenectady Civic Players.

A concert of saxaphone music will be given tomorrow night at 8:15 in Memorial Chapel, Union College. Classical saxaphonist Sigur Rascher will play selections by Bach, Mendelssohn, Lukas, Wirth, Gerhard and others. Rascher is in his fourth year as director of the saxaphone workshop at Union.

VIRGINIA BOWERS has been reelected for a second two-year term as president of the Capitol Hill Choral Society. Other officers elected are: Rogers Finch, vice president; Carolyn Bourgeois, secretary; Moir Rennie, treasurer; Gerald Toomey, financial secretary; Ann Dobler, concert secretary, and Albert Houk, librarian.

FOR THE SIXTH consecutive year, WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College, will carry live broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The season will begin Friday night at 9. Saturday night concerts begin at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon ones at 2:30 p.m.

JACOB'S PILLOW, Becket, Mass., will hold an open house Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. For the first time in the famous dance festival's history, gates will be open beyond the Ted Shawn Theater area for the general public.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
DE 1 8 1970

Hub Symphony Brings Out Newsletter

BOSTON — A new publication is being issued from the press office of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It carries the logotype "Tanglewood News."

The first issue is four pages on 8½ - by - 11 paper and carries 12 pictures and 13 short articles.

Major announcement is that Seiji Ozawa and Gunther Schuller will again be artistic directors and Leonard Bernstein adviser.

Seiji Ozawa and Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct. Leonard Bernstein may conduct a concert at the time of Koussevitzky's birthday. William Steinberg will again conduct two weekends of Beethoven.

Subjects covered include the Council of Tanglewood Friends, the orchestra's trustees, notes on the winter concert season in Boston, the orchestra's new recording contract with Deutsche Grammophon, identification of nine new orchestra members, notes on the Pops and Arthur Fiedler, radio broadcasts of BSO concerts and the 5066 new seats installed in Tanglewood's Shed last spring.

Those interested in receiving copies of the newsletter may write to the Friends, Symphony Hall, Boston 02115.

NEWS
WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS.
MAY 27 1971
New England Newsclip

Tickets on Sale For Tanglewood

Tickets for the 1971 Berkshire Festival Concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are on sale at the Festival ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston. Also available is the current season brochure listing conductors, soloists and complete programs for the summer. the brochure also is available at the Main Gate at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Conference office, 107 South St., Pittsfield, and at motels, hotels and restaurants throughout Berkshire County.

Among the season's highlights will be a special performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of the late conductor Serge Koussevitsky, and Arthur Fielder conducting the Boston Pops. The Tanglewood box office opens June 14.

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
D. 13,225
MAY 12 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood tickets now on sale

Tickets for the 1971 Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood are now on sale at the Festival ticket office at Symphony Hall in Boston. Also available is the 1971 Tanglewood brochure listing conductors, soloists and complete programs by the orchestra for the summer.

The Tanglewood brochure is available at the Main Gate at Tanglewood, the Berkshire Hills Conference at 107 South St., Pittsfield, and at motels, hotels and restaurants in the Berkshire area. The brochure lists complete programs by the Boston Symphony for the summer, plus many of the special events such as Arthur Fiedler conducting the Boston Pops at Tanglewood, the special performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, and the exchange concert between the Boston Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra. The brochure contains a mail order form for ordering tickets in advance from the Festival Ticket Office at Symphony Hall in Boston. The Tanglewood box office will open June 14.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
MAY 12 1971

Tanglewood is accepting orders for tickets for the season—write to Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115, for a brochure.

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 154,165 SUN. 311,112
JUN 27 1971

Tanglewood Provides Bus Excursion Service

LENOX, Mass. — Sponsored this year for the first time by the Tanglewood management will be bus excursion service for people without cars. Vehicles will leave from Boston, Worcester, Natick and Springfield, scheduled to arrive at Tanglewood one hour before all concerts, both matinee and evening, and starting the return trip 30 minutes after the concert closes.

Also Tanglewood will extend its traditional eight-week season by presenting a ninth week program Aug. 30 and 31 with Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Festival Orchestra.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUN 24 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Posts New Bus Service

Tanglewood is scheduling a new bus excursion service that will provide people with round-trip transportation to the Berkshire Music Festival concerts from terminals in Boston, Worcester, Natick and Springfield. Buses will arrive at Tanglewood one hour before all concerts, both matinee and evening, and will start the return trip 30 minutes after the concerts.

The Miami Herald
MIAMI, FLA.
D. 352,009 SUN. 443,090
AUG 1 1971

Paying Up in Acorns

Lafayette, Louisiana, is headquarters of the Live Oak Society. Organized for the preservation of live oaks in the Bayou State, its membership is restricted to trees a century old or older and, says the Louisiana Tourist Commission, annual dues of 25 acrons per member are collected . . . There are some amusing and informative travel chapters in the newly published "Doesn't Everybody?" Written by Roselyn Yoder of Fort Lauderdale and published by Hanson Publications of New York City, the soft-cover book ($1.95) deals with etiquette here and abroad . . . Most popular alcoholic beverage on both foreign-based and domestic airlines is Scotch whisky, which leads more than 2 to 1 over second-place bourbon . . . The Tanglewood Music Festival in Massachusetts is offering bus service for persons who do not want to drive their cars to the concerts. Vehicles leave from Boston, Worcester, Natick and Springfield, arriving at Tanglewood one hour before the matinee and evening concerts and beginning the return trip one-hour after the final note . . . Conduct-A-Child, 2279 Younge St., Toronto, Canada, arranges sightseeing tours, entertainment and baby-sitting for children of tourists there.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUN 25 1971

Tanglewood Concerts on WAMC Radio

For the sixth consecutive year WAMC, the FM radio station at Albany Medical College, will present live broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The opening concert of July 2 will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa and will feature a performance of Bach's "Magnificat."

Concerts will be aired at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8:30 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays.

WAMC is located at 90.3 on the FM dial.

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
D. 13,225
JUL 8 1971
New England Newsclip

FM station to air Lenox concerts

ALBANY, N.Y. — For the sixth consecutive year, WAMC, the FM station of the Albany Medical College, will carry "live" broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The 1971 season concludes on Sunday, August 22. Concerts will be aired at 9 p.m. on Fridays, Saturdays at 8.30 p.m., and Sundays at 2.30 p.m.

The opening concert on July 2 was conducted by Seiji Ozawa, and featured a performance of Bach's Magnificat. Mr. Ozawa and Gunther Schuller are serving as artistic advisers to Tanglewood; Leonard Bernstein is adviser, and William Steinberg is music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Founded in 1934, the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood is the nation's oldest major music festival.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUN 25 1971

Tanglewood Concerts on WAMC Radio

For the sixth consecutive year WAMC, the FM radio station at Albany Medical College, will present live broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The opening concert of July 2 will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa and will feature a performance of Bach's "Magnificat."

Concerts will be aired at 9 p.m. Fridays, 8:30 p.m. Saturdays and 2:30 p.m. Sundays.

WAMC is located at 90.3 on the FM dial.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUN 29 1971
New England Newsclip

Radio To Broadcast Tanglewood Concerts

WAMC (90.3 mc), the FM station of the Albany Medical College, will give live coverage to the Boston Symphony Tanglewood concerts. This is the sixth season the station has been broadcasting the concerts, which are aired Friday at 9, Saturday at 8:30 and Sunday at 2:30 p.m.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,225
JUN 30 1971

THE AISLE SEAT

By BERNIE DECKER

The music was constant and consistent at the Glorious Greek's Sunday night. Sam Huban's Cissy's Route 9, Clifton Park, had few silent monents as musician after musican contributed to an outstanding evening of jazz. When the scheduled players were not at it, someone from the audience would step up and blow.

A very enjoyable evening for all.

Sam has another planned for this Sunday, beginning about 7:30. It will be Dixieland, with the Riverboat Jazz Band celebrating the Fourth.

THE TRI-CITY Council on Community Theater has chosen its officers for the 1971-72 season. Gioia Ottaviano of the Schenectady Light Opera

CHARLES BUCKLEY
Theater Group Officer

Company will be president; Charles Buckley of Latham Community Players, vice president; Diane Buckley, Schenectady Light Opera, secretary; Joann Jamison, Slingerlands Community Players, treasurer. Other organizations affiliated with the group are the Albany Civic Theater and Schenectady Civic Players.

A concert of saxaphone music will be given tomorrow night at 8:15 in Memorial Chapel, Union College. Classical saxaphonist Sigur Rascher will play selections by Bach, Mendelssohn, Lukas, Wirth, Gerhard and others. Rascher is in his fourth year as director of the saxaphone workshop at Union.

VIRGINIA BOWERS has been reelected for a second two-year term as president of the Capitol Hill Choral Society. Other officers elected are: Rogers Finch, vice president; Carolyn Bourgeois, secretary; Moir Rennie, treasurer; Gerald Toomey, financial secretary; Ann Dobler, concert secretary, and Albert Houk, librarian.

FOR THE SIXTH consecutive year, WAMC, the FM station of Albany Medical College, will carry live broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The season will begin Friday night at 9. Saturday night concerts begin at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon ones at 2:30 p.m.

JACOB'S PILLOW, Becket, Mass., will hold an open house Sunday from 2 to 5 p.m. For the first time in the famous dance festival's history, gates will be open beyond the Ted Shawn Theater area for the general public.

12

TIME
GREENWICH, CONN.
D. 13,160

JUN 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

'TANGLEWOOD' CONCERT — The following piece was written by Roger Saleeby, a second grader at North Mianus School. "Tanglewood is in Lenox, Mass. It is a very big building with no walls. I went there when I was four years old. Every year people from all over the world come to see it. We had a 'Tanglewood' concert at North Mianus School. We all sat in the grass under the trees. George Matnes was the musical conductor. Our school band played for us. The boys and girls study very hard in the band. I hope someday I will be in a concert."

TIMES-GAZETTE
WARREN, R. I.
W. 2,825

JUN 17 1971 New England Newsclip

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181

JUN 8 1971

SPAC Swap Of Orchestras Canceled

#6

The planned exchange concert, which would have seen the Boston Symphony appear Aug. 20 at the Saratoga Performing Arts Center while SPAC's resident Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Tanglewood, has been canceled, according to a SPAC spokesman.

Executive director Richard P. Leach cited scheduling difficulties as the cause of the cancellation, but added he hopes the exchange series can be arranged for 1972.

He said executives of both festivals were disappointed.

A concert under Philadelphia maestro Eugene Ormandy will replace the exchange program. Bartok's "Two Portraits," Debussy's "La Mer," Sibelius' Seventh Symphony and a suite from Richard Strauss' Opera "Der Rosenkavalier" will comprise the new bill of fare.

The center will honor tickets for the exchange concert for the newly scheduled program, also on Aug. 20, or will offer exchanges or refunds.

Concert Plans Changed at Tanglewood

785

Richard P. Leach, executive director of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center and Thomas D. Perry Jr, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have announced that plans have been cancelled for an exchange of festival concerts between the Philadelphia and Boston Orchestras.

The two orchestras were each to have traveled on Aug 20 to the other's customary summer performing center -- the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy to Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony under Seiji Ozawa to Saratoga.

In announcing the cancellation, Mr Leach and Mr Perry said that, while disappointing, it was unavoidable owing to the schedules of the two orchestras. The difficulties seemingly could not be resolved in time to assure the exchange.

The Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Saratoga on August 20, Eugene Ormandy conducting. The Boston Symphony plays at Tanglewood, Seiji Ozawa conducting and Garrick Ohlsson as soloist.

Anyone holding tickets for the cancelled Philadelphia Orchestra concert at Tanglewood may use them for the Boston Symphony's program at Tanglewood the same date. Exchanges for another Tanglewood date or refunds may be obtained by mailing the tickets to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass 01240 or by bringing them to the Tanglewood box office.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 581,160

JUN 27 1971 New England Newsclip

Philadelphia, Hub orchestras cancel switch

An exchange of festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Ocrhestra scheduled for Aug. 20 has been cancelled, according to Richard P. Leach, executive director of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center and Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the B. S. O.

The two orchestras were to have traveled to the other's customary summer performing center. Instead, the Philadelphia Orchestra will play at Saratoga on Aug. 20 with Eugene Ormandy conducting. The Boston Symphony will play at Tanglewood with Seiji Ozawa conducting and Garrick Ohlsson as piano soloist.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
S. 207,211

JUN 27 1971 New England Newsclip

MUSIC SHORTS

Cancel exchange programs

THE ST. DUNSTAN'S College Conference on Sacred Music for 1971 is scheduled for St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, Aug. 30 through Sept. 3. Hollis E. Grant again is the director.

PLANS for the exchange programs between the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra, at Saratoga (N.Y.) and Tanglewood, respectively, for Aug. 20, have been canceled.

THE FOURTH Van Cliburn International Quadrennial Piano Competition has been announced for Sept. 17 through Oct. 1,1973, at Texas Christian University, Fort Worth. Eligible contestants must have been born on May 1, 1944 or later. Address correspondence to the Van Cliburn International Piano Competition, P.O. Box 17421, Fort Worth, Tex. 76102.

PHOENIX
BRISTOL, R. I.
W. 4,600

JUN 18 1971 New England Newsclip

Concert Plans Changed at Tanglewood

Richard P. Leach, executive director of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center and Thomas D. Perry Jr, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have announced that plans have been cancelled for an exchange of festival concerts between the Philadelphia and Boston Orchestras.

The two orchestras were each to have traveled on Aug 20 to the other's customary summer performing center -- the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy to Tanglewood and the Boston Symphony under Seiji Ozawa to Saratoga.

In announcing the cancellation, Mr Leach and Mr Perry said that, while disappointing, it was unavoidable owing to the schedules of the two orchestras. The difficulties seemingly could not be resolved in time to assure the exchange.

The Philadelphia Orchestra plays at Saratoga on August 20, Eugene Ormandy conducting. The Boston Symphony plays at Tanglewood, Seiji Ozawa conducting and Garrick Ohlsson as soloist.

Anyone holding tickets for the cancelled Philadelphia Orchestra concert at Tanglewood may use them for the Boston Symphony's program at Tanglewood the same date. Exchanges for another Tanglewood date or refunds may be obtained by mailing the tickets to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass 01240 or by bringing them to the Tanglewood box office.

BEE
NEWTOWN, CONN.
W. 12,559

JUN 18 1971 New England Newsclip

Orchestras Cancel Exchange Program

Richard P. Leach, executive director of the Saratoga Performing Arts Center and Thomas D. Perry Jr, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, have announced that plans have been cancelled for an exchange of festival concerts between the Philadelphia and Boston Orchestras.

The two orchestras were each to have traveled on August 20 to the other's customary summer performing center. Mr Leach and Mr Perry said that it was unavoidable oweing to the schedules of the two orchestras. The difficulties seemingly could not be resolved in time to assure the exchange.

Anyone holding tickets for the cancelled Philadelphia Orchestra concert at Tanglewood may use them for the Boston Symphony's program at Tanglewood the same date. Exchanges for another Tanglewood date or refunds may be obtained by mailing the tickets to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240 or by bringing them to the Tanglewood box office after Monday, June 14.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
S. 137,000

JUN 13 1971 New England Newsclip

Musical Events: Summer 1971

By GORDON EMERSON

Probably the nicest part of the annual move from the concert hall to the carriage house is that the stuffiness of the former is left behind. While acoustics may occasionally suffer, though in many instances they are notably improved, the atmosphere for making and communicating music is decidedly heightened.

The Marlboro Music Festival in Vermont, which will open its twenty-first season on July 10, provides as powerful an example as can be found. Established veterans like Rudolf Serkin and Isaac Stern practice and perform alongside talented newcomers from around the world, and everyone—not excluding audiences—profits from the informality as well as the purposeful seriousness of the exchange. (A further observation concerning Marlboro's democratic atmosphere: Where else but in the Marlboro catalogue could you find Serkin listed under S along with every other pianist who has participated in the Festival, or Casals simply included in the midst of the list of 70 cellists who have performed there during the past two decades?)

Casals will return to Marlboro this summer for his 11th visit, however the dates that he will conduct, as well as programs, are not announced in advance.

Due to the tremendous success of the Marlboro concept, concerts are invariably sold out well in advance. Early ticket reservations are, therefore, advisable, although a few lawn seats outside the shed are sometimes available at concert time.

One of the more interesting and worthwhile music conclaves in New England has been held in the Monadnock region of New Hampshire for the past six summers. Modeled on the idea of bringing music to the people, conductor James Bolle and about 30 instrumentalists from various parts of the country travel from town to town and meetinghouse to church, performing a wide variety of music for various combinations of instruments and voices. If there is any programming emphasis it is on seldom performed music of the 18th Century with a smattering of modern works. The atmosphere at all presentations is extremely informal, the level of performance admirably high and free admission remains the rule. For those who may be vacationing in that direction, the Monadnock region is in the southwestern corner of New Hampshire, close to both Massachusetts and Vermont.

Locally, the New Haven Symphony has managed to reinstate three free programs on the Green this summer, two of which remain. Lack of funds forced the cancellation of concerts last year after one opening program, and the future is still bleak unless new sources of revenue can be found.

Julius Scheir's Starlight Festival enters its 17th season at the Yale Law School Courtyard, and whereas the Festival Quartet has been a mainstay since the Festival's inception, it will perform only at the opening program this summer. Two years ago Mr. Scheir decided to branch out into the areas of jazz and rock, this summer two folk-ethnic artists have been included in the form of Flamenco guitarist Carlos Montoya and East Indian flute virtuoso G. S. Sachdev. Sachdev, who improvises on East Indian ragas, will bring a tabla player with him. The Eastern Brass Quintet will conclude the series with a program featuring wind music of the Renaissance and Baroque.

Some of the big super-festivals exist perhaps as much to provide summer employment for the musicians—not an unreasonable request—as to fill a need, and in most cases pop and rock groups perform on "off" nights, helping to defray normal operating costs in the process. The Boston Symphony's Berkshire Music Festival is celebrating its 37th consecutive season this summer while the Saratoga Performing Arts Center—the warm weather home of Maestro Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra—is still in its infancy at six years of age. It was announced at press time that the planned exchange programs between the two orchestras later in the summer has been cancelled due to scheduling problems.

As a footnote, it is not surprising to observe that, with few exceptions, summer presentations avoid avant garde music. Not surprising since, to a large extent, winter ones do also. But the sounds of the avant garde seem even more out of place in the outdoors because they require such extreme concentration of the listener and tend to be so academic. (Can you recall the last time you heard a new work that had charm, or grace, or that was arresting or memorable?)

It would seem that during the summer months music is returned to the people. Which is probably where it belongs all along.

7/1/71
North Shore COMMUNITY

Pete Peters Recommends

Who is Neil Simon and why is he making everyone laugh? Neil Simon is probably the greatest American comedy writer in the recorded history of the theater. And surely one of the most prolific.

"The Last of the Red Hot Lovers"—one of Broadway's genuine comedy hits—is his. So is the musical smash "Promises, Promises" at the Shubert Theater. So, too, is "Plaza Suite" on the screen at Radio City Music Hall, a film version of Simon's long-running Broadway smash which opened more than three years ago and just recently made room for its screen counterpart.

What has Neil Simon got that nets him several million a year and bring everyone—regardless of race, color, creed, political belief, and chronological age—to the bursting point? The answer is simple. Talent. Talent for the simple word, the common situation, the recognizable character. Talent to find and give vent to the laugh that is inherent in living. His "Promises, Promises" put into glorious music "The Apartment," which few filmgoers can forget. "The Last of the Red Hot Lovers," in which Dom DeLuise recently replaced the amazing James Coco, is one of the most hilarious, and curiously, one of the more endearing plays of the last two seasons.

And if you missed the stage "Plaza Suite," don't make the same error with the picture. For your record, "Plaza Suite" is composed of three separate stories, all starring Walter Matthau and all taking place in Suite 719 of the Hotel Plaza in New York City. The first sequence features Matthau and Maureen Stapleton as a long-married couple from Mamroneck who return to the scene of their honeymoon. In the second story, Matthau portrays a lecherous Hollywood producer who arranges an afternoon rendezvous with a former girlfriend. The final sequence shows Matthau as an irate father who cannot get his daughter to emerge from a locked bathroom for her wedding in the Plaza Ballroom.

In the "Last of the Red Hot Lovers," Mr. Simon also follows the three-part story, this time giving free rein to the middle-aging proprietor of a seafood restaurant as he searches for a last fling. No printed matter can, of course, convey the humor, the irresistible, abdominal comedy with which Mr. Simon has invested his plays. They must be seen to be felt.

* * *

This summer, if you are planning a weekend, or a week, away from the beach, consider the Berkshires around Lee and Lenox, Mass. Music lovers need not be told that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is again ensconced at beautiful Tanglewood from July 2 to Aug. 22. Among the scheduled conductors are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Arthur Fiedler, William Steinberg, Seiji Ozawa, and Eugene Ormandy (the latter with his Philadelphia Orchestra on Aug. 20).

Soloists include violinists Itzhak Perlman and Joseph Silverstein; pianists Earl Wild, Vladimir Ashkenazy and Byron Janis; singers John Alexander, Maureen Forrester and Judith Raskin, among many others.

In case you forgot, Tanglewood is an estate of 210 acres in the Berkshire Hills, given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 30's. Nathaniel Hawthorne lived on the Tanglewood grounds, and you know how effectively and creatively he lived in the presence of that scenic beauty.

Lee, Mass., is the home of the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, which is now in its 39th year. The 10-week program will present both old and new ballet, modern and ethnic dance forms with well-known American and foreign artists.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUN 29 1971 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood needs its home-town fans

"You ought not to cling to preconceived notions about Tanglewood, but let this place wash over you. Let yourself be open to the 1,001 contacts that will affect you while you are here."

Gunther Schuller was talking to the 297 students who are attending the Berkshire Music Center this year, but his remarks might very well be applied to the residents of Berkshire County. There was a time when Tanglewood was the focal center for our area during the summer rather than just an eight-week musical extravaganza that draws tourist dollars to the community. There was a special feeling, a rapport between locals and orchestra that made the Boston Symphony our symphony and the Tanglewood concerts our concerts.

Somewhere along the line in the past few years there was a falling away, a drifting into separate corporations doing business at the same stand but having nothing in common after working hours. There was nothing overt, no incident, no bad feeling. Rather, it was a lack of feeling. It would be to little purpose to try to find villains or social or economic trends or reasons pro and con. The sad thing is that it happened.

But now there are two groups who are trying to do something about it—the Orchestra itself and the Friends of Tanglewood. The Orchestra is concerned about its Berkshire "home" and its future in these difficult times, and the Friends are concerned with bringing the community in contact with the myriad of activities that make up Tanglewood and the Berkshire Music Center. They hope to bring new life into Tanglewood on Parade again, covering the grounds with family picnics, and they hope to fill the halls with Friends of the young musicians who come here to learn and display their talents.

Anyone who has not been to Tanglewood for a long time for whatever reasons — traffic, crowds, money — should once more expose his mind and ear and eyes to all that it has to offer. "Let this place wash over you and be open to the 1,001 contacts." It is a good time to become a Friend again. In deed as well as need.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,928

JUN 22 1971

Summertime

Summer is on us after too short a spring.

We have heat before we are ready for so strong a sun. We have humidity for which we are never ready. We have lawns browning before we have had sufficient opportunity to enjoy their greenness.

But, also, we have the longest days in the year and the delights that come with balmy evenings. The simple delight of sitting in the late twilight and enjoying an evening breeze, of a ride in the country, of an evening swim, or even of an outdoor chore. But we think, particular, of the delights only the summer season brings to Metroland.

Summer theaters bud in June and bloom throughout July and August. The dancers return to Jacob's Pillow this week. The Saratoga Performing Arts Center already is presenting its "specials" and next month will get down to its genuine business of the New York City Ballet. The Philadelphia Orchestra will follow in August.

At Tanglewood, in the Berkshires, the Boston Symphony soon will be creating its particular bit of heaven. At Glens Falls, the Lake George Opera will add new stars to the summer sky. As close as Latham, the Colonie Tent will be the scene of various revels. Marlboro is farther away, but Pablo Casals will be there.

Summer evenings—magic hours for looking and listening—magic hours to enjoy. Go for laughter, go for edification, go for fun. But go, for when summer comes can fall be far behind.

14

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUN 30 1971 New England Newsclip

Whitestone

Deep-seated vibrations entrance Tanglewood's Jim Kiley.

New Box Seats

Backward Area Gets Improvement

By ANNE-GERARD FLYNN

Everyone knows there is a recession on, and the best indication of it is the new box seats at Tanglewood. Last year, the Tanglewood management saw fit to install new seats for the simple folk in the audience. But this season the more generous patrons, unprotected by their usual thickness of financial padding, are beginning to feel a pinch and the management thought it had better heed their bottomless demands.

As a simple folk and one who has never sat closer to the Tanglewood stage than Row S, and then only with a ticket procured by someone who knew someone, who knew someone, I feel totally unqualified to pass judgment on the worthiness of the box seats. However, as none of you are about to go out-of-your-seats over the matter, my colleagues here tell me it is the duty of the critic, whose seat has long been calloused by years of tough ended reviewing, to put bottoms up and endure the risks of putting bottoms down. This may be the impact heard round the Shed.

Deep-Seated Comfort

The 168 new chairs have been purchased through Herrick's furniture store in Lenox, which has been serving the deep-seated taste of New Englanders for many years. The chairs come in two variations upon a theme with no additional cost to the box holder. They are of stainless steel, and lest you think of reclining on a chute-the-chute, it is in the form of a white webbing. The first type has a chrome spring suspension stand, the kind that allows you to rock ever so gently to the music without giving a concert, yourself. The second has a steel base and is for the person who likes to feel his seat planted with the firmness of a Berkshire elm.

Jim Kiley claims the new box seats are twice as large as the older models, and Jim ought to know. As grounds superintendent at Tanglewood, he has been making that place measure up for several seasons.

From all indications, the new seats give 20th century comfort to a backward area. But then if I could be boxed in far from the madding crowd, I would be happy to import my bass drum to sit on. If there are any box holders who are upended by the change in seats, I have this ticket for Row S. . .

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 24 1971

YU'GEN — This sculpture is one of five large metal sculptures by Averill Park sculptor Arlene Shulman now on display around the grounds at Tanglewood, the summer home of the Boston Symphony in Lenox, Mass. The sculptures, ranging up to seven feet in height are arranged near the Tanglewood Tent, the Music Shed and in the Formal Garden. Mrs. Shulman studied with Richard Stankiewicz and has had one-man shows at RPI, Williams College and Hampshire College at Amherst. She is married to attorney Morton Shulman and is the mother of three children, ages 10, 7 and 6.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUL 30 1971 New England Newsclip

Whitestone

Art borrows from music in "Counterpoint," one of several metal sculptures on view at Tanglewood. The one-man show is by Mrs. Arline Schulman of Poughkeepsie, N.Y.

3-D Metal Sculptures at Tanglewood

A new addition to the Tanglewood scene this summer is a group of large metal sculptures by Arline Schulman, Poughkeepsie-born sculptor whose studio is in Averill Park, N.Y. The five vividly colored works, ranging up to 7 feet in height, are arranged near the Tanglewood Tent, the Music Shed, and in the Formal Garden.

Mrs. Shulman studied with Richard Stankiewicz and began her current work in large steel forms in 1968. She has had one-man shows at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy, Williams College and Hampshire College in Amherst. Currently at work on commissions for the Times Union and Social Services buildings in Albany, Mrs. Shulman is represented in the permanent collection of Williams College.

Frame for Nature

The Times Union, commenting on her RPI show, called the work "excellent," observing that it is closely related to tha of the late David Smith. "To b compared to David Smith i hardly a weakness in Mrs. Shul man's work," the newspape said, adding, "The natural set ting, seen through the grea open spaces in her work, intro duces another element of chang ing depth, color and move ment."

Commenting on her own work, Mrs. Shulman says, "My thoughts concern architecture—caves, holes, cellular structures. My mind is most excited by three-dimensional forms. Other forms of art seem too finicky."

Mrs. Shulman, married to Atty. Morton Shulman, is the mother of three children, ages 10, 7 and 6.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W.-CIRC. N. AVAIL.

JUL 21 1971

Tanglewood Festival's Picnic Mood

Individual Efforts At Berkshire Plant Draw Up To 21,500 For Single Concert

5454

By ROBERT B. FREDERICK

It isn't commonly known that the Tanglewood Festival, which is the summer home and activity of the Boston Symphony at Lenox, Massachusetts (and the probable forerunner of most American music festivals) is actually the offshoot of a New York Philharmonic project. The Berkshire Symphonic Festival started in August, 1934, at Stockbridge, Mass., with three concerts by 65 members of the N.Y. Philharmonic under Henry Hadley. It became a Boston Symphony project in 1936 under Serge Koussevitzky, in a tent at Holmwood, the former Vanderbilt estate, at Lenox and in 1937 received its permanent home with the donation of the 210-acre Tanglewood estate by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan.

From a first capacity of 3,000 for the season, Tanglewood now handles as many as 21,500 for a single concert.

Over the years, of course, the Tanglewood administration has met and seemingly vanquished every headache that a huge music festival could be subjected to. Today, to a first-time visitor, as was this VARIETY reviewer at the season's opening, everything runs like clockwork. Press handling is smooth with efficiency and courtesy.

The 1971 Tanglewood Festival is under the aegis of Seizi Ozawa and Gunther Schuller as artistic directors and Leonard Bernstein as advisor. William Steinberg is music director and Michael Tilson Thomas is associate conductor. James F. Kiley is Tanglewood superintendent and Marvin Y. Schofer heads press and public information, ably assisted by David Levenson. (Latter has since been named press chief for the Baltimore Symphony but may still devote his summers to Tanglewood.—Ed.)

It's 34th Year

Beyond the program excellence of the festival, which bowed its 34th edition with "Music of the Bach Family" on July 2; "A Concert of Serenades" on July 3 and Vivaldi and Monteverdi selections on July 4. Ozawa conducted the first two programs, Tilson the third, is the knowledge that there's no "playing down" to the audience as is true of many al fesco presentations. Most of the concerts are as "demanding" as is the winter Boston season. Certainly, Luciano Berio's "Serenata For Flute and 14 Instruments," presented on July 3, could hardly be called "mood music,' but the audience took it in stride.

Tanglewood, which has grown from the Music Shed dedicated in 1938 for the fifth festival, through a series of additions and alterations, to its present size, is blessed with an acoustically brilliant home which allows the music to be heard, beautifully and without distortion, far beyond the limits of the shed. Because of this, over the years it has become the custom for the steady customers to arrive two or three hours before the concert, spread a blanket anywhere on the grounds, enjoy a picnic supper (or luncheon if it's a matinee) and enjoy the music in relaxed comfort. On a hot, but rarely humid, summer afternoon, the regular seats offer a somewhat cooler prospect but there's invariably an overflow crowd in both areas.

Some Ritzy Picknickers

The apparel of the concertgoers ranges from summer formal to the maddest, hippie-inspired wear, and the picnic supplies range from expensive wine and fine crystal (a la Glyndebourne) to the simplest boxlunch (a la Coney Island). What is truly amazing is that there is absolutely no litter. The surroundings evidently are as good an influence on the housekeeping habits of the customers as they are on their behavior. One is immediately struck by the quiet atmosphere prevailing despite the many thousands of people.

One area which is not handled too well, unfortunately, is a cafeteria on the grounds which has a poor selection with equally poor service, particularly at intermission time. Probably an outside concession, this could be vastly improved and has, undoubtedly been responsible for many of the concertgoers bringing their own food and drink.

The festival continues through Aug. 22 with a galaxy of guest conductors, including Daniel Barenboim, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Colin Davis and Bernstein. Pianists include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Earl Wild, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson and Alexis Weissenberg.

Violinist lineup includes Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein and Pinchas Zuckerman, cellists Jules Eskin and Zara Nelsova.

Here are the vocal talents: John Alexander, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Lois Marshall, Sherill Milnes, Judith Raskin and Arlene Saunders. Plus the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, the Berkshire Boy Choir, Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston symphony String Trio.

Open rehearsals are held Saturday mornings in the Shed, there's the perennial Boston Pops on Aug. 3, Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust" on Aug. 22 and a series of weekend preludes free to Friday ticketholders.

Tanglewood: The Oldest Still One of the Best

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

Tanglewood is the grandaddy of all the American summer festivals and from virtually all points of view is still one of the best

For one thing there is a good deal more experimentation both in terms of the traditional repertory and certainly in terms of contemporary music.

One of the primary factors that contributes to this pleasant condition is the coincidence of the Berkshire Music School on the grounds at Tanglewood

THIS SCHOOL has for many years been one of the grand purveyors of experimental contemporary composition and for one week during the festival they spend the whole week performing that most avantgarde music on the American scene

Contributing to this both in composition and in performance are some of the big names in modern music including Gunther Schuller, who, beside being a noted composer, is a good conductor and along with Seiji Ozawa one of the artistic directors of the Tanglewood Festival as a whole.

There is considerable vitality and drive in the heady upper echelons of the Tanglewood executive suite, to wit, young men like Schuller Ozawa, Michael Tilson Thomas, who looks like a comer, and even the advisor is not exactly hoary with age (although no more a wunderkind) Leonard Bernstein. He is another outstanding product of the Berkshire Music School and was for a long time the protege of Serge Koussevitsky

Continued on Page A-16

A typical afternoon concert scene at Tanglewood where the Boston Symphony will be in residence

Tanglewood: The Oldest

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 4 1971

Continued from Page A-13

THESE MEN HAVE achieved a very skillful blend in their programming and, in my opinion, have succeeded more than any of the other summer festivals of this orientation and rank. Of course there is no way to please everybody all the time, and, depending upon one's tastes and abreviations and proclivities (musical that is) the programming as a whole would leave something to be desired. But one may be and should be selective, and if one is, he could project a program schedule that should be first rate. Anyhow, nobody but rich men and critics can go to all of the concerts, the expense to most would be out of reach.

With all these points noted and considered the program shows a wide range.

Consider these widely disparate composers: Bach, Ruggles, Copland, Stravinsky, Takemitsu, Lalo, Bartok, Hindemith, Schoenberg, Schuller, Mozart, Wood, Bruckner, Tchaikowsky, Xenakis, Ravel, Nielsen, Berlioz, Mahler, Beethoven (who?) and others. Now it would be a most unfelicitous excercise in sterlized pedantry for anyone to maintain that from this list there is nothing that appeals to him.

There are other considerations too.

Every Friday night at 7:00 p.m. and included in the price of the regular concert are the weekend Preludes. Here some of the most exciting and rewarding music of the entire summer is presented.

THE BOSTON STRING TRIO, the Boston Symphony Players, the great American Metropolitan Opera baritone, Sherril Milnes, Phyllis Curtin, The Berkshire Boys Choir, pianist Christian Eschenbach and Alexis Weissenberg, are presented in tidy and imaginative concerts.

Now let us arbitrarily choose some of the orchestra concerts that should be outstanding.

The Tanglewood Festival Chorus is going to be busy and the vehicles that have been chosen for them are uniformly noteworthy.

They will be heard in the "Magnificat," by J.S. Bach; Vivaldi, "The Seasons", Monteverdi's "Music from the Vespers of 1610"; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis", Mozart's Requiem", and the exciting "Damnation of Faust," by Berlioz. That is really a very impressive list of great choral music.

And then one must consider Tanglewood itself. The ambiance, both traditionally and musically is enrighing to a considerable degree.

THE BEAUTY of the grounds, the echos of the many great performances of the past, the dedication of those who contribute is almost a palapable thing.

One is aware at once that a genuine tradition has been established. One that is succored and nurtured by people of principle and integrity, and this tradition is available to all of us and we are all surely the better ror it.

And, as a most serious postscript, I would make the flat an unequivocal remark that on the grounds, near the Music School, there is a birch tree with the largest trunk I have ever seen, and I was born in New Hampshire. I haven't measured it but it looks like a champion.

At Tanglewood, Classical in rusticana

BY STEVE ROBINSON

The eight-weekend Berkshire Festival Concerts featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood begin on Friday, July 2, and conclude on Sunday, August 22. Here's how Tanglewood works. Each weekend features four concerts, beginning with the 7 p.m. Weekend Prelude on Friday nights.

The Weekend Prelude is always a chamber concert and includes, in order of appearance, the B.S.O. String Trio, Earl Wild, the B.S.O. Chamber Players, Sherrill Milnes, the Berkshire Boys Choir, Phyllis Curtin, Christoph Eschenbach, and Alexis Weissenberg.

The first orchestral concert of the weekend is at 9 p.m. on Fridays, and anyone with a ticket for this concert is admitted at no charge to the Weekend Prelude. The third concert of every weekend takes place Saturday night, beginning at 8:30 p.m. the fourth and concluding concert of the weekend is on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m. Every Saturday morning at 10:30 there is an open rehearsal of the B.S.O. at $2.50 per rehearsal. Tickets go on sale that morning and seats are unreserved.

Looking at the eight weekends as a whole, we find that one out of every three works being performed is by Mozart, Beethoven or Brahms. It is not surprising then that 40 of the 69 scheduled works are standard pieces in the orchestral repertoire.

The Beethoven and Brahms are, for the most part, lumped together on the third and fourth weekend. William Steinberg and Seiji Ozawa conduct eight of the nine Brahms works on the third weekend. On Friday and Saturday, Steinberg conducts the Tragic Overture, the Piano Concerto No. 2 with Ashkenazy, the Symphony No. 2, the Academic Festival Overture, the Double Concerto with Zukerman and Nelsova and the Fourth Symphony. On Sunday, Ozawa conducts the Alto Rhapsody with Forrester and the Haydn Variations. (Two works by Mozart, the Overture to the Marriage of Figaro and the Piano Concerto, k. 595, with Ashkenazy, are also included at that concert.)

On the fourth weekend, Steinberg, assisted by Leonard Bernstein, performs seven of the eight Beethoven works. On Friday and Saturday Steinberg conducts the Leonore Overture No. 3, the Violin Concerto with Perlman, the King Stephen Overture and the 3rd, 5th and 7th Symphonies. On Sunday the advisor to the Berkshire Festival, Leonard Bernstein, conducts the Missa Solemnis in a performance in memory of Serge Koussevitsky. This weekend is Bernstein's only appearance on the weekend concerts.

Mozart, who is tied with Brahms for the lead in number of compositions presented (both have nine), is rather spaced out this summer as his name appears on six of the eight weekends. Featured is an all-Mozart program on Sunday of the sixth weekend, conducted by Colin Davis. It consists of the Kyrie k. 341, the Piano Concerto k. 503 with Stephen Bishop, and the Requiem. Davis also conducts the 39th Symphony on Sat. of the seventh weekend.

If the choice of conductors for these weekend concerts can yield any clues as to a possible successor to Steinberg the year after next (and if we exclude Michael Tilson Thomas, who has been appointed music director of the Buffalo Symphony for next year), we find that Ozawa and Davis are the front runners. Davis is scheduled to conduct four concerts while Ozawa leads the pack with seven. Barenboim, Bernstein, Fleisher and Bruno Maderna each conduct one concert.

The shed at Tanglewood: music al fresco in the Berkshires.

As mentioned earlier, Mozart, Beethoven, and Brahms are the leading composers represented this summer at Tanglewood. Tchaikovsky is next, with five works, including the Serenade for Strings, the 6th Symphony, and the Overture to Romeo and Juliet conducted by Ozawa and the 4th Symphony conducted by Barenboim. Bach has three works scheduled: the Magnificat and Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 conducted by Ozawa at the opening concert, and the Suite No. 4 conducted by Thomas on Saturday of the second weekend. Schubert also is represented by three works, including the 2nd Symphony conducted by Bruno Maderna on Sunday of the second weekend and the Mass in G Major conducted by Davis on Friday night of the seventh weekend. Prokofieff has been tied for several weeks with two compostitons for fifth in number of compositions presented, but a last-minute program change has vaulted him into fourth place, tied with Bach and Schubert. The featured works by Prokofieff are the Piano Concerto No. 3, with Byron Janis, on Saturday of the fifth weekend, and, on Friday of the eighth weekend, two works, the Romeo and Juliet Suite and the Piano Concerto No. 2. The soloist in the Second Concerto is a newcomer to the international team of virtuoso pianists, Garrick Ohlsson. All of the Prokofieff is conducted by Ozawa.

Aside from Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Prokofieff, Schubert, and Bach, the combined Tanglewood artistic mentalities that make up these concerts have decided that no other composers merit more than two compositions. I'm sure everyone will begin to assemble his own list of composers missing at this summers' Tanglewood concerts, but I will restrict my own list to one glaring omission: Igor Stravinsky. Thomas conducts his Scherzo a la Russe, but this little work is Stravinsky's only scheduled composition.

Had I been told that no memorial tribute to Stravinsky was scheduled because the programs had been made before his death, I suppose it would have been excusable. But when the Friday of the eighth weekend became available at the last minute, a perfect opportunity was created to honor the late master. Instead, music by Prokofieff, Berlioz and Tchaikovsky was inserted and I wonder if this neglect, coming so soon after his passing, is an indication of a fast decline.

It must be admitted that the Berkshire Festival Concerts are not a showcase for avant-garde music. A look at the schedule shows only three works written in a contemporary idiom, and they are all conducted by Seiji Ozawa. They are the Serenade for flute (1954) by Luciano Berio with Dwyer on the Saturday of the first weekend; Cassiopeia by Toru Takemitsy on the Saturday of the fifth weekend; and Polla Ta Dhina by Yannis Xenakis on the Sunday of the seventh weekend. But the Berkshire Festival Concerts are not the place to look for avant-garde music. Those who are interested in what is happening today in music can look to the Festival for Contemporary Music at Tanglewood. This Festival, according to the official brochure, "turns Tanglewood into the contemporary music capitol of the world." No details are given, however.

While Brahms, Mozart, Beethoven and Tchaikovsky dominate the Festival this summer, a number of other interesting happenings. On the first weekend, the only pre-Bach composer featured this summer, Claudio Monteverdi, is represented by his Music from the Vespers of 1610 conducted by Thomas on Sunday. On the second weekend, Bruno Maderna, a noted interpreter of 20th-century music, performs Schoenberg's Chamber symphony opus 9b. The third and fourth weekends, as noted above, are filled with Brahms and Beethoven. On the fifth weekend, Thomas will repeat his performance of the Suntreader by Carl Ruggles, a work that he recorded with the Orchestra for DGG. On Saturday of the seventh weekend, Davis will conduct the only work by Mahler presented at the weekend concerts. He will be joined by Judith Raskin for a performance of the 4th Symphony.

Traditionally, the last concert of the season at Tanglewood is a big smash, and this year is no exception as Seiji Ozawa presents a complete performance of the Damnation of Faust by Hector Berlioz. Tickets for the concerts are priced at $4.50, $6, $7.50, $8, and $8.50. A general admission ticket of $3 goes on sale two hours before each concert and allows the bearer to sit, lie, or sleep on the huge lawn. For further information call the Festival Ticket Office at (413) 637-1600.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.
SPECTATOR
(NEW YORK CITY MARKET AREA)
W. 19,000

JUN 11 1971

Travel Topics

By Peter Purpura

Here's one for the music lovers and the conservative answer to Woodstock. It's the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., which will run from July 2 to August 22 under direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There are five performances each weekend—two on each Friday and Saturday and one Sunday afternoon. Rates are from $3.50 to $8 each performance for seats in the theatre, and for the young who go for the outdoor setting, standing room on the lawn is $3.

Conductors over the eight-week program will include Arthur Fieldler, Eugene Ormandy and Leonard Bernstein. Pianists include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop and Ruth Laredo. Some of the singers are Benita Valente, William Cochran, John Alexander and Phyllis Curtin and, to pick a weekend as July 16, here is the program:

Friday at 7 PM-Weekend Prelude with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. 9 PM-William Steinberg conducting Brahms Tragic Overture and Piano Concerto No. 2. followed by Valdimir Ashkenazy and Symphony No. 2.

Saturday at 10:30 AM-Open Rehearsal 8:30 PM-William Steinberg conducting Brahms Academic Festival Overture and Concerto for Violin and Cello followed by Symphony No. 4. by Pinchas Zukerman and Zara Nelsova.

Sunday at 2:30 PM-Seiji Ozawa will conduct Mozarts' Marriage of Figaro and Piano Concerto K. Vladimir Ashkenazy will conduct Brahms Alto Rhapsody and Maureen Forrester will conduct Brahms Haydn variations.

That's a typical weekend entertainment and our friends at Casser Tours have a bus ride up each Saturday starting at 1:30 PM and returning Sunday evenings. The price of $41 includes admission to two concerts and hotel accommodation at the Northampton Inn in Northampton, Mass. with breakfast on Sunday morning.

If you wish to head up on your own, tickets can be ordered in advance with reservations forms being available at most Travel Bureaus or you can write to Festival Ticket Office Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. Their phone is 413-637-1600.

Tanglewood won't make the first page of the Daily News but it tipifies the silent majority.

BOSTON AFTER DARK
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 75,000

JUN 29 1971

New England Newsclip

Thomas to Be Busy in New York and Lenox

Unions Aid Gotham Concerts Starting June 17; → Summer Series Bows at Tanglewood July 2

By TOM PUTNAM

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra has announced its programs for the 1971 Berkshire Festival which begins July 2 at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

And the New York Philharmonic has announced its programs for a new series of concerts which the orchestra will present with the city's labor unions; the nine-concert series begins June 17 and will be given in Philharmonic Hall, regular home of the New York Philharmonic, and at community union halls.

Michael Tilson Thomas, the new music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, will conduct on both series. As associate conductor of the Boston Symphony he will conduct that orchestra in three programs. And Thomas will be one of three guest conductors leading three concerts with the New York Philharmonic as part of its labor series.

It is the first time that the New York Philharmonic and the city's labor unions will present a joint series of programs. Three programs will be given three times each, and union members will select a pair of concerts, one at a community union hall and one at Philharmonic Hall.

THE SERIES, which is called "Experience in Music," is designed for union members and their families. It is presented by the New York Philharmonic Society in cooperation with the New York City Central Labor Council AFL-CIO Performing Arts and Cultural Project, and the series is made possible by grants from the National Foundation for the Arts and the New York State Council on the Arts.

Michael Tilson Thomas
. . . Boston and New York

Thomas will conduct the New York Philharmonic June 25 at Philharmonic Hall, June 26 at Co-Op City in the Bronx, and June 27 at Philharmonic Hall. The soloist for Thomas's program will be Misha Dichter, the young U.S. pianist who was an award winner at the 1963 Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow.

For the program at the union meeting hall in the Bronx, the New York Philharmonic will use a new acoustical shell, designed for the series by Christopher Jaffe.

THOMAS WILL conduct Handel's "Water Music" Suite; Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 1 (with Dichter); Ives's "Unanswered Question"; and Bernstein's Symphonic Dances from "West Side Story."

Other conductors in the labor series are Aaron Copland, whose programs June 17, 18 and 23 with violinist Michael Rabin and bass-baritone William Warfield will include his own "Danzon Cubano" and "Early American Songs"; and Robert Shaw, who will have pianist Lorin Hollander for programs June 19, 20 and 24.

Incidentally, the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, which previously presented a "Labor Night" program in Kleinhans Music Hall in cooperation with the Buffalo AFL-CIO Council, was interested in presenting a labor music series, but its request for a grant from the National Foundation for the Arts was denied.

CONDUCTING the Boston Symphony this summer at Tanglewood will be Seiji Ozawa, who is Tanglewood Artistic Director; William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, who will conduct four concerts (two all-Brahms programs and two all-Beethoven programs); and associate conductor Thomas, whose first concert July 4 features Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, as soloist in Vivaldi's "The Seasons," and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus in Monteverdi's Music from "The Vespers of 1610."

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy (who will conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood August 7 when the Boston Symphony is performing at the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs), and Arthur Fiedler, who will conduct the annual Boston Pops program.

FOR THOMAS' second program July 10 the soloist will be Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony, in the Haydn Cello Concerto in C. Other works on the program are Bach's Suite No. 4 and Brahms's Serenade No. 2.

Thomas's final program at Tanglewood August 21 will feature Alexis Weissenberg in a performance of Ravel's Piano Concerto in G. The program will include Copland's "Appalachian Spring" and Carl Nielsen's Symphony No. 5.

The Tanglewood season closes the following day with a performance of Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust" directed by Seiji Ozawa.

Courier EXPRESS
BUFFALO
Western New York's Greatest Newspaper
D. 154,165 SUN. 311,112

APR 4 1971

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(E) 30,100

MAR 27 1971

New England Newsclip

'71 Tanglewood Season Is Announced

The 1971 Tanglewood season will open on Friday, July 2, at 8 p.m. with an all-Bach program by the Boston Symphony conducted by Seiji Ozawa. The Prelude concert will begin at 7 that evening with a performance by the Boston Symphony String Trio.

The full program schedule plus conductors, soloists and choirs are listed below. Saturday night concerts will begin at 8:30 p.m. this year instead of 8 p.m. as in the past few years. The program is subject to change during the season. Further details may be obtained by writing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

FIRST WEEKEND

Friday, July 2
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Boston Symphony String Trio
9 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
J. C. Bach: Grand overture op. 18
J. S. Bach: Brandenburg concerto no. 6.
J. S. Bach: Magnificat
Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum, David Clatworthy, Tanglewood Festival Chorus

Saturday, July 3
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Mozart: Serenade for winds K.388
Bernstein: Serenade for violin
Joseph Silverstein
Berio: Serenade for flute
Doriot Anthony Dwyer
Tchaikovsky: Serenade for strings

Sunday, July 4
2:30 p.m. MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Vivaldi: The Seasons
Joseph Silverstein
Monteverdi: Music from "The Vespers of 1610"
Tanglewood Festival Chorus

SECOND WEEKEND

Friday, July 9
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Earl Wild
9 p.m. LEON FLEISHER
Bartok: Romanian folk dances
Hindemith: Four Temperaments
Ruth Laredo
Mozart: Divertimento K.287

Saturday, July 10
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Bach: Suite no. 4
Haydn: Cello concerto in C
Jules Eskin
Brahms: Serenade no. 2

Sunday, July 11
2:30 p.m. BRUNO MADERNA
Schubert: Symphony no. 2
Schoenberg: Chamber Symphony op. 9b
Chopin: Piano concerto no. 2
Earl Wild

THIRD WEEKEND

Friday, July 16
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Boston Symphony Chamber Players
9 p.m. WILLIAM STEINBERG
Brahms Program
Tragic overture
Piano concerto no. 2
Vladimir Ashkenazy
Symphony no. 2

Saturday, July 17
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
3:30 p.m. WILLIAM STEINBERG
Brahms Program
Academic Festival overture
Concerto for violin and cello
Pinchas Zukerman, Zara Nelsova
Symphony no. 4

Sunday, July 18
2:30 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Mozart: Marriage of Figaro overture
Mozart: Piano concerto K.595
Vladimir Ashkenazy
Brahms: Alto rhapsody
Maureen Forrester
Brahms: Haydn variations

FOURTH WEEKEND

Friday, July 23
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Sherrill Milnes
9 p.m. WILLIAM STEINBERG
Beethoven Program
Leonore overture no. 3
Violin concerto
Itzhak Perlman
Symphony no. 5

Saturday, July 24
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. WILLIAM STEINBERG
Beethoven Program
"King Stephen" overture
Symphony no. 3 "Eroica"
Symphony no. 7

Sunday, July 25
2:30 p.m. LEONARD BERNSTEIN
Beethoven Program
Missa Solemnis
Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes, Tanglewood Festival Chorus
In memory of Serge Koussevitzky

FIFTH WEEKEND

Friday, July 30
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Berkshire Boy Choir
9 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Haydn: Symphony no. 96 "Miracle"
Prokofiev: Piano concerto no. 3
Byron Janis
Takemitsu: New work for percussion and orchestra
Stomu Yamash'ta

Saturday, July 31
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. EUGENE ORMANDY
Strauss: Don Juan
Penderecki: To the victims of Hiroshima
Ravel: "Daphnis and Chloe" suite no 2
Brahms: Symphony no. 1

Sunday, Aug. 1
2:30 p.m. DANIEL BARENBOIM
Schubert: "Rosamunde" overture
Lalo: Symphonie espagnole
Pinchas Zukerman
Tchaikovsky: Symphony no. 4

SIXTH WEEKEND

Friday, Aug. 6
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Phyllis Curtin
9 p.m. COLIN DAVIS
Elgar: Introduction and Allegro
Wood: Cello concerto
Zara Nelsova
Dvorak: Symphony no. 2

Saturday, Aug. 7
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. The Philadelphia Orchestra
EUGENE ORMANDY
Bartok: Two portraits op. 5
Debussy: La mer
Prokofiev: Symphony no. 5

Sunday, Aug. 8
2:30 p.m. COLIN DAVIS
Mozart Program
Kyrie K.341
Piano concerto K.503
Stephen Bishop
Requiem
Benita Valente, Beverly Wolff, Kenneth Riegel, Robert Hale, Tanglewood Festival Chorus

SEVENTH WEEKEND

Friday, Aug. 13
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Christoph Eschenbach
8 p.m. COLIN DAVIS
Tippett: Symphony no. 2
Elgar: Symphony no. 1

Saturday, Aug. 14
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. COLIN DAVIS
Mozart: Symphony no. 39
Mahler: Symphony no. 4
Judith Raskin

Sunday, Aug. 15
2:30 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Xenakis: Polla Ta Dhina
Beethoven: Piano concerto no. 1
Christoph Eschenbach
Tchaikovsky: Symphony no. 6 "Pathetique"

EIGHTH WEEKEND

Friday, Aug. 20
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Alexis Weissenberg
9 p.m. BRUNO MADERNA
Mozart: Symphony no. 29
Maderna: Grande Aulodia
American Premiere
Rachmaninov: Piano concerto no. 3
Garrick Ohlsson

Saturday, Aug. 21
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Copland: Appalachian Spring
Ravel: Piano concerto in G
Alexis Weissenberg
Nielsen: Symphony no. 5

Sunday, Aug. 22
2:30 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Berlioz: Damnation of Faust
Lois Marshall, John Alexander, Ezio Flagello, Tanglewood Festival Chorus

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(E) 85,055

MAR 23 1971

New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Orchestra Lists Tanglewood Programs

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open July 2 at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa.

Ozawa will conduct two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, July 4, will be conducted by the orchestra's associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct four concerts this summer: Two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Steinberg will also conduct on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival will be Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops - at - Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra will include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists will be Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists will include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival will be John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard will be the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed will be Bach's Magnificat, conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Colin Davis.

The Festival will close Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz', Damnation of Faust, conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

REFORMER
BRATTLEBORO, VERMONT
(E) 8,700

MAR 26 1971

New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival Concerts Announced

BOSTON — The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox opens Friday evening, July 2, with a concert conducted by Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the festival. The third, Sunday, July 4, is conducted by the orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24.)

Mr. Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7, when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra, and percussionist Stomu Yamash-ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's Magnificat, conducted by Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Ozawa.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
(E) 30,100

MAR 27 1971

New England Newsclip

'71 Tanglewood Season Is Announced

The 1971 Tanglewood season will open on Friday, July 2, at 8 p.m. with an all-Bach program by the Boston Symphony conducted by Seiji Ozawa. The Prelude concert will begin at 7 that evening with a performance by the Boston Symphony String Trio.

The full program schedule plus conductors, soloists and choirs are listed below. Saturday night concerts will begin at 8:30 p.m. this year instead of 8 p.m. as in the past few years. The program is subject to change during the season. Further details may be obtained by writing the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Symphony Hall, Boston, Mass. 02115.

FIRST WEEKEND

Friday, July 2
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Boston Symphony String Trio
9 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
J. C. Bach: Grand overture op. 18
J. S. Bach: Brandenburg concerto no. 6.
J. S. Bach: Magnificat
Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum, David Clatworthy, Tanglewood Festival Chorus

Saturday, July 3
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Mozart: Serenade for winds K.388
Bernstein: Serenade for violin
Joseph Silverstein
Berio: Serenade for flute
Doriot Anthony Dwyer
Tchaikovsky: Serenade for strings

Sunday, July 4
2:30 p.m. MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Vivaldi: The Seasons
Joseph Silverstein
Monteverdi: Music from "The Vespers of 1610"
Tanglewood Festival Chorus

SECOND WEEKEND

Friday, July 9
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Earl Wild
9 p.m. LEON FLEISHER
Bartok: Romanian folk dances
Hindemith: Four Temperaments
Ruth Laredo
Mozart: Divertimento K.287

Saturday, July 10
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Bach: Suite no. 4
Haydn: Cello concerto in C
Jules Eskin
Brahms: Serenade no. 2

Sunday, July 11
2:30 p.m. BRUNO MADERNA
Schubert: Symphony no. 2
Schoenberg: Chamber Symphony op. 9b
Chopin: Piano concerto no. 2
Earl Wild

THIRD WEEKEND

Friday, July 16
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Boston Symphony Chamber Players
9 p.m. WILLIAM STEINBERG
Brahms Program
Tragic overture
Piano concerto no. 2
Vladimir Ashkenazy
Symphony no. 2

Saturday, July 17
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
3:30 p.m. WILLIAM STEINBERG
Brahms Program
Academic Festival overture
Concerto for violin and cello
Pinchas Zukerman, Zara Nelsova
Symphony no. 4

Sunday, July 18
2:30 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Mozart: Marriage of Figaro overture
Mozart: Piano concerto K.595
Vladimir Ashkenazy
Brahms: Alto rhapsody
Maureen Forrester
Brahms: Haydn variations

FOURTH WEEKEND

Friday, July 23
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Sherrill Milnes
9 p.m. WILLIAM STEINBERG
Beethoven Program
Leonore overture no. 3
Violin concerto
Itzhak Perlman
Symphony no. 5

Saturday, July 24
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. WILLIAM STEINBERG
Beethoven Program
"King Stephen" overture
Symphony no. 3 "Eroica"
Symphony no. 7

Sunday, July 25
2:30 p.m. LEONARD BERNSTEIN
Beethoven Program
Missa Solemnis
Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes, Tanglewood Festival Chorus
In memory of Serge Koussevitzky

FIFTH WEEKEND

Friday, July 30
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Berkshire Boy Choir
9 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Haydn: Symphony no. 96 "Miracle"
Prokofiev: Piano concerto no. 3
Byron Janis
Takemitsu: New work for percussion and orchestra
Stomu Yamash'ta

Saturday, July 31
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. EUGENE ORMANDY
Strauss: Don Juan
Penderecki: To the victims of Hiroshima
Ravel: "Daphnis and Chloe" suite no 2
Brahms: Symphony no. 1

Sunday, Aug. 1
2:30 p.m. DANIEL BARENBOIM
Schubert: "Rosamunde" overture
Lalo: Symphonie espagnole
Pinchas Zukerman
Tchaikovsky: Symphony no. 4

SIXTH WEEKEND

Friday, Aug. 6
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Phyllis Curtin
9 p.m. COLIN DAVIS
Elgar: Introduction and Allegro
Wood: Cello concerto
Zara Nelsova
Dvorak: Symphony no. 2

Saturday, Aug. 7
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. The Philadelphia Orchestra
EUGENE ORMANDY
Bartok: Two portraits op. 5
Debussy: La mer
Prokofiev: Symphony no. 5

Sunday, Aug. 8
2:30 p.m. COLIN DAVIS
Mozart Program
Kyrie K.341
Piano concerto K.503
Stephen Bishop
Requiem
Benita Valente, Beverly Wolff, Kenneth Riegel, Robert Hale, Tanglewood Festival Chorus

SEVENTH WEEKEND

Friday, Aug. 13
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Christoph Eschenbach
8 p.m. COLIN DAVIS
Tippett: Symphony no. 2
Elgar: Symphony no. 1

Saturday, Aug. 14
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. COLIN DAVIS
Mozart: Symphony no. 39
Mahler: Symphony no. 4
Judith Raskin

Sunday, Aug. 15
2:30 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Xenakis: Polla Ta Dhina
Beethoven: Piano concerto no. 1
Christoph Eschenbach
Tchaikovsky: Symphony no. 6 "Pathetique"

EIGHTH WEEKEND

Friday, Aug. 20
7 p.m. Weekend Prelude
Alexis Weissenberg
9 p.m. BRUNO MADERNA
Mozart: Symphony no. 29
Maderna: Grande Aulodia
American Premiere
Rachmaninov: Piano concerto no. 3
Garrick Ohlsson

Saturday, Aug. 21
10:30 a.m. Open Rehearsal
8:30 p.m. MICHAEL TILSON THOMAS
Copland: Appalachian Spring
Ravel: Piano concerto in G
Alexis Weissenberg
Nielsen: Symphony no. 5

Sunday, Aug. 22
2:30 p.m. SEIJI OZAWA
Berlioz: Damnation of Faust
Lois Marshall, John Alexander, Ezio Flagello, Tanglewood Festival Chorus

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
(E) 85,055

MAR 23 1971

New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Orchestra Lists Tanglewood Programs

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will open July 2 at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa.

Ozawa will conduct two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, July 4, will be conducted by the orchestra's associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct four concerts this summer: Two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Steinberg will also conduct on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival will be Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops - at - Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra will include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists will be Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists will include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival will be John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard will be the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed will be Bach's Magnificat, conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Colin Davis.

The Festival will close Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

REFORMER
BRATTLEBORO, VERMONT
(E) 8,700

MAR 26 1971

New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival Concerts Announced

BOSTON — The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox opens Friday evening, July 2, with a concert conducted by Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the festival. The third, Sunday, July 4, is conducted by the orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24.)

Mr. Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7, when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra, and percussionist Stomu Yamash-ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's Magnificat, conducted by Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Ozawa.

18

Star-studded summer program at Tanglewood

BOSTON, Mass. — The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday July 2, 1971 at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa.

Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, Music Director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, New York. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Tuesday Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's "Magnificat," conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The "Vespers of 1610," conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's "Kyrie" and "Requiem," conducted by Colin Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," conducted by Ozawa.

BANNER
BENNINGTON, VERMONT
(E) 6,200
MAR 23 1971
New England Newsclip

EAGLE-TRIBUNE
LAWRENCE, MASS.
(M&E) 45,050
MAR 25 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Announces Program, Conductors, Soloists for Season

The 1971 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will open Friday, July 2, at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by artistic director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa also will conduct the second concert of the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4, will be directed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra's associate conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct four concerts this summer: Two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Mr. Steinberg will also conduct Aug. 7, when the BSO travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This will be the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the season are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna and Arthur Fiedler, who will conduct the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra will include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the BSO; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the orchestra; and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival will be John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's "Magnificat," conducted by Mr. Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from "The Vespers of 1610," conducted by Mr. Thomas; Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," conducted by Mr. Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's "Kyrie" and "Requiem," conducted by Mr. Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," conducted by Ozawa.

COURANT
HARTFORD, CONN.
152,525 (M)
MAR 28 1971
New England Newsclip

T. H. Parker —

Tanglewood 1971

It's not the horns of elfland that you hear faintly blowing right now, but the Boston Symphony Orchestra lining up another summer for the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Massachusetts.

The 1971 season will open Friday evening, July 2, with a concert conducted by Tanglewood's artistic director, Seiji Ozawa.

Mr. Ozawa will take two concerts on the first weekend of the festival. The third, July 4, will be presented by the orchestra's associate conductor, Michael Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct four concerts. These include two all-Brahms programs on July 16 and 17, and two all-Beethoven on July 23 and 24.

Mr. Steinberg also conducts on August 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga, New York, Center for the Performing Arts. The same evening Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the Berkshire Festival will be Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, and Arthur Fiedler who leads the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood on Tuesday, August 3.

Pianists who will appear at Tanglewood are Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg, and Earl Wild.

The violin soloists will be Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein who is concertmaster of the Boston, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other solo instrumentalists are cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal with the BSO; flutist Doriot Dwyer, also a principal of the orchestra; and precussionist Stomi Yamash'ta.

Singers will be John Alexander, Carol Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylot, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Principal programs for the festival are:

July 2, (Ozawa) — Bach, Grand Overture, Brandenburg Concerto No. 6, Magnificat.

July 3 (Ozawa) — Mozart, Serenade for Winds; Bernstein, Serenade for Violin; Berio, Serenade for Flute.

July 4 (Thomas) — Vivaldi, "The Seasons"; Monteverdi, music from The Vespers of 1610.

July 9 (Fleisher) — Bartok, Romanian Folk Dances; Hindemith, "Four Temperaments"; Mozart, Divertimento K287.

July 10 (Thomas) — Bach, Suite No. 4; Haydn, 'Cello Concerto (Eskin); Brahms, Serenade No. 2.

July 11 (Maderna) — Schubert, Symphony No. 2; Schoenberg, Chamber Symphony; Chopin, Piano Concerto No. 2 (Wild).

July 16 (Steinberg) — Brahms "Tragic" Overture, Piano Concerto No. 2 (Ashkenazy), Symphony No. 2.

July 17 (Steinberg) — Brahms, "Academic Festival" Overture, Concerto for Violin and 'Cello (Zukerman, Nelsova), Symphony No. 4.

July 18 (Ozawa) — Mozart, "Marriage of Figaro" Overture, Piano Concerto K595 (Ashkenazy); Brahms, Alto Rhapsody (Forrester), Haydn Variations.

July 23 (Steinberg) — Beethoven "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Violin Concerto (Perlman), Symphony No. 5.

July 24 (Steinberg) — Beethoven "King Stephen" Overture, Symphonies Nos. 3 and 7.

July 25 (Bernstein) — Beethoven, Missa Solemnis.

July 30 (Ozawa) — Haydn, Symphony No. 96; Prokofiev, Piano Concerto No. 3 (Janis); Takemitsu, new work or Orchestra and Percussion (Yamash'ta).

July 31 (Ormandy) — Strauss, "Don Juan"; Penderecki, "To the Victims of Hiroshima"; Ravel, "Daphnis and Chloe" Suite No. 2; Brahms, Symphony No. 1.

August 1 (Barenboim) — Schubert, "Rosamunde" Overture; Lalo, Symphonie Espagnole (Zukerman); Tschaikowsky, Symphony No. 4.

August 6 (Davis) — Elgar, Introduction and Allegro; Wood, 'Cello Concerto (Nelsova); Dvorak, Symphony No. 2.

August 7 (Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra) — Bartok, Two Portraits; Debussy, "La Mer"; Prokofiev, Symphony No. 5.

August 8 (Davis) — Mozart Kyrie, Piano Concerto K503 (Bishop), Requiem.

August 13 (Davis) — Tippett, Symphony No. 2; Elgar, Symphony No. 1.

August 14 (Davis) — Mozart, Symphony No. 39; Mahler, Symphony No. 4 (Raskin).

August 15 (Ozawa) — Zenakis, "Polla Ta Dhina"; Beethoven, Piano Concerto No. 1; Tschaikowsky, Symphony No. 6.

August 20 (Maderna) — Mozart, Symphony No. 29; Maderna, Grand Aulodia; Rachmaninoff, Piano Concerto No. 3 (Ohlsson).

August 21 (Thomas) — Copland, "Appalachian Spring"; Ravel, Piano Concerto in G; Weissenberg); Nielsen, Symphony No. 5.

August 22 (Ozawa) — Berlioz, "Damnation of Faust" (Marshall, Alexander Flagello).

AMERICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
(E) 42,315
MAR 25 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Season To Open July 2

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens July 2 at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the festival. The third, July 4 is conducted by the orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: Two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Ormandy Billed

Steinberg also conducts Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934

MAR 26 1971

Berkshire Festival Season Opens July 2

Highlights of the 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were announced yesterday.

* * *

The season opens July 2 with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the festival, with the third, July 4, under the baton of the orchestra's associate conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs, July 16 and 17, and two all-Beethoven programs, July 23 and 24.

Steinberg also conducts Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Performing Arts Center. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlasson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the orchestra and percussionist Stomi Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's "Magnificat," conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Colin Davis.

* * *

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 3,650

MAR 25 1971

New England Newsclip

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

MAR 23 1971

Berkshire Festival To Open July 2

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Mr. Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Loredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist, in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's Magnificat, conducted by Mr. Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Mr. Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemis, conducted by Mr. Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Mr. Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

Tanglewood Announces Summer Schedule

LENOX — The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, Music Director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Mr. Steinberg also conducts when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N. Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra, and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir. The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's "Magnificat," conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from "The Vespers of 1610," conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's "Kyrie" and "Requiem," conducted by Colin Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

MAR 28 1971

1971 Berkshire Festival Scheduled To Open July 2

BOSTON, MASS.— The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox Mass. summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, Music Director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tantlewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops - at - Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Performing Artists

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis, Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934

MAR 26 1971

Berkshire Festival Season Opens July 2

Highlights of the 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, were announced yesterday.

* * *

The season opens July 2 with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the festival, with the third, July 4, under the baton of the orchestra's associate conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs, July 16 and 17, and two all-Beethoven programs, July 23 and 24.

Steinberg also conducts Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Performing Arts Center. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlasson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the orchestra and percussionist Stomi Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's "Magnificat," conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Colin Davis.

* * *

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GT. BARRINGTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 3,650

MAR 25 1971

New England Newsclip

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

MAR 23 1971

Berkshire Festival To Open July 2

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Mr. Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Loredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist, in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's Magnificat, conducted by Mr. Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Mr. Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemis, conducted by Mr. Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Mr. Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

Tanglewood Announces Summer Schedule

LENOX — The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, Music Director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Mr. Steinberg also conducts when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N. Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra, and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir. The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's "Magnificat," conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from "The Vespers of 1610," conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's "Kyrie" and "Requiem," conducted by Colin Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

MAR 28 1971

1971 Berkshire Festival Scheduled To Open July 2

BOSTON, MASS.— The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox Mass. summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, Music Director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tantlewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops - at - Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Performing Artists

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis, Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

20

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

APR 1 1971

New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Berkshire Festival Conductors and Guest Artists Noted

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, Music Director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Mr. Steinberg also conducts on August 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, New York. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Piano soloists include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers will include John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works will include Bach's Magnificat, conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, in memory of Serge Koussevitzky and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Colin Davis.

The Festival closes August 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

TIMES
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
D. 11,000

JUN 26 1971

New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, open July 2 to Aug. 22. Tanglewood in Lenox, is an estate of 210 acres in the Berkshire Hills, given to the Boston Symphony Ochestra in the 30s. Nathaniel Hawthorne lived on the grounds and wrote that he could barely work in the presence of such scenic beauty. Today it is nearly unchanged. Tanglewood can be reached via the Mass. pike to either Exit 1 or 2; routes well marked from there.

– Prices range from $8.50 for box seats to $3.50 in the rear of the shed, which is still very enjoyable listening. Admission to the lawn is $3. Tickets on sale two hours before the concert. Make checks payable to Boston Symphony Ochestra, Inc. Send self addressed envelope to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (413) 637-1600.

– First weekend, July 2: weekend Prelude at 7 with the Boston Symphony String Trio. At 9, Seiji Ozawa will conduct the ochestra in a Bach program featuring "Grand Overture op 18 no. 4"; "Brandenburg Concerto no. 6"; and "Magnificat." The Tanglewood Festival Chorus will participate.

– July 3: open rehearsal at 10:30 in the shed; seats unreserved at a cost of $2.50. This offers a relaxed look at the conductor, orchestra and soloists. At 8:30, Seiji Osawa will conduct Mozart, "Serenade for Winds K.388," and Bernstein: "Serenade for Violin."

– July 4: Michael Tilson Thomas at 2:30 will conduct Vivaldi: "The Seasons," and music from "The Vespers of 1610."

–July 9: Weekend Prelude at 7 with Earl Wild; Leon Fleisher will conduct Bartok: "Romanian Folk Dances"; Hindemith: "Four Temperaments" and Mozart: "Divertimento K. 287." Ruth Loredo, pianist.

–July 10: Open rehearsal at 10.30; Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct Bach: "Suite No. 4"; Haydn: "Cello Concerto in C" with Jules Eskin; and Brahms: "Serenade No. 2."

–July 11: Bruno Maderna will conduct at 2.30, Schubert: "Symphony No. 2"; Schoenberg: "Chamber Symphony op. 96"; and Chopin: "Piano Concerto no. 2" with Earl Wild, pianist.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 24,000

MAY 8 1971

Ozawa Leads July 2 Opener At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass.—The eight-week Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opens here July 2, with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony and Tanglewood Festival Chorus after a prelude by the Boston Symphony String Trio. Soloists for the concert are Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum and David Clatworthy.

Instrumental soloists during the season, which runs through Aug. 22, include violinists Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, and Pinchas Zukerman; cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin; pianists Vladimir Ashkenazy, Christoph Eschenbach, Earl Wild, Byron Janis, Alexis Weissenberg, Ruth Laredo and Stephen Bishop, and flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer.

Other vocal soloists will be Maureen Forrester, Judith Raskin, Lois Marshall, John Alexander, Ezio Flagello, Phyllis Curtin, Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran and Sherrill Milnes.

Also conducting during the Boston's summer season are music director William Steinberg, associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Eugene Ormandy, Bruno Maderna and Leon Fleisher.

SUBURBAN PRESS
NATICK, MASS.
WEEKLY

JUN 10 1971

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens July 2 at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the festival. The third, Sunday, July 4, is conducted by the orchestra's associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Steinberg also conducts on August 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Taemitsu.

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 251,094

MAY 23 1971

Boston festival concerts slated

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday, July 2 at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4, is conducted by the Orchestra's associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms, July 16 and 17, and two all-Beethoven programs, July 23 and 24.

New York Concert

Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, New York. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Felisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Tuesday Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itshak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Taemitsu.

Featured Singers

Singers performing are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrestor, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Louis Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir. The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's "Magnificat," conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from "The Vespers of 1610," conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's "Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Colin Davis.

The festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144

JUN 15 1971

Seiji Osawa to Open Tanglewood Season

LENOX, Mass. — The eight-week Tanglewood season will open Friday, July 2, with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program.

Variety might be the word to use to describe the season in general: In conductors, soloists and program.

Conductors, in addition to Ozawa, will be: William Seinberg, music director of the Boston and Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestras, Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Arthur Fiedler, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna Eugene Ormandy and Michael Tilson Thomas.

Pianists: Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Byron Janis, Christoph Tschenbach, Ruth Laredo, Alexis Weissenberg, and Earl Wild.

Violinists: Itzhak Perlman Joseph Silverstein, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Cellists: Jules Eskin and Zara Nelsova.

Singers: John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin Kenneth Riegel Arlene Saunders Rose Taylor Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Flute: Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Percussionist: Stomu Yamash'ta.

The Tangelwood season runs from July 2 to Aug. 22. The symphony plays Friday nights at 9, with a weekend prelude at 7; Saturday nights at 8:30, and Sunday afternoons at 2:30. Open rehearsals are held Saturday mornings at 10:30.

The Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be held Aug. 3. Mr. Bernstein will conduct Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky Sunday, July 25.

Tickets are $3.50, $4.50, $5, $6, $7, $7.50 and $8 and $8.50 and are available at all Ticketron outlets.

20

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
WEEKLY 24,000

APR 1 1971

New England Newsclip

Boston Symphony Berkshire Festival Conductors and Guest Artists Noted

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, Music Director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Mr. Steinberg also conducts on August 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, New York. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Piano soloists include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers will include John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works will include Bach's Magnificat, conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, conducted by Leonard Bernstein, in memory of Serge Koussevitzky and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Colin Davis.

The Festival closes August 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

TIMES
GLOUCESTER, MASS.
D. 11,000

JUN 26 1971

New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD, the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, open July 2 to Aug. 22. Tanglewood in Lenox, is an estate of 210 acres in the Berkshire Hills, given to the Boston Symphony Ochestra in the 30s. Nathaniel Hawthorne lived on the grounds and wrote that he could barely work in the presence of such scenic beauty. Today it is nearly unchanged. Tanglewood can be reached via the Mass. pike to either Exit 1 or 2; routes well marked from there.

– Prices range from $8.50 for box seats to $3.50 in the rear of the shed, which is still very enjoyable listening. Admission to the lawn is $3. Tickets on sale two hours before the concert. Make checks payable to Boston Symphony Ochestra, Inc. Send self addressed envelope to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. 01240. (413) 637-1600.

– First weekend, July 2: weekend Prelude at 7 with the Boston Symphony String Trio. At 9, Seiji Ozawa will conduct the ochestra in a Bach program featuring "Grand Overture op 18 no. 4"; "Brandenburg Concerto no. 6"; and "Magnificat." The Tanglewood Festival Chorus will participate:

– July 3: open rehearsal at 10:30 in the shed; seats unreserved at a cost of $2.50. This offers a relaxed look at the conductor, orchestra and soloists. At 8:30, Seiji Osawa will conduct Mozart, "Serenade for Winds K.388," and Bernstein: "Serenade for Violin."

– July 4: Michael Tilson Thomas at 2:30 will conduct Vivaldi: "The Seasons," and music from "The Vespers of 1610."

–July 9: Weekend Prelude at 7 with Earl Wild; Leon Fleisher will conduct Bartok: "Romanian Folk Dances"; Hindemith: "Four Temperaments" and Mozart: "Divertimento K. 287." Ruth Loredo, pianist.

–July 10: Open rehearsal at 10.30; Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct Bach: "Suite No. 4"; Haydn: "Cello Concerto in C" with Jules Eskin; and Brahms: "Serenade No. 2."

–July 11: Bruno Maderna will conduct at 2.30, Schubert: "Symphony No. 2"; Schoenberg: "Chamber Symphony op. 96"; and Chopin: "Piano Concerto no. 2" with Earl Wild, pianist.

BILLBOARD
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 24,000

MAY 8 1971

Ozawa Leads July 2 Opener At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass.—The eight-week Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opens here July 2, with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony and Tanglewood Festival Chorus after a prelude by the Boston Symphony String Trio. Soloists for the concert are Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum and David Clatworthy.

Instrumental soloists during the season, which runs through Aug. 22, include violinists Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, and Pinchas Zukerman; cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin; pianists Vladimir Ashkenazy, Christoph Eschenbach, Earl Wild, Byron Janis, Alexis Weissenberg, Ruth Laredo and Stephen Bishop, and flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer.

Other vocal soloists will be Maureen Forrester, Judith Raskin, Lois Marshall, John Alexander, Ezio Flagello, Phyllis Curtin, Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran and Sherrill Milnes.

Also conducting during the Boston's summer season are music director William Steinberg, associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Eugene Ormandy, Bruno Maderna and Leon Fleisher.

SUBURBAN PRESS
NATICK, MASS.
WEEKLY

JUN 10 1971

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens July 2 at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the festival. The third, Sunday, July 4, is conducted by the orchestra's associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Steinberg also conducts on August 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Taemitsu.

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 251,091

MAY 23 1971

Boston festival concerts slated

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday, July 2 at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4, is conducted by the Orchestra's associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms, July 16 and 17, and two all-Beethoven programs, July 23 and 24.

New York Concert

Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, New York. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Felisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Tuesday Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itshak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Taemitsu.

Featured Singers

Singers performing are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrestor, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Louis Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir. The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Synphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's "Magnificat," conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from "The Vespers of 1610," conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's "Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Colin Davis.

The festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144

JUN 15 1971

Seiji Osawa to Open Tanglewood Season

LENOX, Mass. — The eight-week Tanglewood season will open Friday, July 2, with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an all-Bach program.

Variety might be the word to use to describe the season in general: In conductors, soloists and program.

Conductors, in addition to Ozawa, will be: William Seinberg, music director of the Boston and Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestras, Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Arthur Fiedler, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna Eugene Ormandy and Michael Tilson Thomas.

Pianists: Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Byron Janis, Christoph Tschenbach, Ruth Laredo, Alexis Weissenberg, and Earl Wild.

Violinists: Itzhak Perlman Joseph Silverstein, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Cellists: Jules Eskin and Zara Nelsova.

Singers: John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin Kenneth Riegel Arlene Saunders Rose Taylor Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Flute: Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Percussionist: Stomu Yamash'ta.

The Tanglewood season runs from July 2 to Aug. 22. The symphony plays Friday nights at 9, with a weekend prelude at 7; Saturday nights at 8:30, and Sunday afternoons at 2:30. Open rehearsals are held Saturday mornings at 10:30.

The Boston Pops at Tanglewood will be held Aug. 3. Mr. Bernstein will conduct Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky Sunday, July 25.

Tickets are $3.50, $4.50, $5, $6, $7, $7.50 and $8 and $8.50 and are available at all Ticketron outlets.

SUN
LOWELL, MASS.
D. 49,250

JUN 20 1971 New England Newsclip

1971 Tanglewood Music Festival is 37 years old

By ALFRED W. BURKE
Sun Music Critic

Music

LOWELL — The 1971 Tanglewood Season will officially open Sunday, June 27. Appropriate exercises will usher the 37th season of what is one of the most famous musical festivals in the world.

The public is cordially invited to the opening exercises and the reception that will follow.

Founded in 1934, the Berkshire Music Festival which is held on eight weekends features the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The concerts by the orchestra will be held in the famed Music Shed which this year is resplendent with new seats. The seating is in continental arrangement. This creates better visibility. All of this will be welcome news to the thousands who visit the Festival each year.

This season the programs will officially open on Friday evening, July 2. Saiji Ozawa will conduct the program. It will be the first of a list of 23.

Maestro Seiji Ozawa is music director of the San Francisco symphony. He has appeared with the Boston Symphony as guest conductor. At the Berkshire Festival he will join Gunther Schuller, president of the New England Conservatory of Music and composer-conductor, as artistic director of the Tanglewood season.

LEONARD BERNSTEIN, conductor laureate of the New York Philharmonic will be an advisor for the Festival. William Steinberg is music director of the Berkshire Festival, and his associate will be Michael Tilson Thomas who is also associate for the Boston Symphony and the newly appointed director of the Buffalo Philharmonic.

A major activity at Tanglewood is the Berkshire Music Center which is the Orchestra's summer school for the advanced study of music. Gifted young musicians from this country as well as several foreign countries gather at the music center each summer for a concentrated eight week session. During the season the students as well as faculty members give Concerts for the public. These are held daily.

Aside from the full Boston Symphony there are concerts of chamber, choral and vocal music. There are composers forums. These programs are announced well before time.

The event that creates a great deal of interest is the Festival of Contemporary Music. This is sponsored by the Berkshire Music Center in cooperation with the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago. It is often called a "Festival - within - a - festival." This affair turns Tanglewood into the contemporary music capital of the World. Some of the music heard during this part of the Berkshire Festival is commissioned, and some of the programs offer world premieres.

Between concerts those who travel to Lenox have a wonderful opportunity to enjoy a wealth of scenic as well as historic sites. There are other performing groups and center in the the area. Among them are the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival, the Berkshire Theatre Festival in Stockbridge; the Clark Art Museum in Williamstown, the Berkshire Museum and the Hancock Shaker Village.

LEONARD BERNSTEIN

THE TANGLEWOOD Festival Chorus will appear in the programs of July 2,4 and 25; Aug. 8 and 22. The Berkshire Boy Choir will perform on July 30.

Chamber ensembles will include the Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio. The Chamber Players will perform on July 16, and the String Trio on July 2.

For the opening concert which will be July 2 at 7 p.m., will be an all Bach program. The soloists will be Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum and David Clatworthy. The program is as follows: J.C. Bach-Grand Overture Op. 18 No. 4. J.S. Bach-Brandenburg Concerto No. 6, and Magnificat.

Saturday morning July 3, there will be an open rehearsal. In the evening the program as announced will include, Mozart's Serenade for Winds K 388; Berstein's Serenade for Violin and Berio's Serenade for Flute. The soloists will be violinist, Joseph Silverstein and the flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Closing the program will be Tchaikovsky's Serenade for Strings.

Berkshire Festival To Open July 2

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, at 9 p.m. with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Mr. Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival. The third, Sunday, July 4 is conducted by the Orchestra's Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Mr. Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs. The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors for the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the Orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Loredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the Orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist, in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's Magnificat, conducted by Mr. Ozawa; Monteverdi's Music from The Vespers of 1610, conducted by Mr. Thomas; Beethoven's Missa Solemis, conducted by Mr. Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's Kyrie and Requiem, conducted by Mr. Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' Damnation of Faust, conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

MAR 23 1971

Berkshire Tanglewood Festival
Lenox, Mass.

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, opens Friday evening, July 2, at 9 p.m., with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa.

Ozawa conducts two concerts the first weekend of the Festival.

The third, Sunday, July 4, is conducted by the orchestra's associate conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, conducts four concerts this summer: two all-Brahms' programs (July 16 and 17) and two all-Beethoven programs (July 23 and 24).

Steinberg also conducts on Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

The same evening, Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Orchestra at Tanglewood. This is the first time that two major summer festivals have exchanged concerts.

Other conductors or the 1971 Berkshire Festival are Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy, and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert on Tuesday, Aug. 3.

Pianists performing with the orchestra include Vladimir Ashkenazy, Stephen Bishop, Christoph Eschenbach, Byron Janis, Ruth Laredo, Garrick Ohlsson, Alexis Weissenberg and Earl Wild.

Violinists are Itzhak Perlman, Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Pinchas Zukerman.

Other instrumental soloists include cellists Zara Nelsova and Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Sympohny; flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, also a principal of the orchestra and percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta, soloist in a new composition by Takemitsu.

Singers performing at the Festival are John Alexander, Carole Bogard, David Clatworthy, William Cochran, Phyllis Curtin, Ezio Flagello, Maureen Forrester, Robert Hale, Florence Kopleff, Lois Marshall, Sherrill Milnes, John McCollum, Judith Raskin, Kenneth Riegel, Arlene Saunders, Rose Taylor, Benita Valente, and Beverly Wolff.

Choruses to be heard are the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony String Trio will also give performances.

Major choral works to be performed this summer are Bach's "Magnificat," conducted by Seiji Ozawa; Monteverdi's "Music from the Vespers of 1610," conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas; Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; and Mozart's "Kyrie" and "Requiem," conducted by Colin Davis.

The Festival closes Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," conducted by Seiji Ozawa.

GAZETTE
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 97,539

JUN 29 1971 New England Newsclip

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 132,687

JUN 6 1971 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Concerts to Start Friday

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — The 1971 Tanglewood summer season began Sunday with the opening exercises of Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's eight-week academy for the advanced study of music. Several hundred students from throughout the world will receive the inspiration of group efforts and individual instruction. Admission to student concerts and recitals is open to those who make modest contributions to the Friends of Music fund.

The Boston Symphony's public concerts begin Friday and continue until Aug. 22. The typical format is illustrated by events this weekend. Friday at 7 p.m. ticketholders for the evening's major concert receive a bonus in the Weekend Prelude, this week by the Boston Symphony's String Trio assisted by harpsichord. The Friday concert at 9 p.m., conducted by Tanglewod Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa, presents an ensemble of about fifty top players of the Symphony, the others being in Boston for the second week of Esplanade Concerts. A Bach program includes Johann Christian Bach's "Grand Overture in 'D'" and Johann Sebastian Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and "Magnificat," featuring soprano Carole Bogard, alto Rose Taylor, tenor John McCollum and bass David Clatworthy, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, conductor.

Seiji Ozawa

The orchestra's open rehearsal is at 10:30 a.m. Saturday. Unreserved seats in the Music Shed cost $2.50 each.

On Saturday night in the Shed, Ozawa conducts a program of music by Mozart, Bernstein, Berio and Tchaikovsky for interesting chamber groups, featuring Joseph Silverstein, concert master, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flutist.

At 2:30 p.m. Sunday Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducts Vivaldi's "The Seasons," with Silverstein as violin soloist, and selections from Monteverdi's "Vespro Della Beata Vergine" with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

One cancellation recently announced is that of the proposed exchange of orchestras between Tanglewood and Saratoga Aug. 20. The operation on Eugene Ormandy's hip, while successful and not preventing several appearances in August, has limited his activities, so on Aug. 20 instead of the Philadelphia Orchestra Tanglewood hearers will have a Boston Symphony concert conducted by Ozawa, with Garick Ohlsson as piano soloist.

Choral features of this summer include: the Mozart "Kyrie" and "Requiem" Aug. 8, conducted by Colin Davis; the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" July 25, conducted by Leonard Bernstein in memory of Koussevitzky; and the Festival's concluding number Aug. 22, Berlioz's "The Damnation of Faust," conducted by Ozawa.

Guest Conductors

William Steinberg, music director of the BSO, is conducting all-Brahms programs July 16 and 17, and all-Beethoven concerts July 23 and 24, also a miscellaneous program Aug. 7.

Other conductors include Daniel Barenboim, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna and Arthur Fiedler, who conducts the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Aug. 3.

Seat prices range from $3.50 to $8.50, as last year, with a few blocks of seats changed up or down in price. General admission to the grounds to hear music from the lawns is $3 a person. (Children require tickets.)

Two weeks of chamber orchestra programs are followed by six weeks of the full Boston Symphony of more than 100 players.

Parking is free. Snacks and lunches can be purchased at the cafeteria on the grounds, or patrons are welcome to bring in their own lunches, folding chairs, blankets, etc. for lawn picnics. Grounds open two hours before concerts.

Tanglewood is reached from either Exit 1 or 2 of the Mass. Pike, lighter traffic being experienced from Exit 1 to the grounds. Eating places in Lee and Lenox are reached more conveniently from Exit 2 of the Pike.

Berkshire Festival Opens July 2

The 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open Friday, July 2, with a concert by the Boston Symphony under the baton of Seiji Ozawa, festival artistic director. Ozawa will conduct two concerts the first weekend. The third, Sunday, July 4, will be under the baton of associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony, does four concerts this summer; two all-Brahms concerts July 16 and 17 and two Beethoven concerts July 23 and 24.

Steinberg will also conduct Aug. 7 when the Boston Symphony travels to the Saratoga Center for the Performing Arts in Saratoga Springs, N.Y., summer home of the Philadelphia Orchestra. The same night Eugene Ormandy will conduct the Philadelphians at Tanglewood.

Other conductors for the '71 Berkshire festival will be Daniel Barenboim, Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleis her, Bruno Maderna, Eugene Ormandy and Arthur Fiedler who leads the annual Boston Pops-at-Tanglewood concert Tuesday, Aug. 3.

DAYTON DAILY NEWS
DAYTON, OHIO
D. 161,249 SUN. 215,360

APR 11 1971

22

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 8,245

JUN 11 1971

Tanglewood Season Set To Open July 2

By BILL RICE

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opens this season on Friday, July 2 with Seiji Ozawa conducting the first of 23 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The opening program will be all Bach with performances of the Grand Overture Op. 18 No. 4, Brandenburg Concerto No. 4 and the Magnificat with Carol Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum and David Clatworthy in singing roles and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus also performing.

Ozawa, the popular Japanese conductor of the San Francisco Symphony, and composer Gunther Schuller are artistic directors at Tanglewood this summer. Ozawa will conduct a total of six performances.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony and Pittsburgh Symphony will conduct five performances. Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic will conduct four.

Other conductors who will be seen this summer at Tanglewood include Daniel Barenboim, Colin Davis, Leon Fliesher, Bruno Moderna and Leonard Bernstein.

The entire weekend of July 23-25 will be devoted to the works of Beethoven with Steinberg conducting a program on Friday evening consisting of Leonore Overture No. 3, Symphony No. 5 and the Violin Concerto with Itzhtak Perman as soloist. Steinberg will again conduct on Saturday when the King Stephan Overture, Symphony No. 3 (the Eroica) and Symphony No. 7 will be performed.

Leonard Bernstein will conclude the Beethoven weekend conducting a performance of Miss Solemniss in a program dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitsky. Singers Arlene Saunders, Florence Klopleff, William Cochran and Sherill Milnes and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus will be heard in the work.

Brahms Program

Steinberg will conduct an all Brahms program on July 16 and Colin Davis will lead an all Mozart program on August 8.

The Boston Pops, under the baton of Arthur Fiedler will present a pop concert on Tuesday, August 8 at 8:30 p.m. Proceeds for this concert go the to the Orchestra pension fund.

Weekend preludes will be held Friday evening at 7:00 p.m. with guest artists and members of the orchestra performing. The preludes are free to those attending regular Friday evening orchestra performances, which begin at 9:00 p.m.

Among those who will be performing in preludes on consecutive Fridays beginning July 2 are The Boston Symphony String Trio, Earl Wild, The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, Sherill Milnes, The Berkshire Boys Choir Phyllis Curtin Christoph Eschenbach and Alexis Weissenberg.

Open rehearsals are held for the public on Saturdays at 10:30 a.m. Saturday evening performances commence at 8:30 p.m. The very popular Sunday afternoon performance start at 2:30 p.m.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181

JUN 11 1971

Tanglewood Season To Open July 2 With Seiji Ozawa

By BILL RICE

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opens this season on Friday, July 2 with Seiji Ozawa conducting the first of 23 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The opening program will be all Bach with performances of the Grand Overture Op. 18 No. 4, Brandenburg Concerto No. 4 and the Magnificat with Carol Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum and David Clatworthy in singing roles and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus also performing.

Ozawa, the popular Japanese conductor of the San Francisco Symphony, and composer Gunther Schuller are artistic directors at Tanglewood this summer. Ozawa will conduct a total of six performances.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony and Pittsburgh Symphony will conduct five performances. Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and music director of the Buffalo Philharmonic will conduct four.

Other conductors who will be seen this summer at Tanglewood include Daniel Barenboim, Colin Davis, Leon Fliesher, Bruno Moderna and Leonard Bernstein.

The entire weekend of July 23-25 will be devoted to the works of Beethoven with Steinberg conducting a program on Friday evening consisting of Leonore Overture No. 3, Symphony No. 5 and the Violin Concerto with Itzhtak Perman as soloist. Steinberg will again conduct on Saturday when the King Stephan Overture, Symphony No. 3 (the Eroica) and Symphony No. 7 will be performed.

Leonard Bernstein will conclude the Beethoven weekend conducting a performance of Miss Solemniss in a program dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitsky. Singers Arlene Saunders, Florence Klopleff, William Cochran and Sherill Milnes and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus will be heard in the work.

Brahms Program

Steinberg will conduct an all Brahms program on July 16 and Colin Davis will lead an all Mozart program on August 8.

The Boston Pops, under the baton of Arthur Fiedler will present a pop concert on Tuesday, August 8 at 8:30 p.m. Proceeds for this concert go the to the Orchestra pension fund.

Weekend preludes will be held Friday evening at 7:00 p.m. with guest artists and members of the orchestra performing. The preludes are free to those attending regular Friday evening orchestra performances, which begin at 9:00 p.m.

Among those who will be performing in preludes on consecutive Fridays beginning July 2 are The Boston Symphony String Trio, Earl Wild, The Boston Symphony Chamber Players, Sherill Milnes, The Berkshire Boys Choir Phyllis Curtin Christoph Eschenbach and Alexis Weissenberg.

Open rehearsals are held for the public on Saturdays at 10:30 a.m. Saturday evening performances commence at 8:30 p.m. The very popular Sunday afternoon performance start at 2:30 p.m.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUN 19 1971

New England Newsclip

As I Hear It

Tanglewood, 1971

By Jay C. Rosenfeld

THE TANGLEWOOD program for the season about to start discovers astute selection and balance, mindful of artistic standards and public taste, but little bold enterprise.

There must be many forces pressing for greater appreciation of their respective causes. Some surely would like a greater representation of the music of contemporary composers; some would vote for still more of the familiar favorites; some might press for opera in concert form, and more oratorios and cantatas; some would like to hear more soloists and, in this category, more vocalists and string players than the rash of pianists of past seasons.

And so a schedule is devised which, it is hoped, will offer pabulum to all even though the proportions may not suit all factions. Undoubtedly, someone from the countinghouse sits in at the sessions where the season is laid out. Artistic success to less than capacity audiences is not entirely gratifying.

A major factor in the sharing of conducting responsibilities is the number of guests invited. There are to be five this summer who will each be allotted one program. The greatest weight in this department will be placed on Seiji Ozawa with six concerts; William Steinberg is next with five and Michael Tilson Thomas and Colin Davis have four each to complete the roster.

* * * *

SPRINKLED throughout the 24 programs of the summer will be some of the works played in Symphony Hall in Boston in the season just completed. These, thus, will need but little dusting off in rehearsal, but anything of longer disuse or any novelty will require greater time to prepare, and rehearsal time is one of the greatest bugaboos in the orchestral ambience.

A man coming for one single concert unquestionably has insufficient time to shape details and edges of his program to his own satisfaction. A so-to-speak outsider is invited initially on his competence, to be sure, but also quite probably because his repertory may contain some things the regular conductors do not have in their current portfolios and so the guest brings freshness to the schedule. Yet, he is concerned with the impression he would like to make, so he throws in one of the old beloved chestnuts. Thus, Daniel Barenboim plays the Tchaikowsky 4th symphony; Leon Fleisher, a Mozart Divertimento; Bruno Maderna, the Schubert 2nd; Eugene Ormandy, the Debussy "La Mer"; and Leonard Bernstein, the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis."

* * * *

IN DEVISING programs, management must be mindful of several segments of audiences and it would be fatuous and redundant to state that minds of great experience in such matters are consulted, but the generation gap is of high importance and wise old heads may not always give younger people their due consideration. For example, I was driving to Tanglewood from Stockbridge via the road along Lake Makheenac last summer, and stopped to pick up an attractive young couple who were thumbing a ride. Coming in sight of the mountain north of the Bowl they asked, "What is that up there?" I answered, "That's the Shadowbrook Seminary." "No," they persisted, "the house above it." "That's the Koussevitzky house," I informed them. "Who's he?" they asked—this is 1970, and they apparently college students! And only last week, in connection with the truly magnanimous bequest to our Berkshire Museum by the late widow of probably our greatest American violinist, to an Eastman graduate (!) the name of Albert Spalding was not familiar!

And so, it is obvious that everything in the Tanglewood schedule will be new to someone. Anyone who gets snobbish and arrogantly dismisses the old warhorses, might well stay a moment and ask himself at what point in his own case did he make the acquaintance of the Tchaikowsky symphonies, the Bach suites and the Mozart overtures.

* * * *

IN EARLY Tanglewood days, there were a few memorable events when new works had their premiere or at least their American premiere. In some instances, the composer was on hand to supervise the preparation. One recalls the Benjamin Britten operas "Peter Grimes" and "Albert Herring" and his War Requiem. There was the Shostakovich 10th symphony and a few others. These made musical history. But those were mostly in the days when there was a "musical director," a man with vision, a man with a mission, and not a job-holder with a contract.

In 1936, when Koussevitzky initially brought the Boston Symphony to Lenox for the third Berkshire Symphonic Festival, he scented the opportunity to put into effect his long-cherished challenge of an "academy" for talented and advanced students. The idea of a major symphony orchestra playing, so-to-speak, in bucolic circumstances was startling enough, but to bring (or was it the other way 'round?) their internationally famous conductor to appear with them in what had traditionally been vacation time, was absolutely unheard of.

The Berkshire Music Center is today known and respected throughout the whole musical world. Indeed, Europeans know Tanglewood as a postgraduate institute and far less as a summer concert series. It has been the inspiration and model of numerous imitators. It is to be hoped that that perspective will be maintained.

BSO CONCERTS – 1ST WEEKEND

BANNER
BENNINGTON, VT.
D. 6,000

JUN 24 1971 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood season to open Sunday afternoon

LENOX, Mass. — The 1971 Tanglewood season opens Sunday, at 2:30 p.m. in the Theater-Concert Hall with the 31st opening exercises of the Boston Symphony's summer academy for the advanced study of music.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will be sung by over 400 students of the Berkshire Music Center. "Alleluia" was commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky for the initial opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940. Following the opening exercises, there will be a reception in Tanglewood's formal gardens all open to the public.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its first Berkshire Festival concert Friday July 2, at 9 p.m. in the Shed. Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa conducts. The program opens with Johann Christian Bach's Grand overture in D, followed by two works by Johann Sebastian Bach: Bradenburg Concerto No. 6 and "Magnificat," with soloists soprano Carole Bogard, alto Rose Taylor, tenor John McCollum, bass David Clatworthy, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, Conductor.

The weekend prelude, Friday at 7 p.m. in the Shed, presents the Boston Symphony String Trio: Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, viola d'amore, and Jules Eskin, cello, with Robert Levin, harpsichord. The program is Stamitz' Sonata in D for viola d'amore and harpsichord, and two sonatas by Johann Sebastian Bach, in D for cello and harpsichord, and in A for violin and harpsichord. The weekend prelude concerts are free to ticket holders of the 9 p.m. Boston Symphony concert.

The summer's first open rehearsal is Saturday morning, July 3 at 10:30 in the Shed. Open rehearsals are held in the Shed each Saturday morning at 10:30 and benefit the orchestra's pension fund. They offer a relaxed look at the orchestra, conductor and soloists preparing Berkshire Festival music. Seats are unreserved, at $2.50 each, and are available the morning of the Rehearsal.

Saturday evening, July 3 at 8:30 in the Shed, Seiji Ozawa conducts with soloists Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute. The program is Mozart's Serenade No. 12 for winds. "Nacht Musique," Bernstein's Serenade for violin, strings, and percussion, Berio's Serenata for flute and 14 instruments and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings.

Sunday afternoon, July 4, at 2:30 Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony conducts Vivaldi's "The Seasons."

POST
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
S. 88,000

JUN 27 1971 New England Newsclip

music

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass. — Opening today at 2:30 p.m. with 400 students of Berkshire Music center singing Randall Thompson's "Alleluia;" first Berkshire festival concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday at 9 p.m. in the shed with Seiji Ozawa, Tanglewood artistic director, conducting; weekend prelude, Friday at 7 p.m., Boston Symphony String Trio; open rehearsal, Saturday at 10:30 a.m.; concert Saturday at 8:30 p.m., with soloists Joseph Silverstein, violinist, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; July 4 at 2:30 p.m., Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the symphony, conducting and Mr. Silverstein, soloist.

YOUTH ADULT COUNCIL OF WESTPORT — Tonight at 8, rock concert by Country Joe McDonald; July 10 at 8 p.m., Livingston Taylor, rock concert; both in Staples High school, Westport.

UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT, Storrs—Thursday at 8:15 p.m., New England String Quartet-in-residence, Von der Mehden Recital hall, open to the public; admission, $1; July 5 at 8:15 p.m., Ursula Oppens, piano, in Albert N. Jorgensen auditorium.

BARNUM FESTIVAL ROCK CONCERT — Friday at 8:30 p.m. at Kennedy stadium, Bridgeport, featuring the Panacea, of Newtown, among other groups.

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,723 SUN. 41,003

JUN 25 1971

31st Tanglewood Season Opens Sunday

LENOX, MASS — The 1971 Tanglewood season opens Sunday, June 27, at 2:30 p.m. in the Theater-Concert Hall with the 31st Opening Exercises of the Boston Symphony's summer academy for the advanced study of music.

Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will be sung by more than 400 students of the Berkshire Music Center. Thompson's "Alleluia" was commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky for the initial Opening Exercises of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940.

Following the Opening Exercises, there will be a reception in Tanglewood's Formal Gardens. The public is cordially innvited to the Opening Exercises and to the reception.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its first Berkshire Festival concert next Friday evening at 9 p.m. in the Shed. Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa conducts.

The program opens with Johann Christian Bach's Grand overture in D, followed by two works by Johann Sebastian Bach, Brandenburg concerto No. 6 and "Magnificat," with soloists, soprano Carole Bogard, alto Rose Taylor, tenor John McCollum, bass David Clatworthy, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, conductor.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday at 7 p.m. in the Shed, presents the Boston Symphony String Trio: Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, villa d'amore, and Jules Eskin, cello, with Robert Levin, harpsichord.

The program is Stamitz' Sonata in D for viola d'amore and harpsichord, and two sonatas by Johann Sebastian Bach, in D for cello and harpsichord, and in A for violin and harpsichord. The Weekend Prelude concerts are free to ticket holders of the 9 p.m. Boston Symphony concert.

The summer's first Open Rehearsal is July 3 at 10:30 a.m. in the Shed.

Open Rehearsals are conducted in the Shed each Saturday morning at 10:30 a.m. and benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Seiji Ozawa will conduct July 3 at 8:30 p. m. soloists Joseph Silverstein concert master of the Boston Symphony and Doriot Anthony Dwyer principal flute. The program is Mozart's Serenade No. 12 for winds, "Nacht Musique," Bernstein's Serenade for violin strings, and percussion, Berio's Serenata for flute and 14 instruments and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings.

Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony will conduct Vivaldi's "The Seasons", with soloists Joseph Silverstein, and selections from Monteverdi's "Vespro Della Beata Vergine" with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. July 4 at 2:30 p.m.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUN 26 1971 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Season Opens Tomorrow

The Tanglewood season starts tomorrow with the 31st opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer academy for the advanced study of music, at 2:30 p.m. in the Theatre Concert Hall. The students, numbering more than 400, will sing Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," first commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky in 1940. The public is invited to the exercises and to the reception that will follow in the formal gardens.

TIMES
BEVERLY, MASS.
D. 9,514

JUN 26 1971 New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD OPENS

The 1971 Tanglewood season opens Sunday, June 27, at 2:30 p.m. in the Theater - Concert hall with the 31st opening exercises of the Boston Symphony's summer academy for the advanced study of music. Randall Thompson's Alleluia will be sung by over 400 students of the Berkshire Music Center. Thompson's Alleluia was commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky for the initial opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940. Following the opening exercises, there will be a reception in Tanglewood's formal gardens. The public is cordially invited to the opening exercises and to the reception.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its first Berkshire Festival concert Friday evening, July 2, at 9 o'clock in the shed. Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa conducts.

24

Bach's 'Magnificat' to Open Tanglewood Season!

THE TANGLEWOOD SCENE — Hot Sunday afternoons, and waiting crowds and picnic luncheons under the trees provide the scene at Tanglewood.

By R. E. KRIEGER
Executive Arts Editor

A major choral work, Bach's "Magnificat" will open the 1971 summer season of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. on July 2. Seiji Ozawa, who will be guest conducting as well at the Saratoga Center this summer, will conduct. He is artistic director at Tanglewood.

William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony (he has given notice that he will be leaving that post to go back to putting full-time in with the Pittsburg Symphony) will be conducting four concerts this summer.

ALSO GIVING a helping hand as guest conductors will the Philadelphia Orchestra's Eugene Ormandy, Daniel Barenboim (who will conduct at Saratoga this summer as well as be a guest soloist), Leonard Bernstein, Colin Davis, Leon Fleisher, Bruno Maderna, and Arthur Fiedler, who'll be doing his annual Pops-at-Tanglewood concert.

Guest violinists will be Pinchas Zuckerman (he'll be making an appearance at Saratoga, too) Itzhak Perlman, and Joseph Silverstein, who is also concertmaster of the Boston orchestra.

Pianists performing at Tanglewood this summer will be Alexis Weissenberg, Vladimir Ashkenazy, Christoph Eschenbach, Ruth Laredo Byron Janis, Stephen Bishop, Garrick Ohlsson and Earl Wild.

SCHEDULE for the season:

JULY 2: Conducting, Seiji Ozawa. Bach's "Grand Overture, Op. 13," "Brandenberg Concerto No. 6" and "Magnificat." Soloists in the latter will be Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum and David Clatworthy plus the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. 9 p.m.

JULY 3: Seiji Ozawa conducting. Mozart "Serenade for Winds, K.338," Bernstein's "Serenade for Violin" featuring Joseph Silverstein, Berio's "Serenade for Flute" featuring Doriot Anthony Dqyer and Tchaikovsky's "Serenade for Strings." 8:30 p.m.

JULY 4: Michael Tilson Thomas conducting. Vivaldi's "The Seasons" with Silverstein, and music from Monteverdi's "The Vespers of 1610" with the Tanglewood chorus. 2:30 p.m.

JULY 9: Leon Fleisher conducting. Bartok's Romanian Folk Dances," Hindemith's "Four Temperaments" with Ruth Laredo and Mozart's "Divertimento K.287." 9 p.m.

JULY 10: Michael Tilson Thomas conducting. Bach's "Suite No. 4," Haydn's "Cello Concerto in C" with Jules Eskin and Brahms' "Serenade No. 2. 8:30 p.m.

Continued on Page 4

Bach's 'Magnificat' to Open Tanglewood Season

Continued From Page B-13

JULY 11: Bruno Maderna conducting. Schubert's "Symphony No. 2," Schoenberg's "Chamber Symphony," and Chopin's "Piano Concerto No. 2" with Earl Wild. 2:30 p.m.

JULY 16: William Steinberg conducting. Brahms' "Tragic Overture," "Piano Concerto No. 2" with Vladimir Ashkenazy and "Symphony No. 2" 9 p.m.

JULY 17: William Steinberg conducting. Brahms' "Academic Festival overture," "Concerto for Violin and Cello" with Pinchas Zukerman and Zara Nelsova and "SymphonyNo.4."8:30p.m.

July 18; Seiji Ozawa conducting. Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro overture," Mozart's "Piano Concerto K-595" with Vladimir Ashkenzay, Brahms' "Alto Rhapsody" with Maureen Forrester and Brahms' "Haydn Variations." 2:30 p.m.

JULY 23: William Steinberg conducting. Beethoven's "Leonore Overture No. 3," "Violin Concerto" with Itzhak Perlman and "Symphony No. 5." 9 p.m.

JULY 24: William Steinberg conducting. Beethoven's "King Stephen overture," "Symphony No. 3" and "Symphony No. 7." 8:30 p.m.

JULY 25: Leonard Bernstein conducting. Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky with soloists Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes and the Tanglewood chorus. 2:30 p.m.

JULY 30: Seiji Ozawa conducting Haydn's "Symphony No. 96," Prokofiev's "Piano Concerto No. 3" with Byron Janis and a new work for percussion and orchestra by Takemitsu featuring Stemu Yamash'ta. 9 p.m.

JULY 31: Eugene Ormandy conducting. Strauss' "Don Juan," Penderecki "To the Victims of Hiroshima," Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" suite No. 2 and Brahms' "Symphony No. 1." 8:30 p.m.

AUG. 1: Schubert's "Roasmunde" overture, Lalo's "Symphonie Espagnole" featuring Pinchas Zukerman and Tachakovsky's "Symphony No. 4." 2:30 p.m.

AUG. 6: Colin Davis conducting. Elgar's "Introduction and Allergo," Wood's "Cello Concerto" featuring Zara Nelsova and Dvorak's "Symphony No. 2." 9 p.m.

AUG. 7: Eugen Ormandy conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra. The Boston Symphony under William Steinberg will be at Saratoga, Bartok's "Two Portraits," Debussy's "La Mer," Prokofiev's "Symphony No. 5" 8:30 p.m.

AUG. 8: Colin Davis conducting. Mozart's "Kyrie K.341," "Piano Concerto K.503," and "Requiem" with soloists Benita Valente, Beverly Wolff, Kenneth Riegel, Robert Hale and the Tanglewood Chorus. 2:30 p.m.

AUG. 13: Colin Davis conducting. Tippett's "Symphony No. 2 and Elgar's "Symphony No. 1. 9 p.m.

AUG. 14: Colin Davis conducting. Mozart's "Symphony No. 39" and Mahler's "Symphony No. 4" featuring Judith Raskin. 8:30 p.m.

AUG. 15: Seigi Ozawa conducting. "Xenakis' "Polla Ta Bihna," Beethoven's "Piano Concerto No. 1" with Christoph Eschenbach and Tchaikovsky's "Symphony No. 6." 2:30 p.m.

AUG. 20: Bruno Maderna conducting. Mozart's "Symphony No. 29," Maderna's "Grande Aulodia," (American premiere) and Rachmaninoff's "Piano Concerto No. 3" featuring Garrick Ohlsson. 9 p.m.

AUG. 21: Michael Tilson Thomas conducting. Copland's "Applachian Spring," Ravel's "Piano Concerto in G" featuring Alexis Weissenberg and Nielsen's "Symphony No. 5." 8:30 p.m.

AUG 22; Seiji Ozawa conducting. Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," with soloists Lois Marshall, John Alexander and Ezio Flagello and the Tanglewood chorus.

As in previous years the Friday concerts at 9 p.m. will have prelude concerts beginning at 7 and featuring the Boston Symphony String Trio, Earl Wild, Boston Symphony Chamber Players, Sherill Milnes, Berkshire Boy Choir, Phyllis Curtin, Christoph Eschenbach and Alexis Weissenberg.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

MAR 28 1971

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891

JUN 26 1971

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

String Trio, Ozawa Are Back To Welcome 33rd Summer

Listening to a string trio in the early evening hours amid trees and lawns could be the perfect way to welcome summer.

Tanglewood offers an opportunity to do so this Friday, July 2, at 7 p.m. when the Boston Symphony String Trio presents Weekend Prelude, a concert free to ticket holders for the concert following.

Members of the Trio are concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, principal violist Burton Fine and cellist Jules Eskin.

Seiji Ozawa will be on the podium at 9 p.m. to conduct J. C. Bach's Overture Op. 18, No. 9 and J. S. Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and the Magnificat.

Solists for the Magnificat are Carole Bogard, soprano; Rose Taylor, mezzo soprano; John McCollum, tenor, and David Clatworthy, bass.

Ozawa, music director of the San Francisco Symphony, spends his summers as artistic director of Tanglewood, a position he shares with Gunther Schuller.

Seiji Ozawa

Born in Hoten, Manchuria, he is a graduate of the prestigious Toho School of Music in Tokyo. In 1959, he so impressed the judges at the International Competition for Conductors in Besancon, France, that they awarded him first prize.

The late Charles Munch also became aware of his talents and invited him to spend a summer as conducting student at the Berkshire Music Center where he won the Koussevitsky Memorial Scholarship as the most outstanding young conductor.

In 1961, Ozawa was named assistant conductor of the New York Philharmonic by Leonard Bernstein, and in 1964 had his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood.

Next on the Tanglewood schedule will be an open rehearsal Saturday, July 3, at 10:30 a.m., and at 8:30 p.m. that day, Ozawa will lead the orchestra in a program of works by Mozart, Tchaikovsky, Berio and Bernstein.

SUN
LOWELL, MASS.
D. 49,250
JUL 2 1971
New England Newsclip

A Place in...

THE SUN

By Frances Berg

If you like a musical Fourth, a hop to Lenox will get you a whole weekend of the 31st season at Tanglewood, which opened this past Sunday...

Tonight at Tanglewood . . .

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its first Berkshire Festival concert tonight at 9 p. m. in the Shed. Tanglewood artistic director Seiji Ozawa conducts, and the program opens with Johann Christian Bach's Grand Overture in D, followed by two works by Johann Sebastian Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and Magnificat, with soloists soprano Carole Bogard, alto Rose Taylor, tenor John McCollum, bass David Clatworthy, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, conductor.

The Weekend Prelude, tonight at 7 p. m. in the Shed, presents the Boston Symphony String Trio: Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, viola d'amore, and Jules Eskin, cello, with Robert Levin, harpsichord, with Stamitz Sonata in D for viola d'amore and harpsichord, and two sonatas by Johann Sebastian Bach, in D for cello and harpsichord, and in A for violin and harpsichord. The Weekend Prelude concerts are free to ticket holders of the 9 p. m. Boston Symphony concert.

The summer's first Open Rehearsal is tomorrow morning at 10:30 a. m. in the Shed. The open rehearsals, held in the Shed each Saturday morning at 10:30 and benefit the orchestra's pension fund, offer a relaxed look at the orchestra, conductor and soloists preparing Berkshire Festival music.

Saturday evening at 8:30 p. m. in the Shed, Seiji Ozawa conducts with soloists Joseph Silverstein, concert master of the Boston Symphony, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute. The program is Mozart's Serenade No. 12 for winds "Nacht Musique," Bernstein's Serenade for violin strings, and percussion, Berior's Serenata for flute and 14 instruments and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings.

Sunday afternoon, July 4, at 2:30 p. m. Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducts Vivaldi's The Seasons, with soloists Joseph Silverstein, and selections from Monteverdi's Vespro Della Beata Vergine with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. . .

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
JUL 2 1971

Boston Concerts At Tanglewood Start Today

For the sixth consecutive year, WAMC (90.3 mc.), the FM station of the Albany Medical College, will carry live broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The 1971 season begins today and concludes Sunday, Aug. 22. Concerts will be aired at 9 p.m. on Fridays, Saturdays at 8:30 p.m., and Sundays at 2:30 p.m.

The opening concert today will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, and will feature a performance of Bach's Magnificat. Mr. Ozawa and Gunther Schuller are serving as artistic advisers to Tanglewood; Leonard Bernstein is adviser, and William Steinberg is music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Founded in 1934, the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood is the nation's oldest major music festival.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUL 2 1971

Boston Symphony Plays At Tanglewood Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its first Berkshire Festival concert at 9 tonight in the Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with Seiji Ozawa, festival artistic director, conducting.

The program opens with J. C. Bach's Grand Overture in D, followed by two works of J. S. Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and "Magnificat," with soloist soprano Carole Bogarde, alto, Rose Taylor, tenor John McCollum, bass David Clatworthy, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, conductor.

* * *

The weekend prelude at 7 tonight in the Shed presents the Boston Symphony String Trio: Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola d'amore, and Jules Eskin, cello, with Robert Levin harpsichord.

Prelude concerts are free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert. Tonight's program includes Stamitz' Sonata in D for Viola d'amore and harpsichord and two sonatas by J. S. Bach, in D for cello and harpsichord and in A for violin and harpsichord.

First open rehearsal of the summer is at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow in the Shed. These rehearsals are held at the same time and location each Saturday morning for benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. Seats are unreserved and are available the morning of the rehearsal.

* * *

Tomorow evening at 8:30 Ozawa conducts with Silverstein, concert master of Boston Symphony, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute. The program is Mozart's Serenade No. 12 for winds, "'Nacht Musique;" Bernstein's Serenade for violin, strings and percussion; Berio's Serenata for flute and 14 instruments, and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings.

Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducts the Sunday afternoon concert.

HERALD
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
W. 104,870
JUN 27 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Artists

Michael Tilson Thomas, Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Orchestra on Sunday of the opening weekend July 3-4 at Tanglewood. Mr. Thomas will conduct works by Vivaldi and Monteverdi. Appearing with Mr. Thomas are soloists Joseph Silverstein and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Seiji Ozawa, Artistic Director of Tanglewood, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday and Saturday of the opening weekend July 3-4 at Tanglewood. Works conducted will include on Friday: J. C. Bach's Grand overture no. 4, J. S. Bach's Magnificat and J. S. Bach's Bradenburg concerto no. 6. On saturday evening Mr. Ozawa will conduct Mozart's Serenade for winds, Bernstein's Serenade for violin with Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as soloist, and works by Berio and Tchaikovsky.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
D. 114,000
JUL 3 1971
New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD/BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL, Lenox, Mass. offers 7 p.m. prelude Fridays, concert at 9 p.m.; open rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. Saturday; concerts at 8:30 p.m. Saturday and 2:30 p.m. Sunday; all concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra. Tickets: $3.50-$8.50. Ozawa conducts today; Thomas Sunday. Box office. 413-637-1600. Unreserved seats for open rehearsals, $2.50.

New York Post
D. 708,180 SAT. 369,902
JUN 29 1971

Berkshire Fete To Open Friday

The 1971 Berkshire Festival with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open Friday night at 9 with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa will lead the all-Bach concert with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and soloists in the "Magnificat," and in other works. Saturday at 8:30 Ozawa will lead a miscellaneous program including works by Bernstein, Verio, Mozart and Tchaikovsky. Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Michael Tilson Thomas will lead the Bostonians in works by Vivaldi and Monteverdi with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as soloist and with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Ticket holders are also welcome to hear the "pre-concert weekend prelude" at 7 on Friday night and the open rehearsal Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

The Festival will close Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust" led by Ozawa. For further information write to Tanglewood or telephone: (413) 637-1600.

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 8,245
JUN 30 1971

Tanglewood Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass., Friday at 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude. At 9 p.m., Seija Ozawa conducting a program of Bach, with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. Saturday, 10:30 a.m. open rehearsal; 8:30 p.m. Seija Ozawa conducting Joseph Silverstein and Doriot Anthony Dwyer featured soloists. Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Michael Tilson Thomas conducting, with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and Joseph Silverstein.

THE LAWN AND SHED at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony's summer home in Lenox, will be alive with music Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons through July and August. The Tanglewood season begins this Friday with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Bach 'Magnificat.'

SUN
LOWELL, MASS.
D. 49,250
JUL 2 1971
New England Newsclip

A Place in...

THE SUN

By Frances Berg

If you like a musical Fourth, a hop to Lenox will get you a whole weekend of the 31st season at Tanglewood, which opened this past Sunday...

Tonight at Tanglewood . . .

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its first Berkshire Festival concert tonight at 9 p. m. in the Shed. Tanglewood artistic director Seiji Ozawa conducts, and the program opens with Johann Christian Bach's Grand Overture in D, followed by two works by Johann Sebastian Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and Magnificat, with soloists soprano Carole Bogard, alto Rose Taylor, tenor John McCollum, bass David Clatworthy, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, conductor.

The Weekend Prelude, tonight at 7 p. m. in the Shed, presents the Boston Symphony String Trio: Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, viola d'amore, and Jules Eskin, cello, with Robert Levin, harpsichord, with Stamitz Sonata in D for viola d'amore and harpsichord, and two sonatas by Johann Sebastian Bach, in D for cello and harpsichord, and in A for violin and harpsichord. The Weekend Prelude concerts are free to ticket holders of the 9 p. m. Boston Symphony concert.

The summer's first Open Rehearsal is tomorrow morning at 10:30 a. m. in the Shed. The open rehearsals, held in the Shed each Saturday morning at 10:30 and benefit the orchestra's pension fund, offer a relaxed look at the orchestra, conductor and soloists preparing Berkshire Festival music.

Saturday evening at 8:30 p. m. in the Shed, Seiji Ozawa conducts with soloists Joseph Silverstein, concert master of the Boston Symphony, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute. The program is Mozart's Serenade No. 12 for winds "Nacht Musique," Bernstein's Serenade for violin strings, and percussion, Berior's Serenata for flute and 14 instruments and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings.

Sunday afternoon, July 4, at 2:30 p. m. Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducts Vivaldi's The Seasons, with soloists Joseph Silverstein, and selections from Monteverdi's Vespro Della Beata Vergine with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. . .

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 8,245
JUN 30 1971

Tanglewood Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass., Friday at 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude. At 9 p.m., Seija Ozawa conducting a program of Bach, with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. Saturday, 10:30 a.m. open rehearsal; 8:30 p.m. Seija Ozawa conducting Joseph Silverstein and Doriot Anthony Dwyer featured soloists. Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Michael Tilson Thomas conducting, with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and Joseph Silverstein.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
JUL 2 1971

Boston Concerts At Tanglewood Start Today

For the sixth consecutive year, WAMC (90.3 mc.), the FM station of the Albany Medical College, will carry live broadcasts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The 1971 season begins today and concludes Sunday, Aug. 22. Concerts will be aired at 9 p.m. on Fridays, Saturdays at 8:30 p.m., and Sundays at 2:30 p.m.

The opening concert today will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, and will feature a performance of Bach's Magnificat. Mr. Ozawa and Gunther Schuller are serving as artistic advisers to Tanglewood; Leonard Bernstein is adviser, and William Steinberg is music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Founded in 1934, the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood is the nation's oldest major music festival.

New York Post
D. 708,180 SAT. 369,902
JUN 29 1971

Berkshire Fete To Open Friday

The 1971 Berkshire Festival with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open Friday night at 9 with a concert conducted by Tanglewood Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa. Ozawa will lead the all-Bach concert with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and soloists in the "Magnificat," and in other works. Saturday at 8:30 Ozawa will lead a miscellaneous program including works by Bernstein, Verio, Mozart and Tchaikovsky. Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Michael Tilson Thomas will lead the Bostonians in works by Vivaldi and Monteverdi with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as soloist and with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Ticket holders are also welcome to hear the "pre-concert weekend prelude" at 7 on Friday night and the open rehearsal Saturday at 10:30 a.m.

The Festival will close Aug. 22 with a performance of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust" led by Ozawa. For further information write to Tanglewood or telephone: (413) 637-1600.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 56,934
JUL 2 1971

Boston Symphony Plays At Tanglewood Tonight

Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its first Berkshire Festival concert at 9 tonight in the Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., with Seiji Ozawa, festival artistic director, conducting.

The program opens with J. C. Bach's Grand Overture in D, followed by two works of J. S. Bach: Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and "Magnificat," with soloist soprano Carole Bogarde, alto, Rose Taylor, tenor John McCollum, bass David Clatworthy, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, conductor.

* * *

The weekend prelude at 7 tonight in the Shed presents the Boston Symphony String Trio: Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola d'amore, and Jules Eskin, cello, with Robert Levin harpsichord.

Prelude concerts are free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert. Tonight's program includes Stamitz' Sonata in D for Viola d'amore and harpsichord and two sonatas by J. S. Bach, in D for cello and harpsichord and in A for violin and harpsichord.

First open rehearsal of the summer is at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow in the Shed. These rehearsals are held at the same time and location each Saturday morning for benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. Seats are unreserved and are available the morning of the rehearsal.

* * *

Tomorow evening at 8:30 Ozawa conducts with Silverstein, concert master of Boston Symphony, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute. The program is Mozart's Serenade No. 12 for winds, "'Nacht Musique;" Bernstein's Serenade for violin, strings and percussion; Berio's Serenata for flute and 14 instruments, and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings.

Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducts the Sunday afternoon concert.

REGISTER
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
D. 114,000
JUL 3 1971
New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD/BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL, Lenox, Mass. offers 7 p.m. prelude Fridays, concert at 9 p.m.; open rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. Saturday; concerts at 8:30 p.m. Saturday and 2:30 p.m. Sunday; all concerts by Boston Symphony Orchestra. Tickets: $3.50-$8.50. Ozawa conducts today; Thomas Sunday. Box office. 413-637-1600. Unreserved seats for open rehearsals, $2.50.

HERALD
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
W. 104,870
JUN 27 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Artists

Michael Tilson Thomas, Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct the Orchestra on Sunday of the opening weekend July 3-4 at Tanglewood. Mr. Thomas will conduct works by Vivaldi and Monteverdi. Appearing with Mr. Thomas are soloists Joseph Silverstein and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

Seiji Ozawa, Artistic Director of Tanglewood, will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday and Saturday of the opening weekend July 3-4 at Tanglewood. Works conducted will include on Friday: J. C. Bach's Grand overture no. 4, J. S. Bach's Magnificat and J. S. Bach's Bradenburg concerto no. 6. On saturday evening Mr. Ozawa will conduct Mozart's Serenade for winds, Bernstein's Serenade for violin with Boston Symphony concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as soloist, and works by Berio and Tchaikovsky.

THE LAWN AND SHED at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony's summer home in Lenox, will be alive with music Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoons through July and August. The Tanglewood season begins this Friday with Seiji Ozawa conducting the Bach 'Magnificat.'

26

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUL 2 1971

CLEFS & ARPEGGIOS

by NANCY CURRAN

We are about to embark on one of the most explosive weekends in the music year, the Fourth of July weekend. In the midst of highway carnage, music lovers find ways to celebrate peacefully. Fans of music and driving are heading for Tanglewood for the opening of the season this evening.

* * *

Seiji Ozawa will conduct the first two concerts. He's the artistic director of the Tanglewood Festival, featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Berkshire Boy Choir. July 4 the conductor will be the associate conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas.

The first concert will consist of Johann Christian Bach's "Grand Overture," and Johann Sebastian Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6" and his "Magnificat."

Johann Sebastian Bach started in music as a boy soprano and educated himself in the art. He and his cousin, Maria Barbara Bach, married and had seven children. He worked his way up to court concert master at Weimar.

The second Frau J. S. Bach, nee Anna Magdalena Wuelkin, he married in 1721. They had 13 children together. How's your addition? Or is it multiplication? Bach later left Weimar for the music staff of the Church of St. Thomas of Leipzig and its music school. His compositions for organ, singing, solo instruments and orchestra are part of the basic repertoire of most serious musicians.

Johann Christian Bach was a child of his father's second marriage. He spent most of his career as music master to the royal family of England, from 1762 until he died in 1782. He composed for the harpsichord and continued creating operas as he had earlier in Italy.

The Tanglewood season runs through Aug. 22, with concerts on Friday, Saturday, and Sundays. Friday concerts begin at 9, leaving room for a special weekend prelude at 7. The first features the Boston Symphony String Trio Saturday mornings at 10:30, rehearsals are open; the evening concerts start at 8:30. Sundays the curtain time is 2:30 p.m. The authorities are very stern about disturbances and noise among the listeners on the lawn, so it's music-lovers' heaven.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUN 27 1971

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA — Seiji Ozawa conducting: J. C. Bach's "Grand Overture," J.S., Bach's "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6" and J.S. Bach "Magnificat" with Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum, David Clatworthy and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. Friday at 9 p.m. Seiji Ozawa conducting: Mozart "Serenade for Winds," Bernstein's "Serenade for Violin" with Joseph Silverstein, Bach's "Serenade for Flute" with Doriot Anthony Dwyer and Tchaikovsky's "Serenade for Strings." Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Michael Tilson Thomas conducting: Vivaldi's "The Season's" with Joseph Silverstein, and Monteverdi's "Music from the Vespers of 1610" with the Tanglewood Chorus. Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Berkshire Music Festival, Lenox, Mass.

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 895,505 SUN. 1,445,507
JUN 27 1971

Clemens Kalischer

BACH IN THE BERKSHIRES—Seiji Ozawa conducts the Boston Symphony in an all-Bach (Johann Sebastian and Johann Christian) program to open the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., Friday.

MASSACHUSETTS

LENOX—Tanglewood, Berkshire Music Festival. Boston Symphony Orchestra. Friday, 9 P.M., Seiji Ozawa, conductor, singers. Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum, David Clatworthy, Tanglewood Festival Chorus.
Grand Overture (Op. 18, No. 4); Brandenburg Concerto No. 6; Magnificat ..... Bach
Saturday, 8:30 P.M., Seiji Ozawa, conductor, Joseph Silverstein, violin, Dariot Anthony Dwyer, flute.
Serenade for Winds (K. 388) ..... Mozart
Serenade for violin ..... Bernstein
Serenade for flute ..... Berio
Serenade for strings ..... Tchaikovsky
Next Sunday, 2:30 P.M., Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor.
The Seasons ..... Vivaldi
Music from The Vespers of 1610, ... Monteverdi
LENOX—Lenox Arts Center, Saturday, 7:30 P.M. Pete Seeger.
AMHERST—University of Massachusetts. Thursday, 8 P.M., Paul Winter Consort.

RHODE ISLAND

NEWPORT—Newport Jazz Festival, Festival Field, Friday 8 P.M. Roberta Flack, orchestras of Duke Ellington, Buddy Rich and Stan Kenton, Voices of East Harlem, The Dave Pike Set. Saturday, 2 P.M., Ornette Coleman Quartet, Charles Mingus Sextet, New York Bass Violin Choir, Willie, the Lion, Smith, Euble Blake, Freddie Hubbard; 8 P.M., Dionne Warwick, Dave Brubeck Trio with Gerry Mulligan and Paul Desmond. Chase, jam session with Jimmy Smith, Cannonball Adderley, Herbie Mann, Dizzy Gillespie, Freddie Hubbard, Sonny Stitt, Gerry Mulligan and others. Next Sunday, 2 P.M., Aretha Franklin, Les McCann Trio, Rahsaan Roland Kirk and the Vibration Society, Donny Hathaway, King Curtis Orchestra; 8 P.M., Ray Charles, B. B. King, Allman Brothers, T. Bone Walker, Joe Turner, Eddie Cleanhead Vinson, Buddy Tate Band, James Cotton Blues Band.

TIME
GREENWICH, CONN.
D. 13,160
JUL 1 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Set To Open; Ozawa To Conduct Bach

The 1971 Tanglewood Season opens Sunday, June 27, at 2:30 p.m. in the Theater-Concert Hall with the 31st opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer academy for the advanced study of music. Randall Thompson's "Alleluia" will be sung by more than 400 students of the Berkshire Music Center. Thompson's "Alleluia" was commissioned by Serge Koussevitzky for the initial opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center in 1940. Following the opening exercises, there will be a reception in Tanglewood's formal gardens. The public is invited to the opening exercises and to the reception.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its first Berkshire Festival concert Friday evening, July 2, at 9 in the Shed. Tanglewood Artistic director Seiji Ozawa conducts. The program opens with Johann Christian Bach's Grand Overture in D, followed by two works by Johann Sebastian Bach, Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and "Magnificat," with soprano Carole Bogard, alto Rose Taylor, tenor John McCollum, bass David Clatworthy and the Tanglewood Festival chorus conducted by John Oliver.

BSO Trio

The Weekend Prelude, Friday at 7 p.m. in the Shed, presents the Boston Symphony String Trio, Joseph Silverstein, violin, Burton Fine, viola d'amore, and Jules Eskin, cello; and Robert Levin, harpsichord. The program is Stamitz's Sonata in D for viola d'amore and harpsichord, and two sonatas by Bach, in D for cello and harpsichord, and in A for violin and harpsichord. The Weekend Prelude concerts are free to ticket holders of the 9 p.m. Boston Symphony concert.

The summer's first open rehearsal is Saturday morning, July 3, at 10:30 in the Shed. Open rehearsals are held in the Shed each Saturday and benefit the orchestra's pension fund. They offer a relaxed look at the orchestra, conductor and soloists preparing Berkshire Festival music. Seats are unreserved, and are available the morning of the rehearsal.

Saturday evening, July 3, at 8:30 in the Shed, Seiji Ozawa conducts with soloists Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute. The program is Mozart's Serenade No. 12 for winds, "Nacht musique," Bernstein's Serenade for violin, strings and percussion, Berio's Serenata for flute and 14 instruments, and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings.

Sunday afternoon, July 4, at 2:30, Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducts Vivaldi's "The Seasons," with soloist Silverstein, and selections from Monteverdi's "Vespro della Beata Vergine" with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891
JUN 26 1971
New England Newsclip

MUSIC

TANGLEWOOD: Friday, July 2: Weekend Prelude with Boston Symphony String Trio, 7 p.m. Seiji Ozawa. J. C. Bach: Grand Overture Op. 18 No. 4. J. S. Bach: Brandenburg concerto No. 6, Magnificat. Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum, David Clatworthy, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, 9 p.m. . . . Saturday, July 3: Open rehearsal, 10:30 a.m. Seiji Ozawa. Mozart's Serenade for winds, K. 388. Bernstein's Serenade for violin, Joseph Silverstein. Berio's Serenade for flute, Doriot Anthony Dwyer; Tchaikovsky's Serenade for Strings. 8:30 p.m. . . . Sunday, July 4: Michael Tilson Thomas, Vivaldi's "The Seasons," Joseph Silverstein; Monteverdi: Music from "The Vespers of 1610," Tanglewood Festival Chorus, 2:30 p.m.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 129,656
JUN 30 1971

OPENING. Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood, will conduct the Boston Symphony in the Friday and Saturday evening concerts of the opening weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival, Lenox, Mass. Included Friday is Bach's "Grand Overture No. 4," "Magnificat" and "Brandeburg Concerto No. 6." Saturday, he will conduct Mozart's "Serenade for Winds," Bernstein's "Serenade for Violin" and works by Berio and Tschaikovsky.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144
JUN 28 1971

The Aisle Seat

Bernie Decker

It's a really big week, folks, as Mr. Sullivan was wont to say. Two of the finest theater groups in the country open their summer this week.

The Berkshire Theater Festival, Stockbridge, Mass., will open with a blockbuster cast — Hume Cronyn, Eli Wallach and his wife Anne Jackson — in "Promenade All," Wednesday night.

The Williamstown Theater will have a big name too, Frank Langella, in that romantic classic, "Cyrano," opening Thursday night.

Other openings, other shows: "Plaza Suite," Colonie Coliseum, Tuesday; "Adaptation-Next," Woodstock Playhouse, Woodstock, Tuesday; "Carousel," Mac-Haydn Theater, Chatham, Wednesday; "The Odd Couple," Twoers Hall Playhouse, Lake George, Tuesday; "I Do, I Do," Summertree Playhouse, Tannersville.

SWITCHING TO MUSIC, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open Friday night with Seji Ozawa conducting the Boston Symphony in an all-Bach program.

The Prague Madrigal Singers will sing tonight at 8:30 in Canfield Casino, Saratoga Springs. Blood, Sweat and Tears will perform Wednesday night at Saratoga Performing Arts Center, with Duke Ellington and his band there the next night and Al Hirt on Friday night.

Jacob's Pillow will have Edward Villella and Susan Hendl dancing, with the Cincinnati Ballet also on hand, beginning Tuesday.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 130,857
JUL 3 1971
New England Newsclip

—[United Press International Photo

Training at Tanglewood

Conductor Seiji Ozawa rehearses for the performance of Leonard Bernstein's "Serenade for Violin" at the Tanglewood shed in Lenox, Mass. The Berkshire Festival at Lenox runs for the next eight weeks.

POST
WALLINGFORD, CONN.
W. 7,920

JUN 24 1971 New England Newsclip

STARLIGHT FESTIVAL CHAMBER MUSIC, Yale Law School Courtyard, New Haven, June 29, 8:30 p.m., the Festival Quartet and Leo Rewinski, pianist, and Lou Coleman, soprano.

THE ENORMOUS ROOM, 211 Park St., New Haven, Kentucky Bluegrass with The Apple Country String Band on Fridays, 8:30 p.m. to midnight.

NEW HAVEN SYMPHONY in concert on the New Haven Green, June 25, 8 p.m., with Ann Diers, soprano, and Richard McKee, bass. Rain location is Sprague Hall, College and Wall Streets, New Haven.

EXIT COFFEEHOUSE, 425 College St., New Haven. June 25, folk music with Lou Murray, 9 p.m. June 26, Whiskey Blues Band, 9 p.m.

TANGLEWOOD BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL, Lenox, Mass. July 2, weekend prelude, 7 p.m. with Boston Symphony String Trio; selections by Bach, 9 p.m. July 3, 8:30 p.m. July 4, Michael Tilson Thomas, 2:30 p.m.

YALE SCHOOL OF MUSIC presents Yale Concerts in Norfolk summer series at the Music Shed, Norfolk, Conn. July 2, 8:30 p.m., selections by Bach, V. Williams and Brahms.

THE BERKSHIRE QUARTET, Music Mountain, Falls Village, Conn. ten concerts at 3 p.m. on Saturdays from July 3 to Sept. 4. Two Sunday concerts, July 11 and Aug. 1 at 4 p.m. (1-824-7126)

CONNECTICUT TRADITIONAL JAZZ CLUB presents Waldron Joseph and Freddie Kohlman with Galvanized Washboard Jazz Band, June 26, Holiday Inn, Meriden, 8:30 p.m.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUN 19 1971 New England Newsclip

Noted Symphony Is In Residence At Tanglewood

The first weekend of the 1971 Tanglewood season begins tomorrow with the Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. in the Shed. The Boston Symphony String Trio, Joseph Silverstein, Burton Fine and Jules Eskin and Robert Levin at the Harpsichord, will play music by Stamitz and Bach.

At 9 p.m., Seiji Ozawa will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Johann Christian Bach's Grand overture in D, followed by two works by Johann Sebastian Bach, "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6" and "Magnificat." Soloists will be Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum, David Clatworthy and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

The summer's first open rehearsal is Saturday morning at 10:30 a.m. These rehearsals are held every Saturday morning and benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund.

Saturday evening at 8:30 p.m., Seiji Ozawa conducts with soloists, Joseph Silverstein, violinist, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute. The program is Mozart's Serenade No. 12 for winds, "Nacht Musique," Bernstein's Seranade for violin, strings and percussion, Berio's Serenata and Tchaikovsky's Seranade in C. for strings.

Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony conducts Vivaldi's "The Seasons," and selections from Monteverid's "Vespro Della Beata Vergine" with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUL 3 1971 New England Newsclip

The Season Opens

Joel Librizzi

Brilliant Japanese conductor Seiji Ozawa, who last night opened the 1971 "big concert" season of the Berkshire Festival in the Shed at Tanglewood, here rehearses for tonight's performance of Leonard Bernstein's "Serenade for Violin" with soloist Joseph Silverstein, who is also the orchestra's concertmaster.

28

AMERICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
D. 40,675

JUL 7 1971 New England Newsclip

Varied Program Launches 34th Tanglewood Season

LENOX, Mass. — The first week-end of the 34th Tanglewood Festival year began with a varied program of works by composers as far afield as Claudio Monteverdi and Luciano Berio, who are separated by nearly four centuries.

Friday evening's concert, which was attended by 6,349 people, featured the works of two members of the Bach family—Johann Christian and his more famous father, Johann Sebastian Bach. Seiji Ozawa, in his first concert with the Boston Symphony as artistic director of Tanglewood, led the orchestra in J.C. Bach's Grand Overture in D and J.S. Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and Magnificat in D.

The highlight of the evening was the Magnificat, performed by the orchestra, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, and solo artists Carole Bogard, soprano; Rose Taylor, contralto; John McCollum, tenor, and David Clatworthy, bass. The solo instrumental parts were played by some of the most able members of the Boston Symphony. The Magnificat gave them the chance to display their virtuoso talent. The festival chorus, composed of students at the Berkshire Music Center, prepared this difficult and exacting piece of music under the guidance of John Oliver, director. Their performance was clear, clean and musical.

This first week of the festival lends itself to programming works which require fewer instruments. Tanglewood opens with a reduced orchestra, as many of the musicians do not arrive from Boston until the following week. This permits the intimacy necessary to perform such treats as Bach's Brandenburg and the program of serenades which was the theme for Saturday's night's concert.

Seiji Ozawa, again conducting, brought to the Tanglewood stage, for the first time, two works of the contemporary composers Leonard Bernstein and Luciano Berio, as well as two old favorites, Mozart's Serenade No. 12 in C minor for winds (K. 388) and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings (op. 48).

Composed in 1782 and subtitled "Nacht Musique," the Serenade by Mozart is unusually somber and melancholy. It was played, however, with a musical beauty and interest which marked the remainder of the program as well. Ozawa, although he has conducted the Boston Symphony many times, seemed particularly at home with the musicians in this piece as well as the others on the program, and the audience of 6,507 responded enthusiastically.

The Bernstein piece, a serenade in praise of love based on Plato's Symposium, featured violinist Joseph Silverstein, the Boston's concertmaster, and enthusiastic contributions by the string and percussion sections. It was a performance of varied moods, lyrical and exciting.

Berio's Serenato for flute and fourteen instruments, described by the composer as one of "the first examples of serial music which smiles a bit," was surprisingly lyrical for the tightly constructed abstract idiom in which it was written. Doriot Anthony Dwyer was outstanding in her performance of the exacting flute solo, although the interplay of the other instruments around the flute part also succeeded wonderfully.

The music and the sun combined on Sunday to make it a glorious afternoon for the 7,090 concert-goers who attended the culminating concert for the weekend. The theme of the program was Music for Venice, and works by Antonio Vivaldi and Claudio Monteverdi, over 100 years his predecessor, were performed with grace and beauty by the orchestra.

The rendering of Vivaldi's "The Four Seasons," concertos for violin and strings (op. 8), one of the 18th century composer's most popular pieces, was delightful and accomplished. The piece is one of the first examples of "program music," a style made popular later in the nineteenth century. The "Seasons" has an elaborate program, and Vivaldi himself annotated the score, describing the different events portrayed in the music. The events themselves revolve around Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter, and involve elements of nature and human activities during these seasons. The concertos are dramatic and imaginative, and are a joy to hear again and again.

Monteverdi's music from "Vespro della Beata Vergine," written in the first decade of the 17th century, is majestic and stately, and its performance ended the Tanglewood weekend on a jubilant note.

Monteverdi's music has been rarely performed since its original popularity three hundred years ago, primarily because his works have survived only in sketches of vocal parts and figured bass without instrumental scores, since most of the instrumental parts in those days were improvised by talented musicians rather than written down. However, with the advent quite recently of musical scholars capable of filling in the orchestral parts, his works have enjoyed renewed performance. Sunday's performance was a first for the Boston Symphony, and it was magnificent. Featured were solo singers Barbara Hocher, soprano; D'Anna Fortunato, mezzo-soprano; Bruce Brewer and Robert Owne Jones, tenors; Robert Shiesley, baritone; and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. Michael Tilson Thomas, Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducted.

Next weekend's concerts will feature three different conductors and works by Bartok, Hindemith, Mozart, Bach, Haydn, Brahms, Schubert, Schoenberg, and Chopin.

Friday, July 9, at 9 p.m., Leon Fleisher will make his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including Bartok's "Romanian Folk Dances," Hindemith's "Four Temperaments," with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento No. 15 (K. 287).

Michael Tilson Thomas returns Saturday evening, July 10, at 8:30 p.m., to conduct Bach's Suite No. 4, Haydn's Cello Concerto in C, with cellist Jules Eskin, and Brahms' Serenade No. 2.

Sunday afternoon, July 11, at 2:30 p.m., Italian composer-conductor Bruno Maderna will conduct performances of Schubert's Symphony No. 2, Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony (op. 9), and Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2, with Earl Wild as soloist.

SCM

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540

JUL 6 1971 New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Concert: 'Music for Venice'

By HARRY NEVILLE

LENOX — "Music for Venice" was the title of the Sunday afternoon program that completed the weekend concerts at Tanglewood. Conducting the Boston Symphony was Michael Tilson Thomas, who had chose for his program a familiar work of Vivaldi—"The Seasons"—and a little known one of Monteverdi—excerpts from "Vespro della Beata Vergine" for orchestra, chorus and soloists.

"The Seasons," one of the first great popular successes of the baroque revival, is so well known that its inclusion on programs nowadays produces shrugs among a lot of concert-goers. Surprisingly, this was its first complete performance by the Boston Symphony, and both conductor and violin soloist, Joseph Silverstein, brought such fresh feeling to the work that it came across almost with as much vividness as on first hearing.

The major work of the afternoon was Monteverdi's incredibly rich, varied and dramatic Vespers of 1610, from which Thomas chose a well balanced selection of five pieces ending with a stunning setting of the text of the "Magnificat." Thomas did quite an impressive job, and one was left wishing that he could have had the proper soloists, instruments and enough rehearsal time to do it up properly.

The Tanglewood Festival Chorus, trained by John Oliver, performed strongly, but the vocal soloists seemed ill at ease with the florid lines and ornaments, besides which pitch was a problem for some of them. All things considered, however, this was a splendid beginning to the season, one that engenders high hopes for the remainder of the festival.

BOSTON AFTER DARK
BOSTON, MASS.
W. 75,000

JUL 13 1971 New England Newsclip

A Tanglewood recipe: Foss with Italian sauce

BY STEVE ROBINSON

The Tanglewood concerts of Sunday July 4th and Wednesday July 7th included the only pre-Bach work scheduled this summer and the fourth performance of a piece just one year old.

It is important to point out that this coupling of music written before 1770 with very new music is the combination of the future. Very soon, perhaps before 1980, symphony orchestras, chamber groups of all kinds — together with record companies and radio stations — will begin to program very new and very old music almost exclusively. This will become the only way to save our musical institutions from the oblivion that everyone from Stockhausen to the head usher is predicting.

Michael Tilson Thomas understands that this extension of the repertoire at both ends is one way of invigorating the symphony orchestra. He has consistently conducted new music with the B.S.O. and on last Sunday he conducted five excerpts from the Vespers of 1610 by Claudio Monteverdi.

This grand work is Monteverdi all the way. The opening movement for full orchestra and chorus contains an underlying brass fanfare which is heard throughout. In the last movement Thomas placed a solo tenor at the rear of the shed for a tremendously effective antiphonal duet with a soloist on stage. The intricate ornamentation of each of the five movements was played and sung with great precision by the ensemble.

The concert opened with The Seasons by Vivaldi. Although it was obvious that most of the rehearsal time had been spent on the Monteverdi, violin soloist Joseph Silverstein gave his usual cleanly executed, tasteful performance.

The following Wednesday was the fourth performance of Map by Lukas Foss. Following performances this past year in France, Buffalo and New York, the composition was heard in the tent next to the main shed.

Map is a "musical game" for four "combatants," including Ed Flower, plucked instruments; Jan Williams, percussion; Jim Fulkerson, Brass instruments; and Paul Zukovsky, bowed instruments. The four musicians derive their sounds from tapes they made according to the composer's specifications in advance of the performance. (In this regard the piece is very much like Opus 1970 by Stockhausen). Depending on the type of taped sound emanating from a loudspeaker, a contest will either involve attacking together, stopping together or imitating a tape fragment. A player wins one of the 12 rounds (or innings) by successfully modifying the sound of the soloist via physical interference with his instrument. Besides traditional instruments like guitar, piano, violin, cello, tympani, etc., the performers had the option of using the Scotch crow call, ratchet, windshield wiper, musical say, toilet plunger and other instruments. The composer "kept score" on a blackboard at the rear of the tent.

For one hour the four players moved from one of the four regions to the next, stopping to play each of the twelve rounds. Although the audience knew the rules they didn't seem to be aware of what was really happening in terms of the game itself. In previous performances Foss didn't bother to gives the rules to the audience. He discovered that they tried in vain to figure out what was happening and that this detracted from their enjoyment of the sounds themselves. But here lies the essence of Map: sound itself.

In Map, Foss has created a "process" which enables four performers to create new and enjoyable sounds and sound combinations. I was not disturbed by the fact that — even given the rules — I could discern no logical ordering of them.

In future years composers will probably concern themselves less with order and form in music and more with new sonic discoveries. If this is true, then Map is a pioneer work.

Boston Symphony Launches Season At Tanglewood

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
JUL 3 1971
New England Newsclip

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — There were 5349 listeners at Tanglewood Friday night to help the Boston Symphony Orchestra begin its 34th Berkshire Festival. Bach provided the music, some of it indirectly.

It was a short program . . . in time, but not in substance. Memorable was the "Magnificat," one of Bach's best combinations of orchestra, chorus and vocal soloists.

It ended a program which started with a neat little "symphony" by Bach's "London" son followed by his Sixth Brandenburg Concerto. Both were illuminating, but as elevating as the "Magnificat."

Notable were the "Quia Respexit'' aria, which couples the second soprano, in this case sung by Rose Taylor, alto, and an oboe d'amore, played by Laurence Thorstenberg; the "Omnes Generatines" chorus (short but snappy); the "Et Misericorida" duet for tenor and soprano (John McCollum and Carole Bogard); the "Esurientes Implevit Bonis" tri for alto and two flutes, and the "Sicut Locutus Est" five-part fuge for chorus.

The "Magnificat" is a great work, not much more than a half-hour long. Some of its choral precision was lacking Friday, but the beauty of the vocal arias accompanied by obbligato solo winds or, most often, by a pair of cellos and a double bass, was fully in evidence.

For those who like Bach it was a nice warm evening.

Before intermission the vaunted string tone for which the Boston orchestra is justly famous paid tribute to two Bachs, father and son, Johann Sebastian and his 11th and youngest surviving son, Johann Christian, the "London" Bach.

Nowadays the rococo writings of J. C. are enjoyed for their light happiness and for their tidy blend of an extension of father J. S.'s profound art which preceded them and the inventions of followed them.

Bach Senior's contribution to the early part of the program was his Brandenburg Concerto No. 6, the one which produces such great sounds without violins or wind instruments.

Ozawa filled it with a rise and fall of internal dynamics as well as the terraced volumes which are written

The prelude program which opened the evening at 7 offered three of the orchestra's first-chair players with three baroque sonatas, two by Bach, and one by his contemporary, Stamitz.

The sonata in D by Bach for Cello and Harpsichord left the biggest impression with me, perhaps because of the opening slow movement, which in the hands of Jules Eskin, was truly eloquent.

Eskin's cello produced a perfect tone, I think, for Bach: clean, delicate and highly sensitive.

Joseph Silverstein's violin was also well placed for Bach's undulating melodies and for similar reasons. I have never heard a strident note from his fiddle, nor one that sounded forced. He played the Sonata in A for Violin and Harpsichord.

The opening Stamitz Sonata in D for Viola D'Amore and Harpsichord was played neatly and expressively by Burton Fine, although the piece was not overly impressive.

The antique viola d'amore, although of academic interest with its dry tone and drone strings, is not an instrument to excite jaded contemporary tastes.

Robert Levin, who often performs with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, carried off his harpsichord chores with a craftsmanship too often obscured by the more prominent instruments he accompanied Tonight the program will offer four serenades, one by Mozart for winds, one by Bernstein for solo violin and orchestra, one by Berio for flute and 14 instruments and one by Tchaikovsky for strings.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
JUL 3 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Opener -- 'Impressive Start'

By RICHARD CONWAY

The 34th Berkshire Music Festival opened last night at Tanglewood featuring the music of the Bach Family. Even the Weekend Prelude program which preceded the regular concert was dominated by the music of J. S. Bach.

It was almost too much of a good thing.

But if Bach's music is your kind of music, you should not have missed last night's programs. The soloists and orchestra gave the great Baroque master's works sensitive interpretation.

The Weekend Prelude program featured three, first - chair players of the Boston Symphony string section: Joseph Silverstein, violin; Burton Fine, viola d'amore; and Jules Eskin, cello.

Fine, using the viola d'amore, a seven - stringed tenor viol with a particularly sweet and tender tone, performed Stamitz' "Sonata in D" for that instrument and harpsichord.

Stamitz, a contemporary of J. S. Bach, deserves to have his music played more often. He is unfortunately overshadowed by the two giants of his day — Bach and Handel.

Both Silverstein and Eskin played works by Bach. Silverstein performing the "Sonata in A for violin and harpsichord," and Eskin the "Sonata in D for cello and harpsichord."

Eskin's performance was the more outstanding. The opening Adagio movement had some beautifully, long - breathed, melodic lines, and the interplay between cello and harpsichord in the last section was a pure delight.

Robert Levin at the harpsichord gave excellent support to the solo instruments, never being obtrusive but allowing his instrument to sing as the score gave it the opportunity to do so.

The opening work of the concert proper was Johann Christian Bach's "Grand Overture in D, Op. 18, No. 4." This was its first performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It should be heard more often.

The music of this youngest son of the great J. S. Bach was widely acclaimed in its own day. No less a genius than Mozart was greatly influenced by his work.

Firnest Work

The finest performance of the evening in this critic's opinion came with the playing of the J. S. Bach "Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B flat."

Scored for the unusual combination of violas, cellos, basses, and harpsichord, it is a marvelous handling of these somber sonorities. Appropriately, it was played by only a small string section of eight violas, five cellos, and two double basses, with continuo.

The small orchestra handled it with exquisite delicacy. Especially lovely was the second movemment for two viola parts and cello.

The major work of the evening was Bach's brilliant "Magnificat in D." This is a simply stunning piece, and it was given a fine performance by conductor Seiji Ozawa, the Boston Orchestra, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, which had been prepared by John Oliver.

Standing in a mixed formation, that is, with male and female voices intermingled rather than placed in sections, the chorus sang with rich tone and crisp precision. Two sections were particularly well done: the women's trio "Suscepit Israel," and the following fugal "Sicut locutus est."

Soloists Carole Bogard, soprano; Rose Taylor, contralto; John McCollum, tenor; and David Clatworthy, bass, sang expressively and interpretively.

The evening was an impressive beginning for the Tanglewood season.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 130,857
JUL 3 1971
New England Newsclip

Ozawa Opens Tanglewood — Bach Now, Montverdi Sunday

By RUTHANNE DEVLIN
Times Staff Writer

LENOX, Mass. — A program of music by Bach opened this summer's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood last night, and Seiji Ozawa proved to be an interesting if not unusual interpreter of his works.

What other conductors traditionally take slowly he took at faster tempos, and vice versa, especially in the Magnificat. Sometimes his speed achieved an effect of molten, undulating strings, as in the first movement of the Brandenburg sixth concerto. Or, as in the Grand Overture in D, his aim was to display the Boston Symphony Orchestra players in pursuit of virtuosic fireworks.

Whether or not you agree with his tempos is perhaps irrelevant to the effect the young wunderkind conductor has on an audience.

Ozawa, smiling, shoots through the stage door, catapulted towards the podium. Appreciative applause begins immediately, but Ozawa — dressed in the black bell bottoms, white turtleneck sweater and white double-brested blazer that have become his symbols — turns almost immediately to getting on with the business of making music.

In his early 30s, Ozawa is liberated from an overdose of conventional podium movements, yet he doesn't seem to take flight like Bernstein. When asking the musicians for sweep and grandeur, Ozawa's message telegraphs through his fingertips which ripple in little waves above the players' heads.

First Nighter

* * *

Bach wrote his six Brandenburg concerti in response to a commission from a musical prince of Brandenburg, Christian Ludwig. The less-heard sixth which was played last night complements the more famous third concerto. Where Bach had stressed the incisive tone of violins, in the sixth he emphasize the darker characteristic coloring of the prevailing violas.

And prevail they did, occasionally to where the two celli and double bass were swamped in the shimmering tide of violins. Generally, though, the Brandenburg went very well, and with beautiful legatos played by the viola soloists. The effect was hypnotic.

The Magnificat provided several surprises. Soloists Carole Bogard, Rose Taylor, John McCollum and David Clatworthy and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus joined the BSO for the exultant hymn to the glory of God.

It was in the Magnificat that Ozawa manipulated the tempos to the point where one never know quite what to expect. Miss Taylor took her arias a little too slowly, despite Ozawa's urging for more speed, and because of her slowness she used some disconcerting spots.

Bass David Clatworthy had trouble with a rattle in his voice, but for most part everyone sounded very dramatic.

There is much talk at Tanglewood of Sunday's concert of Vivaldi's "The four seasons" and Monteverdi's "Vespers Music." Take a lunch along and sit on the grass to enjoy the concert, if you like. Casualness is de riguere at Tanglewood, and Sunday afternoons are glorious.

The concert begins at 2:30 p.m.

30

Safford

A dream for summer gypsies

THE MOST IDYLLIC place in New England, outside of Little Compton, is Lenox, Mass. Resting high in the Berkshires, with lovely old houses and elms in great number arching to the sky, the town and surrounding countryside is exactly what you would like to remember your own home town as being.

Just down the road from Lenox lies Tanglewood, site of the Berkshire Music Center and the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival —as if you did not know. Last weekend, under cloudless skies the Tanglewood season got under way.

It was some time in doing so. Not until Michael Tilson Thomas took the podium Sunday afternoon, after Friday and Saturday evening concerts conducted by Seiji Ozawa, did matters begin to perk musically.

You must continue to admire the young man's manner. He saved the weekend's lasting impression with his assurance and an abundance of precise cues. This was of utmost importance in the five sections from Monteverdi's Vespers of 1610 performed.

The work is magnificent and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, soloists and orchestra brought it off extremely well. It is filled with terrifying tempo changes, seemingly in every third measure or so, but the conductor had his forces wonderfully alert. To his right were a brass and wind ensemble and an antiphonal solo violin, to his left a fairly large string section. The total effect was gorgeous, even when the chorus' diction was only so-so.

Soloists in good form

Soloists were all in good form, with tenors Bruce Brewer and Robert Owen Jones outstanding during the Gloria's antiphon, Jones singing from the rear of the music shed. The audience inside, and out on verdant lawn, appeared to love every note.

Before Monteverdi came Vivaldi's The Four Seasons. After the Virtuosi di Roma's glowing performance here last fall you might have expected the much larger orchestra to be too large. But no. Under Thomas it played warmly, with nuance and accuracy. Joseph Silverstein was the violin soloist, offering a tone production which was sweet and not overly ripe. Throughout the concert Robert Levin's amplified harpsichord was a pleasurable addition.

Because Sunday afternoon was that satisfying it was the more consternating to hear Ozawa's under-rehearsed sounding two prior concerts. Friday evening had Bach, father Johann Sebastian and number 11 son, Johann Christian. The elder's sixth Brandenburg Concerto was mushy and his Magnificat, although chorally well prepared by John Oliver, repeatedly lacked unity. Of the four soloists, soprano Carole Bogard was in best voice. Her "Quia respexit," with Ralph Gomberg's oboe obbligato, was a model of interpretation.

New seats for the shed

Saturday's program was filled with serenades, by Mozart, Leonard Bernstein, Luciano Berio and Tchaikovsky. A wind octet in Mozart's Nachtmusik might have performed better without conductor.

The Bernstein, a tedious, self-indulgent score did have the help of Silverstein's beautiful phrasing, as Berio's rather early serial study was aided by Doriot Anthony Dwyer's pearly flute tone, as well as her commanding technical facility. Not until the thrice-familiar Tchaikovsky Serenade for Strings did things fall into place. This was a legitimate piece of work from every point, including the conductor's.

Incidentally, as of last summer the music shed had comfortable new wooden seats, an improvement.

TANGLEWOOD: The setting is half the enjoyment.

Berkshire Festival Opens at Tanglewood

By LAURIE MODELL

This past weekend marked the opening of Tanglewood 1971, the 34th season of the Berkshire Festival, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of William Steinberg.

* * *

Located in Lenox, Mass., in the heart of the Berkshire Mountains, Tanglewood is a gorgeously green estate of 210 acres housing the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony's summer school for the advanced study of music, and also the home of the Festival of Contemporary Music, a summertime forum for new works.

Saturday's concert (the second of the season) was conducted by Artistic Director Seiji Ozawa, Japanese-born director of the San Francisco Symphony. the evening opened with Mozart's Serenade No. 12 in C minor for Winds, K. 388, which despite its key of C minor (thought to be a thundering key ever since Beethoven immortalized it in his Fifth), seemed gently and reflectively somber, never angry.

Written in 1782 and subtitled "Nacht musique", it is one of a large number of Mozart's so-called "party pieces", commissioned works for members of Austrian society. Despite a jarring wrong note in the first chord, the piece was beautifully and warmly played. Mr. Ozawa's supple, quick-moving hands highlighted a wealth of delicately shaded moods and, in fact, on occasion seemed almost to be dancing.

* * *

Next on the program was a most thrilling performance of Leonard Bernstein's Serenade for violin and string orchestra, (loosely) based on Plato's Symposium, a Greek dialogue on love. Featuring councertmaster Joseph Silverstein as soloist, the piece displayed Mr. Bernstein's astonishing gift as a composer. At one poignant and driving (more a fistfight at times than a dialogue), jazzy and lyrical, the piece was spellbinding.

Mr. Silverstein's playing was both piercing and lovely throughout, and Mr. Ozawa was completely at home in the intricacies of Bernstein's syncopated jazz rhythms. Interestingly enough, the program notes were provided by Bernstein himself and contained a somewhat defensive justification of the use of jazz motifs in a piece based on an ancient Greek dialogue. It seems to me that the piece (a brilliant work musically) would have done equally well without the program notes which served to some extent as a limit on the imagination.

* * *

Following intermission, the orchestra played Serenata for Flute and Fourteen Instruments (1957) by Luciano Berio, an example of the type of music a great number of composers since Schoenberg have endeavored to write. Called serial or 12-tone music, its structure (at its most simplistic) calls for all of the 12 available notes to be used in sequence before the repetition of any.

Despite the fact that the year is 1971, I must confess to having a 19th century-trained ear to some extent (possibly due to overexposure to 19th century music), and the difficulty of understanding the "new music" is in trying to fit it into a frame of reference of sound to which it does not readily apply. I kept trying to find an identifiably (perhaps typical) melody line and of course, due to the structure, I kept hearing bits and pieces of melody that gave one a feeling of abstraction and fragmentation and, to this listener, little continuity.

* * *

After the Berio and a brief pause, Mr. Ozawa reappeared, dashed to the podium and swept the orchestra into a 19th century favorite, the Tchaikovsky Serenade in C for strings. It is possible to hear this piece as a sort of half-memory; half because it reminds one of an era of elegance and romance that probably never existed except on paper. As such, it has the capacity to reawaken the optimism and romanticism in the most hardened 20th century city-dweller. It made for a beautiful finish to an evening at Tanglewood.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUL 5 1971

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
S. 207,211
JUL 11 1971
New England Newsclip

THE KANSAS CITY STAR
KANSAS CITY, MO.
D. 325,351 SUN. 396,682
JUL 11 1971

Berkshire Podium Stars

By Joseph Kaye
The Star's New York Correspondent

Lenox, Mass.—Monteverdi triumphed at the opening of the Tanglewood festival here some days ago, and with him triumphed Michael Tilson Thomas, the new star conductor. At the final concert of the first week-end, Thomas conducted Monteverdi's "Vespro della Beata Vergine," for chorus, soloists and orchestra, and it was a performance that brought an ovation from the largest audience (more than 7,000) of the opening series. From the heralding brasses at the beginning of the large work, the audience was under the spell of the 17th Century master and his 20th Century interpreter.

Thomas can be said to be the new Leonard Bernstein. He is the associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, which has its summer concerts here, and with a remarkable quickness he has become one of the most popular and glamorous of symphonic conductors. He is a slender, intense young man of 26 who has that electric personality on the podium that assures success.

Michael Tilson Thomas is a grandson of Boris Thomashevsky, who was the celebrated musical comedy star of the old immigrant Yiddish theater. He is also related to the widow of Paul Muni, who also began in the Yiddish theater and became a famous film actor. But Thomas is the far opposite of his grandfather. Thomashevsky was known for the utterly commercial musicals he produced and played in, all with more than a touch of vulgarity. In one of his productions, for example, a family reunion at a home Sabbath service ended with the Stars and Stripes being lowered in the background as a grand patriotic finale. His grandson, by acute contrast, is an exponent of avant garde music and has an equal devotion to the early classics—a musical aesthete.

For the first half of the program Thomas conducted that lovely Baroque collection by Antonio Vivaldi, "The Four Seasons," with affectionate warmth. But when he came to the featured Monteverdi work his theatrical heritage came through. He became a changed personality, conducting the Vespers as though they were an opera, as indeed, they almost are. Where he was restrained in the Vivaldi, he was a dramatic and spectacular leader in the Monteverdi. Perhaps he is destined to achieve his greatest fame in the lyric theater.

Ozawa's Inning

Seiji Ozawa, the co-director (with Gunther Schuller) of the festival and its school for advanced students, the Berkshire Music Center, conducted the first two concerts of the opening week. He included in his programs four firsts, either for the Boston Symphony or for the festival—the C.P.E. Bach "Grand Overture" in D, a bright and attractive piece, the choral Magnificat in D of J. S. Bach, Leonard Bernstein's 1954 "Serenade after Plato's Symposium," for violin and string orchestra with percussion, and Luciano Berio's 1957 Serenata for flute and 14 instruments. The latter piece was interesting mainly because of the playing of the Boston Symphony's comely first flute, Doriot Anthony Dwyer. Perhaps in a much smaller auditorium than Tanglewood's 5,000-seat shed, Berio's music might sound better than it did on this occasion.

Bernstein's serenade is an elaborate work. He describes it: "The music, like Plato's dialogue, is a series of related statements in praise of love." This you would never know from hearing it. And it would not be out of order to dismiss the piece as pretentious.

Ozawa, another of the electric podium personalities, conducted his music with brilliance and emotional fervor. Altogether, the three initial concerts were refreshingly different from the normally conventional repertoire that prevails at Tanglewood.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
JUL 7 1971 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood, Music Mt.

Berkshire festivals begin

By Louis Snyder

Lenox, Mass.

Music and glorious weather came to the Berkshires and their foothills over the holiday weekend. The Boston Symphony began its 34th Berkshire Festival with Friday and Saturday night, and Sunday afternoon concerts at Tanglewood; while in Connecticut, Yale in Norfolk opened a chamber orchestra and opera series on Friday evening, and the Berkshire Quartet started its 42nd summer on Music Mountain at Falls Village on Saturday afternoon.

At Tanglewood, programming for the first two weeks reflects the absence of a segment of the orchestra which plays the Esplanade Concerts back in Boston—in fact there were only eight wind players plus Seiji Ozawa on the roomy Shed stage to open Saturday's proceedings—but the presence on Friday and Sunday of the large and vocally opulent Tanglewood Festival Chorus, which John Oliver has conjured up in short order, helped fill the wide open spaces on the platform. In the audience, for the three concerts, there was a total of almost 20,000, with the shining, breezy Sunday accounting for 7,090 of them.

Bach to Berio

Mr. Ozawa was conductor of the evening concerts (Friday's "Music of the Bach Family," and Saturday's "Concert of Serenades"), both of which seemed more promising on paper than they were in actuality. Johann Christian Bach's Grand Overture in D, and his father Johann Sebastian's Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 are both stimulating pieces of music, and the J.S. Bach "Magnificat in D" another wonderful evocation through voices and instruments of religious faith and humility. But on this occasion neither the performances nor the works themselves seemed to establish much contiguity. As the evening's "major" work, the "Magnificat" had its most impressive moments during the choral passages, and in the playing of orchestral soloists. Surprisingly, none of the quartet of able singers made a truly memorable impression in this music.

In the evening of Serenades, perhaps deromanticized somewhat by an icy tinge in the air, two teen-age works—Leonard Bernstein's 1954 Serenade for violin, strings, and percussion, and Luciano Berio's Serenata for flute and 14 instruments (1957) — were bracketed by Mozart's "Nacht Musique" (his Serenade No. 12 in C minor for winds), and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for strings. Mainly a delectable concept, handsomely realized by the divided forces, and by concertmaster Joseph Silverstein (the Bernstein), and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist in the Berio.

Mr. Bernstein's piece (a festival first) has "no literal program" according to the composer's program note, although it is based on Plato's "Symposium," a varied "series of related statements in praise of love." There are five of these, obviously worked over by Mr. Bernstein at his most learned, but if music indeed be the food of love, this plays on too long.

'Music for Venice'

Vivaldi's "The Seasons," in its first complete performance by the BSO, and five excerpts from Monteverdi's "Vespers of the Blessed Virgin" made up Michael Tilson Thomas's Sunday afternoon program, "Music for Venice." In the first, Mr. Silverstein was again the soloist, the violinist for all seasons; in the second, the Tanglewood Chorus and six solo singers (soprano Barbara Hocher; mezzo D'Anna Fortunato; tenors Bruce Brewer and Robert Owen Jones; baritones David Clatworthy and Robert Shiesley), Robert Levin, harpsichord, and Berj Zamkochian, organ, joined with the orchestra in the first 1971 performance of real Tanglewood proportions.

Charming, classic

Shall we just say "The Seasons" ran its charming, inevitable course in an orderly, classic way, without the nuances (not gimmicks) which distinguish a sensitive reading from a surprisingly literal one?

On the other hand, the Monteverdi "Vespro" music as Mr. Thomas, Mr. Oliver's chorus, the orchestra, and the soloists conveyed it (also for the first time at BSO concerts) was an enormous experience obviously born of the application of tremendous effort and enthusiasm. Aside from the fact that the music itself presents an astonishing spectrum of compositional prophecy, the basic approach by Mr. Thomas was lucid, spare, and entirely revelatory of the beauties of a score in which effects for their own sake are not the first consideration.

One will wait quite a while to be in the presence again of anything like the "Duo seraphim" passage for two tenors, baritone, and chorus, the "Sonata sopra Sancta Maria" for sopranos, or the final echoing "Gloria Patri," when, under almost ideal circumstances, the concept of sound and feeling of quite another time than ours was almost unmistakably recreated. It is not everyone who can so accurately envision this, and so deftly bring it into being. For which thanks to Mr. Thomas and his colleagues are joined with those of a moved, warmly responsive audience.

ARTS
ENTERTAINMENT

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 210,540
JUL 5 1971 New England Newsclip

34th Berkshire Festival

Music: Tanglewood Opens

By HARRY NEVILLE

LENOX—The 34th annual Berkshire Festival is under way here at Tanglewood, signaling the beginning of a busy summer music season.

The summer festivals naturally and quite rightly stress the pleasures of an outdoors ambience, and although music amid pastoral settings has its acoustical drawbacks, no one here this weekend seemed to mind in the least.

With several of the Boston Symphony players in Boston for the final week of Esplanade concerts, the initial concerts were devoted to works for small orchestra or chamble ensembles. Te The opening program consisted of music by Johann Christian and Johann Sebastian Bach—the former's Grand Overture in D, the latter's Sixth Brandenburg Concerto and Magnificat.

Seiji Ozawa conducted and the high point of the evening was the J. C. Bach Overture, which turned out to be a three-movement work built very much along the lines of a symphony.

THE ORCHESTRA gave an elegant reading, reserved and yet full of grace and charm—qualities that were pretty much absent from the Sixth Brandenburg Concerto that followed. The work's low-lying register presents textural problems that were only compounded by the Shed's somewhat muddy acoustics.

The Magnificat suffered from something less than total rapport between conductor and chorus. It was easy to gain the impression that the chorus had been trained at tempos somewhat different from those used by Ozawa.

In any event, this listener rebelled at some of Ozawa's speeds: a too-slow "Omnes generationes" and a rushed "Et misericordia." Soprano Carole Bogard, tenor John McCollum and bass David Clatworthy gave able accounts of the solos. Contralto Rose Taylor was outstanding by virtue a rich voice and affecting musicianship.

Saturday night was billed as "A Concert of Serenades," with examples of this genre from the pens of Mozart, Tchailovsky, Leonard Bernstein and Luciano Berio. Mozart's Serenade No. 12 provided the occasion for some resplendent playing by the BSO winds. The remainder of the orchestra took the spotlight in Bernstein's Serenade for violin and string orchestra with percussion.

THE COMPOSER identifies this work as being "after Plato's Symposium," a helpful clue since without it one might suppose Edgar Guest's poetry to have been its inspiratioon. Not even concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, who performed the solo part, could make this material eloquent.

Berio's Serenata for flute and 14 instruments says much that is genuinely eloquent, but nearly all of the work's subtlety and delicacy was wasted in an auditorium as large as the Shed. The difficulties of the solo part posed no problem for Doriot Anthony Dwyer, who should be persuaded to repeat the performance in a more adequate setting.

A brilliant performance of Tchaikovsky's Serenade for Strings closed the program. This is the kind of rich, lush score that comes across best at Tanglewood. Ozawa gave an enormously appealing reading, one that was dramatic and sensuous and yet always firmly under control.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,200
JUL 9 1971 New England Newsclip

Berkshire Festival

Tanglewood Launches 34th Annual Season

By Martha deB Beaver

The 34th Berskhire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox opened this past weekend on Friday evening at 9:00 with a program devoted to the works of father and son, Johann Sebastian and Johann Christian Bach.

At 7:00 the more intimate and customary bonus Weekend Prelude featured three baroque sonatas for solo viola d'amore by Stamitz, cello and violin by J.S. Bach, all accompanied by harpsichord. Principals Burton Fine, Jules Eskin and Joseph Silverstein were the string performers with Robert Levin at the harpsichord.

J.C. Bach's Grand Overture in Dmajor began the Big Shed program conducted by artistis co-director Seiji Ozawa, and proved to be the most inspired work of the evening. In three movements in structure differing little from the symphonic foverture and symphony titles were interchangeable for the 'London" Bach) the overture was elegantly displayed with singular charm and wit, its inherent qualities those that the young Mozart emulated in some of his uniquely conceived music.

The Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 of J.S. Bach didn't fare as well. At first it seemed to be the tempo, but closer searching revealed a muddy texture in the first movement's swiftly paced melodic subjects, (partially acoustical) and lack of motivating force that impels the music forward in its instrumental interchange and development. Scored for violas, two viola da gamba, cello and bass, the work's color is dark and low-pitched. We felt little contrast among the middle and lower pitched instruments, and thought Ozawa himself was charging the latter too forcefully to allow this.

A magnificent, brief and concise work, vocally demanding, J.S. Bach's Magnificat sounded more like another rehearsal (there are always too few for chorus and instrumentalists) with differences of opinion as to tempo still unresolved.

But the music's appeal could be appreciated, the soloists in fine vocal excellence, soprano Carole Bogard, contralto Rose Taylor especially moving in her musically fervent solo accompanied by flutes and pizzicato strings; tenor John McCullum's fulsome voice in his Deposuit potentes, and bass David Clatworthy's duet Et misericordia, a bit rushed for the best effect in achieving the most ethereal quality from muted strings and flutes. Balance of sound in the chorus was well-tempered but one feels too overpowering for the size of the reduced orchestra. Articulation was varied, and will no doubt become more exact as choral and orchestral directors have the opportunity to work with the group.

A Concert of Serenades filled Saturday night's program, again directed by Ozawa, with Mozart's uniquely characteristic Cminor No. 12, K.388 "Nacht Musique" a splendidly dramatic setting for prinicpal and assistant wind players, its introspective mood dispelled only at the close of the final movement, the theme in Cmajor ending the four diverse sections on a happy note.

An entirely different mood pervaded Leonard Bernstein's Serenade (after Plato's Symposium) for violin and string orchestra with percussion. Joseph Silverstein's eloquent playing made the most of the composer's simply contrived exposition, which never reached the emotional heights or compositional intricacies suggested by his inspiration, dissertation on ohe different aspects of love, the lover and beloved.

Berio's Seranata for flute (Doriot Anthony Dwyer) and 14 instruments was both lucid and inventively fertile, serially structured but nonetheless melodic, compact and constantly compelling.

Topping the program was a brilliant performance of Tzchaikowsky's Serenade in C for strings with its harmonic lushness marking the beginning and ending, the first movement, according to the composer, a homage to Mozart. The audience was more than enthusiastic, recalling Ozawa many times.

32

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

JUL 7 1971

New England Newsclip

The Sound of Music

Tanglewood: Music for a Midsummer Weekend

By Peter M. Knapp

The 1971 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox opened serenely with a trio of programs for small orchestra over the holiday weekend. It is the second year of the Boston Symphony Tanglewood triumvirate — ~~Seiji Ozawa~~ and Gunther Schuller, co-artistic directors, and Leonard Bernstein, advisor — and while the first two weekends used to be reserved mainly for music of Bach and Mozart, the programmers have loosened reliance on these two masters and produced concerts arranged around unifying themes.

Sunday afternoon's program, for example, was called "Music for Venice" and Michael Tilson Thomas, the BSO's associate conductor, went back to the 17th century for music by Antonio Vivaldi and Claudio Monteverdi. Attended on a glistening summer afternoon, continuing a run of beautiful weather for the outdoor concerts in Tanglewood's Music Shed.

Fortunately, the program matched the beauty of the day. There were two substantial works: Vivaldi's cycle of violin concerti, "The Seasons" for which Joseph Silverstein was soloist, and selections from Monteverdi's grand-scaled "Vespro Della Beata Vergine."

Fresh-Sounding 'Seasons'

In the Vivaldi, Thomas employed a rather large body of strings but drew ravishing sound and finely-tuned balances from them. It was not exactly a baroque sound (nor were perhaps some of the details) but there were many thoughtful and fresh-sounding episodes. Robert Levin's harpsichord continuo coming through the ensemble surprisingly well, contributed a number of fine touches.

Here and there one might find some quibbles — for example, the rather slow version of "Allegro" Thomas chose for the concluding section of "Spring" in which the momentum tended to drift. But over-all it was a sensitive performance — not least due to Silverstein's deft, nimble and lyric playing. In particular, one might cite the furious presto movement of "Summer" and the first two movements of "Winter," the latter including the famous pizzicato background.

However, it was the Monteverdi that rightfully capped the weekend. Bringing early 17th century (about 1610) ecclesiastical music to a summer festival in itself is an act of faith — but it worked resoundingly. Monteverdi's "Vespers" contain an astonishing amount of invention. This is music of great splendor, imposing in musical architecture and startling in effect.

Accomplishment of Grandeur

There is more than majestic pious polyphony here, as the composer employs soloists, a large orchestra (divided by Thomas into basic units of strings and brass, chorus and organ. There are plainchant, homophonic and polyphonic choral passages, antiphonal effects — the works.

All this comes to a magnificent climax in the "Magnificat," a work truly fit for the Venetian riches of the period and deserving of comparison with Bach's Magnificat in D (heard here Friday evening).

The performance captured this grandeur, with Thomas controlling his large forces with masterly precision. Somehow he managed to create a kind of echoing, Catheral acoustic. And in one daring effect he had one tenor at the far end of the shed engage in antiphonal singing with the second tenor on stage — all with perfect timing.

The Tanglewood Festival Chorus sang beautifully, as did the soloists — soprano Barbara Hocher, mezzo D'Anna Fortunato, tenors Bruce Brewer and Robert Owen Jones (who deserve special mention for their finesse in the difficult trills, frills and repeated notes of "duo seraphim clamabant"), and baritones David Clatworthy and Robert Shiesley.

Saturday evening, Seiji Ozawa directed a concert of serenades heard by 6,507 on a clear but shivery night. This pleasurable program spanned three centuries of music designed to enhance a midsummer's night.

The serenades divided into two pairs each for strings and winds — Leonard Bernstein's Serenade (after Plato's "Symposium") for Violin and String Orchestra With Percussion (1954) and Tchaikovsky's familiar Serenade in C. for Strings; Mozart's Serenade No. 12 in c minor for Winds, K. 388, and Lucino Berio's Serenata for Flute and 14 Instruments (1957). The program was expertly played and conducted, and wound up in a lush display of Boston Symphony string elegance and precision in the Tchaikovsky.

The Mozart serenade is a gem among the composer's treasure chest of wind music. Darker in mood than most of his wind music, it is a masterpiece for its inspiration in formal writing as well as for Mozart's customary melodic and harmonic invention.

The minuet with its close canonic writing is one example — Mozart using strict imitation while making it sound spontaneous and natural. And as ever, the composer blended and contrasted superbly the varying timbres of his instruments — pairs of oboes, clarinets, bassoons and horns. The performance was well paced, sensibly phrased and made good use of contrasting dynamic levels.

Sweet Discourses

The Bernstein piece relates to sections of the Platonic dialogue in praise of love, though without a literal program, the composer states. The solo violin spins out long, sweet discourses filled in by large string orchestra with touches of percussion.

Bernstein's writing is melodic, sensuous, violinistic and appropriate to the intent of the piece until the last movement, which seems to disintegrate in a confusion of styles — jazz, blues, broadway, movie soundtrack — you name it. Along the way, one may detect such influences as Copland and Stravinsky. Joseph Silverstein, the Boston Symphony's concertmaster, was the brilliant soloist.

So was Doriot Anthony Dwyer, in a slick white pantsuit, in the wide-ranging flute solos of the Berio Serenata. Here, the traditions observed by Bernstein dissolve, and what is left is a nocturnal mood of serial pointillism.

Like a nightingale in a jungle, the solo flute trills, flutters and sings angular tunes against a background of orchestral twitters, chirps and growls. The work is not without its poetry, but seemed to linger too long (like the last movement of the Bernstein) despite Mrs. Dwyer's extraordinary artistry.

Music of the Bach family was the theme for Friday night's opening concert, conducted by Ozawa before 6,349 on a fair and cool evening. There were the Grand Overture in D, Opus 18, No. 4, of Johann Christian Bach (the London Bach), and two works by his father, the great Johann Sebastian — Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and the Magnificat in D.

The "Overture," or small-scale symphony, is a pleasant, unpretentious work of the 1780's with some gallant flourishes and little depth. Scored for strings, winds and timpani, the piece works from a simple melodic base spiced by occasional harmonic and rhythmic surprises, and it was played with trim vigor.

Unfortunately, neither the Brandenburg nor the Magnificat were. The Brandenburg Concerto embarrassingly began with a poor attack and both rhythm and intonation were unsteady for some time. Nor were the contrapuntal strands notably lucid in this masterful work for low-string textures.

Muddy Lines

It is not a simple concerto to play, with its continual interweaving of voices, especially for the modern rich-toned stringed instruments, and the performance as a whole suffered from muddied lines.

The splendid choral-solo Magnificat ("My soul doth magnify the Lord") opened at a racy clip, and Ozawa kept tempi consistently at a speed faster than comfortable for the large Tanglewood Festival Chorus, which sang enthusiastically but made gumbo of lines and text. The soloists — soprano Carole Bogard, contralto Rose Taylor, Tenor John McCollum and bass David Clatworthy — were placed Tanglewood -style between the chorus and the orchestra, and in this case there were some problems of projection.

It was not altogether stimulating Bach, though one should single out the positive contributions of the trumpets, the oboe d' Amore Obbligato of Lawrence Thorstenberg and Wayne Rapier in "Quia Respexit", and tenor McCollum's firm, unflinching singing of "Deposuit Potentes."

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

JUL 5 1971

New England Newsclip

Monteverdi's Vespers Hit of Tanglewood's Weekend

By R.C. HAMMERICH

LENOX —It began to become apparent at the Boston Symphony Orchestra open rehearsal at Tanglewood Saturday morning that some 360 year old music scheduled for the Sunday performance would become the big hit of the opening weekend of the 37th year of the Berkshire Restival.

Thomas Conducts

The sounds were by Monteverdi of Mantua —five excerpts from his vespers, a collection of instrumental and vocal inventions that contained hints of most of the western world's subsequent music.

The suspicion was well founded; the music was full of beauty as well as drama almost medieval and almost modern, austere and colorful, rare and familiar.

And the performance, under the direction of the youthful Michael Tilson Thomas was balanced, spirited, paced with exact appropriateness, tasteful, full of bite.

One of the reasons the vespers may not be performed often, aisde from their distance in time, is their intricate contrapuntal structure.

Superb Performance

The music is not easy and the performance showed evidence that the chorus had spent much time in preparation (perhaps at the expense of Bach's "Magnificat" which it sang Friday).

The elements include forceful passages of volume as well as quiet, floating measures for soft sopranos and unaccompanied plainchant sections for tenors and basses.

Frequently there are opportunities for a small brass choir to buttress the voices (choral or duet or trio) with closely woven harmonies much like ancient fanfares.

There are many moments calling for the interweaving and interlocking of soloists and sections of orchestra or chorus that never let the attention flag, and the performance Sunday was superb.

Vivaldi's "Seasons"

The first half of the program consisted of a 45 minute performance of Vivaldi's famous "Seasons," a series of four baroque concertos for solo violin and string orchestra.

Boston has perhaps the ideal orchestra to have a go at "The Seasons." Its string section is probably unsurpassed in its blend of agility of expression, substance of tone and precision of execution. (Of course there are others to equal it.)

Its concertmaster, Joseph Silverstein, has the nicety of tone and the non-aggressive virtuosity appropriate to the solo part, and Thomas shaped the music intelligently and gracefully.

He varies his podium stance substantially according to the style of the music, and for the Vivaldi he was appropriately subdued.

The performance of "The Seasons" was, to put it simply, beautiful.

Four Styles

Saturday night Seija Ozawa conducted four orchestral groups from the orchestra with serenades of widely differing styles — Mozart's classicism, Leonard Bernstein's contemporary eclecticism, Berio's serialism of 1957 and Tchaikovsky's fluid romanticism.

Ozawa contributed much organizational assistance to the Bernstein and Berio pieces and kept Tchaikovsky's beautiful melodies free from possible lush excesses, but it might have been helpful if he had stayed away from the eight worthies who opened the program with the 23-minute Mozart wind serenade (K.388) he called "Nacht Musik".

There were oboes, clarinets, french horns and bassoons in pairs played by first rate ensemble musicians well practiced in the skills of chamber music.

They didn't need Ozawa out in front. In fact there was a distinct feeling that the slight looseness during the opening measures was attributable to the players' necessity for watching Ozawa rather than coordinating each other.

But the Bernstein piece (31 minutes) and especially Berio's 10 minutes of intricate post Webern pointillism "Serenata for Flute and 14 Instruments" (all different), required a traffic director of no mean skill, partly because of a schedule of rehearsal time too short for such difficult music.

Most popular with the audience (6507) was Bernstein's "Serenade (after Plato's 'Symposium') for Violin, Percussion and String Orchestra." Silverstein was soloist; he was called back (grinning broadly) by the audience for several bows.

The program offered interesting contrasts: i.e. Tchaikovsky's 30-minute 'Serenade' in C for Strings" (Op. 48) was a wonderful display of Boston's string department, lean, clean, firm, full of palpable sonority; Berio's "Serenata" was full whoops and swoops, squeals and squawks, dots and dashes.

Attendance for the weekend was 22,216, including 2270 for the Saturday morning open rehearsal.

Tuesday night Jeremy Steig will be in the Theater (at 6 p.m.) and Kershaw (7.30) and Chet Atkins (9) in the Shed. Thursday at 8 Joseph Silverstein will conduct the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra in the Theater.

Next weekend's main attractions will be Earl Wild (solo piano) and Ruth Laredo, pianist with the orchestra under the direction of Leon Fleisher Friday; Jules Eskin as cello soloist with Michael Tilson Thomas conducting at 8.30 Saturday and Earl Wild as soloist Sunday with Bruno Maderna conducting.

Seiji Ozawa and Gunther Schuller open Tanglewood

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042
JUL 5 1971
New England Newsclip

By Michael Steinberg
Globe Staff

LENOX — Tanglewood got off to a good start this past weekend. Programs were interesting; performances were good; the weather was right, sunny but not too hot. Seiji Ozawa, who is Tanglewood's artistic director, together with Gunther Schuller, conducted the Boston Symphony concerts Friday, and Saturday evening and Michael Tilson Thomas, the orchestra's associate conductor, took over Sunday afternoon.

Ozawa's first program was Bach: Johann Sebastion's 6th Brandenburg Concerto and the Magnificato; and the Grand Overture, a little symphony actually, by his youngest son, Johann Christian.

Ozawa is a good Bach conductor. He does lots "wrong" — too many instruments and sometimes not the ones Bach wrote for, ornaments not always stylish — and performances are not the better for it. Just the same, he gets so much right about pace and rhythm, about not pounding and stomping, also through sheer exuberance, that what he does gives enormous pleasure. The first movement of Brandenburg's No. 6, the most dangerous piece in the whole set, was particularly attractive for the fluidity and breadth of phrasing that produced a really remarkably horizontal performance.

In the Brandenburg there was some brilliant viola playing by Burton Fine and Reuben Green. The magnificat has spirited, in fact, slightly rowdy singing by the Tanglewood Festival Chorus; there was a scratchy alto but the other three solos, Carole Bogard, John McCollum, and David Clatworthy, did god work.

For Saturday, Ozawa produced a program of four serenades: Mozart for eight winds in C minor, Leonard Bernstein for violin and string orchestra with percussion, Luciano Berio for flute and 14 instruments and Tchaikovsky for strings. The Mozart went well on the whole, even though it offered a few glaring displays of deficiencies in technique (horns) and taste (oboe); the Bernstein a very long dose of non-nutritive sweetener, provided an occasion for some excellent fiddling by Joseph Silverstein; the dry and charmless Beio was played with flair and brilliance by Dorio Anthony Dwyer; and Tchaikovsky got a performance of unusual elegance and grace.

With Joseph Silverstein again as soloist, Michael Tilson Thomas, gave the first part of his program to all four of Vivaldi's "Seasons" concertos. Then he turned to Montezerdi, conducting five pieces from that extravagantly fanciful, eloquent, magnificent set of church pieces that have become known as "The Vespers of 1610" (after their date of publication). Thomas does that music with feeling, imagination and intelligence, and, allowing for the mere impossiblilty of teaching the rudiments of a difficult and unfamiliar musical language to a chorus and orchestra, with not nearly enough time to do it in, he did an impressive job.

He chose the opening "Deus, In Adjutorium Meum Intende," the "Dixit Dominus," "Duo Seraphim," the "Sancta Maria sonata and the splendid six-part Magnificent. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus made a strong contribution. All the vocal soloists were a little too instrumental for this music but at least two of them, Mezzo-soprano D'Anna Fortunato and baritone David Clatworthy, were in other respects very able.

One thing may be said now, presumably to stand for the whole season. The price you pay for such fresh program - making — not one piece all weekend was a repeat from the winter season, and really nothing, not even the Tchaikovsky, could fairly be described as overworked repertory — the price is that things are apt to be underrehearsed.

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 61,977
JUL 5 1971
New England Newsclip

UPI Telephoto

Conductor Seiji Ozawa

Concert at Tanglewood Attended by 22,216

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The Berkshire Music Festival's first weekend at Tanglewood was a mixture of prudent 18th and 19 century repertory and two contemporary works that have little chance of survival.

Seiji Ozawa conducted the Boston Symphony Friday and Saturday nights. Yesterday afternoon it was Michael Tilson Thomas.

Total weekend attendance was 22,216, including the open rehearsal Saturday morning.

Saturday night's concert was saved from the executioners block by Mozart and Tchaikovsky — plus competent solo performances by Joseph Silverstein, violinist, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist.

Why Mrs. Dwyer's fine art was wasted on Berio's "Serenata" for flute and 14 instruments is enigmatic. The event was "A Concert of Serenades," and the Berio thing was thought to qualify. A less than feeble excuse.

Acoustics

The music shed's remarkable acoustics gave recital hall clarity to Mozart's piece for eight woodwinds. Playing was top craft. Ozawa's encompassing direction produced sculptured sounds. Every phrase was beautifully joined to the next, and pliant.

Silverstein's tone was pure, emotional and generally secure in Bernstein's "Serenade after Plato's Symposium." Three of the five movements are reasonably endowed with interest.

It took quite a trick of the imagination to associate Bernstein's music with supplied references to Greek personalities.

Anyhow, Ozawa brought relationship to Bernstein's darting ideas and percussion gave sparkle to the melange. A whizzing scherzo and the jazzy finale were virtuosic feats for soloist and orchestra.

Fortunately, Berio's musical cipher was followed by Tchaikovsky's rational if sugary Serenade in C major, the latter superbly played and conducted.

Sound Effects

The Berio "serenade" proved to be one more of his parades of spurious sound effects without detectable origin or destination. At least it created a kind of bucolic barnyard atmosphere.

One couldn't hope for better treatment of this pointless dissertation than it received from Mrs. Dwyer and her 14 fellow victims.

Music Reviews

There was a little bit of the "relic" in yesterday's program, conducted by Thomas. Since Tanglewood is now "tagging" its programs, this one was called "Music for Venice."

Program was the first complete performance of Vivaldi's "The Seasons," and the Boston Symphony's first performance of "The Vespers of 1610" by Monteverdi.

Sacred choral music is not Thomas' forte, judging by the concertized effects he exhorted from the Tanglewood Festival Chorus of 100 members and the weekend's reduced orchestra.

Woven Voices

Notably in "Dixit Dominus," the chorus made its talents and preparation known. Woven voices were securely affixed. Brief solos blended into overall mixtures and were competently sung. Most telling of the solo voices was D'Anna Fortunato's opulent mezzo.

Instrumental background was ample — more than enough when trumpets were allowed to compete with voices and text, rather than support them.

Vivaldi treated each of the seasons to a brief symphonic format — fast, slow, fast. The work covers a wide assortment of specific events and conditions. To this generation they may be more amusing than absorbing.

Although not in as good form as on Saturday night, violinist Silverstein took opportunity to display tonal warmth and technical agility. Robert Levin's harpsichord came into happy prominence as autumn rolled around.

The orchestra played well for the most part, although it was not always in accord with conductor or soloist.

SATURDAY NIGHT
Seiji Ozawa, conductor
Serenade No. 12 in C minor for Winds, K.388 — Mozart
Serenade For Violin and String Orchestra — Bernstein
Joseph Silverstein, violin
Serenata for Flute and Fourteen Instruments — Berio
Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute
Serenade in C for Strings, Opus 48 — Tachaikovsky
SUNDAY AFTERNOON
Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor
The Four Seasons — Vivaldi
Joseph Silverstein, violin
Robert Levin, harpsichord
Music from "Vespro della Beata Vergine" — Monteverdi
Barbara Hocher, soprano
D'Anna Fortunato, mezzo soprano
Bruce Brewer and Robert Owen Jones, tenors
David Clatworthy, baritone
Tanglewood Festival Chorus

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUL 5 1971

Seiji Ozawa Conducts at Opening

Good Music, Good Weather Grace Tanglewood

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

Tanglewood opened last week and everything combined to make it a good three days. The weather, the orchestra, the well-groomed grounds, and the music itself.

Friday and Saturday nights, the conductor was Seiji Ozawa and Sunday afternoon, young Michael Tilson was on the podium.

FRIDAY NIGHT, it was an all Bach program, concluding with the "Magnificat." Critical comment on Ozawa and his approach to Bach will be dealt with in more depth in a later column.

Saturday night, the programming was of more than usual interest because of the polarity of the music selected.

Ozawa opened with Mozart's Serenade No. 12 in C minor for 12 wind instruments, all of which were culled from the interior of the orchestra.

ONE EXPECTS A conductor and instrumentalists of such proven ability to give a superior reading of anything like this and, in fact, that was the case, for the most part. Sometimes orchestral musicians are hard-put to play over and over again the popular and traditional classical repertory, where the only remaining challenge is in the interpretation of it.

This holds true from Bach to Bartok, but the one possible exception would be Mozart, with whom most instrumentalists have carried on a continuing and sincere love affair. Musicians are affected early by the music of this greatest of all composers and they never seem to tire of it. Audiences don't either, with the result, generally, that everyone is satisfied and this was so in this case.

LEONARD BERNSTEIN'S "Serenade for Violin and Orchestra with Percussion", dedicated to Mr. and Mrs. Koussevitsky, was then given its first Tanglewood performance. The one unifying factor of this work, if there is one, is that it is purported to be related statements on love.

The solo violin was the estimable Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the orchestra and he was just fine, indeed, superior. The music itself is articulate or, perhaps, glib, clever and derivative. Bernstein has all the technical tools and then some, but this music, like much of his other serious composition, was curiously unrewarding.

This led the audience to a performance of Luciano Berio's "Seranata for Flute and 14 Instruments." The soloist was Mrs. Dorio Anthony Dwyer and in terms of bravura technique on the part of all hands, it was an impressive performance.

SERIAL MUSIC in spite of its attraction for the movers and shakers of the musical establishment is not generally popular with audiences, but, by now, they are conditioned to be at least polite. Contemporary audiences booed Beethoven and Stravinsky, but not Berio. The reason is not that audiences know more now, but because they are afraid to be considered Philistines. A cliche that is firmly entrenched is that of the scorned and consumptive artist starving in his atelier but still burning with that pure, gem-like flame and honored only after his death in poverty and indifference. There is enough truth in this cliche (remember Bartok in his miserable furnished room, dying in New York City) that present-day audiences are not going to contribute to it overtly, at any rate.

One of the puzzling anomalies of serial music is that it can only be played by master musicians and yet, Pierre Boulez and others would have us forget the past, even destroy it. If one did that, who would play the music? Dadaists and Bauhausers have all recommended this course in the past, but it has not been done because there is no reason to do so. A final Serenade for Strings by Tchaikovski, Opus 48, was beautifully played and generously received.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 130,857
JUL 6 1971 New England Newsclip

Monteverdi: Memorable Music at Tanglewood

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Times Music Critic

LENOX, Mass. — I daresay that the Tanglewood performance on Sunday afternoon of Monteverdi's "Vespers of 1610" was not only a festival premiere but also the first time that this towering masterwork has been heard in an al fresco setting.

Of course, it was indicative of the more adventurous programming here ever since Seiji Ozawa and Gunther Schuller took over the artistic direction of the Berkshire festival. And this summer's season is crammed with novelties, conducted by a variety of conductors.

Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, chose only five numbers from the collection of 13 sections that make up this long work. However, the composer certainly never expected this liturgical work to be performed at one time in its entirety.

No doubt, the purists will object to such a truncated version, as well as to the use of modern instruments and the huge Festival Chorus that the conductor worked with. Nevertheless I think these points are arguable.

Certainly a great many music lovers were enabled to hear a 6th Century masterpiece that otherwise would not have been available to them.

At any rate, Tilson Thomas seemed to have an admirable feeling for the pomp and majesty of this work with its brass writing that is so reminiscent of Gabrieli. And the orchestra outdid itself in providing a precise vibrant performance.

I would have preferred a smaller chorus, particularly in the first two sections which require a 6-part chorus. However, in the "Sonata spora Sancta Maria" (one of the most moving portions of the work) the unison voices and the instruments afforded one of the highlights of the afternoon.

There were five soloists (the only singer I recognized was baritone David Clatworthy) and they worked together smoothly most of the time. The conductor, in the "Duo Seraphim" placed one of the tenors at the back of the Shed to produce a striking antiphonal effect.

To start the festivities, the Boston Orchestra played the familiar Vivaldi "Four Seasons" with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as violin soloist. While I prefer an ensemble of the size of the Virtuosi di Roma in this music, I must admit the orchestra played together with fine unanimity.

Silverstein was as smooth as silk in his solos, and he handled the rapid runs with effortless ease, if not with the warmth that some others have mustered.

The weather was ideal and there seemed to be considerably more people lolling on the lawn than there were in the Shed. The attendance was officially listed at 7,090.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUL 6 1971 New England Newsclip

22,216 Attend Festival Concerts Over the Weekend

A total of 22,216 persons attended the Tanglewood concerts over the weekend, a slight drop from last year's audience of 22,489.

Friday night's concert drew 6,349; Saturday morning's rehearsal, 2,270; Saturday night's concert, 6,507; and Sunday afternoon's, 7,090.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144
JUL 6 1971

Ozawa, Tilson-Thomas Conductors

Tanglewood Enjoys Perfect Opening-Weather, Music

By EDWARD FRENCH

LENOX, Mass.—The 34th annual Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood began Friday evening with everything favorable. The weather was perfect, the area as beautiful as ever and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in good form.

Seija Ozawa conducted the first two concerts and Michael Tilson Thomas the third, thus displaying the talents of two of the finest young baton masters.

* * *

FRIDAY the program was given over to music by J. S. Bach and J. C. Bach, one of the Leipzig master's gifted progeny, the latter's "Grand Overture in D, Opus 18, No. 4" receiving its first performance by the Boston Orchestra. Ozawa's reading emphasized the brilliance of the string writing, the formal design and the spirited flow of the music.

A fine contrast was provided by the elder Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B flat, featuring the lower strings. The Allegro movements were rhythmically incisive, the duet for two violas in the Adagio was performed with eloquence and taste.

The concert ended with the orchestra, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and a quartet of vocal soloists performing the J. S. Bach's Magnificat in D.

Ozawa's choice of tempi seemed proper and the orchestra had a bright brilliance, particularly where the trumpets were blowing merrily in the higher register.

The chorus had a beautiful fresh sound at all dynamic levels. We thought the trio for first and second sopranos and altos one of the most beautiful things heard this year. The quality was superb.

The Bach writing for vocal soloists is not as graceful as his choral writing. The two women, Carol Bogard and Rose Taylor, fared better than the men. David Clatworthy is a good baritone, not a bass, and his low tones lacked true bass resonance. John McCollum, tenor, sang with authority and style, but the Bach tessitura taxed his high voice.

The final "Gloria" was stunning in effect and won a well-deserved ovation for all concerned.

* * *

SATURDAY evening was given over to a "Concert of Serenades", ranging from Mozart to Berio by way of Tchaikowsky and Bernstein.

The Mozart "Serenade in C Minor" for winds is a work manly melancholic in content except for a short period before the end. We do not know who commissioned the work, but it is quite different from the usual background music.

The players, six woodwinds and two horns, achieved some beautiful effects, especially in the final Theme and Variations.

Bernstein's "Serenade" (after Plato's Symposium) for violin solo, strings and percussion has a general warmth of expression almost Viennese in style. It is cleverly scored, has an effective solo violin part and in places uses jazz rhythmic patterns to good effect.

It went smoothly and Joseph Silverstein played the solo part with a good feeling for its melodic content.

Luciano Berio's "Serenade" for flute and fourteen instruments was easily the most "avant garde" of the weekend offerings. It is a lucid example of serial music by a foremost present-day exponent. It isa tribute to the literacy of the Tanglewood audience that this music was accepted by most and with enthusiasm by the younger element. After all Tanglewood began as a testing ground for new music.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer and her associates played this score with assurance and complete understanding of its complexities.

A well-played Tchaikowsky Serenade for strings concluded this quite different evening of music.

* * *

TANGLEWOOD on Sunday was an afternoon of masterpieces, the "Seasons" by Vivaldi and Monteverdi's Music from "Vespro della Beata Vergine." The third masterpiece was the weather, a perfect Berkshire golden summer day.

For this listener hearing Monteverdi's Vespers was one of the finest musical experiences of the year. Such beauty and eloquent fervor in the music and it was performed with such skill and devotion. This was easily the climax of the weekend.

Monteverdi wrote so skillfully for voices that everything seemed to have facility and beautiful quality.

Again the Tanglewood Festival Chorus distinguished itself by its response to every demand of the conductor and fine tone quality. Unlike many choruses the tenor section was excellent.

Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas had both great understanding and empathy for this music. The result was a superb performace which had a tremendous impact on the audience.

* * *

THE VIVALDI "The Seasons", more familiar music, was played with precision and elegance by the Boston Strings. Joseph Silverstein performed the solo violin part with his customary musicianship, technical mastery and beauty of tone.

Some 21,000 people attended this opening weekend and were rewarded with great music splendidly played

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUL 6 1971 New England Newsclip

Music Review

Opening Series at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE BOSTON Symphony Orchestra started its Tanglewood schedule this past weekend with three fine and unusual programs. Michael Tilson Thomas, the orchestra's associate conductor, chose Vivaldi's "The Four Seasons" with concertmaster Joseph Silverstein as soloist and Monteverdi's music from "Vespro della Beata Vergine" with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and a sextet of vivid vocal soloists for his concert Sunday afternoon. Seiji Ozawa played Johann Christian Bach's "Grand Overture in D" and the younger Bach's father's 6th Brandenburg Concerto and Magnificat on Friday night, and Leonard Bernstein's Serenade for violin and string orchestra and Luciano Berio's "Serenata for Flute and 14 Instruments" between some Mozart and Tchaikovsky Saturday night.

Whitestone
Seiji Ozawa

* * *

CONDUCTOR Thomas designated his program as "Music for Venice," but Siena among other Italian cities would dispute the Canal City its claim to Vivaldi. Cremona erected a humble column in honor of the 400th anniversary of its celebrated son Monteverdi in 1967.

The Vivaldi is lovely, euphoric music but the four parts cumulatively induce anesthesia and only the sublime Largo of "Winter," as Silverstein played it and the accompanying strings plucked it, revived us from our pleasant somnolence. The Monteverdi was pure exultation. The chorus, with John Oliver, director, sang with released abandon and joy. The soloists gave equal gratification in their assignments — Barbara Hocher, soprano; D'Anna Fortunato, mezzo; Bruce Brewer and Robert Owen Jones, tenors, and David Clatworthy, baritone.

* * *

SATURDAY NIGHT Ozawa inserted two contemporary works between Mozart's Serenade in C Minor for Winds (K. 388) and Tchaikovsky's Serenade in C for Strings. It wasn't quite apparent why the Mozart needed a conductor, but the Tchaikovsky is a dream for conductorial students. There is no instant when he cannot use all movements and gestures in the book, and Ozawa took full advantage of the opportunities to the frenzied satisfaction of his huge audience.

The filling of the program was supplied by works of musical astronauts Bernstein and Berio. Both write from lofty planes but on different strata. Bernstein lingers within the atmosphere where musical gravity still applies; Berio floats beyond it.

* * *

BERNSTEIN is almost too successful in translating Plato's statements in praise of love in his symposium. For the music is as esoteric as is Plato's expositions to us proletarians, and Silverstein, for all his marvelous violinistic virtues, receded too often to laboratory sterility, as though he was singing of a larmoyant Melisande when he might have been some degree of a perfervid Werther.

The Berio serenade is a step farther out, and from this distance is of questionable efficacy. He allows the four strings in the accompanying ensemble to sit and languish for long stretches and when they are employed, it is but for a hit-and-run contact. Flautist Doriot Anthony Dwyer tried valiantly to give shape or meaning to her solo, but the impression conveyed was of hysterical gasps and exclamations. The ensuing mutual intramural congratulations were fatuous.

THE WEEKEND was favored with remarkably bracing weather and invigorating performances. Following the custom established last year, the initial program of each weekend is preceded by a short recital at 7 o'clock of a more intimate nature than the large orchestral programs which follow at 9. So three of the string sections' principals each played a baroque sonata with harpsichord played by Robert Levin. Joseph Silverstein played the Bach A Major violin sonata, Jules Eskin the same composer's D Major Sonata for Cello, and Burton Fine the Stamitz D Sonata for Viola d'amore.

The viola d'amore is a six (or seven) stringed instrument of about the size and register of our present viola. The gut strings have a set of sympathetic wire strings below them. The instrument is tuned in intervals of thirds and fourths, has a long peg-box with 12 or 14 pegs, and is usually surmounted by a head of a blindfolded Cupid. In Fine's hands it was made to produce a very ingratiating tone.

* * *

THE MAIN program of the evening was directed by Ozawa, artistic co-director of Tanglewood. He devoted his concert to two Bachs, son Johann Christian and father Johann Sebastian.

The Grand Overture in D of the younger man proved to be a fresh and crisp three-movement suite (overture could mean many things in the 18th century) in which the orchestra, diminished for proper dimensions of the period, played with alert zest.

In the sixth Brandenburg, Ozawa scored a near miss. This, certainly not surpassed for pure beauty and inspiration among the half-dozen of that fasicle, is hard to spoil. But the conductor did little to intagliate the gems which yield to perceptive carving. This is written for violas and cellos only and is divided into six parts. Ozawa allowed the lower register instruments to growl their accompaniment to the rollicking canon in the violas with excessive strength, thus obliging them to force their tone. The final allegro has one of the most transporting rhythmic figures in all music, vying in that respect with the Brahms Third Symphony first theme and the Berlioz March to the Gallows. It was a smart judgment to allow but one viola at each desk to play the courante second figure of the last movement, and Reuben Green and Principal Fine interlaced the canonic idiom eloquently.

* * *

THE LAST half of the evening gave us the Bach "Magnificat" in D. The Tanglewood Festival Chorus was trained with incredible responses for the time it has been assembled and the soloists were of superior excellence. Carole Bogard, soprano, in her "Et Exultavit," seemed to want to sing more slowly and expressively than Ozawa was inclined to consider. Rose Taylor, contralto, in "Quia respesit," gave deep feeling to her solo. Bass David Clatworthy, in "Quia fecit mihi magna," sang with full resonance. And tenor John McCollum, long a Tanglewood favorite, reinforced his vocal stature in his "De Posuit" after a renewed-sparked orchestral prelude.

Bach makes tremendous demands on the chorus, with florid passages that coloraturas might find obstacles, but they overcame all situations with confidence, especially the opening "Magnificat" and then the "Fecit Potentiam" where Ozawa achieved an awesome, breath-taking pause.

Ozawa, with visage possibly rounder than last summer, and neck white - turtle - collared, maintains his humble amiability and wins approval which the audience, of exceptional numbers for a Friday, was eager to afford him at every opportunity.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUL 3 1971
New England Newsclip

2ND WEEKEND

Tanglewood

Fleisher Joins BSO Conductors

Leon Fleisher

Leon Fleisher makes his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood Friday July 9 at 9 p.m.

On the program will be Bartok's Romanian folk dances, Hindemith's "The Four Temperaments," with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento No. 15.

Fleisher was the first American ever to win a major European music contest when he took top place in the 1952 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Competition for pianists. Born in San Francisco, he now serves on the faculty of the Peabody Institute of Music in Baltimore.

The Weekend Prelude, at 7 p.m. in the Shed, presents a recital by virtuoso pianist Earl Wild in the first of his three Tanglewood appearances this summer. Weekend Preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the orchestra in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The open rehearsal, Saturday morning, July 10 at 10:30 a.m., features conductor Bruno Maderna and pianist Wild rehearsing music for the following day's concert. Tickets for the open rehearsal are $2.50 and benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

Saturday evening, July 10, Boston Symphony Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas conducts. Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony is soloist. The program is Bach's Suite No. 4, Haydn's cello Concerto, and Brahms' Serenade No. 2.

Sunday afternoon, July 11, Italian composer,conductor Maderna makes his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Maderna's program includes Schubert's Symphony No. 2, Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony and Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2, with Earl Wild as soloist.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,131
JUL 7 1971

Music-Dance

SPAC Amphitheater, Saratoga Today at 8:30 p.m., New York City Ballet in Jewels, a ballet in three acts. Thursday at 8:30 Monumentum/Movements, Who Cares.

SPAC Canfield Casino, Saratoga. Chamber Music Series, Monday at 8:30 p.m.; Robert Irving and Gordon Boelzner in two-piano recital.

Tanglewood Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass. Friday at 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude with Earl Wild. 9 p.m., Leon Fleisher conducts the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of Bartok, Hindemith, Mozart, featuring Ruth Laredo. Saturday: 10:30 a.m. open rehearsal; 8:30 p.m. Michael Tilson Thomas conducts a program of Bach, Haydn, and Brahms, featuring Jules Eskin. Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Bruno Maderna conducts, the program is Schubert, Schoenberg, and Chopin, with Earl Wild.

Jacob's Pillow, Lee, Mass. Norman Walker and Company, Jayne Hillyer and Bill Martin-Viscount, Sahomi Tachibana.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891
JUN 26 1971
New England Newsclip

MUSIC: Tanglewood: Friday, July 9: Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. Earl Wild. Leon Fleisher, Bartok's Romanian folk dances, Hindemith's Four Temperaments, Ruth Laredo; Mozart's Divertimento K. 287 at 9 p.m. . . . Satuday, July 10: Open rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. Michael Tilson Thomas, Bach's Suite No. 4, Haydn's cello concerto in C, Jules Eskin, Brahms's Serenade No. 2, at 8:30 p.m. . . . Lenox Arts Center: July 10: Blues Evening with Muddy Waters and Friends, 7:30 p.m. . . . Yale Concerts in Norfolk: July 7: Mozart's "Il Re Pastore" . . . July 10: Mozart's "Abduction from the Seraglio."

Herald American
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
S. 251,094
JUL 4 1971

PIANIST. Ruth Laredo will guest with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The pianist will perform Hindemith's "Four Temperaments" under the baton of Leon Fleisher.

ADVOCATE
STAMFORD, CONN.
D. 32,000
JUL 1 1971
New England Newsclip

News Of Area Art Happenings

Aldrich Museum.

Trying to find something interesting and fun to do this summer? Now's the time to catch up on the art of the last decade. The Aldrich Museum of Contemporary Art in Ridgefield, is offering a six-part series of lecture seminars called "The Contemporary Scene." Conducted by Mrs. Jacqueline Moss, curator of education for the museum, the seminars will be held Friday mornings from 10 to 11:30 a.m.

The first lecture will take place July 2 and will be called "Realism," second lecture, July 9, "Print Making," July 23, "Architectural Sculpture and the New Materials," July 30, "Architecture," Aug. 6, "The New Concept of Color and Form" and Aug. 13, "Romantic Abstraction."

Late registrations are being accepted. Call the museum, or just attend.

Silvermine Guild.

Classes for adults and children, beginners or advanced will start July 12 at both the Norwalk studios and at the Silvermine Guild of Artists in New Canaan.

Westport artist Burt Chernow will teach "New Techniques and Media" for the advanced student. Bob Franco's all-day painting-drawing workshop for intermediate artists will have discussion and critique as well as studio work.

"Non-figurative Sculpture," a Monday evening class will be taught by Ridgefield sculptor Norman Tinker. This is a construction-methods course in metal and wood, dealing with geometric or primary forms.

Tauno Kauppi will teach the traditional Oriental low-temperature ceramics called "Raku" in a special five-day workshop, and John McClelland will teach the serious student of portraiture during an eight-week "Portrait" course.

New London.

Some of the mystique surrounding the creation of dances will be dispelled this summer when the 1971 Connecticut College American Dance Festival initiates its Friday evening lecture demonstration series.

Beginning July 9 with the Rudy Perez Dance Theatre, this series will be presented each Friday at 8 p.m. by the company in residence at the Festival that week-end. Following Mr. Perez will be the Bella Lewitzky Dance Company from Los Angeles, July 16; the Paul Taylor Dance Company, July 23; and the Lucas Hoving Dance Company, July 30. Ann Halprin's San Francisco Dancers' Workshop will present a special workshop on Aug. 6.

Each of the dance companies will also present concerts on Saturday evenings at 8 p.m. and Sunday afternoons at 2 p.m.

Tanglewood, Lenox.

The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood begins July 9 at 9 p.m. in the Shed. Leon Fleisher will make his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including: Bartok's "Romanian Folk Dances," Hindemith's "The Four Temperaments" with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento No. 15.

Mr. Fleisher was the first American ever to win a major European music contest when he took top place in the 1952 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Competition for pianists. Born in San Francisco, he now serves on the faculty of the Peabody Institute of Music in Baltimore. He has appeared as soloist with the New York Philharmonic, the Cleveland Orchestra and the Detroit, St. Louis and Montreal Symphony Orchestras.

Victor Vasarely.

A retrospective exhibition of original graphics by Victor Vasarely is now on view at the Galerie Denise Rene, 6 West 57th St., New York and will continue through July.

The one-man show, the first graphic retrospective ever held in New York, for the artist acknowledged as perhaps the foremost pioneer in optical and kinetic art, covers the past two decades of Vasarely's original graphics published by Editions Denise Rene and includes a new portfolio, Vega, eight serigraphs being shown for the first time.

The careers of the artist, Vasarely and Denise Rene are closely intertwined. Denise Rene opened her first Paris gallery in 1945 with a show devoted to the then unknown Vasarely. Since then numerous Vasarely shows have been held at the Denise Rene galleries on the right and left banks in Paris and Denise Rene has worked with museums and galleries in mounting Vasarely exhibitions.

New York Cultural Center.

The New York Cultural Center, Columbus Circle, New York is now featuring a festival of British film classics of the last three decades. Including 27 films produced between 1937 and 1963, the Series will be presented Wednesday through Sunday, through Aug. 8. Each film will be shown for two days.

The British film retrospective will be presented in the New York Cultural Center's theater during the same time that the exhibition "The British Avant Garde" is on view in the Center's gallery floors. Thus, in terms of nationality, the museum will be presenting a multi-media artistic front, from auditorium to exhibition floor.

BANNER
BENNINGTON, VT.
D. 6,000
JUL 3 1971
New England Newsclip

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 581,160
JUL 4 1971
New England Newsclip

PIANIST — Ruth Laredo appears with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Friday at 8:30 in the Shed.

Fleisher to make BSO debut at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. — The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood begins Friday evening, July 9 at 9 in the Shed. Leon Fleisher makes his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including Bartok's "Romanian folk dances," Hindemith's "The four temperaments," with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento no. 15.

Leon Fleisher was the first American ever to win a major European music contest when he took top place in the 1952 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Competition for pianists. Born in San Francisco, he now serves on the faculty of the Peabody Institute of Music in Baltimore. He has appeared as soloist with the New York Philharmonic, the Cleveland Orchestra, and the Detroit, St. Louis and Montreal Symphony Orchestras.

The weekend prelude, at 7 p.m. in the Shed, presents a recital by virtuoso pianist Earl Wild in the first of his three Tanglewood appearances this summer. Weekend Preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The open rehearsal, Saturday morning, July 10 at 10:30, features conductor Bruno Maderna and pianist Earl Wild rehearsing music for the following day's concert. Tickets for the open rehearsal are $2.50 and benefit the orchestra's pension fund. They are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

Saturday evening, July 10, Boston Symphony Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas conducts. Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony is soloist. The program is Bach's Suite no. 4, Haydn's Cello concerto, and Brahms' Serenade no. 2.

Sunday afternoon, July 11, Italian composer-conductor Bruno Maderna makes his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Maderna's program includes Schubert's Symphony no. 2, Schoenberg's Chamber symphony and Chopin's Second piano concerto with Earl Wild as soloist.

JOURNAL
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
S. 207,211
JUL 4 1971
New England Newsclip

PIANIST Ruth Laredo performs Friday at Tanglewood, playing Hindemith's Four Temperaments, under the baton of Leon Fleisher.

36

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 4 1971

MUSIC

BURT BACHARACH SHOW—Today at 8:30 p.m. Saratoga Performing Arts Center, Saratoga Springs.

GARRICK OHLSSON—Pianist at Caramoor Festival, Katenah. Today at 5:30 p.m.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA—Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor. The program includes Vivaldi's "The Seasons" with Joseph Silverstein and Monteverdi's Music from "The Vespers of 1610" with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. Today at 2:30 p.m. Berkshire Festival, at Tanglewood Lenox, Mass..

GRANT JOHANNESEN—Pianist at Maverick Concert, Woodstock. Today at 3 p.m. Information, 679-8257.

PETER YARROW—The Peter of Peter, Paul and Mary at 8:30 p.m. Monday at the Berskhire Theater Festival in Stockbridge, Mass.

CHARLIE MINGUS AND THE JAZZ WORKSHOP—Monday 7:30. Lenox Arts Center, Lenox Mass.

COLONIE TOWN BAND—Under the direction of Richard Noll, Monday at 7:30 p.m. at the Colonie Town Park.

CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES—Six string players from the New York City Ballet Orchestra at Canfield Casino, Saratoga Springs. Presented by the Saratoga Performing Arts Center. Monday at 8:30 p.m.

LAKE PLACID MUSIC FESTIVAL. Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. Signal Hill Concert Hall, Lake Placid. Lake Placid CLUB SINFONIETTA—Paul White, director. Walter Hendl, soloist.

GLENN MILLER BAND—Directed by Buddy DeFranco, Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. at Siena College. A benefit for Camp Thatcher.

COPENHAGEN YMCA CHOIR—Thursday at the Main Theater of the Performing Arts Center at the State University at Albany. The free concert begins at 8:30 p.m.

TOM PAXTON—Thursday at 8:30 p.m. Adirondack Lakes Center For The Arts, Blue Mountain Lake.

MUDDY WATERS AND FRIENDS—Saturday at 7:30 p.m. at Lenox Arts Center, Lenox, Mass.

MARLBORO MUSIC FESTIVAL—Marlboro, Vt. Saturday at 8:30 p.m. and next Sunday at 3 p.m. (Sold out).

BERSKHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL—Friday 9 p.m. Leon Fleisher conducting: Bartok's "Romanian Folk Dances," Hindemith's "Four Temperments," with pianist Ruth Laredo and Mozart "Divertimento K. 287." Saturday 8:30 p.m. Michael Tilson Thomas conducting: Bach "Suite No. 4," Haydn's "Cello Concerto in C" with Jules Eskin and Brahms' "Serenade No. 2." Next Sunday 2:30 p.m. Bruno Maderna conducting: Schubert's "Symphony No. 2." Schoenberg's "Chamber Symphony. Op. 9b and Chopin's "Piano Concerto No. 2" with Earl Wild. Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

HERALD-TRAVELER
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 260,961

JUL 4 1971 New England Newsclip

BSO to play Friday at Berkshire Festival

The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood begins Friday, July 9, at 9 p.m. in the Shed.

Leon Fleisher makes his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including Bartok's "Romanian Folk Dances," "Hindemith's "The Four Temperaments," with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento No. 15.

Pianist Ruth Laredo will perform the solo part in Hindemith's "Four Temperaments" this Friday at Tanglewood. At the same concert Leon Fleisher will appear for the first time as conductor of the Boston Symphony.

The Weekend Prelude, at 7 p.m. in the Shed, presents a recital by pianist Earl Wild in the first of his three Tanglewood appearances this summer. Weekend Preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The open rehearsal, Saturday, July 10, at 10:30 a.m., features conductor Bruno Maderna and pianist Earl Wild rehearsing music for the following day's concert. Tickets for the open rehearsal benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund. They are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

Saturday evening, July 10, Boston Symphony Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas conducts. Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony is soloist. The program is Bach's Suite No. 4, Haydn's Cello concerto, and Brahms' Serenade No. 2.

Sunday afternoon, July 11, Italian composer-conductor Maderna makes his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Maderna's program includes Schubert's Symphony No. 2, Schoenberg's Chamber symphony and Chopin's Second piano concerto with Earl Wild as soloist.

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

JUL 8 1971

Tanglewood Concerts Listed

LENOX, Mass — The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood begins Friday at 9 p.m. in the Shed. Leon Fleisher will make his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including Bartok's Romanian Folk Dances, Hindemith's The Four Temperaments, with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's "Divertimento No. 15."

At 7 p.m. in the Shed there will be a recital by virtuoso pianist Earl Wild. The preludes, towo hours before the Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the orchestra in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

Saturday at 8:30 p.m., associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct. Jules Eskin, principal cellist, will be soloist. The program is Bach's "Suite No. 4," Haydn's "Cello Concerto" and Brahms' "Serenade No 2."

Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Italian composer-conductor Bruno Maderna will make his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Maderna's program includes Schubert's "Symphony No. 2," Schoenberg's "Chamber Symphony" and Chopin's "Second Piano Concerto" with Wild as soloist.

NEWS-TIMES
DANBURY, CONN.
D. 31,285

JUL 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Weekend program at Tanglewood announced

The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., begins tomorrow night at 9 in the Shed. Leon Fleisher makes his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including Bartok's Romanian folk dances, Hindemith's The Four Temperaments, with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento No. 15.

The weekend prelude, at 7 p.m. in the Shed, presents a recital by virtuoso pianist Earl Wild in the first of his three Tanglewood appearances this summer. Weekend preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The open rehearsal, Saturday morning at 10:30, features conductor Bruno Maderna and pianist Earl Wild rehearsing music for the following day's concert. Tickets for the open rehearsal are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

Saturday evening, Boston Symphony associate conductor Michael Tilson Thomas conducts. Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony is soloist. The program is Bach's Suite No. 4, Haydn's cello concerto, and Brahms' Serenade No. 2.

Sunday afternoon, Italian composer-conductor Bruno Maderna makes his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony. The program includes Schubert's Symphony No. 2. Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony and Chopin's Second Piano Concerto with Earl Wild as soloist.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,200

JUL 8 1971 New England

APPEARING FRIDAY night at Tanglewood under the baton of Leon Fleisher, pianist Ruth Laredo will perform Hindemith's Four Temperaments.

Second Weekend Schedule Outlined For Tanglewood

LENOX — The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood begins Friday evening at 9 in the Shed. Leon Fleisher makes his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including Bartok's "Romanian Folk Dances," Hindemith's "The Four Temperaments," with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento no. 15.

Leon Fleisher was the first American ever to win a major European music contest when he took top place in the 1952 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Competition for pianists. Born in San Francisco, he now serves on the faculty of the Peabody Institute of Music in Baltimore. He has appeared as soloist with the New York Philharmonic, the Cleveland Orchestra, and the Detroit, St. Louis and Montreal Symphony Orchestras.

The Weekend Prelude, at 7 p.m., in the Shed, presents a recital by virtuoso pianist Earl Wild in the first of his three Tanglewood appearances this summer. Weedend Preludes, at 7 p.m., each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The open rehearsal, Saturday morning at 10:30, features conductor Bruno Maderna and pianist Earl Wild rehearsing music for the following day's concert. Tickets for the open rehearsal benefit the orchestra's pension fund.

Saturday evening, Bosotn Symphony Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas conducts. Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony is soloist. The program is Bach's Suite no. 4, Haydn's Cello concerts, and Brahm's Serenade no. 2.

Sunday afternoon, Italian composer-conductor Bruno Maderna will make his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Maderna's program includes Schubert's Symphony no. 2, Schoenberg's Chamber symphony and Chopin's Second piano concerto with Earl Wild as soloist.

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
S. 117,499

JUL 4 1971 New England Newsclip

AT TANGLEWOOD

Fleisher Debut; Laredo Soloist

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood will begin Friday evening at 9.00 p. m. in the Shed.

Leon Fleisher will make his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including Bartok's "Romanian Folk Dances," Hindemith's "The four Temperaments," with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento No. 15.

Leon Fleisher was the first American ever to win a major European music contest when he took top place in the 1952 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Competition for pianists.

Born in San Francisco, he now serves on the faculty of the Peabody Institute of Music in Baltimore. He has appeared as soloist with the New York Philharmonic, the Cleveland Orchestra, and the Detroit, St. Louis and Montreal Symphony Orchestras.

The Weekend Prelude, at 7.00 p. m. in the Shed, presents a recital by virtuoso pianist Earl Wild in the first of his three Tanglewood appearances this summer.

Weekend preludes at 7 p. m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The open rehearsal, Saturday morning, July 10 at 10.30 a.m., features conductor Bruno Maderna and pianist Earl Wild rehearsing music for the following day's concert. Tickets for the open rehearsal are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

Saturday evening, Boston Symphony Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct. Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony will be soloist. The program is Bach's Suite No. 4, Haydn's Cello concerto, and Brahms' Serenade No. 2.

RUTH LAREDO

Sunday afternoon, July 11, Italian composer-conductor Bruno Maderna will make his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Mr. Maderna's program includes Schubert's Symphony No. 2, Schoenberg's Chamber symphony and Chopin's Second piano concerto, with Earl Wild as soloist.

POST GAZETTE
(ANGLO-ITALIAN)
BOSTON, MASS.
14,900

JUL 9 1971 New England Newsclip

Near the Waterfront

A Potpourri of people, places and things . . .

By LILLIAN BONO

Heard that Romeo Pendolari's filly Rucala ran in Belmont a few weeks ago. Romeo is having a streak of good luck with his horses.

* * *

The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood will begin tonight at 9 p.m. in the Shed. Leon Fleisher makes his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including Bartok's "Romanian Folk Dances" Hindemith's "The Four Temperaments" with soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento no. 15.

* * *

Leo DiGirolamo of Everett has recently moved his office from Broadway to Cottage Street in that city. Leo owns Everclean Service, Inc. and is a great gardener in addition to being a good businessman. His tomatoes should bring a prize this year. Mrs. DiGirolamo, his "partner" in the gardening enterprise, is a lovely hostess. Understand Tony Bruno played at their daughter's recent wedding that hosted over 500 people.

* * *

Met "Toots" Manzi, the famous man from Worcester in Boston, recently. He's "Mr. Personality Plus" I would say. . .

* * *

The Silvio Manzis of Methuen are preparing to return to their summer home at Salisbury Beach. . .

* * *

New POST-GAZETTE readers are the Ugo D'Onofrios of Medford. Mr. D'Onofrio is a commercial artist from that city.

* * *

Had the pleasure of speaking with Mr. Leonard Pasciucco at City Hospital last week. Mr. Pasciucco will be the subject of a Profile in the very near future.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405

JUL 8 1971 New England Newsclip

Three Conductors at Tanglewood this Weekend

RUTH LAREDO . . . Appearing Friday night, July 9 at Tanglewood under the baton of Leon Fleisher, pianist Ruth Laredo performs Hindemith's Four Temperaments.

The second weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood begins Friday evening, July 9 at 9:00 p.m. in the Shed. Leon Fleisher makes his Boston Symphony conducting debut with a program including Bartok's Romanian folk dances, Hindemith's The four temperaments, with piano soloist Ruth Laredo, and Mozart's Divertimento no. 15.

Leon Fleisher was the first American ever to win a major European music contest when he took top place in the 1952 Queen Elizabeth of Belgium International Competition for pianists. Born in San Francisco, he now serves on the faculty of the Peabody Institute of Music in Baltimore. He has appeared as soloist with the New York Philharmonic, the Cleveland Orchestra, and the Detroit, St. Louis and Montreal Symphony Orchestras.

The Weekend Prelude, at 7:00 p.m. in the Shed, presents a recital by virtuoso pianist Earl Wild in the first of his three Tanglewood appearances this summer. Weekend Preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Orchestra in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The Open Rehearsal, Saturday morning, July 10 at 10:30 a.m., features conductor Bruno Maderna and pianist Earl Wild rehearsing music for the following day's concert. Tickets for the Open Rehearsal are $2.50 and benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund. They are on sale at the Tanglewood office the morning of the rehearsal.

Saturday evening, July 10, Boston Symphony Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas conducts. Jules Eskin, principal cellist of the Boston Symphony is soloist. The program is Bach's Suite no. 4, Haydn's Cello concerto, and Brahms' Serenade no. 2.

Sunday afternoon, July 11, Italian composer-conductor Bruno Maderna makes his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Mr. Maderna's program includes Schubert's Symphony no. 2, Schoenberg's Chamber symphony and Chopin's Second piano concerto with Earl Wild as soloist.

BRUNO MADERNA . . . who will make his Boston Symphony debut as conductor in Sunday afternoon's concert at Tanglewood.

RECORDER GAZETTE
GREENFIELD, MASS.
D. 14,698

JUL 10 1971 New England Newsclip

Where To Go? What To Do?

Music is the thing this week at concerts around the area. By Recorder count, there are four music events which range in scope from the Boston Symphony Orchestra to a Hootenany planned.

-o- -o- -o-

THE SECOND WEEKEND of the Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood continues today at 10:30 a.m. with an open rehearsal of the orchestra, featuring conductor Bruno Maderna and pianist Earl Wild who will rehearse music for the following day's concert.

Saturday evening, Boston Symphony Associate Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas conducts, with Jules Erskin, cellist, selections from Bach, Haydn, and Brahms. Performance is at 8:30.

Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Bruno Maderna Conducts, the program the orchestra practiced Saturday morning. Selections include Schubert, Schoenberg and Chopin.

-o- -o- -o-

A 12 HOUR BENEFIT concert for the Mike Fennessey Fund is scheduled today at noon in Putney, Vt. afternoon and evening of music is being staged at Windham College Farm.

Mike Fennessey is a 15 year old boy from South Charleston, N.H., who needs $60,000 from a kidney transplant.

Performers include Morrissey and Washburn, Jones, Travis Shook, Troy Road Traveling Cigar Band, New Rythm and Blues Quartet and others.

-o- -o- -o-

EIGHTY OUTSTANDING artists from all over the world begin the Marboro (Vt.) Music Festival tonight, opening the Festival's 21st season.

Pablo Casals, who is returning to the Festival for his 11th summer, will conduct Sunday afternoon, and direct a performance of Bach's Suite No. 1 in C major for Orchestra.

The Festival will present concerts on Saturdays and Sundays at 3 p.m. from July 11 through Aug. 15, with three Friday concerts.

-o- -o- -o-

THE AMHERST FOLKLORE Center is open Saturdays, Sundays, and Mondays from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. and devotes itself to music.

The Center, which had its inception two months ago, will sponsor Pairie Oysters and John and Linda on Saturday; Frank Clark on Sunday, and an open Hootenany with anyone welcome to particpate on Monday.

The action takes place behind the Grace Church, Amherst. There is an admission charge to the activities, although the Center is non-profit.

-o- -o- -o-

THREE WORLD PREMIERES are planned for the fourth week of the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival in Lee.

Two premiers are by modern dancer-choreographer Norman Walker. The third world premier is a pas de deux, Fete Polonaise, chorographed by Charles Kibry for Veronica Tennant and Jermey Blanton of the National Ballet of Canada.

Curtain times are Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:40; Thursday and Saturday matinees at 3. Programs are subject to change without notice.

-o- -o- -o-

PONY CART RIDES were a new attraction at the Cummingfield Activity Center. The cart and Huckleberry, the pony, are on loan to Cummingfield for the summer from Mr. and Mrs. Snow Root of Easthampton.

Activities this weekend at the center include a military whist party on Friday at 8 p.m., an auction on Saturday morning at 11, a square dance Saturday night at 8:30, c chicken barbeque Sunday at 1, and a Grange Church Sunday service at 3 sponsored by Pioneer Vally, Hampshire County and Hillside Pomona Granges. State Grange chaplain Truman Cahill will deliver the sermon and the Whately Brothers will render several musical selections, during the service.

-o- -o- -o-

A GROUP OF EIGHT, snowbound in a boarding house in England, is the plot of Agatha Christie's "The Mousetrap," which will be offered by the Arena Civic Theatre tonight and July 14-17. Performances of the mystery yarn begin at 8:30 in the Franklin County Fair Roundhouse. The Mousetrap was performed on the London stage for 19 years, record.

-o- -o- -o-

CACTUS FLOWER, a Broadway hit about a playboy dentist who invents a wife and family to discourage his girl friends from talking marriage is the fare offered by the Mount Holyoke College Summer Theatre July 13-17. Performances are at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday through Saturdays at the college campus.

-o- -o- -o-

THE NINTH ANNUAL Windjammer Days billed as one of Maine's most colorful summer festivals, begins its three day run at Boothbay Harbor Tuesday.

The festival opens with the Miss Windjammer Pageant at 8 p.m. at Boothbay Regional High School.

Highlighting the events on Wednesday will be a boat parade in the inner harbor at 10 a.m., the Windjammer Parade through town at 1 p.m., and then the moment everyone has waited for, the return of the Windjammers to the harbor under full sail at mid-afternoon.

Following the harbor activities there will be a public lobster stew supper at the Methodist Church and then a band concert at the Waterfront Parking Lot on Commercial St. At 9 p.m. there will be a public dance at the Opera House on Townsend Avenue.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

JUL 10 1971 New England Newsclip

Audience Keeps Eye On Fleisher's Baton

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — There is considerable interest in musical circles in the development of Leon Fleisher's conducting career, so there were several in the Tanglewood audience Friday night who watched carefully.

Fleisher was one of America's most accomplished pianists when he began tt have difficulty with the fingers of his right hand; eventually he gave up the piano, hence the conducting career.

He is an intense young man with a big black beard. Friday he led the orchestra with extra attention to rhythmic pulse. His manner on the podium and the resultant accents of the music were strongly flavored with a well-defined, throbbing beat.

With seven little Romanian folk dances orchestrated by Bartok, which opened the program, and with Hindemith's "Theme and Variations According to the Four Temperaments, for Strings and Piano," the emphasis on rhythm was helpful.

It was especially useful with the Hindemith piece because it is, to a large extent, an open-spaced structure that lets plenty of light and air between the orchestra and solo piano and, on occasion, solo or small ensemble strings in the orchestra.

Ruth Laredo, wife of the prominent violinist, Jaime Laredo, handled the piano with electric vitality. She is a taught and vibrant pianist with a fine sensitivity for the percussive style appropriate (in fact necessary) to this Hindemith piece.

Fleisher paced the orchestra precisely for her, and the combination was a neat success; they were well-matched.

His attention to rhythmic precision was well paced also for the Mozart Divertimento for Strings and two French Horns (K287), a neat little piece of background music cranked out of Mozart's genius for a wedding garden party.

Nowadays music lovers seem to be willing to sit still for Mozart's party background pieces and in truth they contain many supremely beautiful passages (the adagio movement in this case). And such was the case for the 4186 listeners at Tanglewood Friday.

This Divertimento was composed for a strolling string quartet, plus two horns. It sounds better with lots of strings playing the four parts, and Boston's string section always sounds lucid and pliant with Mozart, especially when the conductor sets an exact pace.

Earl Wild, the forever-youthful American piano virtuoso, played a 53-minute Liszt-only program for the weekend prelude at 7 that was incredible.

First, his dexterity was, as usual, super-human; second, there was a notable and admirable absence of grand gesture and cheap theatricality, a taint that all too often stains Liszt.

Over all was a benign tranquility that let the high-speed runs and scales and machine-gun passages flow freely with a soothing liquidity.

The tonal qualities were so clear and cool that Liszt's heat was tempered; the music fairly shimmered; it was like lightning without thunder.

There were eight pieces on the program; Funerailles, Les Jeux Deaux a la Villa Deste; Waldestrauschen, Gnomenreigen, Ricordan Valse Oubliee, Soneto 104 del Petrarca, Grande Fantaisie de Bravoure Sur la Clochette de Paganini.

Tonight Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct at 8.30 a program of Bach's Suite No. 4 in D, Haydn's Cello Concerto in C with Jules Eskin as soloist and Brahm's Serenade No. 2 in A, Op. 16.

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 8,245

JUL 10 1971

Symphony, Pianist Tanglewood Features

By BILL RICE

Hindemith's Theme and variations according to the four temperaments was the featured piece by an abbreviated Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Leon Fleischer was the conductor.

Ruth Laredo was the soloist in Temperaments, which is scored for piano and string orchestra.

In Four Temperaments, Hindemith utilizes the solo instrument and strings equally in creating a piece which has more chamber than symphonic nature.

It is divided into four variations on a theme entitled Melancholic, Sanguine, Phlegmatic and Choleric. In each a mood of human emotion is explored.

Hindemith was a supreme craftman who looked back, in a sense, with his mastery of contrapuntal techniques, but forward in his quest for atonality. He creates moods and feelings with clusters of notes and fragmentary phrases. In Four Temperaments he is at time powerful and bold and at others whispy and mysteriors.

He does not completely avoid a feeling of tonality in this composition which is of 1940 vintage.

Mrs. Laredo gave a commanding performance in her solo role, though the work does not really display the soloist as vividly as a concerto. Hindemith seems to be saying at times to the soloist, "Thus far and no further." At times the piano is actually accompanying the orchestra.

The work does have its technically demanding moments, however, all executed flawlessly by Mrs. Laredo, the wife of famed Bolivian violinist Jaime Laredo.

Opening the program was Bartok's Hungarian Dances, a very short work for small orchestra. This piece is what the title implies, a collection of seven dances based upon modal folk melodies of Bartok's native land. Besides being short it is far from a demanding work.

Mozart's Divertimento in B flat for strings and two horns, a six movement work, concluded the program. It was typically light throughout and well received by the audience.

7/10

THE TIMES RECORD, TROY, N. Y.,

Ruth Laredo In Admirable Tanglewood Performance

By BILL RICE

Hindemith's Theme and Variations according to the Four Temperaments was the featured piece by an abbreviated Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Leon Fleischer was the conductor.

Ruth Laredo was the soloist in Temperaments, which is scored for piano and string orchestra.

In Four Temperaments, Hindemith utilizes the solo instrument and strings equally in creating a piece which has more chamber than symphonic nature.

It is divided into four variations on a theme entitled Melancholique, Sanguine, Phlegmatic and Choleric. In each a mood of human emotion is explored.

Hindemith was a supreme craftsman who looked back, in a sense, with his mastery of contrapuntal techniques, but forward in his quest for atonality. He creates moods and feelings with clusters of notes and fragmentary phrases. In Four Temperaments he is at times powerful and bold and at others whispy and mysterious.

He does not completely avoid a feeling of tonality in this composition which is of 1940 vintage.

Mrs. Laredo gave a commanding performance in her solo role, though the work does not really display the soloist as vividly as a concerto. Hindemith seems to be saying at times to the soloist, "Thus far and no further." At times the piano is actually accompanying the orchestra.

The work does have its technically demanding moments, however, all executed flawlessly by Mrs. Laredo, the wife of famed Bolivian violinist Jaime Laredo.

Opening the program was Bartok's Hungarian Dances, a very short work for small orchestra. This piece is what the title implies, a collection of seven dances based upon model folk melodies of Bartok's native land. Besides being short it is far from a demanding work.

Mozart's Divertimento in B flat for strings and two horns, a six movement work, concluded the program. It was typically light throughout and well received by the audience.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891

JUL 10 1971 New England Newsclip

MUSIC

TANGLEWOOD: July 10: Open Rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. Michael Tilson Thomas, Bach's Suite No. 4, Haydn's Cello Concerto in C, Jules Eskin, Brahms' Serenade No. 2, 8:30 . . . July 11: Bruno Maderna, 2:30 p.m., Schubert's Symphony No. 2, Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony, Op. 9b, Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2, Earl Wild . . . July 16: Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m., Boston Symphony Chamber Players. William Steinberg, Brahms program, Tragic Overture, Piano Concerto No. 2, Vladimir Ashkenazy, Symphony No. 2, 9 p.m. . . . July 17: Open Rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. William Steinberg, Brahms Program, Academic Festival Overture, Concerto for Violin and Cello, Pinchas Zukerman, Zara Nelsova, Symphony No. 4, 8:30 p.m. . . . July 18: Seiji Ozawa, Mozart's 'Marriage of Figaro' Overture, Mozart's Piano Concerto, K. 595, Vladimir Ashkenazy, Brahms' Alto Rhapsody, Maureen Forrester, Brahms' Haydn Variation, 2:30 p.m.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891

JUL 10 1971

New England
Newsclip

Tanglewood

Schubert, Schoenberg and Chopin -- As Conducted by Maderna

Italian composer - director Bruno Maderna will have his debut as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Sunday, July 11 at 2:30 p.m.

On the program will be Schubert's Symphony No. 2, Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony in E and Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2 with Earl Wild as soloist.

Born in Venice in 1920, Maderna is in the forefront of Italian composers. He attended the conservatories in Milan and Siena and studied composition with Bustini and Malipiero.

He has conducted orchestras in all parts of the world, including the Berlin Philharmonic and the Vienna Symphony. He spent last season lecturing and conducting in New York.

Michael Tilson Thomas will conduct the orchestra Saturday July 10 at 8:30 p.m. Cellist Jules Eskin will be soloist in Haydn's Cello Concerto in C. Also on the program are works by Brahms and Bach.

On Friday, July 16, William Steinberg will lead the orchestra in a Brahms program at 9 p.m. with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist in the Second Piano Concerto. Preceding will be Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players.

Another all-Brahms program is slated for Saturday, July 17. Steinberg will conduct the Academic Festival Overture, the Concerto for Violin and Cello and the Symphony No. 4. Soloists are Joseph Silverstein and Sara Nelsova.

Brahms' serene Alto Rhapsody is on the program Sunday, July 18, with Maureen Forrester as soloist. Seiji Ozawa also will conduct Mozart's 'Marriage of Figaro' overture, the Mozart Piano Concerto K. 595 with Ashkenazy as soloist and Brahms Haydn Variations.

Open rehearsals for Saturday concerts are held at 10:30.

Bruno Maderna

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528

JUL 10 1971

New England
Newsclip

Earl Wild's Piano Outshines Hub Symphony Orchestra

By RICHARD CONWAY

One got the feeling, after hearing Earl Wild's tremendous, virtuoso performance of an all-Liszt piano - music - Weekend - Prelude - program at Tanglewood last night, that anything else would be merely anti-climactic.

The main concert all too quickly confirmed the suspicion.

It was Earl Wild who provided the musical excitement last night. His playing was something to see and hear.

There is the excellent technique, and a wide range of dynamics from throbbing, sledge - hammered fortes to tender, lyrical melodic lines. There is a fine sense of rubato playing, so necessary to music of the romantic era.

Few Theatrics

Wild carries it all off with a minimum of theatrics. He clearly deserved the standing ovation he was given at the end.

Leon Fleisher was guest conductor for the regular concert.

After 20 years as a leading concert pianist, Fleisher turned to conducting only last year. His handling of the orchestra last night frankly failed to impress us.

There is a certain stiffness in his conducting; and gestures that often seem meaningless, or at any rate did not bring any response from the orchestra last night.

The program opened with the Bartok "Romanian folk dances." This is a delightful set of authentic folk dances given interesting harmonic garb by a man who had a keen empathy with the folk music of Eastern Europe.

Ruth Laredo was piano soloist for the Paul Hindemith "Theme and variations according to the four temperaments, for strings and piano." Miss Laredo gave this rather interesting work, originally intended for a ballet, a fine reading.

She too is an excellent pianist with all the necessary technical and interpretive skills. Her performance made this the outstanding piece of the evening's concert, and earned her several bows.

Mozart's "Divertimento in B flat, for strings and two horns, K. 287" ended the program. It deserved a better fate.

It was given a dry, dull, lack - lustre performance by Fleisher and the Boston Symphony. There seemed to be no overall conception to the work on the part of conductor or orchestra. It was just played.

There was only a small audience at the Berkshire Music Festival last night. Hopefully they got there in time to hear Earl Wild.

Joseph Silverstein is soloist at Tanglewood July 17.

38

The New York Times
NEW YORK, N. Y.
D. 895,505 SUN. 1,445,507

JUL 11 1971

FLEISHER LEADS BOSTON SYMPHONY

Pianist, Now Conductor, in Debut at Tanglewood

By DONAL HENAHAN
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., July 10—It is not usual, to say the least, for a conductor whose career is just one year old to find himself facing the Boston Symphony Orchestra. But Leon Fleischer is not the usual conductor. He took up the Batonist's way of life as a result of a mysterious ailment that causes chronic cramping in his right hand.

So after more than 20 years during which he established himself in the front rank of the world's pianists, he is once again "a promising young artist."

Mr. Fleischer's new career, however, goes swimmingly. Last night, he made his Berkshire Festival debut with a sensibly modest program that showed his conducting virtues plainly. Bartok's "Roumanian Folk Dances," products of the Hungarian composer's early ethnological researches, uncovered in the conductor a fine feeling for their strong but plastic rhythms. Now and then, one wished that Mr. Fleischer would let go a bit more, and indulge himself in the music's exuberance. But, in the Bartok as in Mozart's Divertimento in B flat (K 287), the orchestra responded to the conductor's wishes, giving him performances in which everything stayed in proportion and not a page lost its way in shallow showmanship.

Ruth Laredo Is Soloist

Mr. Fleisher worked well as collaborator with the piano soloist in Hindemith's "Four Temperaments," the small but formidable Ruth Laredo. The Hindemith Theme and Variations, which Miss Laredo played with a great gusto and considerable subtlety, can seem turgid if its peaks and valleys of interest are not made plain. Mr. Fleisher, whose grasp of formal design is one of his strongest points, knew where the climaxes came and let them come.

For a conductor who is still learning his trade and exploring repertory he made a strong impression in this Tanglewood debut. Not the most exciting of leaders as yet, he nevertheless has vaulted far out of the tyro class. His baton (which at one point flew from his hand, possibly owing to his peculiar ailment) gives clear, detailed signals and rarely beats time in the simple tactile way that betrays the amateur conductor.

A tall, imposing figure, Mr. Fleisher places his score on a low stand, which gives him a hunched approach to his work that sometimes seems inhibiting. But Mr. Fleisher is a musician of talent and integrity, and he obviously is becoming a conductor.

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525

JUL 13 1971

New England Newsclip

The Sound of Music

The Berkshires are Alive with the Sound of Music

By Peter M. Knapp

A lot of notes already have reverberated over the still-lush lawns and glades of Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. after two weeks of this season's Berkshire Festival, but few of them have been put together more artfully than in Bruno Maderna's first conducting appearance with the Boston Symphony Sunday afternoon.

Maderna, Italian conductor-composer, specializes in the experimental and far-out, and has led a number of important avant-garde premieres. But apart from the electronic studio, Maderna (like Boulez) has been doing much conducting of more conventional fare on the Continent. Several seasons ago, he was conductor for Sarah Caldwell's Boston production of Luigi Nono's multi-media opera, "Intolleranza."

Maderna is an honest-to-goodness conductor, as businesslike as the dark brown suit he wore for Sunday's program on a cloudy afternoon before 5,385 listeners. A few snaps of the wrist, a couple of precise cues, and the sound that emerges stamps him as a man with authority and inquisitive musical ideas.

Good for Less Than the Best

The Boston Symphony can make even a mediocre conductor sound good, but for someone who really takes command the orchestra dazzles. Such was the case Sunday afternoon for Maderna's program of Schubert, Schoenberg and Chopin — a curious program, perhaps, for one who occupies a major place in contemporary music. It was altogether the most exciting concert at Tanglewood so far this year.

Not surprisingly, the Schoenberg — early Schoenberg, the pivotal Chamber Symphony for 15 solo instruments, Opus 9, written around 1906 — was marvellously played. It's a busy score, in which each of the 10 winds and five strings often goes its own way and the interweaving of voices is difficult to unravel. There are many bold touches of harmony, color and technique.

Maderna's leadership produced an ardent intensity — one could almost compare it in passion to a Richard Strauss tone poem, and there are traces here of "Verklaerte Nacht" — clarity of line and subtlety. And though this revolutionary piece was violently denounced at its first hearings as it travelled to the frontiers of atonality, one hears these harmonies today as piquant, even lyrical in the bell-like chords of the development.

Less expected was Maderna's stunning direction of the Schubert Symphony No. 2 in B-flat with its fluffy lightness, mastery of detail, enormous dynamic range and total control. The first movement fizzed along at a quicksilver pace, yet with perfect string and wind articulation — a Rossinian treatment — and the finale had exciting rhythmic definition.

In Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2 in f minor, with Earl Wild as soloist, Maderna used extraordinary adjustments of tempo and rubato in the first movement — racing along at a dizzy pace in an orchestral tutti, then drawing back the tempo to a walk. Curious — but done with finesse and deliberate purpose. Both soloist and orchestra were put on their toes.

Cushiony Background

Best of all was the Larghetto movement, sheer poetry, with Maderna setting up a soft cushion of background sound for Wild's sensitive ruminations. It was not an absolutely perfect performance — Wild's fingers move so fast the result is sometimes a blurr and there were a few bobbles — but it was an unfailingly interesting one with not a few flashes of technical brilliance by the pianist.

Music by Bach, Haydn and Brahms comprised the Boston Symphony's program Saturday night, conducted by Michael Tilson Thomas and attended by 6,205. There were the Bach Suite No. 4 in D, the Haydn Cello Concerto in C, for which Jules Eskin was soloist, and the Brahms Serenade No. 2 in A, Opus 16.

The Brahms serenade came off best, an engaging blend of winds and strings (no violins, violas at the top of the strings) put together in almost symphonic elaboration by Brahms while still keeping the essential serenade quality.

It is predominantly mellow writing, rich in texture — the wind writing is characteristic of the symphonic Brahms — and bristling with ideas. No trifles for Brahms — even for light summery music. And except for a few loose ends, the playing was gracious and polished with Thomas keeping fine balances.

The Haydn probably has more immediate appeal in the straightforward joyous melodies and classic layout. It is sure enough a solo concerto, Thomas giving the cellist the spotlight with discreet accompaniment, while drawing elegantly clean sound from the orchestra.

Right For Here

Eskin, the orchestra's principal cellist, has not a particularly big sound, but his fine-grained tone suits this concerto. There might have been more personality to his playing, and intonation in the upper register was not always secure. But his playing met the virtuosic demads of the concerto, particulary in the showy last movement.

After the Overture, the Bach suite shaped up into a crisp and coherent performance, especially the Minuets and the light, quick Bourrees. Throughout, the oboe playing was exceptional with sharp attacks and expert, idiomatic phrasing.

At least in the Overture, the rest of the orchestra might have listened to the oboes, for otherwise the dotted rhythms tended to be sluggish. In Bach generally, the Boston Symphony's lower strings tend to be overly heavy, and quicker attacks and releases should give more of a rhythmic impulse to the important bass line.

It may be irrelevant to the music-making, but several members of the audience were commenting on Michael Thomas' new mannerism of brushing back his hair from his eyes. Seiji Ozawa, with his Beatle mop, has the same hair-in-eyes problem. The women particularly find it distracting. Long hair, it seems, has come back to "the classics," for the younger generation at least.

Early goers Friday night were treated to some dazzling pianism by Earl Wild, who played a substantial program of music by Franz Liszt for the weekend prelude.

Wild probably played more notes than are heard in two average recitals and brilliantly so. He has both the prodigious technique and the flair for flexible expression to play Liszt extremely well. The lyricism, the chromatic imagination and the exciting bravura of the music were amply displayed.

EARL WILD: on his toes

The program included the "Funerailles, October 1849," the impressionistic "Les jeux d'eaux a la Villa d'Este," the lovely "Ricordanza" and concluded with the pyrotechnics of the "Grande fantaisie de bravoure sur la Clochette de Paganini" — a showpiece of trills, chromatic scales and flipped octaves. The man plays a lot of piano.

Conducting Debut

The main program, attended by 4,186 on a beautiful summer evening, had Leon Fleisher conducting a program of Bartok, Hindemith and Mozart. Fleisher is the former distinguished pianist who tragically has been unable to play for several years because of a mysterious hand ailment. He turned to conducting last summer. Friday night he made his debut on the podium with the Boston Symphony with whom he has been piano soloist on several previous occasions.

Fleisher is a big man with dark hair and a trim beard, obviously serious in intent. He has the right instincts, if not yet the deft moves or communicative technique.

He began with the set of brief Romanian folk dances by Bela Bartok in a low-key performance that showed individual ideas. What seemed different was Fleisher's manner of phrasing, each thematic fragment being set off and phrase-endings having definite periods. Closing a couple of the pieces, he held out rather long retards that gave too much relaxation.

Ruth Laredo was the piano soloist for Paul Hindemith's "Theme and variations according to the four temperaments, for strings with piano," an ambitiously conceived but laborious piece attempting to express the moods of melancholic, sanguine, phlegmatic and choleric persons! One has to take this program with a dram of salt, of course, as Hindemith himself probably did in these four sets of variations on three themes.

Juxtaposing

Hindemith was a facile writer of variations, and there are some brisk, scampering scherzando episodes, a march, and an appealing waltz in the modal-flavored score before it breaks down into a kind of silly nickelodeon version of anger. One assumes that in the banal salon music of the "phlegmatic variation," piano set off against deadpan strings, Hindemith meant to be funny — mirroring the tres gaie against the potted palm personality.

The audience liked the piece, and tiny Miss Laredo (the wife of violinist Jaime Laredo) was recalled several times for her assertive piano playing.

Mozart's Divertimento No. 15 in B-flat, K. 287, nicely concluded the program with shapely string playing and sensible direction even if the second theme of the opening allegro was a little detached in presentation and the violin unisons were not always exact.

The specialties of this divertimento, composed in 1777 for Salzburg, are a lovely set of variations in the second movement, a sublime adagio with an exquisite viola counter-melody to the main theme, and the trio to the first minuet which dips into the minor in one of those other-worldly moments Mozart could so suddenly bring to even his party music.

NY Times
Monday, July 12, 1971

MICHAEL THOMAS CONDUCTS AT FETE

Leads the Boston Symphony With Ease at Tanglewood

By DONAL HENAHAN
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., July 11—Michael Tilson Thomas, who led the Boston Symphony in last night's Berkshire Festival program, is one of those rare musicians who handle themselves so easily on a podium that prenatal influence seems the only explanation for it. Most musicians have to work to become conductors; a few have conducting thrust upon them; Mr. Thomas was born to it. No doubt he works at the job as hard as anyone, but it certainly does not show.

Bach's Suite No. 4 in D, for instance, received a hearty, dancing performance in which problems of balance and instrumental blending were solved so smoothly that they seemed not to be problems at all. Mr. Thomas treated the suite in a robust style that put one in mind of Handel's "Water Music," not a bad approach for an outdoor oncept. The Boston Wind Choirs sounded magnificent, although Mr. Thomas's hard-driving approach to the score must have tested them rather severely at times.

Eskin Cello Soloist

Jules Eskin, the orchestra's principal cellist, showed his firm command of the instrument as soloist in Haydn's Cello Concerto in C. Mr. Eskin's tone could whine a bit in high positions, but he met technical challenges extremely well, and in the slow movement provided some of the night's most beautiful music-making.

Mr. Thomas found some trouble in fitting Brahms's Serenade No. 2 in A into his youthfully extroverted style, the score being rather dreamy and ruminative for the most part. Rumination is not yet Mr. Thomas's strong point, in fact. But the Brahms had lovely moments when, without sounding much like Brahms, it blossomed like a symphony trying to be born.

Spectacular Specimen

When conducting is forced onto composers, they invariably are interesting, and sometimes spectacularly good, at this new job. One of the spectacular recent speciments is Bruno Maderna, the Italian composer who made his Boston Symphony debut at this afternoon's concert.

A short, ebullient man, vaguely resembling Fiorello La Guardia, Mr. Maderna led the orchestra in a breathtaking chase through Schubert's Symphony No. 2 in B Flat, achieving clinical precision and unusual subtlety while calling on the musicians for a level of playing that even they sometimes forget they are capable of. Mr. Maderna also gave the first Tanglewood performance of Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony (Op. 9), in which he found grace of line and warmth as well as the expected lucidity.

He is a conductor to reckon with. Keep him in mind when the next search for real conductors is on.

Earl Wild joined Mr. Maderna as soloist in Chopin's F minor Piano Concerto and provided his usual master's class in keyboard technique, exciting the piano fans much as he did earlier in the weekend in an all-Liszt recital. It was difficult to believe that at no time, as the old magicians used to say, did his fingers ever leave his hands.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,200

JUL 16 1971

New England Newsclip

Concert Review

Boston Symphony At Tanglewood

By Martha deB. Beaver

The second weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, and final one prior to six successive weekend programs by the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra, was one of contrasting conductorial powers.

Friday evening the well-known pianist Leon Fleisher, who has turned to conducting because of a recurrent manual disability, led the orchestra in two premieres: the first performance by the BSO of Bartok's Romanian Folk Dances, the other a Festival first, Hindemith's "Theme and Variations according to four temperaments," for strings and piano.

Ruth Laredo was the solo pianist for the latter, her rather brief interpolations splendidly executed. Unfortunately, the composer's precisely formulated structures were not always clearly defined, and the moods, labeled Melancholic, Sanguine, Phlegmatic, occasionally broke through their rather muddied sounds, the final Choleric expressed with some of the sharp and impassioned tonality that pervades it.

Musically Relaxed

A more individually conceived reading of Mozart's distracting and exquisitely wrought Divertimento No. 15 left the audience, and it seemed the orchestra also, in more musically relaxed spirits, Fleisher obviously in accord with this composer. Much of the pleasure derived from the liquidly smooth playing of concertmaster Joseph Silverstein, on whose position Mozart established the work.

Saturday evening saw Michael Tilson Thomas, youthful associate conductor of the Boston Symphony provide a stimulating performance of Bach's fourth suite in D, starting with a well-controlled and masterful Overture, the succeeding sections of varying perfection, winds uneven in the Bourree rhythms, but grand in the deep-throated Gavotte.

Thomas' directions are not always attentive to the dominant musical line, but this perhaps can be overlooked at times since the orchestra members are pretty secure in their parts and don't necessarily count on or respond to the many different conductors who control them. The young maestro has matured, it is evident, and is of increasingly serious disposition toward the music programmed, with plenty of time to expand and establish his imprint upon that of the composer's.

The recently discovered (in Prague in 1961) cello concerto in Cmajor, by Joseph Haydn, written probably for a 21-year old brilliant young cellist Joseph Weigl, (they became very close friends) was an excellent vehicle for principal cellist Jules Eskin. He gave it a technically, though not always tonally correct, (the harmonics in the Allegro were overreached) and stylistically impressive performance, lyric but not impassioned in the Adagio (his playing is often too refined but this is a personal characteristic perhaps).

Silken Sounds

We recall again Silverstien's silken sounds reaching an ecstatic high point; the cello's double-stops changing quickly to flowing melody, with many unison passages among the greatly reduced orchestral sections and soloist; the violins often suggesting the theme which was developed by the cellist; the melody taken to a point of resolution, but unresolved and again stated, finally reaching a gentle conclusion. It is a work that fascinates and demands re-hearing. Thomas achieved notable response from the accompanying players.

Written when he was 29 Brahms' Serenade No. 2 in A, op 16, is music that charms throughout with the composer's obvious delight in playing with and embellishing simple rhythmic patterns. His omission of violins allows the lower registered instruments to weave a mellower and richer texture underneath remarkably effective writing for winds including a contra-bassoon. The five sections (the program omitted one) were alternately exuberant and lyric, expansive dipping and soaring, sensuous and suave, in the hands of the expert Boston musicians and the sensitive Thomas who received many recalls and bravos.

From the very beginning of Sunday afternoon's concert, the opening Largo-allegro vivace of Schubert's Second Symphony in Bflat, it was obvious that a real master was in control of the orchestra and music. For his first appearance at Tanglewood Bruno Maderna looked (to many) like a business man, in his well-cut dark grey suit. But to this reviewer it was all part of his self-effacing conductorial style.

Few Gestures

Gestures were few but meaningful, placed exactly, and directed at the proper time, with studious attention to clarifying every linear and harmonic detail, delineating dynamics from the softest pianissimo to the grandest fortissimo without extraneous indication. Music was foremost, and Maderna trusted his players to respond without undue coercion. And they did, although the galloping Presto vivace almost undid the oboeist's intonation.

Another Festival first was Schoenberg's Chamber symphony for 15 wind instruments, Op. 9, one of the last in which he made use of tonality, already reaching out for new harmonic possibilities and construction, and employing the whole-tone scale, all aurally shocking to the audience of his time. Again Maderna clarified, allowing us to near similarities to the composer's Verklarte Nacht, and enjoy its complicated construction and dated dissonances.

With Earl Wild, another master, at the keyboard, Maderna (contemporary composer of note, also, and on the Berkshire Music Center faculty this summer) provided an ultra refined background for the soloist in Chopin's Concerto No. 2 (actually his first in point of composition at age 21) in Fminor. The accord was unblemished.

With Wild's effortless playing one takes it for granted that he will achieve the utmost in technical and tonal demands. There was no disappointment on either count. The first movement Maestoso seemed slower and more rubato than we recall from any previous hearing, by both piano and orchestra, but followed the composer's mood of improvisation, tender and melancholic.

Inimitably Chopinesque, the Larghetto in its extraordinary delicacy and passionate intensity leaves no doubt of the composer's infatuation with a beautiful young soprano, and source of his inspiration Wild evoked it all with gentleness and deep feeling, from his first slow rising arpeggio introducing the theme to the same closing figure. Less impressive, but more polish than the preceding movements, the finale sparkled and danced a la mazurka. The program was definitely one in which all performers attained inspirational heights.

Brahms Concerts

This weekend's programs include all-Brahms concerts directed by William Steinberg, with Vladimir Ashkenazy playing the second piano concerto Friday evening, Silverstein and Zara Nelsova the concerto for violin and cello Saturday evening, and Ozawa conducting Sunday's concert which features Ashkenazy and Mozart's piano concerto K.595 with Maureen Forrester featured in Brahms' Alto rhapsody.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181

JUL 12 1971

Boston Symphony, Maderna Dominate Tanglewood Scene

By BILL RICE

Bruno Maderna conducted the closing concert of the second weekend of the 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., Sunday afternoon. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were featured in Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony for fifteen solo instruments, op. 9, while Earl Wild was soloist in Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2 in F. Minor, op. 21.

Franz Schubert's Symphony No. 2 in B-flat was the opening selection.

This was Maderna's first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is one of Italy's leading composers as well as a conductor, and his performance at Tanglewood were met with bravos from both the audience and members of the orchestra.

Complete Control

Maderna is a brisk, business like conductor who was in complete control of the orchestra throughout the program. He was probably most at home in the Schoenberg music, as he is one of the leading Italian exponents of serial music, a trend in composition which is an outgrowth of the twelve-tone technique Schoenberg pioneered.

The Schonberg Chamber Symphony is early Schoenberg (1906) and the composer did not fully develop an atonal style until 1909. The 12-tone technique did not appear in his orchestral works until 1928. Some unusual composition schemes utilized here are use of the whole tone scale, and harmony based on the interval of a fourth rather than the usual third. Nonetheless, the composition has iconoclastic trends, even in 1971. Schoenberg already was tearing away from the traditional concepts of key center, but some romance remained.

While Chopin was probably the foremost composer for piano of his time, he wrote only two concertos for the instrument. The F minor was written first but published second; hence its title.

Done With Ease

Earl Wild accomplished, with ease, the onslaught of arpeggios, scale passages, trills and other pianistic devices Chopin placed in the path of anyone attempting his work. The piece is a showcase for the keyboard and is not as strong from the standpoint of orchestration as works of the same type by other composers.

The Schubert Symphony was written when the composer was only 18. While not considered one of his strongest by musicologists it certainly makes for pleasant listening in the outdoor atmosphere of Tanglewood.

Maderna's interpretation again was outstanding.

It is apparent that many people have made Sunday afternoon concerts on the lawn at Tanglewood a way of life. One party even pitched a pup tent a scant 30 feet from the music shed. Their devotion to music in these surroundings is easily understood.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528

JUL 12 1971

New England Newsclip

Loving It Up For Culture

There may be those who find little connection between music and the boy-girl-blanket game on Tanglewood's lawns. That's because they assume that there can't be.

It's true that boys and girls can do their thing most anywhere and that they don't really need to deploy their blankets and wine at Tanglewood to the accompaniment of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The grass may be greener and cleaner on the manicured grounds, but does that basically matter?

A little thought, however, will disclose a connection between good music and the blanket set. It's the admission fee. Every $3 ticket goes for culture. If the music is listened to, all the better.

Love is everywhere, but at Tanglewood it helps support good music.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUL 12 1971

New England Newsclip

Music Review

Saturday Night Concert

By ELSBET WAYNE

THE MIDDLE concert of the second weekend of the Berkshire Music Center festival was devoted to expanded chamber music. Three compositions for small orchestra were presented, each conceived, orchestrated and executed on a grand scale.

Some 130 years elapsed between Bach's orchestral dance suites and the serenades by Johannes Brahms, yet the works create similar audience responses of serenity, delight and a sense of well-being. Both composers — as well as Haydn, whose Concerto for Cello in C Major was also heard Saturday night — wrote their compositions to entertain rather than to challenge. Although each work stems from a different era and originally addressed itself to a different society, the music was thoroughly enjoyed by the Saturday listeners.

* * *

MICHAEL Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1970, showed considerable growth in stature since assuming his post a year ago. With motions of almost military precision, he attacked the overture to the Bach "Suite in D Major," relaxing into a more flowing style during the middle section of the movement.

The several dance movements of the suite, each with its characteristic meter and rhythmic patterns exude the feeling of joie de vivre. Newton Wayland's harpsichord continuo was more felt than heard and enhanced the over-all mellow sound of the orchestra, emphasizing the precision and brilliance of the trumpet trio.

* * *

JULES ESKIN, noted solo cellist of the orchestra, presented the recently discovered "Cello Concerto in C Major" by Haydn with brilliance yet with tasteful restraint. The first two movements are stately and lyrical in turn, the drive of the finale, however, gives the concerto its special character and the soloist some dazzling passages.

* * *

THE LOVELY tone of the orchestra, the clear summer evening and a very receptive audience all contributed to the delightful reading of the Brahms "Serenade No. 2 in D Major, Opus 16." Patterned after the classical examples of an earlier period, the resultant music of Brahms is of symphonic proportion in its orchestration. Displaying many moods, the music is exuberant, sensuous, wistful, yearning, gay and always immediately appealing. Even in the present day of accepted dissonance, the ear responds to the composer's melodic manipulations as in the soaring opening "Allegro" and to the pulsing rhythms of the succeeding movements. Of special attraction throughout are the various wind timbres supported by low-voiced strings.

Tilson Thomas treated the Brahms Serenade with delicate lightness, omitting a baton in the early sections.

Second Weekend Attracts 18,074 To Tanglewood

A total of 18,074 people attended the Tanglewood concerts over the weekend. The breakdown is as follows: Friday evening, 4,186; Saturday open rehearsal, 2,298, and evening concert, 6,205; and Sunday, 5,385.

This is an increase of 116 over last year's attendance figure of 17,958 for the second weekend.

40

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,638
JUL 12 1971

2 New Conductors in Fine Debut

At the Concert

By EDWARD FRENCH

The second weekend at Tanglewood introduced two new conductors as well as some interesting infrequently played music for various instrumental combinations.

LEON FLEISHER, better known as a pianist, conducted Friday night's concert, displaying his talents in the "Romanian Folk Dances" collected and harmonized by Bela Bartok, Theme and Variations according to the four temperaments for strings and piano by Paul Hindemith and the Mozart Divertimento in B flat for strings and two horns.

We felt that Mr. Fleisher's conception of the Mozart piece was rather angular and lacking in the graceful spontaneous flow generally associated with that composer's music.

His Bartok had momentum, color and strong rhythmic patterns. It had surprisingly little of the acrid dissonance found in some of his music.

RUTH LAREDO DID the piano solo in the Hindemith work with splendid technical facility as well as control. Her tone was clear and strong and she showed a subtle understanding of the Hindemith medodic and harmonic vocabulary.

However as with much of this composer's music, it is difficult to recall a single melody or harmonic progression once the piece has ended. He writes a lovely melody, has a good feeling for a well sounding harmonic progression but is not distinguished in his rhythmic patterns. It is the kind of music one enjoys at the moment and promptly forgets.

THE WEEKEND PRELUDE on Friday was most end joyable. Earl Wild, pianist, who was the soloist Sunday afternoon, played a group of Liszt solo piano pieces with marvelous feeling for the Liszt rhetoric. The melodies sang, the declamatory sections had the correct dramatic emphasis and he always caught the spirit and shape of the piece.

We thought the "Funerailles" and the "Sonetto 104 del Petrarca" were the most moving. His "La Campanella" had great verve and technical excitement.

BRUNO MADERNA, a composer and conductor with an extensive European reputation made an impressive Tanglewood debut yesterday afternoon. This man is a tremendous conductor. He has complete mastery of his craft. His beat is concise, his choice of tempi well nigh perfect and he can mold a phrase to perfection. As a result of his mastery the orchestra had a beauty of tone and clarity of texture not always present under other guest conductors.

While his compositions are extremely avant garde, his feeling for Schubert was such you felt he was a specialist in that part of the repertoire. He is a superb musician who is comfortable in all kinds of music.

THE EARLY SCHUBERT Symphony in B flat was an aural joy from beginning to end. Every detail was clear but always a part of the whole. The fast movements had a spontaneous vitality, and wonderful pace while the Andante was a perfectly proportioned song.

Mr. Madernas reading of the Schoenberg Chamber Symphony for Fifteen Solo Instruments was an eloquent exposition of some difficult music. His feeling for balance and color could not have been improved upon and he made the symphony a coherent expressive whole.

EARL WILD WAS the soloist in the Chopin Concerto in F minor for Piano and Orchestra and gave an elegantly expressive performance. The lovely Larghetto in this concerto can so easily become saccharine but thispitfall was avoided by both soloist and conductor.

The orchestral accompaninment was a perfect framework for the virtuoso solo part. At the conclusion there were resounding cheers for an outstanding performance.

One thing is certain, Bruno Maderna is a great conducting talent and we should hear a great deal more from him.

Boston Symphony, Maderna Dominate Tanglewood Scene

By BILL RICE

Bruno Maderna conducted the closing concert of the second weekend of the 1971 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., Sunday afternoon. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra were featured in Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony for fifteen solo instruments, op. 9, while Earl Wild was soloist in Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2 in F. Minor, op. 21.

Franz Schubert's Symphony No. 2 in B-flat was the opening selection.

This was Maderna's first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He is one of Italy's leading composers as well as a conductor, and his performance at Tanglewood were met with bravos from both the audience and members of the orchestra.

Complete Control

Maderna is a brisk, business like conductor who was in complete control of the orchestra throughout the program. He was probably most at home in the Schoenberg music, as he is one of the leading Italian exponents of serial music, a trend in composition which is an outgrowth of the twelve-tone technique Schoenberg pioneered.

The Schonberg Chamber Symphony is early Schoenberg (1906) and the composer did not fully develop an atonal style until 1909. The 12-tone technique did not appear in his orchestral works until 1928. Some unusual composition schemes utilized here are use of the whole tone scale, and harmony based on the interval of a fourth rather than the usual third. Nonetheless, the composition has iconoclastic trends, even in 1971. Schoenberg already was tearing away from the traditional concepts of key center, but some romance remained.

While Chopin was probably the foremost composer for piano of his time, he wrote only two concertos for the instrument. The F minor was written first but published second; hence its title.

Done With Ease

Earl Wild accomplished, with ease, the onslaught of arpeggios, scale passages, trills and other pianistic devices Chopin placed in the path of anyone attempting his work. The piece is a showcase for the keyboard and is not as strong from the standpoint of orchestration as works of the same type by other composers.

The Schubert Symphony was written when the composer was only 18. While not considered one of his strongest by musicologists it certainly makes for pleasant listening in the outdoor atmosphere of Tanglewood.

Maderna's interpretation again was outstanding.

It is apparent that many people have made Sunday afternoon concerts on the lawn at Tanglewood a way of life. One party even pitched a pup tent a scant 30 feet from the music shed. Their devotion to music in these surroundings is easily understood.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
JUL 12 1971

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUL 12 1971

Soloist and Birds In Tanglewood Duel

By LAURIE MODELL

Friday evening's Tanglewood program opened with an unprogrammed but highly noticeable tug-of-war for the audience's attention between Weekend Prelude soloist Earl Wild and some screeching exhibitionist birds that were nesting in the rafters of the shed.

* * *

Though at times it was a bit difficult to keep one's mind on the music (the place seemed more like a setting for a Hitchcock movie), the evening was basically one of well-performed, interesting music.

It opened with an hour of music by Franz Liszt performed with brilliant technique and care by pianist Earl Wild. He was a bit weak in the first work, Funerailles (which has a fascinating middle section that, right down to the harmonic progressions, sounds almost exactly like the middle section of Chopin's A flat Polanaise composed 28 years earlier), but was in complete authority in the next work, Les Jeux d'eaux (water games), sound-alternately like a cascading waterfall and a thundering river.

Highlight of his program was the second of two concert studies, Gnomenreigen, which brought a chorus of bravos from the audience and astonishment at the speed of his fingers.

The sense of wonder appeared again after the last work on the program, an etude in the style of Paganinin, sometimes referred to as 'La Campanella,' which has every technical display imaginable save turning the piano upside down (something Paganinin himself used to do on the violin).

Mr. Wild showed himself to be a strong and brilliant performer and a good interpreter of Liszt; the only area in which he lacked was in warmth — his playing was just a trifle too cool to be very moving.

* * *

The regular concert opened with the Boston Symphony's first performance of Bartok's Folk Dances, a group of seven melodies of the Romanian peasants that Bartok recorded on one of the first Edison phonographs and then harmonized for orchestra. The melodies, modal in construction, are quite exciting, and the Boston Symphony and conductor Leon Fleisher gave a clean, lively interpretation of this all too short work.

By far the most exciting work on the program, however, was Paul Hindemith's Four Temperaments for strings and piano. It is meant roughly to illustrate the four humors (melancholic, sanguine, phlegmatic and choleric), believed in Elizabethan times to be the root of all men's action, and does so in a theme (actually three themes) and four variations. A dialogue of expressiveness between piano and orchestra, the work was incredibly intense and dramatic.

Solo pianist Ruth Laredo played with a rich sonority and warmth, yet driving percussiveness when called for. Especially beautiful (in a work replete with moments of beauty) were the sections of dialogue between solo violin (concertmaster Joseph Silverstein) and the piano. Throughout the work, the ensemble playing was excellent and displayed both Mr. Fleisher and the orchestra at their best in the evening.

* * *

The concert was concluded with a performance of Mozart's Divertimento No. 15, K.287, which, for sheer intensity of playing, was a definite letdown. Mr. Fleisher and the orchestra perhaps sensed the anticlimatic nature of the work or were tired from the demands of the Hindemith. Whatever the reason the work seemed unusually long and the performance uninspired, despite some excellent solo playing by Mr. Silverstein.

Next week is an all-Brahms weekend which will feature among other works, his second and fourth symphonies, the second piano concerto and the concerto for violin and cello.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUL 12 1971
New England Newsclip

Music Review

Weekend Concerts at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THERE HAS BEEN no attempt to deceive at Tanglewood in these first two weeks of the summer season, but the concerts reveal programs of generally small dimensions. Not that such works as a Mozart eight-wind instrument Divertimento or the Brandenburg concerto for violas and cellos need be denigrated. But the fact has not been bruited too widely that in the first two weeks of their summer residence, the Boston Symphony is divided between the finals of their Esplanade concerts and this county. Thus the programs are patterned to the cloth, very possibly opportunities to provide new and exciting music, but von Clausewitz and von Schlieffen both cautioned about the hazards of a two-front war.

* * *

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY extended the Tanglewood season years ago by prefixing two additional weeks to the regular orchestral schedule and playing Bach and Mozart. Since then it has seemed wise and natural that swaddling clothes be discarded and a wider terrain be explored. The result was, for instance, that Leon Fleisher, making his Tanglewood debut as a conductor (he has previously appeared as pianist), chose a fairly narrow and low-keyed vehicle.

Fleisher lent character to each of the Bartok Romanian folk dances, although the orchestra responded perfunctorily. It was really concertmaster Joseph Silverstein's night, for in each of the three programmed works, he had assignments which he discharged masterfully.

Fleisher very properly was concerned with rhythm and tempo but less so, possibly, with balance. It is a moot foible at times to be convinced that keyboard players as conductors are not always aware of the realistic limitations of strings and thus expect and demand of them details which are facile for a pianist but not for fiddlers.

* * *

RUTH LAREDO was the piano soloist in Hindemith's "Theme and Variations According to the Four Temperaments." There is an obsolete doctrine that attributed all morbid phenomena to a disordered condition of the fluids of the body. Even after Queen Elizabeth's time, the infamous Dr. Mesmer claimed he could cure all bodily disorders by manipulation of animal magnetism. In any case, the idea is a dandy for musical expression, and Hindemith accomplished his goal fairly convincingly. Certainly the ebullient Miss Laredo enlivened her too meager assignments with forceful impact.

The orchestra is given greater importance than in a normal piano concerto, and the soloist does not emerge until the orchestra has made a broad and lengthy statement. In this respect, the composition is similar to the viola's role in Berlioz' "Harold." This was a pity, for the audience could have tolerated more of Miss Laredo's dynamism and mastery than fell to her lot.

Hindemith took advantage of the abstract physiology which claimed that the elements — dry, moist, hot and cold — constitute the body. Another term in England called them humours — sanguine, phlegmatic, choleric and melancholy. Miss Laredo never allowed the piano to be sluggish, not even in the Phlegmatic. Her appearance was not the least of her deserts.

* * *

YESTERDAY afternoon Bruno Maderna made his Tanglewood debut as a guest conductor, and he convinced his audience and, apparently, his cohorts on stage with him that here was a musician of substance. He manner was free of frills and attention-seeking; he devoted his talents and skills entirely to the business at hand — Schubert, Schoenberg, and Chopin — and left the choreography and the emoting to the rest of the pack.

His Schubert B Flat Symphony, No. 2, was bright and exhilarating. It could have been a bit on the speedy side, but the Bostonians took it, and him, in their stride.

To close the afternoon, Earl Wild was the soloist in the F Minor Chopin Piano Concerto. He achieved an extremely able reading of the filigreed work and, by today's standards, somewhat filleted themes. Wild commands the keyboard effortlessly, and his artistic integrity is discernible in his grandest moments and in the most sequestered details. Maderna gave him a thoroughly adhesive accompaniment, even though the orchestra's cooperation is inclined to be rather trite. It is instructive to notice how the figures which are so graceful and contenting as solo piano writing become less sufficient in an orchestral ambience.

* * *

THE REAL opulence of the afternoon was invested in the Schoenberg Chamber Symphony for 15 solo instruments. It has become a sort of old wives' tale or tradition that the public never accords a composer acceptance and due appreciation in his own time and that only after years of neglect and derision does the fog in the audiences' eyes clear away and the true value of a pioneer is discerned.

Schoenberg started out in the footsteps of Wagner and Strauss but later swerved to new paths, to his 12-tone system which met with formidable opposition. Time has not softened nor weakened the opposition to the music of that later era. But this symphony for a small ensemble yesterday is still redolent of the "Verklarte Nacht" structure, and Maderna drained every last particle from its rich, involved, romantic and difficult pages.

The musicians played for him as they have not so far this season allowed themselves to be woven into the fabric of any music. Maderna made it a warm and moving performance, and this could remain a peak which the ensuing concerts of the schedule might find difficult to top.

Whitestone

Pianist Earl Wild and conductor Bruno Maderna exchange felicitations after Tanglewood concert Sunday.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042

JUL 12 1971

New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD

Fleisher, former pianist, conducts Boston Symphony

By Michael Steinberg
Globe Staff

LENOX—Until a physical disability brought his career prematurely to an end, Leon Fleisher, was one of the most cultured, all together best-equipped pianists in his generation. Last year, Fleisher began a new career as a conductor, and Friday evening he led the Boston Symphony concert at Tanglewood.

He produced a beautiful performance of Mozart's B flat Divertimento, K 287. What made it so was, more than anything, its rhythmic flexibility. It was a performance in which the music was conducted and attended to all the time — the diametrical opposites of Leinsdorf's or Karajam's perfectly embalmed, don't-make-waves Mozart — the conducting itself proceeding from an exquisite sense of pace and of wonderfully vocal phrasing.

The first half of the program was less attractive. There, the main work was Hindemith's "four temperaments," like the Mozart the basis of one of Balanchine's most beautiful ballets, but unlike the Mozart impossibly doughy and monotonous to listen to without anything to look at. Fleisher got what I thought was a stolid sort of performance, though one that very much pleased the audience, with efficient playing of the ungrateful piano part by Ruth Laredo, and with some well-played solos along the way by violinist Joseph Siverstein and violinist Burton Fine. The concert opened with a fairly lumpy version of Bartok's Romanian folk dances.

When Schoenberg wrote his chamber symphony for 15 solo instruments in 1906, he produced an exciting compositional concept, ardent and expressive, and a wonderful sonorous embodiment for it, rich, but with a kind of tough linearity at the same time, and completely personal. But with the density and originality of his musical procedures, Schoenberg also produced a challenge that has baffled performers ever since, and I know of nothing in literature more difficult to straighten out from the point of view of instrumental balance.

Under the circumstances, for Bruno Maderna's performance of the original version at Sunday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert to have made any substantial sense or effect at all was remarkable. The tales were, in fact, far from clear, but the distinguished Italian composer and conductor, who is on the composition faculty at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, did an impressive job of clarifying line and form. Earlier, he conducted a performance of Schubert's Second Symphony that mainly had lots of brio to recommend it; later he provided an unusually thoughtful and imaginative orchestral context for Earl Wild's vulgarly conceived, crudely executed playing in Chopin's F minor piano concerto.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 12 1971

Leads Boston Symphony

Pianist Debuts as Conductor

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

One is never certain of the motives that impel musicians who are acknowledged masters of their instrument to take a whack at conducting a major orchestra. Sometimes regardless of motive, the transition is felicitous in all respects and the conductoris created, and more often the opposite is true.

Leon Fleisher, who for 20 years has had a well-deserved reputation as one of America's leading pianists, is one of the latest to take a whack at conducting in his debut Friday night with the Boston Orchestra at Tanglewood, and, at best a moderate success.

Nothing went wrong but it is primarily the fine BSO musicians that were responsible for that. They would accept Fleisher's tempo on the go and from then on they appeared to ignore him generally. It is a mysterious combination of virtues and abilities that combine to make a conductor, not the least of which is the simple ability to command. Whether this is done by physical presence or sheer musical ability is hard to say, but, probably it is a combination of both. There is no questioning Fleisher's musical talents, he has them in abundance, and he knew the music he was conducting completely so why didn't it come off? Well as I say it is difficult to determine but that palpable empathy between orchestra and conductor was not present even though we heard some good music.

Ruth Laredo was the featured pianist in Hindesmith's Theme with Variations According to the Four Tempraments.

Although she played inexpicably with the music in front of her she certainly brought it off. Her sense of meter was impeccable, always important of course, but especially so in this kind of music, she was in absolute command of the music and technically was very impressive. The work is angular and somewhat fragmented but there are some great and exciting races with the orchestra and fortunately for all they always ended in a tie.

Earlier we had heard Bartok's arrangement of Roumanian folk dances and the concluding work was Mozart's charming and delightful Bivertimento Number 15 in B Flat. A noteworthy contribution to this work was the fluid and very sweet violin solo played by Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the orchestra. Mr. Silverstein has my vote for the best concertmaster in the business and this includes the famous Daniel Nadien Qundam, first chair violin of the New York Philharmonic.

Earlier in the evening at the regular Friday prelude Earl Wild gave an all-Liszt program of piano works and several of them were truly achieved readings. His opening choice Funreailles, October 1849, was extremely well done indeed although the audience burst into bravos after the more bravura pieces, notably Gnomenrigen and the final work Grand Fantasie pour la Clochette de Paganini. Wild is an empathetic pianist and even with his technique he missed a few but what really counts is that he can surely communicate with his listeners and that he did in great measure.

Globe 7/12/71

TANGLEWOOD

Fleisher, former pianist, conducts Boston Symphony

By Michael Steinberg
Globe Staff

LENOX — Unitl a physical disability brouth his career prematurely to an end, Leon Fleisher, was one of the most cultured, all together best-equipped pianists in his generation. Last, Last year, Fleisher began a new career as a conduxtor, and Friday evening he led the Boston Symphony concert at Tanglewood.

He produced a beautiful performance of Mozart's B flat Divertimento, K 287. What made it so was, more than anything, its rhythmic flexibility. It was a performance in which the music was conducted and attended to all the time — the diametrical opposites of Leinsdorf's or Karajam's perfectly embalmed, don't-make-waves Mozart — the conducting itself proceeding from an exquisite sense of pace and of wonderfully vocal phrasing.

The first haf of the program was less attractive. There, the main work was Hindemith's "four temperaments," like the Mozart the basis of one of Balanchine's most beautiful ballets, but unlike the Mozart impossibly doughy and monotonous to listen to without anything to look at. Fleisher got what I thought was a stolid sort of performance, though one that very much pleased the audience, with efficient playing of the ungrateful piano part by Ruth Laredo, and with some well-played solos along the way by violinist Joseph Siverstein and violinist Burton Fine. The concert opened with a fairly lumpy version of Bartok's Romanian folk dnaces.

When Schoenberg wrote his chamber symphony for 15 solo instruments in 1906, he produced an exciting compositional concept, ardent and expressive, and a wonderful sonorous embodiment for it, rich, but with a kind of tough linearity at the same time, and completely personal. But with the density and originality of his musical procedures, Schoenberg also produced a challenge that has baffled performers ever since, and I know of nothing in literature more difficult to straighten out from the point of view of instrumental balance.

Under the circumstances, for Bruno Maderna's performance of the original version at Sunday afternoon's Boston Symphony concert to have made any substantial sense or affect at all was remarkable. The tales were, in fact, far from clear, but the distinguished Italian composer and conductor, who is on the composition faculty at the Berkshire Music Center this summer, did an impressive job of clarifying line and form. Earlier, he conducted a performance of Schubert's Second Symphony that mainly had lots of brio to recommend it; later he provided an unusually thoughtful and imaginative orchestral context for Earl Wild's vulgarly conceived, crudely executed playing in Chopin's F minor piano concerto.

42

Leads Boston Symphony

Pianist Debuts as Conductor

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

One is never certain of the motives that impel musicians who are acknowledged masters of their instrument to take a whack at conducting a major orchestra. Sometimes regardless of motive, the transition is felicitous in all respects and the conductoris created, and more often the opposite is true.

Leon Fleisher, who for 20 years has had a well-deserved reputation as one of America's leading pianists, is one of the latest to take a whack at conducting in his debut Friday night with the Boston Orchestra at Tanglewood, and, at best a moderate success.

Nothing went wrong but it is primarily the fine BSO musicians that were responsible for that. They would accept Fleisher's tempo on the go and from then on they appeared to ignore him generally. It is a mysterious combination of virtues and abilities that combine to make a conductor, not the least of which is the simple ability to command. Whether this is done by physical presence or sheer musical ability is hard to say, but, probably it is a combination of both. There is no questioning Fleisher's musical talents, he has them in abundance, and he knew the music he was conducting completely so why didn't it come off? Well as I say it is difficult to determine but that palpable empathy between orchestra and conductor was not present even though we heard some good music.

Ruth Laredo was the featured pianist in Hindesmith's Theme with Variations According to the Four Tempraments.

Although she played inexpicably with the music in front of her she certainly brought it off. Her sense of meter was impeccable, always important of course, but especially so in this kind of music, she was in absolute command of the music and technically was very impressive. The work is angular and somewhat fragmented but there are some great and exciting races with the orchestra and fortunately for all they always ended in a tie.

Earlier we had heard Bartok's arrangement of Roumanian folk dances and the concluding work was Mozart's charming and delightful Bivertimento Number 15 in B Flat. A noteworthy contribution to this work was the fluid and very sweet violin solo played by Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the orchestra. Mr. Silverstein has my vote for the best concertmaster in the business and this includes the famous Daniel Nadien Qundam, first chair violin of the New York Philharmonic.

Earlier in the evening at the regular Friday prelude Earl Wild gave an all-Liszt program of piano works and several of them were truly achieved readings. His opening choice Funreailles, October 1849, was extremely well done indeed although the audience burst into bravos after the more bravura pieces, notably Gnomenrigen and the final work Grand Fantasie pour la Clochette de Paganini. Wild is an empathetic pianist and even with his technique he missed a few but what really counts is that he can surely communicate with his listeners and that he did in great measure.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 12 1971

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 61,977

JUL 12 1971 New England Newsclip

Bruno Maderna Makes Debut at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Music Review

Big event of the Berkshire Music Festival's second weekend at Tanglewood was the debut yesterday afternoon of the noted Italian composer, Bruno Maderna, as conductor of the Boston Symphony.

Pianist Leon Fleisher also made his Boston Symphony conducting debut at Friday night's concert. Consensus reports were pretty grim. So was the attendance of 4,186.

The weekend total was 18,074.

Michael Tilson Thomas conducted Saturday night's tepidly interesting program.

Unquestioned highlights of the weekend were the Maderna debut and his outstanding assistance to Earl Wild who was soloist in Chopin's Piano Concerto No. 2 in F minor, Opus 21.

Pioneering

Maderna is best known for his joint pioneering with Berio and Nono in new electronic trials and traumas. To our knowledge, his only previous conducting experience in this area was in 1960 when he directed the Opera Company of Boston in Luigi Nono's "Intolleranza."

He is highly detailed in directives without effusion or window dressing.

Schubert's Second Symphony has probably never been given such a workout. The first movement and finale were taken at top clip. It would have been a disaster for a lesser orchestra than the Boston Symphony.

Maderna actually converted the entire work into a virtuosic vehicle and it didn't seem to matter whether Schubert intended it or not.

After a sensitive slow movement and robust minuet, the finale raced across the finish line as if demons were in hot pursuit.

Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony, Opus 9, was treated as music that moves easily through cycles of concordance, plenty of emotion, with stretches of rambling, angular melody.

Maderna gave the Schoenberg the same concise reading as the Schubert. What came through was a broad pallette of individually intriguing sounds, loose in form and consistently interesting.

Wild is a pianist whose emotion is confined to his music. He's the least demonstraive performer at the keyboard today.

His master lesson to the digital gymnasts was a sensitive account of the Chopin Concerto. Maderna even let him linger over sentimental passages and catered to his every whim, all of them quite legitimate.

Wild's note playing was impeccable. Dynamic scale was wide without resorting to frailty or pounding. The tender, ornamental slow movement was a marvelous example of keyboard art.

Thomas brought to Saturday night's program as much as one had a right to expect.

Trumpets in baroque music are special privileged instruments at these concerts. In Bach's Suite No. 4, Thomas was content to let the trumpet trio take over, at the expense of other melody-bearing instruments like the entire string section.

Apart from that, Thomas gave momentum, aliveness and intensity to the Bach. It took some doing to maintain the speed that Thomas demanded for the concluding "Rejoicing."

Brahms

Thomas brought forward the soaring themes of Brahms' Serenade No. 2 in A major, Opus 16. It was music of light fabric, traditionally romantic.

The orchestra gave cello soloist Jules Eskin a gala introduction for Haydn's Cello Concerto in C major. Eskin came in at a perceptively faster tempo.

However, his tone was resonant, full bodied and generally accurate. There were restless rhythmic quirks, which gave Thomas an opportunity to test his metier by keeping the orchestra informed.

Highlight of Eskin's performance was a glowing tone in the concerto's slow movement.

Programs

SATURDAY NIGHT
Michael Tilson Thomas, conductor
Suite No. 4 in D major — Bach
Cello Concerto in C major — Haydn
Jules Eskin, cellist
Serenade No. 2 in A major, Opus 16 — Brahms
SUNDAY AFTERNOON
Bruno Maderna, conductor
Symphony No. 2 in B flat — Schubert
Chamber Symphony for 15 solo instruments, Opus 9 — Schoenberg
Piano Concerto No 2 in F minor, Opus 21 — Chopin
Earl Wild, pianist

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500

JUL 15 1971 New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Boston Symphony in Second Week

By HAROLD C. SPROUL

The second trio of Boston Symphony concerts at Tanglewood gave a welcomed hearing for a variety of works for chamber orchestra (B.S.O.'s half size), each with a different instrumentation. The Weekend Prelude, Friday at 9 p.m. unleased Earl Wild's spell-binding pianism, an all-Liszt program.

Liszt is full of original ideas well-wrapped in enough gaudy tinsel to sustain his image as a magician. Too bad that the manuscripts survived to afford Wild a chance to out-Liszt Liszt. I say pianism because there is only ism as a result of conscienceless manipulation that kills even the vestige of a musical idea. Television, which of course, knows "what the people want," uses Wild extensively as composer and pianist. But one can turn it off.

Friday continued interestingly but sourly. Leon Fleisher, a fine pianist turned conductor in 1970, led Bartok's Romanian folk dances, gems with settings unobtrusively apt, enhancing the implied harmonies and attitudes of the tunes without distortion. Fleisher chose to enhance further with added romanticisms of tempo and dynamics that did distort. The orchestra played sloppily (for them). Fleisher's baton technique was no help: a clear beat done by jerks. Now music is not beats; it is continuous movement like the flow of blood pulsed by the heart muscle and the blood moves through the heart. Pure beating with the baton, no matter how precise, is no help to precision in an orchestra (this needs a whole essay).

Ruth Laredo, an ornament to Marlboro, did splendidly with Hindemith's Theme and variations according to the four temperaments (medieval) for strings and piano. She projected Hindemith's special kind of constructavist expression, and the orchestra,at first laggard (you can't compromise with hammer-action), seemed to warm up gradually to finally play chamber music—a necessity here because of the thorough integration of piano and orchestra.

The Mozart Divertimento in B flat (two horns and strings) was diverting enough in a slightly soggy way.

A very different orchestra responded to the leading of Michael Tilson Thomas Saturday night in a thoroughly joyous program; Bach's Suite No. 4, Haydn's Cello Concerto in C, Brahms' Serenade No. 2 in A. When Bach reused the Overture of the Suite in the Christmas Contata No. 110 he chose the words of Psalm 126 —"then was our mouth filled with laughter and our tongue with singing." Thomas elicited the varieties of joy in all movements with a just musicianship and the trumpet glittering with highlights.

Jules Eskin played the Haydn (a find of 1961) with sensitive eclat. In concertos, Haydn can be showy with grace, here exploiting the whole range of the 'cello. Eskin managed all difficulties with expressive ease and musical intention, his subtle inner rubatto keeping every line alive from within, and Thomas kept everything in fine balance.

The Brahms, really a little symphony for w horns and strings, n licate play between th (Brahms was a colori he cared to be) and h lyricism of his songs chamber music, with a h the drama-out-of-dream found in the later symphonies. I could wish Thomas to be a bit more moderato in the first Allegro— some phrases couldn't breathe naturally, but the performance generally was balm in Gilead.

Sunday afternoon with Bruno Maderna, Italian composer-conductor, was all spit and polish—spirited craft reminding me of Berio. Schubert's Symphony No. 2 might have been conceived by Rossini at his best. There was delicate phrasing (especially in the lovely Andante variations and a pacing that kept each movement uniquely alive. Dynamics were of varying light and shade;— the pianissimo spicattos in the strings were delicious. And the final Prestovivace was hair-tingling exhuberance.

When Schoenberg composed his Chamber Symphony for fifteen solo voices, he was still chromatically tonal but rich with inner complexity. At first hearing (for me) it seems difficult but finely wrought, and expressive beyond technique. At 31 the composer was discovering a liberation and a conciseness peculiarly his, although one hears echoes of R. Strauss without his bland obviousness. The 15 solo lines (not always separate) allow an intriguing color-mix of winds and strings, each one vibrantly itself with little massing.

Mr. Wild turned loose his vulgar virtuosity on Chopin's cheesy Concerto No. 2. It was against the grain for Chopin to dare a symphonic work in the first place. In the second place, Wild killed off whatever integrity (slight) the piece had. There are a couple of passable themes given rudimentary development, all extended like a meat loaf full of stale bread and stitched randomly by pas-

Springfield Union — July 12

Maderna Elicits Extra Measure Of Responsiveness

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — It's possible that not many of the 5385 listeners at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon knew that Bruno Maderna is famous among musicians for a much different kind of music than that which he was conducting with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Entirely Sympathetic

The program included Schubert, Schoenberg, and Chopin. Maderna is one of the founders of a famous electronic music studio in Milan and is an established composer of austere atonal music.

His handling of the graceful romanticism of Schubert's Second Symphony and Chopin's Second Piano Concerto, however, was entirely sympathetic. Those beautiful melodies were very well served.

Chopin was well served by Earl Wild, also. His mastery of the romantic piano literature is unquestioned. He has the agile fingers for its virtuosic demands, and he has the emotional sensitivity for its sentiment and subtleties.

Really in Command

It was Maderna, however, who was really in command. There was no question about who was shaping the style of the orchestra.

He is a square, chunky man, built something like a blocking back. He stood with firmly planted feet and moved without a hint of self-awareness. His lack of self-conscious mannerism was a very rare sight on the conductor's podium.

His manner was no-nonsense, direct, clear-cut, positive, and the members of the orchestra seemed to give him an extra degree of responsiveness.

Lively High Spirits

The Schubert Symphony was full of lively high spirits, and the Schoenberg chamber symphony (opus 9) written before he devised the 12 tone method of composition, was tightly cohesive in spite of its uncommonly complex contrapuntal structure.

Saturday night, Michael Joseph Thomas, associate conductor of Boston's orchestra, led a pleasant, quietly satisfying evening program of Bach, Haydn and Brahms that gave Jules Eskin another opportunity to display his fine musicianship.

Eskin is the orchestra first cellist. He was soloist for Haydn's Cello Concerto in C, a piece with first and third movements of gentle good humor and a middle floating lyricism.

No Undue Mannerisms

Eskin's style was warm and expressive without undue mannerism or apparent extra effort for special effect. He seemed to let the music speak for itself. The audience was highly appreciative.

The opening Bach suite (number 4 in D) was all right, boisterous and occasionally pedantic, but the closing Brahms serenade (Number 2 in A, opus 16) was of unusual interest because of its orchestration.

The orchestra numbered 28 without violins. There were eight violas, six cellos, four double basses, and pairs of oboes, flutes, clarinets, bassoons and French horns.

18,074 For the Week

The sound was symphonic but unpretentious, soothing, unexciting, easy, nice.

Total weekly attendance was 18,074, 4186 Friday night, 2298 at the Saturday morning open rehearsal, 6205 Saturday night, 5385 Sunday afternoon.

Tuesday at Tanglewood the Contemporary Trends series will present a program of Sly and the Family Stone, Marion Williams and the Paul Winter Consort which starts at 6. Next weekend the Boston Symphony Players will open the schedule at 7 Friday, followed by the full orchestra at 9 with an all-Brahms program conducted by William Steinberg. Vladimir Ashkenazy will play Brahms' Second Piano Concerto.

All-Brahms Program

Saturday night at 8.30 another all-Brahms program conducted by Steinberg will include Joseph Silverstein and Jara Nelsova as soloists for the Concerto for Violin Cello.

Sunday's program at 2.30 will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa and will include Ashkenazy playing Mozart's Pianto Concerto in B Flat (K.595) and Maureen Forrester and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus with Brahms' "Alto Rhapsody."

RAVENA, N. Y.
NEWS-HERALD
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
W. 2,000

JUL 16 1971

Tanglewood Enters 3rd Week

The third weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood opens Friday evening at 7:00 o'clock with the week end prelude presented by the Boston Symphony Chamber players.

The main concert on Friday starts at 9:00 p. m. and will be an all-Brahms program conducted by William Steinberg. It will include his Tragic Overture; Piano Concerto No. 2 with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist; and Symphony No. 2.

Saturday evening's program will also be devoted to the works of Brahms. With Steinberg again conducting it will include: Academic Festival Overture; Concerto for violin and cello with Pinchas Zukerman and Zara Nelsova as soloists; and his Symphony No. 4.

Sunday's concert, starting at 2:30 will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa. It will consist of Mozart's Marriage of Figaro Overture and his Piano Concert K595 with Ashkenazy again the soloist; Brahm's Alto Rhapsody, Maureen Forrester, soloist; concluding with Brahms' Haydn Variaties.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181

JUL 14 1971

Tanglewood Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass. Friday at 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. At 9 p.m., William Steinberg conducts a Brahms program featuring Vladimir Ashkenazy. Saturday at 10:30 a.m., Open Rehearsal. At 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg conducts a different Brahms program, with Pinchas Zukerman and Zara Nelsova. Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Seija Ozawa conducts a Mozart and Brahms program, with Vladimir Ashkenazy and Maureen Forrester.

3D WEEKEND

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 8,245

JUL 14 1971

Tanglewood Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass. Friday at 7 p.m., Weekend Prelude with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players. At 9 p.m., William Steinberg conducts a Brahms program featuring Vladimir Ashkenazy, Saturday at 10:30 a.m., Open Rehearsal. At 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg conducts a different Brahms program, with Pinchas Zukerman and Zara Nelsova. Sunday at 2:30 p.m., Seija Ozawa conducts a Mozart and Brahms program, with Vladimir Ashkenazy and Maureen Forrester.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891

JUL 17 1971 New England Newsclip

MUSIC

TANGLEWOOD: July 17: Open Rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. William Steinberg, Brahms Program, Academic Festival Overture, Concerto for Violin and Cello, Pinchas Zukerman, Zara Nelsova, Symphony No. 4, 8:30 p.m. . . . July 18: Seiji Ozawa, 2:30 p.m. Mozart's 'Marriage of Figaro' Overture, Mozart's Piano Concerto K. 595, Vladimir Ashkenazy, Brahms' Alto Rhapsody, Maureen Forrester, Brahms' Haydn variations . . . July 23: Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m. with Sherrill Milnes. William Steinberg, Beethoven Program, Leonore Overture No. 3, Violin Concerto, Itzhak Perlman, Symphony No. 5, 9 p.m. . . . July 24: Open Rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. William Steinberg, Beethoven Program, 'King Stephen' Overture, Symphony No. 3, 'Eroic,' Symphony No. 7, 8:30 p.m. . . . July 25: Leonard Bernstein, 2:30 p.m., Beethoven Program, 'Missa Solemnis, Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, in memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 18 1971

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL—Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. In the shed, today at 2:30 p.m. Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Seiji Ozawa. The Program includes Mozart: Marriage of Figaro' Overture Mozart: Piano concerto in B flat K.595 Vladimir Ashkenazy, Brahms: Alto Rhapsody: Maureen Forrester, Men's Chorus of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus: Brahms: Haydn Variations. Information, 413-637-1600.

PRESS
BRISTOL, CONN.
D. 18,000

JUL 15 1971 New England Newsclip

All Brahms Concerts Slated At Tanglewood

The third weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts opens Friday evening, with the first of two all-Brahms concerts that weekend conducted by William Seinberg, Boston Symphony Music Director. The program includes the tragic overtures, the Piano concerto no. 2, with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, and the Symphony No. 2.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday at 7 p.m., presents the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, an ensemble of the principals of the Orchestra. The program will be Stravinsky's Histoire du Soldat and Ravel's Introduction and Allegro. Weekend Preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Boston Symphony in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The following evening, Saturday, at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg conducts the second of the weekend's all-Brahms concerts. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are soloists in the Concerto for violin and cello. The program opens with the Academic Festival Overture, and closes with the Symphony No. 4. The weekend's Open Rehearsal, Saturday morning, at 10:30 a.m., features Seiji Oawa conducting.

The final concert of the third weekend of the Berkshire Festival, Sunday at 2:30 p.m., will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, Artistic Director of Tanglewood. Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy makes his second appearance of the weekend performing Mozart's Piano concerto in B flat K. 595. Contralto Maureen Forrester sings Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with the Orchestra and the male voices of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. The program opens with Mozart's Marriage of Figaro overture and closes with Brahms' Haydn Variations.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
MONITOR
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264

JUL 15 1971 New England Newsclip

By Wayne Shilkret

Tanglewood soloist

Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy will appear with the Boston Symphony twice this week at the Berkshire Festival in Lenox, Mass. Friday evening he plays the Brahms Second Concerto under William Steinberg's direction, and on Sunday afternoon he will be heard in a Mozart concerto with Seiji Ozawa conducting.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 129,656

JUL 15 1971

GUEST. Contralto Maureen Forrester will be guest artist with the Boston Symphony under the baton of Seiji Ozawa Sunday at 2:30 p.m. in the Shed at Tanglewood, one of the events of the Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass.

BANNER
BENNINGTON, VT.
D. 6,000

JUL 16 1971 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood opens third musical weekend tonight

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — The third weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts opens tonight with the first of two all-Brahms concerts that weekend conducted by William Steinberg, Boston Symphony Music Director. The program includes the tragic overtures, the Piano concerto no. 2, with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, and the Symphony no. 2.

The Weekend Prelude, at 7 p.m., presents the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, an ensemble of the principals of the Orchestra. The program will be Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat" and Ravel's Introduction and Allegro. Weekend Preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Boston Symphony in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The following evening, Saturday, at 8:30, William Steinberg conducts the second of the weekend's all-Brahms concerts. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are soloists in the Concerto for violin and cello. The program opens with the Academic Festival Overture, and closes with the Symphony no. 4.

The weekend's open rehearsal, Saturday morning at 10:30, features Seiji Ozawa conducting. Tickets for the open rehearsal are $2.50 and benefit the orchestra's pension fund. Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

The final concert of the third weekend of the Berkshire Festival, Sunday, July 13, at 2:30 p.m., will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood. Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy makes his second appearance of the weekend performing Mozart's Piano concerto in B flat K.595.

UNION LEADER
MANCHESTER, N. H.
D. 21,008

JUL 17 1971 New England Newsclip

nhn New Hampshire Network Highlights

William Buckley continues his discussion of "War Crimes" in Southeast Asia with three Marines who feel that the American people have not been given the real story, on Firing Line Wednesday, July 21 at 9 p. m. on Channels 11 Durham, 15 Hanover, 40 Berlin, 49 Littleton, and 52 Keene.

Neal Seavey examines the function and the effectiveness of the New Hamsphire State Prison, in interviews with administrations, guards, and inmates, on NHN Public Affairs Thursday July 22 at 7:30, with a repeat broadcast Friday July 23 at 6:30.

William Steinberg leads the Boston Symphony in Haydn's Symphony No. 55, Starer's Concerto for Violin, Cello, and Orchestra, and Elgar's Symphony No. 2, in the weekly Boston Symphony concert Friday, July 23 at 8 p.m.

Jazzmen Dave Brubeck, Paul Desmond, and Gerry Mulligan join Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops Orchestra for an hour of jazz and pops Sunday July 25 at 8, with an alternate broadcast Tuesday, July 27 at 8.

On the scenic railroad at Cass, W. Va., viewers are transported into the "Iron Horse" era of American history, when Leon Bibb, Bill Monroe and the Blue Grass Boys, Mike Seeger, and host Oscar Brand ride the Midnight special on "American Odyssey," a feature of Fanfare Sunday July 25 at 10 p.m.

Space exploration will be brought down-to-earth to a child's level when "Mister Rogers" talks with Astronaut Major Alfred M. Worden in the launch room at Cape Kennedy, in a special program Monday July 26 at 7 p.m.

The election of Dwight D. Eisenhower as President meant the end of 20 years of Democratic control of the government; Dr. Abram Sachar outlines the Eisenhower and Kennedy years on the Course of Our Times Tuesday, July 27 at 6:30.

Is is possible to be a good Governor? William F. Buckley Jr. discusses the idea with Ronald Reagan, Governor of California, on Firing Line Wednesday, July 28 at 9 p. m.

New Hampshire Network programming is broadcast over Channels 11 Durham, 15 Haonvoer, 40 Berlin, 49 Littleton, and 52 Keene, Public Television in New Hampshire.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891

JUL 10 1971 New England Newsclip

MUSIC: Tanglewood: Sunday, July 18: Seiji Ozawa. 2:30 p.m. Mozart's Marriage of Figaro Overture. Mozart's piano concerto. K. 595. Vladimir Ashkenazy: Brahms's alto Rhapsody. Maureen Forrester. Brahms: Haydn variations . . . Friday, July 23: Weekend Prelude. 7 p.m. Sherrill Milnes. William Steinberg. Beethoven Program. Leonore overture No. 3. Violin concerto. Itzhak Perlman. Symphony No. 5. 9 p.m. . . . Saturday, July 24: Open rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. William Steinberg. Beethoven Program. "King Stephen" overture. Symphony No. 3 "Eroica." Symphony No. 7.

44

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
S. 117,499

JUL 11 1971 New England Newsclip

AT TANGLEWOOD

All-Brahms Concert

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — The third weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts opens Friday evening, July 16, with the first of two all-Brahms concerts that weekend conducted by William Steinberg, Boston Symphony music director. The program includes the tragic overtures, the Piano concerto no. 2, with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, and the Symphony no. 2.

The Weekend Prelude, July 16 at 7 p.m., presents the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, an ensemble of the principals of the orchestra. The program will be Stravinsky's Histoire du Soldat and Ravel's Introduction and Allegro. Weekend Preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Boston Symphony in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The following evening, Saturday, July 17 at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg conducts the second of the weekend's all-Brahms concerts. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are soloists in the Concerto for violin and cello. The program opens with the Academic Festival Overture, and closes with the Symphony no. 4.

The weekend's Open Rehearsal, Saturday morning July 17 at 10:30 a.m., features Seiji Ozawa conducting. Tickets for the Open Rehearsal are $2.50 and benefit the orchestra's pension fund. Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

The final concert of the third weekend of the Berkshire Festival, Sunday July 18 at 2:30 p.m., will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood. Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy makes his second appearance of the weekend performing Mozart's Piano concerto in B flat K.595. Contralto Maureen Forrester sings Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with the orchestra and the male voices of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. The program opens with Mozart's Marriage of Figaro overture and closes with Brahms' Haydn Variations.

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

JUL 11 1971

Boston Players, Orchestra Open Friday At Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass. — The third weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood will begin Friday at 7 p.m.

The concert will feature the Boston Symphony Chamber Players and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. under the direction fo William Steinberg.

The chamber players will perform Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat and Ravel's "Introduction and Allegro."

The orchestra will perform an all-Brahms program, including the "Tragic Overture," "Piano Concerto No. Two" and "Symphony No. Two." Vladimir Ashkenazy is guest pianist.

On Saturday morning at 10:30 o'clock there will be an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's program, to be presented at 8:30 o'clock that night.

This program will also be all-Brahms, featuring the composer's Academic Festival Overture," "Concerto for Violin and Cello" and "Symphony No. Four." Joseph Silverstein is guest violinist and Zara Nelsova is guest cellist.

Sunday's program, scheduled for 2:30 p.m., will feature the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Seiji Ozawa. The program includes the overture from Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro;" Mozart's "Piano Concerto in B Flat" and Brahms' "Alto Rhapsody" and "Haydn Variations."

Guest artists will be Ashkenazy at the piano and Maureen Forrester, internationally acclaimed contralto.

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
D. 13,225

JUL 9 1971 New England Newsclip

AT TANGLEWOOD—Pianist Ruth Laredo performs Hindemith's Four Temperaments tonight at Tanglewood, under the baton of Leon Fleisher.

Tanglewood to present all Brahms concerts

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS — The third weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts opens Friday evening, July 16, with the first of two all-Brahms concerts that weekend conducted by William Steinberg, Boston Symphony Music Director. The program includes the tragic overtures, the Piano concerto no. 2, with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, and the Symphony no. 2.

The Weekend Prelude, July 16 at 7 p.m., presents the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, an ensemble of the principals of the Orchestra. The program will be Strafinsky's "Histoire du Soldat" and Ravel's Introduction and Allegro. Weekend Preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Boston Symphony in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The following evening, Saturday July 17 at 8.30 p.m., William Steinberg conducts the second of the weekend's all-Brahms concerts. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are soloists in the Concerto for violin and cello. The program opens with the Academic Festival Overture, and closes with the Symphony no. 4.

The weekend's Open Rehearsal, Saturday morning July 17 at 10.30 a.m., features Seiji Ozawa conducting. Tickets for the Open Rehearsal are $2.50 and benefit the Orchestra's Pension Fund. Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewood Ticket Office the morning of the rehearsal.

The final concert of the third weekend of the Berkshire Festival, Sunday July 18 at 2.30 p.m. will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, Artistic Director of Tanglewood. Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy makes his second appearance of the weekend performing Mozart's Piano concerto in B flat K.595. Contralto Maureen Forrester sings Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with the Orchestra and the male voices of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. The program opens with Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture and closes with Brahms' Hayden Variations.

NEWS-TIMES
DANBURY, CONN.
D. 31,285
JUL 13 1971
New England Newsclip

People and events

Syracuse, N.Y., Birmingham Mich., Pittsburgh, Pa., Norfolk, Va., Bethel and Danbury.

Ashkenazy at Tanglewood

The third weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts opens Friday evening at 9 p.m. with the first of two all-Brahms concerts this weekend conducted by William Steinberg, Boston Symphony Music Director. The program includes the tragic overtures, the Piano Concerto No. 2, with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, and the Symphony No. 2.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday at 7 p.m. presents the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, an ensemble of the principals of the orchestra. The program will be Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat" and Ravel's "Introduction and Allegro."

Saturday at 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg conducts the second of the weekend's all-Brahms concerts. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are soloists in the Concerto for Violin and Cello. The program opens with the "Academic Festival Overture," and closes with the Symphony No. 4.

The weekend's open rehearsal, Saturday morning at 10:30 features Seiji Ozawa conducting. Tickets for the open rehearsal are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

The final concert of the third weekend of the Berkshire Festival, Sunday at 2:30 p.m., will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood. Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy makes his second appearance of the weekend performing Mozart's Piano concerto in B flat K.595. Contralto Maureen Forrester sings Brahms' "Alto Rhapsody" with the orchestra and the male voices of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. The program opens with Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture and closes with Brahms' Haydn Variations.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398
JUL 17 1971
New England Newsclip

Steinberg Opener All Brahms

By R.C. HAMMERICH

LENOX — William Steinberg brought with him an all-Brahms program Friday for his first appearance this season on the podium with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood.

It was the first appearance also of the full orchestra, the absent contingent having arrived from Boston, where it had been playing in the Esplanade while half the personnel presented small orchestra scores, mostly from the 18th century, at Tanglewood.

Steinberg also brought Vladimir Ashkenazy to play the solo part of the Brahms Second Piano Concerto (Op. 83), which turned out to hold the core of the evening's attraction.

The program opened with vigorous, even assertive, sounds offered under the title "Tragic Overture" (Op. 81) and closed with a fine Symphony No. 2.

But by then the thumps of the overture and the first two movements of the concerto had been driven away (and forgiven) by the liquid beauty of the final movement.

Ashkenazy played with his usual virtuosic fire and lightining which is more commonly applied with success to Rachmaninoff and Prokofieff. I detected more thunder in the first two movements than Brahms needs, I think, perhaps an inevitable outgrowth of Ashkenazy's youthful enthusiasm (and steely fingers.)

The introspection and quiet contemplation he drew from the third movement, however, was worthy of a pianist of greater maturity and insight, and the final movement with its combination of giaty and delicacy brought cheers from the crowd, 6893 happy souls who braved fog and rain-soaked grass.

The Boston Symphony Chamber Players offered two peices for the 7 o'clock weekend prelude program: Ravel's Introduction and Allegro for harp with string quartet plus flute and clarinet, and Stravinsky's ballet, "Histoire de Soldat (The Soldier's Tale)."

This is the seventh year the Chamber Players have been offering programs of uncommonly heard instrumental combinations, and there is a distinct feeling that they have been playing with increasing sensitivity and depth of expression.

The Stravinsky piece (played in a 28-minute version without narration) was tightly woven, highly polished, deft, light-footed.

It is music of highly rhythmic momentum and eccentric accents, and the seven instruments handled its overlapping patterns with great skill and electric tension.

Another grouping of seven instruments offered Ravel's Introduction with nearly equal skill and, of course, contrasting style.

Tonight at 8:30 William Steinberg will conduct an all-Brahms program, and Sunday afternoon at 2:30 Seijo Ozawa will conduct a program of Mozart and Brahms including pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy with a Mozart concerto and contralto Maureen Forrester with Brahms' Rhapsody for alto solo, male chorus and orchestra.

NEWBURGH, N. Y.
NEWS
D. 32,000
JUL 21 1971

Tanglewood Symphony Form Returns

By BERNARD LOTH

Tanglewood 1971 and its programming has returned to Boston Symphony tradition with a solid classical base and occasional flights into contempory experimentation.

In 1970, with the departure of the great Erich Leinsdorf from the helm, Gunther Schuller gained considerable power and decreed the inclusion of contempory works in most of the programs.

This apparently alienated many — including this reviewer, who feels (with Leinsdorf) that contemporary works have to be able to hold their own between Mozart and Mahler to deserve being played on mixed programs.

On Friday evening the music director of the Boston Symphony, William Steinberg, was greeted with enthusiastic applause upon his appearance, applauded with great enthusiasm after each member, and deservedly so. Mr. Steinberg inspired fine performances of three Brahm's works. The Tragic Overture, The Second Symphony and the Second Piano Concerto, with Vladimir Ashkenazy as the completely delightful soloist.

Mr. Ashkenazy's lyric interpretation of the work, contrasted with the bombastic approach of many pianists, was all pleasure and no pain. Some pianists feel they must beat the piano to death to be heard in a room seating 5,000 persons, but Ashkenazy stroked the keys with the same apparent ease that he would use in his own studio, and every note sang beautifully.

Mr. Steinberg has created an orchestral sound even more legato than Leinsdorf and full and lush in tone, except for the horns which had a bad night.

Tanglewood is an easy two-hour drive from Newburgh via Rt. 84, the Taconic, 20 cents worth of the Thruway and then following signs for a few miles. There is a Prelude at 7 p.m. on Fridays for early-birds, followed by the Boston Symphony at 9. Saturdays concerts are at 8:30 p.m. and Sundays at 2:30.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
JUL 10 1971
New England Newsclip

All-Brahms Concerts Open at Tanglewood

The third weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts opens Friday evening, July 16, with the first of two all-Brahms concerts that weekend conducted by William Steinberg, Boston symphony music director.

The program includes the tragic overtures, the Piano concerto No. 2, with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, and the Symphony No. 2.

The Weekend Prelude, July 16 at 7 p.m., presents the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, an ensemble of the principals of the Orchestra. The program will be Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat" and Ravel's Introduction and Allegro.

Weekend Preludes, at 7 p.m. each Friday, two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guest artists and members of the Boston Symphony in short programs offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders.

The following evening, Saturday July 17 at 8:30 p.m. William Steinberg conducts the second of the wekend's all-Brahms concerts. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are so oists in the Concerto for violin and cello. The program opens with the Academic Festival Overture, and closes with the Symphony No. 4.

The weekend's Open Rehearsal, Saturday morning July 17 at 10:30 a.m., features Seiji Ozewa conducting. Tickets for the Open Rehearsal benefit the orchestra's pension fund. Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewood Ticket Office the morning of the rehearsal.

The final concert of the third weekend of the Berkshire Festival, Sunday July 18 at 2:30 p.m., will be conducted by Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood.

Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy makes his second appearance of the weekend performing Mozart's Piano concerto in B flat K.595. Contralto Maureen Forrester sings Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with the Orchestra and the male voices of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. The program opens with Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture and closes with Brahms' Haydn Variations.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 130,857
JUL 17 1971
New England Newsclip

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUL 14 1971

Brahms Concert Starts 3rd Week at Berkshire

The third weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts opens Friday evening with the first of two all-Brahms concerts, conducted by William Steinberg, Boston Symphony music director, at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The Friday night Brahms concert includes the tragic overtures, Piano Concerto No. 2, with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, and Symphony No. 2.

The weekend prelude at 7 p.m. Friday presents the Boston Symphony Chamber Players, an ensemble of principals of the orchestra. The program will be Stravinsky's "Histoire du Soldat" and Ravel's Introduction and Allegro. These programs are free to Friday evennig ticket holders.

The second of this weekend's all-Brahms concerts will be presented at 8:30 p.m. Saturday, again with Steinberg conducting. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are soloists in the Concerto for Violin and Cello. Other selections are the Academic Festival Overture and Symphony No. 4.

The weekend's open rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. Saturday features Seiji Ozawa conducting.

Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood, conducts the final weekend concert at 2:30 p.m. Sunday. Pianist Ashkenazy performs Mozart's Piano Concerto in B flat. Contralto Maureen Forrester sings Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with the orchestra and male voices of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus. The program also includes Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" Overture and Brahms' Haydn Variations.

DR. ANTHONY ZANO
Former City Teacher

Ashkenazy: A Delight

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Times Music Critic

LENOX, Mass. — William Steinberg, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made his first appearance of the season at Tanglewood last night when he conducted an all-Brahms program.

His soloist for the evening was Vladimir Ashkenazy, who is probably the finest of the younger generation of Pianists, an artist of rock-solid technical equipment and certainly a bulwark of strength in the monumental Brahms Second Piano Concerto, which he played on his occasion.

Not since Leon Fleischer played the same work here several years ago have I heard anything at Tanglewood to rival th power and solidity that he brought to this challenging work. There is never any doubt that Ashkenazy can handle any pianistic hurdle that confronts him.

In the first two movements he attacked the piano with a ferocity and passion that were exhilerating and yet he was able to generate the warm poetry of the slow movement with an unerring sense of its requirements.

Perhaps, in the last analysis, his performance lacked the galvanic intensity that I remembered from the historic Horowitz-Toscanini readings. But there was no denying the power and the absolute control that he brought to the Brahms Second Piano Concerto last night in the Tanglewood Shed.

The audience, which seemed to have filled the Shed almost to capacity, gave Aashkenazy a standing ovation and called him out several times before intermission.

To open the concert Steinberg conducted the Bostonians in the composer's so-called "Tragic" Overture. There was a vital and monolithic quality to this reading that struck me as most appropriate to the subject matter.

In fact, the orchestra was in topnotch form for this Brahms program, offering a sonorous and dynamic accompaniment for the Piano Concerto. I regret that I could not stay to hear the Second Symphony, which concluded the concert.

Tonight Steinberg will lead another Brahms program, which will include the Overture, the Fourth Symphony, and the "Double" Concerto with violinist Joseph Silverstein and celllist Zara Nelsova.

On Sunday Mozart and Brahms will share the billing when Seiji Ozawa conducts. Ashkenazy will return to play Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 27 and Maureeen Forrester will be the soloist in Brahms' "Alto" Rhapsody.

46

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405

JUL 22 1971 New England Newsclip

Reviews of Tanglewood

July 16

By J.H.

Friday night ticket-holders who do not avail themselves of the weekend preludes, given at 7 o'clock, are depriving themselves of some substantial chamber music played by experts. This week, Stravinsky's infrequently performed, Histoire du Soldat and Ravel's Introduction and Allegro for Harp were given solid musical performances by an enthusiastic ensemble.

The orchestral concert was the first of two all-Brahms evenings conducted by William Steinberg. Mr. Steinberg conducted the big, broad "Tragic Overture" with drive and passion, tempered by an economical style. The orchestra responded sensitively from the first shed-shaking attack.

Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy is a young man who is equal to the special demands which Brahms makes. In the first movement of the Concerto no. 2 in B flat, he bombarded us with the piles of musical mud which Brahms seems to use when he cannot find a good theme to develop. In the devilishly hard cascading cross-rhythms of the andante he never faltered. All in all, his was a conservative, honest rendering, devoid of the affectations which Brahms often stimulates.

The evening ended with Brahms Symphony no. 2 in D. Although the Adagio had some sluggish moments, the work was done well, and the final movement was spectacular.

July 17

By J.B.

Saturday's concert at Tanglewood was devoted entirely to the music of Johannes Brahms. It was a magic evening. The beautiful setting was dramatically enhanced by the cloudy remains of a storm. Add to this the rich and meticulous playing of the Boston Symphony and it became an evening of which Brahms would have certainly approved.

The Academic Festival Overture, op. 80, opened the program with its delightful collection of student drinking songs blended together with academic dignity, without academic pomposity.

The major work on the program was the Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello, op. 102. This was admirably played by Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, and Lara Nelsova, cellist. The soloists played the difficult score with fine precision and lovely tone. Particularly beautiful was the third movement. Its light and dancing theme was given a warm and reflective reading.

The concert closed with the Symphony No. 4 in E minor, op. 98. The high point of the whole evening was the sensitive playing of its second movement with its rich sonorities and growing intensity.

The whole evening was a splendid performance. William Steinberg, the orchestra's music director, conducted with his usual clarity and economy of movement. It was an enjoyable evening of vintage Brahms.

July 18

By J.H.

The big lawn at Tanglewood was a sea of humanity Sunday afternoon as perfect weather and an interesting program drew music lovers and others. Conductor Seiji Ozawa waxed businesslike in the opener with a good breezy reading of Mozart's Overture to "La Nozze di Figaro" marked by subtle phrasing and big bursts of humor.

Piano soloist Vladimir Ashkenazy returned to the stage for a beautiful performance of Mozart's great final Piano Concerto in B flat. Mr. Ashkenazy gave the work a tight but moving interpretation, always tasteful (especially in the cadenzas which are too often overdone), never flamboyant. Unfortunately the orchestral accompaniment frequently detracted.

Moments of grief have often elicited some of the most profound musical statements from the great composers. This was certainly true of Brahms. His Alto Rhapsody, along with the Requium with which it shares a similar sound and feeling, is a compelling piece. Contralto Maureen Forrester used her big, rich voice with seasoned artistry to convey Brahms' reaffirmation of life. It is too bad the male chorus drowned her out so thoroughly in the final stanza. The balance was probably perfect at the podium.

The final selection, Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn was fun for everyone — conductor, players, and assembled masses.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 244,000

JUL 31 1971

The Summer Circuit

APPLAUSE—At the Palace. In the process of welcoming its new star, Broadway's "backstage" musical evidently underwent some polishing. Ron Field's splashy, riotously colorful production numbers are now as slick and taut and as vibrantly performed as they were on opening night. The supporting cast exudes the same fresh, heads-up vitality, with a special bonus in replacement Keith Charles, who is immensely likable as Margo Channing's lover. Making her musical debut as the fabulous Margo, ironically enough, is Anne Baxter, who played Eve Harrington in the original film version. Miss Baxter brings to Margo a new sense of vulnerability; but one wishes that the role itself had been retailored somewhat for her individual qualities. The sweeping gestures, the loping stride, the throaty vocalisms were the essence of Bacall's appeal, but seem ill-suited to Baxter's diminutive charms. More essentially, without the dazzle of Bacall to distract, the show's inherent flaws appear more glaring, less forgivable. It takes more flamboyance than Baxter musters to camouflage vacuousness. —MARILYN STASIO

THE STUTTGART BALLET—At the Metropolitan Opera House. A repeat visit to Lincoln Center by this troupe with repertory successes seen earlier in the season and guest star Margot Fonteyn in John Cranko's newest work, "Poème de l'Extase," is a midsummer fortnight's dream. Yet not altogether. Dame Margot's very presence on a stage is the summation of ballet and dance stardom, but her vehicle is half bravura and half bombast. It begins with a witty and sardonic "period" prologue of high promise and then disintegrates into an emaciated, hollow obviousness. The best thing about it—circus aerialist costumes for the men excepted—is the almost overpowering decor Jürgen Rose has based on the busy, art nouveau work of Gustav Klimt. Although Klimt died in 1918, his colors and patterns are as up-to-date (or as dated) as pop art and psychedelic doodlings. To these ears, the Scriabin score—an orchestration of the Piano Sonata No. 9 and the impotently heaving "Poem of Ecstasy"—is a liability. Mr. Cranko's notion of building a piece around the great ballerina as a mature diva who chooses her febrile dreams of past lovers over a young suitor is valid enough. Too bad it's overproduced and choreographically undernourished. —GREER JOHNSON

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL—At Lenox, Mass. If you've been listening to the doomsayers who claim that classical music is a dying phenomenon, irrelevant to our times and unable to hold the interest of a younger generation, spend an evening with the Philharmonic in a city park, or better still with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. On a recent humid Friday evening following a stormy afternoon, the shed's 6,000-plus seats were filled and the lawns well covered with music lovers of all ages, drawn by a far from adventurous, but nonetheless lovely, all-Brahms program. William Steinberg led the Bostonians smoothly through the Tragic Overture and the Second Symphony, and provided fine accompaniment in the Second Piano Concerto for the impeccable, sublimely lyrical playing of Vladimir Ashkenazy. Surely the beautiful, unspoiled Berkshire setting and the informal festival atmosphere are part of Tanglewood's appeal, but the music was clearly the major interest of the attentive and enthusiastic audience—including the significant representation of tomorrow's music lovers and supporters. —STANLEY NEWMAN

AMERICAN BALLET THEATRE—At the State Theatre. If the Kennedy Center is to succeed in vaulting Washington, D.C., into a position of world prominence in the performing arts, Ballet Theatre will probably be the vehicle. For any company that can create a "Giselle" like the one offered on a recent Sunday evening brings world focus and interest to any stage on which it performs. David Blair's restaging of the classic is both intelligent and beautiful—a rare ballet combination. The sets by Oliver Smith and the costumes by Peter Hall are perfection. The corps rises to its highest level of achievement, especially as the Wilis in the second act. Giselle is the role that brought Natalia Makarova to world prominence with the Kirov Ballet, and it is by far her finest interpretation with ABT—delicate and lyrical, yet thoughtful and poised throughout. Ivan Nagy was a worthy partner; he ranks with the best of the great male dancers we have seen here this past year. And Cynthia Gregory—imperious and grand in every way—is the ultimate Queen of the Wilis. As this whole production is the ultimate "Giselle." —S.N.

JAZZ IN THE GARDEN—At the Museum of Modern Art. It doesn't seem as if the blues were meant to be played in the cool, formal environment of the Sculpture Garden of the Museum of Modern Art; nor does it seem that it can be appreciated by the 16-year-old nouveau-hip types who seem to be invading every last musical sanctuary. Still, the blues was there last Thursday in the person of Big Mama Thornton. Big Mama really didn't get it on that well, and the band behind her was often sloppy and unresponsive. Yet there was that unmistakable feeling of "the blues," less a type of music than a personal quality: that quality of ham and childishness that prompts Big Mama to mug unmercifully for the photographers and rattle with an innocent incompetence on the drums. And, as we identify with the expression of life that is at once tragic and ecstatic, we are moved by a vision of childishness that seems to be born of wisdom, not ignorance. —MICHAEL LENEHAN

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,200

JUL 26 1971 New England Newsclip

Concert Review

Tanglewood Hosts Bounty Of Brahms

By Martha deB. Beaver

Except for two luminous Mozart delights, Tanglewood's third Berkshire Festival weekend brought a bounty of Brahms, with two conductors, music director William Steinberg and Seiji Ozawa to unfold their interpretations.

Attendance crescendoed from damp Friday evening's 6893 through soggy Saturday's 8299 to reach the highest total, 11,324, with Sunday's sparkingly clear weather. It was the highest since Erich Leinsdorf's final concert in 1969 which drew 14,120.

Friday's Prelude at 7:00 included performances of Ravel's Introduction and allegro for harp, string quartet and clarinet, and Stravinsky's "The Soldier's Tale", both suffering from a lack of style, dynamics and nuance. Silverstein, on whom much of the latter depended, was tonally superb as usual, but did little to enhance the mood of the musical story. It's still a profitable way of getting more acquainted with these works, in a more or less rehearsal ambience.

Ovations

A season for standing ovations, the orchestra isn't letting the audience outdo them. Their welcome seemed genuine, however, when they greeted Steinberg Friday and Saturday evenings. Taking the reins (figuratively) in his markedly capable hands, he opened Friday's program with the Tragic overture's fortissimo chords, one of the principal figures of the theme, and without score or needless encouragement, directed his sober musicians through an incisively clear but frugally contrasted performance.

Although the B flat piano concerto, second of his two, should have been the high point of the evening, especially with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, it ran a close second to the second symphony in D closing the program.

Magnificently evocative, and an entirely new concept in writing for piano and orchestra, (it has a chamber music quality) the concerto lacked the drive but not its basic coloration, heard immediately in the horn solo beginning each movement and ending with trumpets and tympani. The dialogue between piano and orchestra was perfectly blended, a bit unsteady with the firy scherzo's first theme, its impassioned mood tightly controlled by Steinberg; Ashkenazy was willing to be gentled, although his virtuosity which Brahms demands could never be signified as such. He penetrated tonal depths and heights with a strength and power his stature belies. encompassing the keyboard with technical ease, structure not always clear, but then neither was the orchestra's. The audience stood to acclaim the performers, with shouts of bravos emphasizing their pleasure.

A complex symphony, but what music of Brahms is not richly woven, the second Dmajor was presented with sonorous suavity, and gracious though studied beauty, from the first three crotchets in the basses echoing and re-echoing throughout the whole symphony, the brass and winds delicious dialogue, and strings' dreamy phrases, the sunny pastoral mood set by the oboe in the third movement, to the intense and exciting climax.

Overture

Saturday Steinberg again conducted, the Academic festival overture, and a rather ponderous but at times breathtakingly beautiful interpretation of the fourth symphony (somehow the music itself overcomes any personal implant), and the Aminor double concerto for violin and cello, with Joseph Silverstein and Zara Nelsova as sympathetic, but often unmatched in timbre and technique, soloists, their greatest accord reached in the final movement.

The weather and the music made an unbeatable combination Sunday afternoon, with Ozawa at his sensitive (and graceful we must admit) best. Mozart's overture to The Marriage of Figaro was a sparkling bright instrumental aria, its gay mood light and promising.

Again Ashkenazy was soloist in a B flat concerto, this time Mozart's K.595, his last and most personal, and the pianist brought out the tender, introspective mood, with great empathy the clarity of its musical development certainly more pronounced than the Brahms, by comparison naturally more simply constructed. Ozawa took a slower than usual tempo for the first movement, which allowed both solist and orchestra to reflect on every thematic and developmental detail expressed with such beauty and perfection by the composer.

Impressive

Maureen Forrester, an impressive artist with musically refined imagination and a rich-sounding voice, brought both to the rhapsody for contralto solo, male chorus and orchestra, a setting of three stanzas from Goethe's Harzreise in Winter. And Ozawa interpreted this moodily romantic work with excellent rhythm and tempo, the chorus trained by John Oliver matching the darkly brooding coloration.

Variations on a Theme by Joseph Haydn, also in B flat, closed a supremely satisfying program, all well-suited to Ozawa's talents. Its eight variations moved in kaleidoscopic array, each a gem acknowledging the fertile craft that is uniquely Brahms, all brought to a grand resolution by the theme of passacaglia form.

46

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405
JUL 22 1971
New England Newsclip

Reviews of Tanglewood

July 16

By J.H.

Friday night ticket-holders who do not avail themselves of the weekend preludes, given at 7 o'clock, are depriving themselves of some substantial chamber music played by experts. This week, Stravinsky's infrequently performed, Histoire du Soldat and Ravel's Introduction and Allegro for Harp were given solid musical performances by an enthusiastic ensemble.

The orchestral concert was the first of two all-Brahms evenings conducted by William Steinberg. Mr. Steinberg conducted the big, broad "Tragic Overture" with drive and passion, tempered by an economical style. The orchestra responded sensitively from the first shed-shaking attack.

Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy is a young man who is equal to the special demands which Brahms makes. In the first movement of the Concerto no. 2 in B flat, he bombarded us with the piles of musical mud which Brahms seems to use when he cannot find a good theme to develop. In the devilishly hard cascading cross-rhythms of the andante he never faltered. All in all, his was a conservative, honest rendering, devoid of the affectations which Brahms often stimulates.

The evening ended with Brahms Symphony no. 2 in D. Although the Adagio had some sluggish moments, the work was done well, and the final movement was spectacular.

July 17

By J.B.

Saturday's concert at Tanglewood was devoted entirely to the music of Johannes Brahms. It was a magic evening. The beautiful setting was dramatically enhanced by the cloudy remains of a storm. Add to this the rich and meticulous playing of the Boston Symphony and it became an evening of which Brahms would have certainly approved.

The Academic Festival Overture, op. 80, opened the program with its delightful collection of student drinking songs blended together with academic dignity, without academic pomposity.

The major work on the program was the Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello, op. 102. This was admirably played by Joseph Silverstein, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, and Lara Nelsova, cellist. The soloists played the difficult score with fine precision and lovely tone. Particularly beautiful was the third movement. Its light and dancing theme was given a warm and reflective reading.

The concert closed with the Symphony No. 4 in E minor, op. 98. The high point of the whole evening was the sensitive playing of its second movement with its rich sonorities and growing intensity.

The whole evening was a splendid performance. William Steinberg, the orchestra's music director, conducted with his usual clarity and economy of movement. It was an enjoyable evening of vintage Brahms.

July 18

By J.H.

The big lawn at Tanglewood was a sea of humanity Sunday afternoon as perfect weather and an interesting program drew music lovers and others. Conductor Seiji Ozawa waxed businesslike in the opener with a good breezy reading of Mozart's Overture to "La Nozze di Figaro" marked by subtle phrasing and big bursts of humor.

Piano soloist Vladimir Ashkenazy returned to the stage for a beautiful performance of Mozart's great final Piano Concerto in B flat. Mr. Ashkenazy gave the work a tight but moving interpretation, always tasteful (especially in the cadenzas which are too often overdone), never flamboyant. Unfortunately the orchestral accompaniment frequently detracted.

Moments of grief have often elicited some of the most profound musical statements from the great composers. This was certainly true of Brahms. His Alto Rhapsody, along with the Requium with which it shares a similar sound and feeling, is a compelling piece. Contralto Maureen Forrester used her big, rich voice with seasoned artistry to convey Brahms' reaffirmation of life. It is too bad the male chorus drowned her out so thoroughly in the final stanza. The balance was probably perfect at the podium.

The final selection, Brahms' Variations on a Theme by Haydn was fun for everyone — conductor, players, and assembled masses.

CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
W. 244,000
JUL 31 1971

The Summer Circuit

APPLAUSE—At the Palace. In the process of welcoming its new star, Broadway's "backstage" musical evidently underwent some polishing. Ron Field's splashy, riotously colorful production numbers are now as slick and taut and as vibrantly performed as they were on opening night. The supporting cast exudes the same fresh, heads-up vitality, with a special bonus in replacement Keith Charles, who is immensely likable as Margo Channing's lover. Making her musical debut as the fabulous Margo, ironically enough, is Anne Baxter, who played Eve Harrington in the original film version. Miss Baxter brings to Margo a new sense of vulnerability; but one wishes that the role itself had been retailored somewhat for her individual qualities. The sweeping gestures, the loping stride, the throaty vocalisms were the essence of Bacall's appeal, but seem ill-suited to Baxter's diminutive charms. More essentially, without the dazzle of Bacall to distract, the show's inherent flaws appear more glaring, less forgivable. It takes more flamboyance than Baxter musters to camouflage vacuousness. —MARILYN STASIO

THE STUTTGART BALLET—At the Metropolitan Opera House. A repeat visit to Lincoln Center by this troupe with repertory successes seen earlier in the season and guest star Margot Fonteyn in John Cranko's newest work, "Poème de l'Extase," is a midsummer fortnight's dream. Yet not altogether. Dame Margot's very presence on a stage is the summation of ballet and dance stardom, but her vehicle is half bravura and half bombast. It begins with a witty and sardonic "period" prologue of high promise and then disintegrates into an emaciated, hollow obviousness. The best thing about it—circus aerialist costumes for the men excepted—is the almost overpowering decor Jürgen Rose has based on the busy, art nouveau work of Gustav Klimt. Although Klimt died in 1918, his colors and patterns are as up-to-date (or as dated) as pop art and psychedelic doodlings. To these ears, the Scriabin score—an orchestration of the Piano Sonata No. 9 and the impotently heaving "Poem of Ecstasy"—is a liability. Mr. Cranko's notion of building a piece around the great ballerina as a mature diva who chooses her febrile dreams of past lovers over a young suitor is valid enough. Too bad it's overproduced and choreographically undernourished. —GREER JOHNSON

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL—At Lenox, Mass. If you've been listening to the doomsayers who claim that classical music is a dying phenomenon, irrelevant to our times and unable to hold the interest of a younger generation, spend an evening with the Philharmonic in a city park, or better still with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. On a recent humid Friday evening following a stormy afternoon, the shed's 6,000-plus seats were filled and the lawns well covered with music lovers of all ages, drawn by a far from adventurous, but nonetheless lovely, all-Brahms program. William Steinberg led the Bostonians smoothly through the Tragic Overture and the Second Symphony, and provided fine accompaniment in the Second Piano Concerto for the impeccable, sublimely lyrical playing of Vladimir Ashkenazy. Surely the beautiful, unspoiled Berkshire setting and the informal festival atmosphere are part of Tanglewood's appeal, but the music was clearly the major interest of the attentive and enthusiastic audience—including the significant representation of tomorrow's music lovers and supporters. —STANLEY NEWMAN

AMERICAN BALLET THEATRE—At the State Theatre. If the Kennedy Center is to succeed in vaulting Washington, D.C., into a position of world prominence in the performing arts, Ballet Theatre will probably be the vehicle. For any company that can create a "Giselle" like the one offered on a recent Sunday evening brings world focus and interest to any stage on which it performs. David Blair's restaging of the classic is both intelligent and beautiful—a rare ballet combination. The sets by Oliver Smith and the costumes by Peter Hall are perfection. The corps rises to its highest level of achievement, especially as the Wilis in the second act. Giselle is the role that brought Natalia Makarova to world prominence with the Kirov Ballet, and it is by far her finest interpretation with ABT—delicate and lyrical, yet thoughtful and poised throughout. Ivan Nagy was a worthy partner; he ranks with the best of the great male dancers we have seen here this past year. And Cynthia Gregory—imperious and grand in every way—is the ultimate Queen of the Wilis. As this whole production is the ultimate "Giselle." —S.N.

JAZZ IN THE GARDEN—At the Museum of Modern Art. It doesn't seem as if the blues were meant to be played in the cool, formal environment of the Sculpture Garden of the Museum of Modern Art; nor does it seem that it can be appreciated by the 16-year-old nouveau-hip types who seem to be invading every last musical sanctuary. Still, the blues was there last Thursday in the person of Big Mama Thornton. Big Mama really didn't get it on that well, and the band behind her was often sloppy and unresponsive. Yet there was that unmistakable feeling of "the blues," less a type of music than a personal quality: that quality of ham and childishness that prompts Big Mama to mug unmercifully for the photographers and rattle with an innocent incompetence on the drums. And, as we identify with the expression of life that is at once tragic and ecstatic, we are moved by a vision of childishness that seems to be born of wisdom, not ignorance. —MICHAEL LENEHAN

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,200
JUL 26 1971
New England Newsclip

Concert Review

Tanglewood Hosts Bounty Of Brahms

By Martha deB. Beaver

Except for two luminous Mozart delights, Tanglewood's third Berkshire Festival weekend brought a bounty of Brahms, with two conductors, music director William Steinberg and Seiji Ozawa to unfold their interpretations.

Attendance crescendoed from damp Friday evening's 6893 through soggy Saturday's 8299 to reach the highest total, 11,324, with Sunday's sparkingly clear weather. It was the highest since Erich Leinsdorf's final concert in 1969 which drew 14,120.

Friday's Prelude at 7:00 included performances of Ravel's Introduction and allegro for harp, string quartet and clarinet, and Stravinsky's "The Soldier's Tale", both suffering from a lack of style, dynamics and nuance. Silverstein, on whom much of the latter depended, was tonally superb as usual, but did little to enhance the mood of the musical story. It's still a profitable way of getting more acquainted with these works, in a more or less rehearsal ambience.

Ovations

A season for standing ovations, the orchestra isn't letting the audience outdo them. Their welcome seemed genuine, however, when they greeted Steinberg Friday and Saturday evenings. Taking the reins (figuratively) in his markedly capable hands, he opened Friday's program with the Tragic overture's fortissimo chords, one of the principal figures of the theme, and without score or needless encouragement, directed his sober musicians through an incisively clear but frugally contrasted performance.

Although the B flat piano concerto, second of his two, should have been the high point of the evening, especially with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, it ran a close second to the second symphony in D closing the program.

Magnificently evocative, and an entirely new concept in writing for piano and orchestra, (it has a chamber music quality) the concerto lacked the drive but not its basic coloration, heard immediately in the horn solo beginning each movement and ending with trumpets and tympani. The dialogue between piano and orchestra was perfectly blended, a bit unsteady with the firy scherzo's first theme, its impassioned mood tightly controlled by Steinberg; Ashkenazy was willing to be gentled, although his virtuosity which Brahms demands could never be signified as such. He penetrated tonal depths and heights with a strength and power his stature belies. encompassing the keyboard with technical ease, structure not always clear, but then neither was the orchestra's. The audience stood to acclaim the performers, with shouts of bravos emphasizing their pleasure.

A complex symphony, but what music of Brahms is not richly woven, the second Dmajor was presented with sonorous suavity, and gracious though studied beauty, from the first three crotchets in the basses echoing and re-echoing throughout the whole symphony, the brass and winds delicious dialogue, and strings' dreamy phrases, the sunny pastoral mood set by the oboe in the third movement, to the intense and exciting climax.

Overture

Saturday Steinberg again conducted, the Academic festival overture, and a rather ponderous but at times breathtakingly beautiful interpretation of the fourth symphony (somehow the music itself overcomes any personal implant), and the Aminor double concerto for violin and cello, with Joseph Silverstein and Zara Nelsova as sympathetic, but often unmatched in timbre and technique, soloists, their greatest accord reached in the final movement.

The weather and the music made an unbeatable combination Sunday afternoon, with Ozawa at his sensitive (and graceful we must admit) best. Mozart's overture to The Marriage of Figaro was a sparkling bright instrumental aria, its gay mood light and promising.

Again Ashkenazy was soloist in a B flat concerto, this time Mozart's K.595, his last and most personal, and the pianist brought out the tender, introspective mood, with great empathy the clarity of its musical development certainly more pronounced than the Brahms, by comparison naturally more simply constructed. Ozawa took a slower than usual tempo for the first movement, which allowed both solist and orchestra to reflect on every thematic and developmental detail expressed with such beauty and perfection by the composer.

Impressive

Maureen Forrester, an impressive artist with musically refined imagination and a rich-sounding voice, brought both to the rhapsody for contralto solo, male chorus and orchestra, a setting of three stanzas from Goethe's Harzreise in Winter. And Ozawa interpreted this moodily romantic work with excellent rhythm and tempo, the chorus trained by John Oliver matching the darkly brooding coloration.

Variations on a Theme by Joseph Haydn, also in B flat, closed a supremely satisfying program, all well-suited to Ozawa's talents. Its eight variations moved in kaleidoscopic array, each a gem acknowledging the fertile craft that is uniquely Brahms, all brought to a grand resolution by the theme of passacaglia form.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUL 19 1971

New England Newsclip

Whitestone

An audience of 11,324 heard soprano Eileen Farrell under the baton of Ozawa at Tanglewood yesterday.

Music Review

Brahms Highlights Weekend at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

A WEEKEND of three Brahms programs enlisted the participation of William Steinberg, the music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for the first time at Tanglewood this year. He conducted both the Friday and Saturday evening programs. Seiji Ozawa directed yesterday in which only the last half of the afternoon was Brahms. The first half had been devoted to Mozart. There was the overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" and the piano concerto in B flat (492) with Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist.

* * *

ASHKENAZY had played the big Opus 83 Brahms concerto (also in B flat) Friday night. The Mozart of yesterday could not have been more antipodal, and the capacity of the artist was disclosed by the comprehension he displayed in both concertos and the style he commanded in this vastly more gentle and intimate vehicle.

Brahms wrote three distinct but short works for chorus and orchestra using as texts verses from three German poets of the generation preceding his. They are fairly morbid laments, on poems of Goethe, Holderlin and Schiller. Ozawa chose Goethe's Alto Rhapsody for his program and had the noble assistance of contralto Maureen Forrester and the male phalanx of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus with John Oliver, director.

Miss Forrester invested her superb vocal accomplishments with the stern elegiac character of a Greek drama. When the male chorus, in admirable discipline, added their short contributions, she never had need to force her voice beyond the requirements of the message to remain distinguishable.

In the Brahms Variations on a theme of Haydn, Ozawa raised the orchestra to a moment of grandeur in the "Grazioso" (eighth) variation, broadening the irresistible ascending sustention to a lofty power.

* * *

STEINBERG made his initial appearance of the Tanglewood season Friday night. It was also the first appearance of the entire orchestra this year. The galvanic spirit they displayed may have been the result of several factors, but it was also proof that musical vibrancy is not necessarily the result of speed nor pressure.

Steinberg also conducted Saturday night. Both his programs were totally devoted to the music of Brahms and both followed an identical pattern: an overture, a concerto and one of the symphonies. Authority on the podium produced dynamic cogency in the performers. This was noticeable instantly in the Tragic Overture in the violins and became apparent in many instances throughout the evening, not especially overlooking the cello statement of the second theme in the 2nd Symphony.

Steinberg's evident understanding of Brahms is revealed in the tempos he takes. Slower when there is a choice but not less tempestuous in effect. Indeed, one of the most deceptive factors in music is this very matter of tempo. Haste does not produce the same effect as disciplined velocity, no matter how choreographically the baton is swung. Tradition and experience, too, are great elements in a mature performance.

* * *

IN THE SYMPHONY Friday night the horns played Steinberg a bit false but otherwise there was a viscid unity to the orchestral tone, a most gratifying foil of moods within movements underscoring the distinctive characteristics of the contrasting themes and a general atmosphere of understated mastery.

Vladimir Ashkenazy was the soloist Friday in the B flat piano concerto. It was a moot point whether he, Steinberg or Brahms was the magnet, which drew the record Friday attendance. Probably it was a bit of all three. In any case it was a thrilling performance. This Titan of the piano literature has been played on that very stage many times. Its enormous scope is a challenge to all keyboard emperors. Thirty years ago, Leonard Shure played it with Koussevitzky. The ensuing roster includes Arrau, Rubinstein, Serkin, Istomin, Cliburn, Fleisher, Simon, Bachauer, and the last previous artist, Andre Watts.

The demands the concerto makes on a performer's fingers can not be taken into consideration any more when a pianist reaches that stage of command. The soloist might feel himself as Vulcan possessed of a power to allay the conflagrations which Brahms continually sets at every turn. The variety of emotions and passions were conveyed by Ashkenazy with color and nuance. Not least effective was the lightness and grace of the final allegretto and the delightful cello solo introducing the andante played by Jules Eskin.

There is one extremely picayune detail about the elfish scherzo which Ashkenazy failed to give full value. In the simple crosshand figure when the left hand has three notes ascending to a D, just why he gave it a skimped touch when he has plenty of time was a mystery which, I must admit, did not keep me long awake that night.

* * *

THE KEYSTONE of the Saturday program was the mighty double concerto in which Joseph Silverstein was the violinist and Zara Nelsova the cellist. The violin started out with two strikes against it in this concerto, especially when the cellist is, or well might be, the prime exhibit in any women's musical lib contest. Nelsova fired the first salvo in the concerto, her magnificently definitive attack, the spacious exposition of her first cadenza, her strong, pulsating tone, in fact, everything that a superlative artist possesses, left the violin, no matter though it was in the hands of such a master as Silverstein, in the shadow from which his more suave manner did not propel him in this instance.

Brahms wrote no accompaniments per se to his various concertos. The orchestra in each case is far more important and sonorous than a mere background, but the writing discloses a keen awareness of the impediments such thick orchestral texture would oppose to a single voice, no matter how powerful, and so the accompaniment recedes with proper deference for the various entrances of the protagonists. The easy certainty of intonation on the part of both artists, the rhetorical emphasis rather more evident from the cello and Steinberg's broad conception, as in all the Brahms of both his programs, made this the breathtaking fulcrum of the evening.

The academic festival overture is about as jolly and funkindling as the repertory provides, and the fourth symphony, while of sterner stuff, is still not too depressing. Steinberg is thoroughly at home in all these pages and he has no hair problems so that he can apply both hands, when so motivated, to the music solely. Whether he would be pleased to have it pointed out that he is chauve is not recorded, as chauvinistic a Brahmsian as he proved himself on these two occasions.

29,701 Attend Tanglewood Events Over the Weekend

A total of 29,701 people attended Tanglewood this past weekend, 9,000 more than for the equivalent weekend last year.

Friday night's concert drew 3,185; Saturday morning's rehearsal, 6,893; Saturday night's concert, 8,299; and Sunday afternoon's concert, 11,324, the high for the season so far.

48

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 261,042
JUL 19 1971
New England Newsclip

THEATER / ARTS

A weekend of Brahms swells audience at Tanglewood

By Michael Steinberg
Globe Staff

LENOX — It was mostly Brahms at Tanglewood this weekend, much to the benefit of the boxoffice. William Steinberg conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in both overtures, the Second and Fourth Symphonies, the B flat Piano Concerto (Vladimir Ashkenazy), and the Concerto for Violin and Cello (Joseph Silverstein, Zara Nelsova); Seiji Ozawa included the Alto Rhapsody (Maureen Forrester) and the Hayden Variations in the Sunday afternoon program.

Brahms wrote too little music to support his own popularity, and so those 11 orchestra pieces of his keep coming around and around, getting played more and more, and thought about less and less. I still remember how outraged the London Symphony Orchestra was when Andre Previn undertook to thoroughly rehearse the Violin Concerto for a performance with Itzhak Perlman ("good grief, we know that by heart"), and how rewarding the result was.

Familiar though their surfaces may be, these works, being so dense in thought as well as textrue, and proceeding from such a richly cross-referential process of organic development, are difficult and want the most careful preparation. The work of which that is more true than of any other is the B-flat Concerto, and the Ashkenazy Steinberg performance on Friday, with all its raveled seams, and in spite of some attractively executed detail, demonstrated the point at near disaster level. Saturday's enegetic and straight performance of the Double Concerto was much better, but being so much more "in tempo" than the one for piano, it is correspondingly easier to hold together.

The Alto Rhapsody is both a sensitive response to some powerful lines of Goethe and a compendium of some of Brahms' most irritating characteristics, notably the fondness for [illegible]rk and the tendency to be often on the edge of writing "Climb Every Mountain." Because of Ozawa's powerful, intelligent rhythmic grasp of the piece and given, as well, Forrester's understanding projection of text and music, the performance yesterday was one that made a strong case for the most positive side of this problematic piece. A fine sense of rhythm and tempo, plus a welcome light touch, made Ozawa's performance of the Hayden Variations a too.

Thanks to the inability of the Lenox police to handle the traffic problems here — it took 45 minutes to move the last two miles to Tanglewood — I cannot report on Ashkenazy's playing with Ozawa of the Mozart Concerto in B flat, K 595.

I had hoped also to find some prophylactic relief from Brahms at Friday evenings Weekend Prelude when the Boston Symphony Chamber Players offered Ravel's Introduction and Allegro and the suite from Stravinsky's "The Pale of the Soldier," but no such luck. To be sure, it was not Brahms, but I was not convinced it was Ravel or Stravinsky either, the former being square, unatmospheric, and under-rehearsed, and the latter, except for Silverstein's consistently excellent violin playing, being starved for accents, undifferentiated in dynamics, and under-rehearsed.

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
D. 130,857
JUL 19 1971
New England Newsclip

Ashkenazy Shines Again

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Times Music Critic

LENOX, Mass. — Vladimir Ashkenazy, who offered a powerful reading of the Brahms Second Piano Concerto here Friday night, gave a matchless performance of Mozart's Piano Concerto in B Flat (K. 595) Sunday afternoon with the Boston Symphony.

Over the years this final piano concerto of Mozart has become my favorite work in this form by the composer. There is an ineffable spirituality here (particularly in the Larghetto) that never fails to touch me deeply.

And I never expect to hear a more beautifully controlled recreation of this music than Ashkenazy provided at this concert. The outer movements were articulated with the utmost polish and the Larghetto was unforgettable. The cantabile tone that the pianist mustered in this movement was marvelous.

Seiji Ozawa, the young Japanese conductor, provided a generally admirable accompaniment, which is an indication that he is improving as a Mozartean. However, I wish he would have reduced the strings, which would have helped the balance at several points.

To open the program there was the familiar and beloved Marriage of Figaro" Overture, which had a crisp and neatly turned performance.

Maureen Forrester, the well-known Canadian contralto, was the soloist in Brahms' "Alto" Rhapsody, a work that has not been heard with much regularity since the heyday of Marian Anderson.

Fortunately, Miss Forrester can muster the tonal solidity that this work requires. While she did not bring the pathos and feeling to this score that Anderson or Kathleen Ferrier once did, she gave an excellent account of herself, which has become the custom with this fine musician.

The male contingent of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus (directed by John Oliver this season) provided a solid backdrop of sound in this musical setting of verses from Goethe's "Harzreise im Winter" and Ozawa organized these forces into a cohesive unit with the orchestra.

For the finale there was Brahms' "Haydn" Variations, which always makes an excellent climax to a program, particularly if the music is given the majestic treatment it deserves.

I must admit I missed the magisterial orientation that a Klemperer or a Bruno Walter always brought to these variations. This was, at best, a good routine reading.

With spectacularly good weather some 11,324 persons gathered in the Shed and on the surrounding lawns for this event. It was the largest crowd since Erich Leinsdorf's Tanglewood finale in 1969. And I think almost everyone got their money's worth on this occasion.

REVIEW
DARIEN, CONN.
W. 4,162
JUL 22 1971
New England Newsclip

Berkshire Brahms Win Ovations

Play Review by RAY YATES

Zara Nelsova was soloist with Joseph Silverstein violinist, at Tanglewood last Saturday evening in the Brahms Concerto in A minor, with Mr. Steinberg conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

We attended this concert and liked the spirited reading that open the all Brahms program with the Academie Festival Overture. All the German college songs came to musical beauty and life under the restrained but always interesting leadership of Steinberg. Once in a while he would do some extra footwork that was added fun but he always kept the marvelous timber of the various sections of his rich orchestra under tight control. The final hymn was particularly thrilling in this number.

The Concerto in A minor found Zara Nelsova most expressive in the opening allegro where Brahms gave her many opportunities to provide the deep-throated tonal elegance for which she is noted and the concerto demands.

Mr. Silverstein joined her in silvery tones on his violin but was more constrained by the composer in the opening than in the beautifully soaring andante. Here he held his own with the cellist and the orchestra supplied marvelously coordinated support and almost solos of their various ensembles, answering in the inspired composer's rich and varied passages.

Both soloists, the conductor and the orchestra were united in musical abundance and beauty in each of their shares of the vivace non troppo. Miss Nelsova and Mr. Silverstein received tumultuous applause at the end as did the director and his orchestra with the soloists being called back for bows for five minutes or more.

After the intermission, the orchestra proved how brilliant Brahm's Symphony No. 4 in E minor really is, even though many of his contemporaries underrated it.

The almost marshal cadences of the third movement were thrillingly performed with Mr. Steinberg turning from one section to another to bring out the rich nuances of the composition, as he did, too, with the allegro and the andante, each of which brought glorious harmonies and highly tuneful variations on themes that swept the audience along with the players in accelerated enjoyment.

There was absolute musicianship from every chair of the large orchestra, seemingly disciplined to the point of coordinated freedom of expression that brought the listeners thrilling technical achievements in sound only Brahms could conceive and this Boston group brought into deep and rewarding musical life.

There had been applause after the first two movements but Mr. Steinberg avoided any such breaking of the wonderful spell of the music between the lovely Allegro giocoso and the vital set of variations that comprise the final Allegro energico e passionato.

Here the orchestra seemed to outdo their previous climaxes of musical grandeur, supplying a fitting close to a magnificent Brahms feast provided by all three numbers making up this exceptional program.

Director Steinberg and his men and women had to take a long series of bows after the symphony. Only the fact the auditorium lights were finally put on brought the ovation to a conclusion.

We counted it a privilege to hear this program, enjoying again both Mr. Steinberg and Miss Nelsova who we have heard at Darien Community concerts. The solo work of Mr. Silverstein was another high spot in this acoustically splendid and vast music shed, filled to capacity, even though showers kept the crowds on the grounds to a minimum.

We notice that this Friday evening the Boston Symphony and Mr. Steinberg will be featuring an all-Beethoven program with violinist Itzhak Perlman; Saturday another all Beethoven program. Sunday, July 25, has Leonard Bernstein conducting the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Koussevitzky. There will be four soloists and the Tanglewood Festival chorus. Arthur

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144
JUL 19 1971

Tanglewood Concert Enchants Audience

By LAURIE MODELL

Saturday evening's Tanglewood program was played before an overflow crowd of more than 6,000 people.

* * *

All the works performed were of Brahms' later period — the Academic Festival Overture written in 1880, the 4th Symphony in 1886 and the Concerto for violin and cello in 1888. They display Brahms at his most mature, with the impetuosity of some of his earlier works replaced by introspection and, particularly in the 4th Symphony, reflective sadness.

Brahms genuis produced some of the most sublime melodies in all of music, never more evident perhaps than in the second movement of the Double Concerto or the first and second movements of the 4th Symphony. And for sheer exuberence there is nothing in all of Brahms equal to the marvelous scherzo of the 4th Symphony. (It is interesting to note that when Brahms first played the work for his friends in Vienna, they advised him to particularly delete the scherzo, calling it 'unkempt and heavily humorous' and 'Shaggy and grimly joyful.')

* * *

Saturday's performance of the 4th Symphony heard the Boston Symphony at its very best yet this season. The playing was strong, incisive and intense beyond all required effort. Whether it was the effect of Brahms or of conductor William Steinberg, it's hard to say, but the orchestra played with incredible energy and what seemed to be a genuine love for the music.

William Steinberg is, as a rule, not a conductor for the audience. He has few gestures that are not required, his beat is virtually impossible to follow from the audience, and he does not exude 'drama' and emotionalism.

What he is from the orchestra's standpoint (and that's all that's important) is an entirely different story. Those few required gestures, that right arm waving in indistinct circles, the occasional stamp of a foot and jab in the direction of the triangle player, and the upraised fist calling for more and still more brass — this seems to be what's necessary in order to get an incomparable performance from the Boston Symphony that brought the standing-room-only crowd at Tanglewood to its feet.

* * *

The evening opened with a performance of the Academic Festival Overture, written when Brahms was awarded an honorary doctorate at the University of Breslau, and composed largely of student airs. It displays Brahms' ability to make something out of very little, but for depth and power it did not compare with the other works on the program.

Joseph Silverstein and Zara Nelsova were featured soloists in the Double Concerto which followed, and gave impassioned if somewhat unbalanced performances of this, Brahms' last work with orchestra. Miss Nelsova dominated in what should have been equally Mr. Silverstein's place and the resulting effect was not what it could have been, but the interpretation was overall quite good and both soloists and Mr. Steinberg seemed to have a good understanding of the work.

* * *

Next week is an all-Beethoven program and will feature on Friday the Leonore Overture No. 3, the Violin Concerto with Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist, and the Fifth Symphony. Saturday includes the Overture to King Stephan, the Third Symphony (Eroica), and the Seventh Symphony. Sunday will bring a performance of the Missa Solemnis. Conductors are William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
JUL 19 1971
New England Newsclip

What Tanglewood Is All About

By RICHARD CONWAY

Strictly speaking, this is not really a review of yesterday afternoon's concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Rather, it is an attempt to convey another impression of the Berkshire Music Festival — one which the reader may find more interesting and meaningful than any mere critique of the performance.

Due to some misunderstanding, I found myself without a ticket; and so I had to listen to the concert from the lawn area. One can hear the music quite well from there, of course, but for once it was not the music that took my attention. It was the people.

Some had obviously been there for quite a while. There were the picnic baskets, blankets spread on the ground, lawn chairs. Children ran here and there and tried climbing some of the curiously - shaped trees. One saw all manner of apparel: suits, sportswear, dungarees, walking shorts, hot pants, maxi-skirts, midi-skirts, mini-skirts.

For all intents and purposes, it might have been the home - town crowd coming to hear the local band play at the old band stand in the park.

It quieted down outside when the applause from inside the Music Shed indicated that conductor Seiji Ozawa was on his way to the podium. Only a few outside joined in the applause.

The opening work was singularly appropriate to such a setting — Mozart's "Overture to The Marriage of Figaro". It is an enchanting, light - hearted work, as is the entire opera, and it was given a good reading by the orchestra.

The fine young Russian pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy appeared as guest soloist for the Mozart "Piano concerto in B flat", K. 595.

Of the music itself, it is the sensitive playing of the second movement Larghetto that stays in my mind. But it was the people that were most fascinating. Looking around, one wondered what they were hearing; or if they were hearing at all.

There were the sunbathers, the eaters and drinkers, the card - players, and the readers. Some were talking, sleeping, knitting, or writing letters.

Sitting inside, one more or less does listen to the music; although this is not an absolute. Outside though, one merely senses that it is there. Outside, it seems to become an adjunct to something else.

My own attention was drawn time and again to that lovely picture post - card view of the blue lake surrounded by gently sloping green hills. Whatever Mozart's thoughts may have been when he wrote the concerto, mine were of great peace and tranquility. (The music itself conveys neither of these.)

Two works by Brahms came after intermission.

Maureen Forrester, contralto, and the men of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus gave a beautiful performance of the "Alto Rhapsody". The program concluded with the "Variations on a theme of Haydn".

Many of the picnickers left before the final Brahms piece. Others began getting things put away. Few seemed to be paying much attention to the Variations.

This musician and critic found it all but impossible to concentrate on the music. In fact, some of it seemed quite inappropriate to the general atmosphere. And yet I sensed that sitting here I was in tht midst of a very important part of what Tanglewood is all about.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUL 20 1971

A Rewarding Weekend at Tanglewood

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

The full orchestra performed Friday night at Tanglewood for the first time this season and the program was all-Brahms and very rewarding indeed.

The featured work was the Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat Opus 83 and the soloist was Vladimir Ashkenazy.

He gave an absolutely first-rate performance but there is no question that full partners in this business were William Steinberg and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was for music like this that the large symphony orchestra was invented, with all its variety of sounds and audial colors, and Steinberg and the orchestra are superior practitioners of the genre.

ASHKENAZY was simply outstanding. His musical sensitivites always acute, were at their peak, and, coupled with a virtually flawless technique, the results were remarkable.

Also on the program was the Symphony No. 2 in D, Opus 73, and the Tragic Overture, Opus 81.

There is a difference, a palpable and qualitative difference between the results obtained by the dwindling ranks of the elder statesmen of the podium, such as Steinberg, and the young Turks, that sooner rather than later will inherit the orchestras and the romantic repertoire such as the music of Brahms.

It is my contention that if Boulez, or Schuller, for example, had conducted the same program it would not have been as effective for several reasons. Probably the major reason is one of respect for the music itself. Steinberg takes Brahms very seriously, he thinks his music is of the utmost importance, and, as his orchestra also respects him (Steinberg), the resulting reading was fully and richly realized. We know what Boulez thinks of nineteenth century romanticism, and the orchestra knows it and so would Ashkenazy if he were the soloist. The difference in attitude most certainly shows up in the readings.

SUNDAY, one of the young men on his way, Seiji Ozawa, conducted Brahms and also Mozart. Ozawa has all the equipment he needs and then, some, and he has a true affinity for Mozart, the one composer that seems to transcend differing musical attitudes.

Maureen Forrester, one of the outstanding American singers, performed in the Rhapsody for contralto solo, male chorus and orchestra, by Brahms. Ozawa's reading of this score almost disproves my previous contention about the battle lines between the old and new guard because it had considerable merit.

Miss Forrester, as usual, was superior in every respect, and it was a pleasure to hear her.

The soloist in the Mozart Piano concerto in B Flat was again Ashkenazy, and he was just fine.

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144
JUL 19 1971

At the Concert

26,000 in Audience At Brahms Concert

By EDWARD FRENCH

THE THIRD WEEKEND at Tanglewood found William Steinberg on the podium for the Friday and Saturday evening concerts and Seiji Ozawa officiating Sunday afternoon. This weekend featuring the music of Johannes Brahms drew a total of over 26 thousand people for the three concerts.

Friday's program consisted of the Tragic Overture, the Concerto No. 2 in B flat for Piano and Orchestra, Vladimir Ashkenazy as soloist, and the Symphony No. 2 in D.

WILLIAM STEINBERG, the Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past two seasons, is one of the great interpreters of Brahms. The form is always clearly defined, his tempi seem just about perfect, and he obtains an orchestral tone that is light in texture and wholly transparent allowing the inner voices of the complex orchestration to be clearly heard. There is also a rhythmic propulsion that is steady without being rigid.

These qualities made his reading of the Symphony No. 2 an aural delight. The third movement, Allegretto grazioso came off particularly well with its graceful dreamy lilt. The tone seemed to float.

VLADIMIR ASHKENAZY is now firmly established as one of the foremost pianists in the world. He has tremendous technical facility and control, an always beautiful tone and an instinct for the correct style of whatever music he is playing.

His version of the Brahms second concerto had a sense of bigness, the form of the piece was marvelously projected and his feeling for the songlike melodies predominant in this piece could not have been improved upon. He played the outer movements a little faster than they are generally done but there was no loss of clarity and the effect was splendid. The Scherzo was a perfect blend of power and delicacy and the Andante was the essence of deeply felt melodic eloquence.

SATURDAY NIGHT we heard the Academic Festival Overture, the Symphony No. 4 in E minor and the Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello, Joseph Silverstein and Zara Nelsova as soloists.

Sunday afternoon with Seiji Ozawa conducting the concert began with a crisp lively performance of Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro".

We were again privileged to hear the superb pianism of Vladimir Ashkenazy, this time in the Mozart Concerto in B flat, K492, the composer's last work in this form. Mr. Ashkenazy's fludity, beautiful tone and musicality gave us great Mozart playing.

MAUREEN FORRESTER, contralto, the men of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the orchestra gave a stunning performance of the Brahms "Alto" Rhapsody. Miss Forresters voice was ideally suited to the solo part and she was most successful in coloring her voice to convey the meaning of the Goethe text. It was beautiful Brahms singing.

50

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 20 1971

A Rewarding Weekend at Tanglewood

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

The full orchestra performed Friday night at Tanglewood for the first time this season and the program was all-Brahms and very rewarding indeed.

The featured work was the Piano Concerto No. 2 in B Flat Opus 83 and the soloist was Vladimir Ashkenazy.

He gave an absolutely first-rate performance but there is no question that full partners in this business were William Steinberg and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was for music like this that the large symphony orchestra was invented, with all its variety of sounds and audial colors, and Steinberg and the orchestra are superior practitioners of the genre.

ASHKENAZY was simply outstanding. His musical sensitivites always acute, were at their peak, and, coupled with a virtually flawless technique, the results were remarkable.

Also on the program was the Symphony No. 2 in D, Opus 73, and the Tragic Overture, Opus 81.

There is a difference, a palpable and qualitative difference between the results obtained by the dwindling ranks of the elder statesmen of the podium, such as Steinberg, and the young Turks, that sooner rather than later will inherit the orchestras and the romantic repertoire such as the music of Brahms.

It is my contention that if Boulez, or Schuller, for example, had conducted the same program it would not have been as effective for several reasons. Probably the major reason is one of respect for the music itself. Steinberg takes Brahms very seriously, he thinks his music is of the utmost importance, and, as his orchestra also respects him (Steinberg), the resulting reading was fully and richly realized. We know what Boulez thinks of nineteenth century romanticism, and the orchestra knows it and so would Ashkenazy if he were the soloist. The difference in attitude most certainly shows up in the readings.

SUNDAY, one of the young men on his way, Seiji Ozawa, conducted Brahms and also Mozart. Ozawa has all the equipment he needs and then some, and he has a true affinity for Mozart, the one composer that seems to transcend differing musical attitudes.

Maureen Forrester, one of the outstanding American singers, performed in the Rhapsody for contralto solo, male chorus and orchestra, by Brahms. Ozawa's reading of this score almost disproves my previous contention about the battle lines between the old and new guard because it had considerable merit.

Miss Forrester, as usual, was superior in every respect, and it was a pleasure to hear her.

The soloist in the Mozart Piano concerto in B Flat was again Ashkenazy, and he was just fine.

TELEGRAM
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 61,977

JUL 19 1971

New England Newsclip

Steinberg Conducts at Lenox

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Music Review

LENOX — It was a rich and reassuring experience to see William Steinberg conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday night at ~~Tanglewood~~ during the third weekend of the Berkshire Music Festival.

Steinberg is the orchestra's regular conductor, and for the first time this summer the full orchestra was on stage. During the first two weeks, half of the orchestra was performing at Esplanade concerts in Boston.

Significantly, this weekend had the largest attendance so far — 29,701.

Saturday night's music was Brahms. Soloists were Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Zara Nelsova, cellist, in Concerto in A minor, Opus 102.

Yesterday afternoon's conductor was Seiji Ozawa in a Mozart — Brahms program. Vladimir Ashkenazy was the soloist in Mozart's Piano Concerto in B flat, K. 595.

Impressive Conducting

Maureen Forrester and the men of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus participated in Brahms' Rhapsody for contralto solo, male chorus and orchestra, Opus 53.

Veteran conductor Steinberg made a number of facts very plain.

Most obvious, it doesn't require a display of podium acrobatics to get superlative playing from the Boston Symphony.

Steinberg conducted entirely from memory — an impressive feat, because Brahms' double concerto is not a standard work for most conductors and is considerably involved.

"Academic Festival" Overture was carried on at a faster-than-usual tempo. The college songs were securely bound. Steinberg derived brilliant effects with economical action, but gave unmistakable knowledge of his wishes.

An Epic Performance

Waves of drama had been aroused before the "Gaudeamus Igitur" entered to cap the overture's climax. Admittedly, it was a slightly garish performance but loaded with excitement.

Miss Nelsova's opening in the concerto was dazzling, if a trifle insecure. Silverstein equaled her brilliance. Steinberg and the orchestra contributed heavily to an epic Brahms performance.

PROGRAMS
SATURDAY NIGHT
William Steinberg, conductor
BRAHMS
Academic Festival Overture, Opus 80
Concerto in A minor for Violin and Cello, Opus 102
Joseph Silverstein, violin
Zara Nelsova, cello
Symphony No. 4 in E minor, Opus 98
SUNDAY AFTERNOON
Seiji Ozawa, conductor
Overture, "The Marriage of Figaro" — Mozart
Piano Concerto in B flat, K.595 — Mozart
Vladimir Ashkenazy, piano
Alto Rhapsody, Opus 53 — Brahms
Maureen Forrester, contralto
Men of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus
Variations on a Theme of Haydn, Opus 56a — Brahms

The concerto's slow movement developed into an ardent dialogue by the solo instruments. The conductor gave his soloists their freedom and unified the ensemble's style. The finale was superbly played in its splashy technique and poetic content.

Steinberg gave Brahms' Fourth Symphony momentum with strong concentration on melody and strenuous rhythms. Solos in winds received almost priority status, especially horns at the start of the second movement.

It was a philosophic reading of the symphony rather than one of bravura, bursting sound and pressured note playing.

Standing Ovation

The highlight of yesterday afternoon's concert was the standing ovation Ashkenazy received after the Mozart piano concerto.

The young pianist, whom we've usually heard in keyboard blockbusters, proved just as effective in Mozartean refinements.

After a long, appetizing orchestral introduction, the pianist's opening statements were a continuity of thought. He played with impeccable technique, singing tone, restrained but proportionate dynamics and the finesse that can make Mozart's music a unique listening experience.

The nursery rhyme theme of the slow movement was played with simplicity and great care over every note. Conservatively paced, the finale frolicked along cheerfully, occasionally disclosing some of its almost concealed serious moments.

A Vibrant Voice

Singing the Alto Rhapsody by Brahms in German, Miss Forrester disclosed a vibrant voice that extended throughout her wide range.

She brought depth and import to Goethe's poignant words. The men's chorus placed a rich harmonic background behind the solo voice, supported in turn by a restrained but balanced orchestral foundation.

Ozawa's concept of Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" Overture was sparkling, vivacious and finely phrased. The young conductor's craftsmanship and superb orchestral playing produced a memorable account of the Haydn — Brahms variations.

REPUBLICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
D. 26,679

JUL 21 1971

New England Newsclip

Concerts Attract Huge Tanglewood Audience

Last weekend, third in the Berkshire Festival series at ~~Tanglewood~~, Lenox, Mass., was preceded by an electrical storm that flooded the grounds and kept away thousands, who usually spread out over the lawns and picnic areas. Although the shed was completely filled, with 6,893 in attendance, a much larger audience had been expected.

The attraction was three-fold because it was the first concert of the season with the entire Boston Symphony Orchestra, conductor William Steinberg's first appearance at the festival, and the famed pianist, Vladimir Ashkenazy, as soloist.

With the addition of an all-Brahms program, it was one of the highlight concerts of the season.

After Friday evening's prelude concert which offered the Boston Symphony Chamber Players in a delightful and charming hour of rarely heard music of Ravel and Stravinsky, Steinberg started the regular concert featuring Ashkenazy.

The last half of the concert was devoted to Brahms' Symphony No. 2 in D, one of this composer's greats. The orchestra gave a beautiful rendition of this work under the baton of Steinberg who was also greatly appreciated by the audience.

Saturday morning there were 3,185 in attendance at the open rehearsal, which featured Seiji Ozawa conducting.

Saturday evening's concert was again preceded by a cloudburst and there was intermitent rain throughout the evening. The audience of 8,299 braved the weather and rain-soaked lawns, many huddled in their blankets, spilling out over the lawns, to hear a magnificent concert conducted by Steinberg, with soloists Joseph Silverstein, violin, and Zara Nelsova, cello.

Silverstein, concert master of the Boston Symphony, is one of its esteemed virtuoso artists and performed brilliantly with Madame Nelsova, Russian-born cellist who has performed as soloist throughout the world with all the famous orchestras.

The final concert on Sunday was conducted by Seiji Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood, bringing Vladimir Ashkenazy in a second appearance of the weekend.

The day turned beautiful and the nice weather brought out an audience of 11,324 to enjoy the beauty and music that is Tanglewood.

Vladimir Ashkenazy, as soloist, received an ovation for his performance.

The last half of the program featured Maureen Forrester as contralto soloist and the men of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, directed by John Oliver.

July 13's contemporary trends concert was attended by 12,849, bringing a total audience of 29,701 to the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood last week.

Next weekend, the fourth in the Tanglewood series, will be one of the most exciting of the entire season, featuring an all Beethoven weekend. William Steinberg will conduct Friday and Saturday, bringing the gifted Itzhak Perlman as violinist soloist on Friday evening, performing Beethoven's violin concerto. Saturday evening Steinberg will conduct an all orchestral concert and Sunday brings back Leonard Bernstein to the podium in the performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, a concert dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor.

On Tuesday Madame Serge Koussevitzky will be honored at Tanglewood-on-Parade, the annual demonstration of the work of the students of the Berkshire Music Center. The Tanglewood grounds will open to the public at 5:30 p.m. Beginning at 6:30 p.m. simultaneous performances of opera scenes, arias and dance demonstrations will take place in three locations, the formal gardens, the porch of the Main House, and in the Tanglewood Tent. At 8:30 p.m. the gala concert begins with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, conducted by Boston Symphony's Associate Conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas. Tanglewood's other artistic director, Gunther Schuller, will also conduct a concert performance of Act 1 of Wagner's Die Walkure and Sieji Ozawa will conduct a Bartok work.

SSM

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144

JUL 19 1971

Tanglewood Concert Enchants Audience

By LAURIE MODELL

Saturday evening's Tanglewood program was played before an overflow crowd of more than 6,000 people.

* * *

All the works performed were of Brahms' later period — the Academic Festival Overture written in 1880, the 4th Symphony in 1886 and the Concerto for violin and cello in 1888. They display Brahms at his most mature, with the impetuosity of some of his earlier works replaced by introspection and, particularly in the 4th Symphony, reflective sadness.

Brahms genuis produced some of the most sublime melodies in all of music, never more evident perhaps than in the second movement of the Double Concerto or the first and second movements of the 4th Symphony. And for sheer exuberence there is nothing in all of Brahms equal to the marvelous scherzo of the 4th Symphony. (It is interesting to note that when Brahms first played the work for his friends in Vienna, they advised him to particularly delete the scherzo, calling it 'unkempt and heavily humorous' and 'Shaggy and grimly joyful.')

* * *

Saturday's performance of the 4th Symphony heard the Boston Symphony at its very best yet this season. The playing was strong, incisive and intense beyond all required effort. Whether it was the effect of Brahms or of conductor William Steinberg, it's hard to say, but the orchestra played with incredible energy and what seemed to be a genuine love for the music.

William Steinberg is, as a rule, not a conductor for the audience. He has few gestures that are not required, his beat is virtually impossible to follow from the audience, and he does not exude 'drama' and emotionalism.

What he is from the orchestra's standpoint (and that's all that's important) is an entirely different story. Those few required gestures, that right arm waving in indistinct circles, the occasional stamp of a foot and jab in the direction of the triangle player, and the upraised fist calling for more and still more brass — this seems to be what's necessary in order to get an incomparable performance from the Boston Symphony that brought the standing-room-only crowd at Tanglewood to its feet.

* * *

The evening opened with a performance of the Academic Festival Overture, written when Brahms was awarded an honorary doctorate at the University of Breslau, and composed largely of student airs. It displays Brahms' ability to make something out of very little, but for depth and power it did not compare with the other works on the program.

Joseph Silverstein and Zara Nelsova were featured soloists in the Double Concerto which followed, and gave impassioned if somewhat unbalanced performances of this, Brahms' last work with orchestra. Miss Nelsova dominated in what should have been equally Mr. Silverstein's place and the resulting effect was not what it could have been, but the interpretation was overall quite good and both soloists and Mr. Steinberg seemed to have a good understanding of the work.

* * *

Next week is an all-Beethoven program and will feature on Friday the Leonore Overture No. 3, the Violin Concerto with Itzhak Perlman as guest soloist, and the Fifth Symphony. Saturday includes the Overture to King Stephan, the Third Symphony (Eroica), and the Seventh Symphony. Sunday will bring a performance of the Missa Solemnis. Conductors are William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

JUL 19 1971

New England Newsclip

Weather, Traditional Music Combine To Lure 11,324 to Tanglewood

By R. C. HAMMERICH

LENOX —Perfect picnic weather and a traditional program of Mozart and Brahms were a winning combination Sunday afternoon at Tanglewood; it drew 11,324 listeners through the gates.

The box office figure was the highest for the Boston Symphony Orchestra since Erich Leinsdorf's last appearance as music director in August, 1969; that was 14,120.

Other attractions have outdrawn the orchestra, however. There were 12,849 there Tuesday to hear Sly and the Family Stone.

The big Sunday afternoon audience heard Seiji Ozawa conduct a program of Mozart's overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" and his last piano concerto (K.492); and Brahms' Rhapsody for contralto solo, male chorus and orchestra, Op. 53, and his variations on a theme of Haydn, Op. 56a.

Soloists were pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy for the Mozart (He had played Brahms' second concerto with the orchestra Friday) and Maureen Forrester for Brahms' contralto rhapsody.

The Mozart concerto was

MAUREEN FORRESTER

beautiful; Ashkenazy's usually steel-springed fingers were mellowed, and the concerto was softly gentle, pliant, yielding.

Its dominant feeling was sweet melancholy as contrasted with the profoundly tragic atmosphere of the Brahms' rhapsody which followed intermission.

Maureen Forrester, who sang the rhapsody with 39 men from the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, is a sturdy blonde with a sturdy voice.

The strong, dark colors in her voice were well cast for their role in the rhapsody, which frequently has Wagnerian overtones, although the suggestion may send a shudder through Wagner's followers.

The rhapsody is a deep and powerful expression nevertheless, and Miss Forrester gave it a memorable shape.

William Steinberg's all-Brahms program Saturday night had inevitable similarities with the all-Brahms program he had conducted Friday.

In each case there was an overture, a concerto and a symphony, and in each case there was Steinberg's stately, dignified (occasionally almost ponderous) view of the music.

The extreme range of volumes applied to the overtures was much more appropriate to the "Academic Festival" Saturday than to the "Tragic" Friday.

And the fourth symphony Saturday seemed less vulnerable to the dangers inherent in the slow, deliberate pace with which it was played than was the second symphony Friday.

The concertos on both days served principally as showcases for the soloists: Ashkenazy Friday with the piano concerto; and Joseph Silverstein, the orchestra's concertmaster, and Zara Nelsova, cellist, Saturday with the double concerto for violin and cello, Opus 102.

Miss Nelsova is a vigorous, assertive cellist, and Silverstein's violin seemed to take on a stronger and brighter - than - usual tone alongside of her cello. It was a brilliant collaboration.

The fourth symphony, which wound up the Saturday program, was given a powerful interpretation.

The first two movements were tightly shaped and securely phrased, although too slow for my taste. The final movement has, I think, a cleaner and more interesting design, and Steinberg's pace seemed more appropriate to it.

VLADIMIR ASHKENAZY

Next weekend will see two all-Beethoven programs conducted by Steinberg Friday and Saturday nights and Beethoven's giant "Missa Solemnis" with four soloists, chorus and orchestra conducted by Leonard Bernstein Sunday afternoon at 2.30.

The Cleveland Press
D. 393,191

JUL 21 1971

Frank Hruby

Tanglewood vs. Blossom — a vacationer's view

One nice thing about vacations is the possibility of doing on the road what one does at home. The relaxed attitude of a disinterested observer gives him a different slant.

In my case it was Tanglewood in the Berkshire mountains and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO). The time was Sunday afternoon last, the program was Seiji Ozawa conducting the BSO with pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy playing a Mozart concerto and contralto Maureen Forrester singing the Brahms Alto Rhapsody.

Tanglewood, of course, is the granddaddy of the current scheme of big-city orchestra summer festivals, having been founded as a permanent offshoot of the BSO three decades ago by the late great Serge Koussevitsky.

THE PROGRAM went along well enough, but since I was on vacation I simply relaxed and enjoyed it, not looking for trouble on a brilliantly clear, cool Sunday afternoon — what the natives call a "mountain day."

(If the truth be known, however, Maureen Forrester, the orchestra and the men of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus doing the Brahms work added up to a musical event of uncommon proportions.)

But one cannot help but make comparisons and note differences in view of Cleveland's connection with Blossom Center.

THE NOW-FAMOUS shed in Lenox, Mass., (hard by Stockbridge of "Alice's Restaurant" fame) is no match, esthetically or acoustically to Blossom. One makes do with a certain blurriness of sound and chalks it up to the open-air effect. This is not necessary at Blossom.

In all fairness, let it be known that Tanglewood was originally designed by Eliel Saarinen but funds at the time were not sufficient to include more than a fragment of his ideas.

It has become the prototype, nevertheless, the model from which other architects have drawn ideas and seen improvements to be made. In fact, Peter van Dijk, Blossom's chief architect, was in his post graduate years an apprentice of Eliel's son Eero and thus had an intimate association with principles involved.

Incidental information:

Tanglewood too has a rule of no photographs during the concert, an item generally ignored by shutterbugs and management alike.

BSO does not go in for furniture moving. The piano was in place for the Mozart overture which preceded the concerto. Ozawa had no difficulty being seen. Furthermore, there was no ponderous wait between numbers. Hm.

The players wear white suits, socks and shoes, and black tie.

There are beards on several players and it did not audibly effect the music. No doubt the proximity to Alice's Restaurant (now several years defunct) and Officer Obie has contributed to the noticably hirsute character of the whole region.

The audience dressed in every imaginable mode. The chief difference here was that there was a full house for the matinee performance. People in Massachusetts apparently LOVE their orchestra, winter and summer. Better yet, they buy tickets.

Well, so it goes on the summer music festival circuit, Berkshire Division.

52

Poughkeepsie Journal
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
D. 35,739 SUN. 41,003

JUL 18 1971

Tanglewood To Stage All-Beethoven Concerts

LEONX, MASS. — Three all-Beethovan concerts, conducted by William Steinberg or Leonard Bernstein, will be presented at Tanglewood this coming weekend.

On Friday at 9 p.m. Steinberg, director of music for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will conduct a concert featuring the overture from "Leonore No. Three," the "Violin Concerto in D" and "Symphony No. Five." Itzhak Perlman will be guest violinist.

Preceding the Friday night concert is a "weekend prelude," set for 7 o'clock, during which Sherrill Milnes will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx and Mussorgsky.

On Saturday at 8:30 p.m. Steinberg will again lead the orchestra in the overture to "King Stephen," "the Third Symphony" ("Eroica") and "The Seventh Symphony."

There will be an open rehearsal for this concert at 10:30 a.m.

On Sunday at 3:30 p.m. Bernstein will conduct the "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Joining in the concert will be soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran and baritone Sherill Milnes.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 18 1971

RAY CHARLES—In concert Tuesday at 6 p.m. Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Information, 413-637-1600.

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL—Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Boston Symphony Orchestra. Weekend Prelude, Friday at 7 p.m. with Sherill Milnes. William Steinberg conducts Friday at 9 p.m. Beethoven Program including "Lenore Overture No. 3", Violin Concerto with Itzhak Perlman and "Symphony No. 5." Saturday at 8:30 p.m Beethoven Program. "King Stephen" overture, Symphony No. 3 "Eroica" and Symphony No. 7. Leonard Bernstein conducts next Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Beethoven Program with the Festival Chorus in "Missa Solemnis." For program and ticket information phone 413-637-1600.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891

JUL 17 1971 New England Newsclip

Week of July 25

MUSIC: Tanglewood: July 25: Leonard Bernstein, 2:30 p.m. Beethoven Program, Missa Solemnis, Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, in memory of Serge Koussevitzky . . . Friday, July 30: Weekend Prelude at 7 p.m., Berkshire Boy Choir. Michael Tilson Thomas, Copland's Appalachian Spring, Ruggles' Sun-Treader, Stravinsky's Scherzo a la Russe, Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake-Divertissement Act III, 9 p.m. . . . Saturday, July 31: Open Rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. Seiji Ozawa, Haydn's Symphony No. 96 'Miracle' Prokofiev's Piano concerto No. 3, Byron Janis, Takemitsu's Cassiopeia, Stomu Yamash'ta . . . The Lenox Arts Center: The Birds, July 31 . . . Music Mountain: Saturday, July 31: Haydn's Quartet in D minor, Opus 76, No. 2, Hindemith's Viola Sonata, Opus 11, No. 4, Mendelssohn's Quartet in D, Opus 44, No. 1, 3 p.m. . . . Yale Concerts: July 30: Syoko Aki, Brahms Violin Concerto.

4TH WEEKEND

SUN
LOWELL, MASS.
S. 40,129

JUL 18 1971 New England Newsclip

Top musical events make Berkshire "place to go"

By ALFRED W. BURKE
Sun Music Critic

Music

LOWELL — A musical delight is in store for visitors to this season's Berkshire Festival at Lenox.

For the fourth weekend events which open on Friday evening, July 23, the Boston Symphony's musical director, William Steinberg will be on the podium for Friday and Saturday evening's and Leonard Bernstein will conduct on Sunday afternoon.

On Friday there will be one of the weekend preludes. This will start at 7 p.m., and at the regular concert at 9 p.m., Maestro Steinberg will direct. There is no extra charge for the prelude. Guest artist for this portion of the evening's activities will be the brilliant young American baritone, Sherrill Milnes. Mr. Milnes recently "captured" Vienna and scored superbly all over Europe.

SHERRILL MILNES
. . . brilliant baritone

HE IS ONE of the greatest American born baritones of all time. His success at the Metropolitan has been nothing short of fabulous. He appeared this season in the Celebrity Series at Merrimack College and his reception was overwhelming. Those who will hear him for the first time by attending the weekend prelude are assured of hearing a concert of the highest order.

Maestro Steinberg will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Leonore Overture No. 3. This will be followed by the Composer's Violin Concerto with Itzhak Perlman as soloist. Mr. Perlman who is one of the present generation's super-stars has been recognized for his excellent technical skill as well as interpretive depth. The program will close with the Symphony No. 5.

Saturday morning (July 24) at 10:30 a.m., there will be an open rehearsal. These rehearsal programs have been a great success. The programs are both entertaining as well as enlightening. They are especially recommended for young musicians.

In the evening at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg will direct an all-Beethoven program. Listed are the "King Stephen" Overture, Symphony No. 3 (Eroica), and the Symphony No. 7.

FOR Sunday afternoon (July 25) at 2:30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein has selected Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. This performance will be in memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Appearing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus will be Arlene Saunders, soprano; Florence Kopeleff, contralto; William Cochran, tenor and Sherrill-Milnes, baritone.

Leonard Bernstein does exceptionally well with music for the voice. Unlike many symphonic conductors he has a flaire as well as sensitivity in guiding a singer through passages of almost any musical form. At the Metropolitan he directed a revival of Verdi's "Falstaff".

WE saw one of his "Falstaff" performances, and it was apparent that not since Bruno Walther had there been an operatic conductor so completely "in charge" of the entire performing force. This event, we would say, is definitely slated to be one of the very top affairs of the entire Festival.

Conductors for the remaining programs of the Berkshire Festival will be Michael Tilson Thomas (July 30 and Aug. 21); Seiji Ozawa (July 31, Aug. 15, and Aug. 22); Daniel Barenboim (Aug. 1); Colin Davis (Aug. 6, Aug. 8, Aug. 13 and Aug. 14).

Guest soloists will include, Byron Janis pianist; Pinchas Zukerman, violinist; Zara Nelsova, cellist; Stephen Bishop, pianist; Christoph Eschenbach, pianist; Alexis Weissenberg, pianist and Stomu Yamash'ta, percussionist.

Guest singers will be, Bonita Valente, Beverly Wolff, Kenneth Riegel, Robert Hale, Lois Marshall, John Alexander and Ezio Flagello.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528

JUL 17 1971 New England Newsclip

All-Beethoven Concerts Set At Tanglewood

The fourth week end of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 23 at 9 p.m., Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin concerto. Other works on the program are the Third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony.

On Saturday, July 24, at 8:30 p.m., is an all - orchestral concert with Mr. Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh symphony.

On Sunday afternoon, July 25, at 2:30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's Adviser, conducts the "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Mr. Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening at 7 p.m., for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky, and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the orchestra's Pension Fund, is Saturday morning, July 24, at 10:30 a.m. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed. All seats are unreserved.

Tickets for this fourth week end of the 1971 Berkshire Festival are available at the Tanglewood box office, 637-1600, and through all Ticketron outlets.

HERALD
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
D. 33,737

JUL 16 1971 New England Newsclip

Out of town

The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

The first concert is planned for July 23 at 9 p.m., conducted by Steinberg, Boston Symphony Music Director, with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the violin concerto. Other works on the program are the Third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony

The next evening is an all orchestral concert with Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the King Stephen overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh symphony.

On July 25, at 2:30 p.m., Bernstein conducts the Missa Solemnis in memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 18 1971

RAY CHARLES—In concert Tuesday at 6 p.m. Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Information, 413-637-1600.

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL—Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Boston Symphony Orchestra. Weekend Prelude, Friday at 7 p.m. with Sherill Milnes. William Steinberg conducts Friday at 9 p.m. Beethoven Program including "Lenore Overture No. 3", Violin Concerto with Itzhak Perlman and "Symphony No. 5." Saturday at 8:30 p.m Beethoven Program. "King Stephen" overture, Symphony No. 3 "Eroica" and Symphony No. 7. Leonard Bernstein conducts next Sunday at 2:30 p.m. Beethoven Program with the Festival Chorus in "Missa Solemnis." For program and ticket information phone 413-637-1600.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 581,160

JUL 18 1971 New England Newsclip

Beethoven Mass his 'private work'

By Michael Steinberg, Globe Staff

(Beethoven's Missa Solemnis will be conducted by Leonard Bernstein at the Boston Symphony concert at Tanglewood next Sunday afternoon, July 25.)

Incredibly, Beethoven's Missa Solemnis and Ninth Symphony had their premieres at the same concert, or at least in part: the program at the Kaernthnerthor Theater, Vienna, May 7, 1824, was "The Consecration of the House" Overture, the Kyrie, Credo, and Agnus Dei from the Missa (listed as "Three Hymns"), and the Ninth.

That concert was the occasion for the most moving of all Beethoven stories: he was on stage, but (to continue in the words of Sir George Grove), "though placed in the midst of this confluence of music, heard nothing of it at all, and was not even sensible of the applause of the audience at the end of his great work, but continued standing with his back to the audience and beating the time, till Frl. Unger, who had sung the contralto part, turned him or induced him to turn round and face the people, who were still clapping their hands and giving way to the greatest demonstrations of pleasure. His turning round, and the sudden conviction thereby forced on everybody that he had not done so before because he could not hear what was going on, acted like an electric shock on all present, and a volcanic explosion of sympathy and admiration followed, which was repeated again and again, and seemed as if it would never end."

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400

JUL 17 1971 New England Newsclip

Missa fiercely difficult music nd the differ ect to larity. nth is amble popu- rather beror's t from r con- oven's pensi- r the d it has nique r, and de to ife, in and f pop song. The Missa, to paraphrase Monteux's comment on "Pelleas et Melisande," was never meant to be popular.

It is a curious mixture of the public and the private. Beethoven composed it for the installation as Cardinal-Archbishop of Olmuetz (Olomouc in Moravia) of his friend, pupil, and benefactor, the Archduke Rudolph. Beethoven heard about it early in 1818, finished the Kyrie late that year and the Gloria early the next, was some way into the Credo when the installation ceremony took place in March 1820, and did not actually complete the work until 1822. The Hammerklavier Sonata was in its final stages when Beethoven began the Mass, and while it was work in progress, Beethoven also composed the last three Piano Sonatas and the Diabelli Variations, as well as beginning the Ninth. As for the Archduke, the list of Beethoven's dedications to him speaks eloquently for the composer's regard: it includes among other works the Piano Concertos Nos. 4 and 5, the last Violin Sonata, the "Archduke" Trio, the Hammerklavier, Op. 111, and the Great Fugue both in its original quartet version and in the four-hand transcription.

The Missa Solemnis is a work, then, written for an extraordinary occasion involving someone who to Beethoven was very special. It is huge — the only comparable Mass is Bachs (which Beethoven knew only by reputation), and it brings to mind the conscious bow Beethoven's Diabelli Variations make to the uniquely comparable Goldbergs — but Beethoven took pains to inform himself about the liturgical requirement and to make his work suit them (even after Rudolphs installation had passed).

In calling the Missa "private, I mean that, unlike the Ninth, it contains some of Beethoven's most fiercely difficult music, not just difficult to perform (which the Ninth is also. if not as much), but difficult to absorb. And by "difficult" I mean dense, and I mean a way, a sort of proto-Mahlerian way, Beethoven has of flinging you violently from texture to texture, from key to key and tempo to tempo, from mood to mood. There is comparably difficult music certainly in the Hammerklavier and the Diabellis and of course in the last quartets, but that is all connoisseurs' and players' music (though some of it has, in spite of itself, become a public success in recent years), and there is nothing else like it in Beethoven's public music.

I am not just making a sociological point here: the issue also is that in writing, not for the four voices of a string quartet or for what a pianist can encompass in two hands, but for four vocal soloists, four-part chorus, and orchestra, Beethoven can, and does, write more sounds, and his difficult music in this more elaborate medium can sometimes be still more difficult than that for piano or quartet.

The Missa wants to be approached through its text, and what is as characteristic as it is touching is that the text begins before the singing does. Beethoven starts with a chord of D major, scored and spaced so personally as to proclaim "Beethoven!" as emphatically as possible (though quietly), and done as though no one had ever written a D major triad for orchestra before. Part of what is characteristic about it is that, as we quickly discover, Beethoven enters it on a syncopation. In just five and a half measures, simple chords orient us as to scale and mood (Beethven asks that it be played "with devotion"), key, and pace, after which the clarinet, quickly followed by bassoon and oboe, enters with what is unmistakably the word "Kyrie." Indeed, the first choral entrance interprets the opening orchestral chords as another possible "Kyrie" setting, too. I do not know another work in which instruments are so intimately drawn into the task of interpreting a text.

Something very striking about the Missa is a certain drastic quality to some of its text setting. Not the Kyrie, which, for all its richness of detail, is a direct and simple, also spacious, contemplation of the prayer to God and Christ for mercy. The most famous instance is the Dona nobis pacem, which Beethoven calls "prayer for inner and outer peace," and where the whole experience of a man who had spent much of his adult life in wartime, who had known siege and the sound of cannon-fire, comes to the surface with a violence of passion, as a picture without reservations of sheer, bloody terror, that owes nothing, but nothing to its obvious musical model, Haydn's Mass in Time of War.

Hear the Qui tollis in the Gloria, those awed and quiet repetitions of "suscipe deprecationem nostram" in that subtle and original dialogue of solo and choral voices, the sudden gathering of forces for the single outburst of "qui sedes ad dexteram patris," the retreat with its remote harmonies and shuddering accompaniment to "miserere nobis," and then the tenor's cry, after the most violent of Beethoven's harmonic shifts (and the first fortissimo in the Qui tollis) of "o, miserere nobis." Hear the chorus tenors' screaming entrance after all that on "Quoniam tu solus sanctus," or in the Credo, the mere six measures for unaccompanied voices in ancient harmonies, again led by madly excited tenors, of "et resurrexit."

Hear the dramatic play throughout with the word "et," or hear those marching armies of the faithful shouting "credo. credo, credo, credo," while the doctrinal clauses at the end of the Nicene Creed are recited. And hear all that in the context of spaciousness and inwardness of the Kyrie, the Incarnatus, of Beethoven's vision in the Credo's last pages of the life to come, of the Sanctus and the music to precede the Elevation of the Host.

From seeing the text as Beethoven, that oddly skeptical, confused, unpious believer saw it, you can find your way back to his own superscription at the head of the score: "From the heart — may it go to the heart."

Itzhak Perlman Is Soloist In Beethoven Concerto

The third weekend of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival concerts features conductors William Steinberg and Seiji Ozawa and pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy.

On Saturday, July 17, at 8:30 p.m., Steinberg conducts an all-Brahms concert. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are soloists in the Concerto for Violin and Cello. The program opens with the Academic Festival Overture and closes with the Symphony No. 4.

The weekend's open rehearsal, Saturday morning, July 17, at 10:30 features Ozawa conducting. Tickets for the open reharsal are $2.50 and benefit the Orchestra's pension fund. Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

The final concert of the weekend, Sunday, July 18, at 2:30 p.m., will be conducted by Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood. Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy makes his second appearance of the weekend performing Mozart's Paino concerto in B flat K.595. Contralto Maureen Forrester sings Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with the Orchestra and the male voices of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. The program opens with Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture and closes with Brahms' Haydn Variations.

The fourth weekend of concerts at Tanglewood offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 23, at 9, Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin Concerto. Other works on the program are the Third "Leonore" Overture and the Fifth Symphony.

The next evening, Saturday, July 24, at 8:30, is an all-orchestral concert with Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" Overture, the Third Symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon, July 25, at 2:30, Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's advisor, conducts the Missa Solemnis in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening at 7, for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Musorgsky and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth open rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the Orchestra's pension fund, is Saturday morning, July 24, at 10:30. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed.

Tickets for this fourth weekend of the 1971 Berkshire Festival are available at the Tanglewood box office, 637-1600, and through all Ticketron outlets.

Violinist Itzhak Perlman will appear at Tanglewood under the baton of William Steinberg on Friday, July 23.

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 581,160

JUL 18 1971

New England Newsclip

and coming in the lobby and tried to read faces," Musante said.

"There were all sorts of rumors going on, then Fleischer arrived. For a couple of days he was upstairs in conferences and everytime he walked through the bar he had a poker face. Finally we got the word and shooting started again on the original script and we all still had jobs."

Musante is one of those American actors who is better known abroad than in his native country.

The brown-haired actor, whose grandparents were born in Italy ("I didn't speak any Italian when I first went there") has starred in four successive hit movies in Italy — "The Mercenary," "One Night at Dinner," "The Bird With the Crystal Plumage" and "Venetian Anonymous." "Bird" has played in this country and "Dinner" and

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Monday through Saturday, matinees at 2 Saturdays, July 22 and 2 on Wednes thereafter, through Aug. When, in the course of h events, history becomes worthy, it wins the New Drama Critics' Circle and Awards.

"THE TAMING OF THE SHR — Regis College, Weston, at tonight, July 20, July 23-25, 27, July 30-31. Shakespe comedy is performed by Th On The Green company.

"MARIGOLDS" — New The Cambridge, at 7:30 Mo through Friday, at 7 and 10 urday, with matinees at Wednesday, through Sept. 'Smotherhood — from Paul del, whose drama won the P zer Prize.

"GROOVE TUBE" — Video ater, 24 Brighton av., at 7:30 9:30 Thursday and Sunday, at 7:30, 9:30, and 11:30 Fr and Saturday, indefinite Script-tease — in living-r comfort.

"THE PROPOSITION" — Hampshire st., Inman Squ Cambridge, at 8 Wednes through Friday, and at 9 and Saturday, indefinite run. typical topical satire, with sical accompaniment.

"THE BURGHERS OF CALAIS" Boston Center for the Arts, 7:30 Tuesday through Friday, 6 and 9:30 Saturday, and at 5 8:30 Sunday, through July Revival of Theater Company Boston's production of Ed White's drama about the Scot boro Trial.

OPERA - BALLET - SYMPHO FEST — Garden Cinema, Arlin ton Street: Verdi "Requie (today at 2:15, 5:15, and 8:1 "Giselle" (Monday at 2:1 5:45, 7:30, and 9:15). "Fidel (Tuesday at 2:30, 5:15, and "Children's Program" (Wedne day at 2) and "Pagliacci" (We nesday at 3:30, 5, 6:30, 8, a 9:30); "Carmen" (Thursday 2:15, 5:15, and 8:15); "Gisel (Friday at 2:15, 4, 5:45, 7:30, a 9:15); "Children's Program (Saturday at 2) and Beethove Symphonies 6 & 9 (Saturday 4, 5:45, 7:30, and 9:15); "Ca men" (Sunday at 2:15, 5: 8:15).

THE CRAYTON SINGERS — 8 p.m. in Elma Lewis Playhou

Beethoven's Missa fiercely difficult music

★ MUSIC

Continued from Page A-61

In his book, "The Classical Style," Charles Rosen suggests that the ovations Beethoven received at the premieres of those two works, which are "apparently difficult enough to understand even today and which must have been disastrously executed when first played. to judge by the reports — are more a testimony to the respect in which the elderly composer was held than to a genuine acceptance of the music itself."

Rosen's reading is particularly persuasive about the Missa Solemnis. It and the Ninth fundamentally differ precisely with respect to acceptance and popularity. The finale of the Ninth is an extraordinarily gamble to create something popular and universal — rather like Haydn's Emperor's Hymn, if you like, but from so unlikely a quarter considering Beethoven's long-established propensity, by that time, for the "difficult" — and it worked: the Ninth has claimed and held a unique place in the repertory, and the melody of the Ode to Joy has led its own life, in Protestant hymnals and now in the world of pop song. The Missa, to paraphrase Monteux's comment on "Pelleas et Melisande," was never meant to be popular.

It is a curious mixture of the public and the private. Beethoven composed it for the installation as Cardinal-Archbishop of Olmuetz (Olomouc in Moravia) of his friend, pupil, and benefactor, the Archduke Rudolph. Beethoven heard about it early in 1818, finished the Kyrie late that year and the Gloria early the next, was some way into the Credo when the installation ceremony took place in March 1820, and did not actually complete the work until 1822. The Hammerklavier Sonata was in its final stages when Beethoven began the Mass, and while it was work in progress, Beethoven also composed the last three Piano Sonatas and the Diabelli Variations, as well as beginning the Ninth. As for the Archduke, the list of Beethoven's dedications to him speaks eloquently for the composer's regard: it includes among other works the Piano Concertos Nos. 4 and 5, the last Violin Sonata, the "Archduke" Trio, the Hammerklavier, Op. 111, and the Great Fugue both in its original quartet version and in the four-hand transcription.

The Missa Solemnis is a work, then, written for an extraordinary occasion involving someone who to Beethoven was very special. It is huge — the only comparable Mass is Bachs (which Beethoven knew only by reputation), and it brings to mind the conscious bow Beethoven's Diabelli Variations make to the uniquely comparable Goldbergs — but Beethoven took pains to inform himself about the liturgical requirement and to make his work suit them (even after Rudolphs installation had passed).

In calling the Missa "private, I mean that, unlike the Ninth, it contains some of Beethoven's most fiercely difficult music, not just difficult to perform (which the Ninth is also. if not as much), but difficult to absorb. And by "difficult" I mean dense, and I mean a way, a sort of proto-Mahlerian way, Beethoven has of flinging you violently from texture to texture, from key to key and tempo to tempo, from mood to mood. There is comparably difficult music certainly in the Hammerklavier and the Diabellis and of course in the last quartets, but that is all connoisseurs' and players' music (though some of it has, in spite of itself, become a public success in recent years), and there is nothing else like it in Beethoven's public music.

I am not just making a sociological point here: the issue also is that in writing, not for the four voices of a string quartet or for what a pianist can encompass in two hands, but for four vocal soloists, four-part chorus, and orchestra, Beethoven can, and does, write more sounds, and his difficult music in this more elaborate medium can sometimes be still more difficult than that for piano or quartet.

The Missa wants to be approached through its text, and what is as characteristic as it is touching is that the text begins before the singing does. Beethoven starts with a chord of D major, scored and spaced so personally as to proclaim "Beethoven!" as emphatically as possible (though quietly), and done as though no one had ever written a D major triad for orchestra before. Part of what is characteristic about it is that, as we quickly discover, Beethoven enters it on a syncopation. In just five and a half measures, simple chords orient us as to scale and mood (Beethven asks that it be played "with devotion"), key, and pace, after which the clarinet, quickly followed by bassoon and oboe, enters with what is unmistakably the word "Kyrie." Indeed, the first choral entrance interprets the opening orchestral chords as another possible "Kyrie" setting, too. I do not know another work in which instruments are so intimately drawn into the task of interpreting a text.

Something very striking about the Missa is a certain drastic quality to some of its text setting. Not the Kyrie, which, for all its richness of detail, is a direct and simple, also spacious, contemplation of the prayer to God and Christ for mercy. The most famous instance is the Dona nobis pacem, which Beethoven calls "prayer for inner and outer peace," and where the whole experience of a man who had spent much of his adult life in wartime, who had known siege and the sound of cannon-fire, comes to the surface with a violence of passion, as a picture without reservations of sheer, bloody terror, that owes nothing, but nothing to its obvious musical model, Haydn's Mass in Time of War.

Hear the Qui tollis in the Gloria, those awed and quiet repetitions of "suscipe deprecationem nostram" in that subtle and original dialogue of solo and choral voices, the sudden gathering of forces for the single outburst of "qui sedes ad dexteram patris," the retreat with its remote harmonies and shuddering accompaniment to "miserere nobis," and then the tenor's cry, after the most violent of Beethoven's harmonic shifts (and the first fortissimo in the Qui tollis) of "o, miserere nobis." Hear the chorus tenors' screaming entrance after all that on "Quoniam tu solus sanctus," or in the Credo, the mere six measures for unaccompanied voices in ancient harmonies, again led by madly excited tenors, of "et resurrexit."

Hear the dramatic play throughout with the word "et," or hear those marching armies of the faithful shouting "credo. credo, credo, credo," while the doctrinal clauses at the end of the Nicene Creed are recited. And hear all that in the context of spaciousness and inwardness of the Kyrie, the Incarnatus, of Beethoven's vision in the Credo's last pages of the life to come, of the Sanctus and the music to precede the Elevation of the Host.

From seeing the text as Beethoven, that oddly skeptical, confused, unpious believer saw it, you can find your way back to his own superscription at the head of the score: "From the heart — may it go to the heart."

Itzhak Perlman Is Soloist In Beethoven Concerto

The third weekend of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival concerts features conductors William Steinberg and Seiji Ozawa and pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy.

On Saturday, July 17, at 8:30 p.m., Steinberg conducts an all-Brahms concert. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are soloists in the Concerto for Violin and Cello. The program opens with the Academic Festival Overture and closes with the Symphony No. 4.

The weekend's open rehearsal, Saturday morning, July 17, at 10:30 features Ozawa conducting. Tickets for the open reharsal are $2.50 and benefit the Orchestra's pension fund. Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

The final concert of the weekend, Sunday, July 18, at 2:30 p.m., will be conducted by Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood. Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy makes his second appearance of the weekend performing Mozart's Paino concerto in B flat K.595. Contralto Maureen Forrester sings Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with the Orchestra and the male voices of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. The program opens with Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture and closes with Brahms' Haydn Variations.

The fourth weekend of concerts at Tanglewood offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 23, at 9, Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin Concerto. Other works on the program are the Third "Leonore" Overture and the Fifth Symphony.

The next evening, Saturday, July 24, at 8:30, is an all-orchestral concert with Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" Overture, the Third Symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon, July 25, at 2:30, Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's advisor, conducts the Missa Solemnis in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening at 7, for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Musorgsky and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth open rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the Orchestra's pension fund, is Saturday morning, July 24, at 10:30. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed.

Tickets for this fourth weekend of the 1971 Berkshire Festival are available at the Tanglewood box office, 637-1600, and through all Ticketron outlets.

Violinist Itzhak Perlman will appear at Tanglewood under the baton of William Steinberg on Friday, July 23.

57

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144
JUL 19 1971

3 Tanglewood All-Beethoven Concerts Set

Three all-Beethoven concerts by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein will be presented this weekend at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

On Friday evening, Steinberg, Boston Symphony music director, conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the violin concerto. Other works are the Third Leonore Overture and Fifth Symphony.

In an all-orchestral concert Saturday evening Steinberg leads the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" Overture, the Third Symphony (Eroica) and Seventh Symphony.

Bernstein, Tanglewood's adviser, will conduct the "Missa Solemnis" at 2:30 p.m. Sunday in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 to 1949.

Joining Bernstein in the performance will be soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

The weekend prelude at 7 p.m. Friday, for which admission is free to ticket holders for that night's 9 o'clock concert, is a short recital by baritone Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky and Tschaikovsky.

The open rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. Saturday will be of the Sunday concert.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUL 18 1971

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL—Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. In the shed, today at 2:30 p.m. Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Seiji Ozawa. The Program includes Mozart: 'Marriage of Figaro' Overture Mozart: Piano concerto in B flat K.595 Vladimir Ashkenazy, Brahms: Alto Rhapsody: Maureen Forrester, Men's Chorus of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus: Brahms: Haydn Variations. Information, 413-637-1600.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 129,656
JUL 20 1971

AT SHED. William Steinberg will conduct the Boston Symphony for Friday's concert at 9 p.m. and Saturday's 8:30 p.m. concert of the Berkshire Musical Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUL 23 1971

CLEFS & ARPEGGIOS

by NANCY CURRAN

The Lake George Open Festival stars the Center Opera Company of Minneapolis as guests this week. Tonight and Saturday, at 8:15, the opera is "Faust Counter Faust." The most compelling thing about the young Center Opera cast is their superior voices.

Faust is commemorated in many works of literature; tonight's work is a collage of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," Boito's "Mephistofele," "Faust" by Gouned and Goethe; Kipphardt's "In the Cast of J. Robert Oppenheimer," Marlowe's "The Tragical history of Doctor Faustus," and Marowitz's "Prologue to Dr. Faustus." Next Wednesday's "L'Infedelta Delusa" will be comic relief, in English.

"L'Infedelta Delusa," the comic opera, is based on characters in the classic Commedia dell-'Arte, which can be traced back to the early Roman and Byzantine forms. The stock characters, Harlequin, Columbine, Pierrot and their friends surface again and again in the French and in the English drama literature. Their pure personalities can be woven into countless plots and intrigues of love and the human adventure.

In two acts "L'Infedelta Delusa," which translates infidelity outwitted, is credited to Marco Coltellani with music by Joseph Haydn. The Lake George Opera translation is by Andrew Porter. It will be a light-hearted adventure in classic opera.

A Soft Hooray

We have to give a soft hooray to the Scotia Police Court for its cracking down on automobile noise. One ticket was given, according to a recent news story, for unnecessary noise, and nine for inadequate mufflers. Maybe that powerful roar is music to the owner's ears, but it's a limited pleasure to the public.

Flying Fingers

Ernesto Bitetti, an amazing Argentinian guitarist, will play to the Chamber Music audience Monday evening at the Canfield Casino. Show time is 8:30. Bitetti, although a young man, must have a large repertoire. He is presenting a completely new set of works from those he did at his Schenectady Symphony concert and yet another new list was prepared for a SPAC convocation of teachers this week.

Middleburgh Music

If you're looking for a way to keep tuned up over the summer, think of joining the activities at the Middleburgh Music Barn. David Anton will direct rehearsals for chamber music Wednesdays and Sundays in the Music Barn, and the choral group, just forming, Thursdays from 3 to 5 p.m. The Anton Music Barn is at 6365 Huntersland Road, a mile east of Route 145 in Middleburgh.

Berkshire Festival

This all-Beethoven weekend at Tanglewood involves great things like William Steinberg and Itzhak Perlman Friday evening at 9, "King Stephen" and William Steinberg at 8:30. Leonard Bernstein will direct at 2:30 Sunday afternoon with Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus in a memorial concert dedicated to Serge Koussevitsky.

First and Second Thespalonians

Well, it's with an almost religious fervor that the zealots want you to hear "Jesus Christ, Superstar." Let's have none of that talk about the moneychangers, the magic show and some village guy in the robe and sandals.

You can hear "Jesus Christ, Superstar" quite a few times during the long weekend. You don't have to leave home to hear it, if you own a radio. WGY has the album scheduled for play starting at 8:30 Sunday evening. In the studio at the close of the record will be Chuck Saille, of the Protestant Religious Broadcasting Commission, and Father William Kennedy, of the Catholic Archdiocese of Albany's Office of Information. The station hopes that some of the live cast in the area will also be available for telephone discussion.

Live performances are scheduled for the immediate future. Saturday and Sunday evenings, at 7 and 10 each night, the Palace Theater will be the venue of one production by Ashwood House. They were caught in the complications of court action involving copyright, performance licensing, etc., that cancelled their original June date.

Each of the Palace Theater shows will start with a 25-minute introduction by Father John Radice of Buffalo a singing priest and youth worker. Brother Joseph, WQBK's host for "Music that Speaks for Today," will emcee the three-hour show.

The live cast of 40 singers and musicians will do music from the record. Mr. Cavanna, head of Ashwood House, Ltd., told me that "this was the cast written up in Life Magazine." As for the choice of dates, he said "I took the first dates when I could get a theater and when I could get a cast."

Saratoga Performing Arts Center date is July 26. They term theirs the "complete show." They will feautre one of the recording cast members on tour, Yvonne Elliman, who originated the Mary Magdalene role. No one production can claim to be the "opera version," because it is not yet produced.

So that's the story, if you want to hear and/or see "Jesus Christ, Superstar." It seems a little ironic, when you add up the number of seats that could be sold for five performances, in the two places, SPAC and the Palace. Then consider what church attendance is in the summer!

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
D. 13,225
JUL 19 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood will present three Beethoven concerts

The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 23 at 9 Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the violin concerto. Other works on the program are the Third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony.

The next evening, July 24 at 8.30, is an all-orchestral concert with Mr. Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh symphony.

On Saturday afternoon at 2.30 Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's advisor, conducts the "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Mr. Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening at 7, for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky, and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the Orchestra's Pension Fund, is Saturday morning July 24 at 10.30. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed. Admission is $2.50 and all seats are unreserved.

Tickets for this fourth weekend of the 1971 Berkshire Festival are available at the Tanglewood box office, 637-1600, and through all Ticketron outlets.

GAZETTE
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 97,539
JUL 23 1971
New England Newsclip

Kaleidoscope

By DAVID D. OSWELL

"JACQUES BREL Is Alive and Well and Living in Paris" is back in Boston.

The town's longest running musical has returned to the Musical Theater I in the Hotel Somerset. The cast that set this record — Judy Lander, Shawn Elliot, Annette Pironne and Terrance Currier — are all back and Susan Campbell from Musical Theater II has joined them.

Performances at the hotel theater, 400 Commonwealth Ave., are at 8:30 p.m. Mondays through Fridays and at 6:30 and 9:30 p.m. Saturdays.

ANOTHER REPEAT will be the Williamstown Theater's "Cyrano" from July 27 to 31.

Frank Langella is featured in this production which drew rave reviews when performed earlier this season.

The repeat has caused a change in schedule for Brecht's "Mother Courage," which is now to run Aug. 3 to 7.

RITA MORENO, the young lady who walked off with an Oscar for "West Side Story," heads the cast for the Berkshire Theater Festival's third play this summer.

It's Leslie Weiner's "Are You Now or Have You Ever Been Blue?" The new drama of a middle-aged woman's search for reassurance is directed by Salem Ludwig.

It opens in the Stockbridge theater Wednesday and remains through Aug. 7.

BEETHOVEN is the star at Tanglewood this weekend.

Three all-Beethoven concerts will be conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

Tonight at 9 Steinberg, with Itzhak Perlman as soloist, will conduct the Boston Symphony in the "Violin Concerto."

Tomorrow at 8:30 p.m., he leads the symphony in the "King Stephen" overture, the "Eroica" Symphony and the Seventh Sympnony.

Bernstein takes over the podium at 2:30 Sunday to conduct the "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

Rita Moreno

57

Schenectady Union-Star
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 30,144
JUL 19 1971

3 Tanglewood All-Beethoven Concerts Set

Three all-Beethoven concerts by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein will be presented this weekend at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

On Friday evening, Steinberg, Boston Symphony music director, conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the violin concerto. Other works are the Third Leonore Overture and Fifth Symphony.

In an all-orchestral concert Saturday evening Steinberg leads the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" Overture, the Third Symphony (Eroica) and Seventh Symphony.

Bernstein, Tanglewood's adviser, will conduct the "Missa Solemnis" at 2:30 p.m. Sunday in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 to 1949.

Joining Bernstein in the performance will be soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

The weekend prelude at 7 p.m. Friday, for which admission is free to ticket holders for that night's 9 o'clcok concert, is a short recital by baritone Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky and Tschaikovsky.

The open rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. Saturday will be of the Sunday concert.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,875 SUN. 145,169
JUL 18 1971

MUSIC

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL—Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. In the shed, today at 2:30 p.m. Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Seiji Ozawa. The Program includes Mozart: Marriage of Figaro' Overture Mozart: Piano concerto in B flat K.595 Vladimir Ashkenazy, Brahms: Alto Rhapsody: Maureen Forrester, Men's Chorus of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus: Brahms: Haydn Variations. Information, 413-637-1600.

SYRACUSE
Herald Journal
D. 123,656
JUL 20 1971

AT SHED. William Steinberg will conduct the Boston Symphony for Friday's concert at 9 p.m. and Saturday's 8:30 p.m. concert of the Berkshire Musical Festival, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Schenectady Gazette
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
D. 55,934
JUL 23 1971

CLEFS & ARPEGGIOS

by NANCY CURRAN

The Lake George Open Festival [illegible] the Center Opera Company of Minneapolis as guests [illegible] week. Tonight and Saturday, at 8:15, the opera is "Faust Counter Faust." The most compelling thing about the young Center Opera cast is their superior voices.

Faust is commemorated in many works of literature: tonight's work is a collage of Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust," Boito's "Mephistofele," "Faust" by Gounod and Goethe, Klaus Mann's "Mephisto," "The Life of J. Robert Oppenheimer," Marlowe's "The Tragical history of Doctor Faustus," and Marowitz's "Prologue to Dr. Faustus." Next Wednesday's "L'Infedelta Delusa" will be comic relief, in [illegible].

"L'Infedelta Delusa," the comic opera, is based on characters in the classic Commedia dell'Arte, which can be traced back to the early Roman and Byzantine forms. The stock characters, Harlequin, Columbine, Pierrot and their friends surface again and again in the French and in the English drama literature. Their pure personalities can be woven into countless plots and intrigues of love and the human adventure.

In two acts "L'Infedelta Delusa," which translates infidelity [illegible], is credited to Marco Coltellini with music by Joseph Haydn. The Lake George Opera translation is by Andrew [illegible]. It will be a light-hearted [illegible] in classic opera.

A Soft Hooray

We have to give a soft hooray to the Scotia Police Court for cracking down on automobile noise. One ticket was given, according to a recent news story, for unnecessary noise, and nine for inadequate mufflers. Maybe that powerful roar is music to the owner's ears, but it's a limited pleasure to the public.

Flying Fingers

Ernesto Bitetti, an amazing Argentinian guitarist, will play to the Chamber Music audience Monday evening at the Canfield Casino. Show time is 8:30. Bitetti, although a young man, can have a large repertoire. He is preparing a completely new set of work, from those he did at the Schenectady Symphony concert last year, another row. He is prepared for a SPAC convention of teachers [illegible] Music [illegible] way to [illegible] summer. [illegible] at Barn. [illegible] perfect re[illegible] for chamber music [illegible] in the [illegible] choral [illegible] Three-days [illegible] Aaron Mu[illegible] Huntersland [illegible] of Route 145 [illegible] Berkshire Festival [illegible] weekend at [illegible] great [illegible] Steinberg [illegible] Perlman Friday [illegible] at 9, "King Stephen" [illegible] at 8:30. [illegible] will direct [illegible] Sunday afternoon with [illegible]

Each of the Palace Theater shows will start with a 25-minute introduction by Father John Radice of Buffalo a singing priest and youth worker. Brother Joseph, WQBK's host for "Music that Speaks for Today," will emcee the three-hour show.

The live cast of 40 singers and musicians will do music from the record. Mr. Cavanna, head of Ashwood House, Ltd., told me that "this was the [illegible] written up in Life Magazine." As for the choice of dates, he said "I took the first date when I could get a theater and when I could get a cast."

Saratoga Performing Arts Center date is July 26. They term theirs the "complete show." They will feautre one of the recording cast members on tour, Yvonne Elliman, who originated the Mary Magdalene role. No one production can claim to be the "opera version," because it is not yet produced.

So that's the story, if you want to hear and/or see "Jesus Christ, Superstar." It seems a little ironic, when you add up the number of seats that could be sold for five performances, in the two places, SPAC and the Palace. Then consider what church attendance is in the summer!

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
D. 13,225
JUL 19 1971
New England Newsclip

Tanglewood will present three Beethoven concerts

The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 23 at 9 Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the violin concerto. Other works on the program are the Third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony.

The next evening, July 24 at 8.30, is an all-orchestral concert with Mr. Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh symphony.

On Saturday afternoon at 2.30 Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's advisor, conducts the "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Mr. Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening at 7, for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky, and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the Orchestra's Pension Fund, is Saturday morning July 24 at 10.30. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed. Admission is $2.50 and all seats are unreserved.

Tickets for this fourth weekend of the 1971 Berkshire Festival are available at the Tanglewood box office, 637-1600, and through all Ticketron outlets.

GAZETTE
WORCESTER, MASS.
D. 97,539
JUL 23 1971
New England Newsclip

Kaleidoscope

By DAVID D. OSWELL

"JACQUES BREL Is Alive and Well and Living in Paris" is back in Boston.

The town's longest running musical has returned to the Musical Theater I in the Hotel Somerset. The cast that set this record — Judy Lander, Shawn Elliot, Annette Pironne and Terrance Currier — are all back and Susan Campbell from Musical Theater II has joined them.

Performances at the hotel theater, 400 Commonwealth Ave., are at 8:30 p.m. Mondays through Fridays and at 6:30 and 9:30 p.m. Saturdays.

ANOTHER REPEAT will be the Williamstown Theater's "Cyrano" from July 27 to 31.

Frank Langella is featured in this production which drew rave reviews when performed earlier this season.

The repeat has caused a change in schedule for Brecht's "Mother Courage," which is now to run Aug. 3 to 7.

RITA MORENO, the young lady who walked off with an Oscar for "West Side Story," heads the cast for the Berkshire Theater Festival's third play this summer.

It's Leslie Weiner's "Are You Now or Have You Ever Been Blue?" The new drama of a middle-aged woman's search for reassurance is directed by Salem Ludwig.

It opens in the Stockbridge theater Wednesday and remains through Aug. 7.

BEETHOVEN is the star at Tanglewood this weekend.

Three all-Beethoven concerts will be conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

Tonight at 9 Steinberg, with Itzhak Perlman as soloist, will conduct the Boston Symphony in the "Violin Concerto."

Tomorrow at 8:30 p.m., he leads the symphony in the "King Stephen" overture, the "Eroica" Symphony and the Seventh Sympnony.

Bernstein takes over the podium at 2:30 Sunday to conduct the "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

Rita Moreno

TIMES
HARTFORD, CONN.
S. 132,687
JUL 25 1971
New England Newsclip

Music

Tanglewood—Lenox, Mass., Berkshire Festival. Today — Leonard Bernstein, Beethoven Program, 2:30 p.m. July 30— Weekend Prelude, Berkshire Boy Choir, 9 p.m. July 31 — Open Rehearsal, Seiji Ozawa, 8:30 p.m.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
BOSTON, MASS.
D. 217,264
JUL 21 1971
New England Newsclip

Florence Kopleff

. . . will be the contralto in the quartet of soloists Leonard Bernstein has chosen for Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, which he will conduct on Sunday afternoon, July 25, with the Boston Symphony and Tanglewood Festival Chorus at Lenox, Mass. in memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

RAVENA, N. Y.
NEWS-HERALD
(ALBANY MARKET AREA)
W. 2,000
JUL 23 1971

Beethoven Concert At Tanglewood

The fourth week-end at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox will be entirely devoted to the music of Beethoven. Conducting will be William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

The week-end opens on Friday evenng, July 23rd, with a vocal prelude starting at 7:00 o'clock featuring Sherrill Milnes as soloist. The main concert will start at 9:00 o'clock with Steinberg conducting the Leonore Overture; followed by Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin Concerto; and concluding with the 5th Symphony.

Saturday's concert will start at 8:30 and will also be conducted by Steinberg. It will include the King Stephen Overture; Symphony No. 3, the "Eroica"; and Symphony No. 7.

Sunday will mark the return to the podium of Leonard Bernstein and the entire afternoon will be devoted to the presentation of the "Missa Solemnie" in a concert dedicated to the memory of Serge Koussevitsky. Four soloists and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus will join the Boston Symphony Orchestra for this fine musical event which will start at 2:30.

TRANSCRIPT
NORTH ADAMS, MASS.
D. 13,225
JUL 23 1971
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood

Steinberg, Bernstein perform this weekend

LENOX—The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 23 at 9 p.m., Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin concerto. Other works on the program are the Third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony.

The next evening, Saturday July 24 at 8.30 p.m., is an all-orchestral concert with Mr. Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the King Stephen overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh symphony.

On Sunday afternoon July 25 at 2.30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's Advisor, conducts the Missa Solemnis in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Mr. Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

— The fifth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood begins Friday evening, July 30 at 9 p.m. in the Shed. Michael Tilson Thomas, Associate Conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducts an all-orchestral program, including Copland's "Appalachian Spring," Ruggles' "Sun-treader," Stravinsky's "Scherzo a la russe," and the Divertissement from Act 3 of Thcaikovsky's "Swan Lake."

The Weekend Prelude, at 7 p.m. on Friday in the Shed, features the Berkshire Boy Choir performing music from the Renaissance.

Tanglewood Artistic Director, Seiji Ozawa, conducts the Boston Symphony Saturday evening July 30 at 8.30 p.m. in the Shed with soloists Byron Janis, piano, and Stomu Yamash'ta, percussion. The program is Haydn's Symphony no. 96, Prokofiev's Third piano concerto, with piano soloist Byron Janis, and Takemitsu's "Cassiopeia" with percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta.

Stomu Yamash'ta, one of the foremost percussion virtuosi in music today, made his concert debut in 1963 performing Milhaud's Percussion concerto with the Osaka (Japan) Philharmonic. He has appeared in Europe at the Festivals at Aldeburgh, Berlin, Edinburgh, and Avignon. He has performed with the Boston Symphony on numerous occasions.

Daniel Barenboim is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Sunday afternoon, August 1 at 2.30 p.m. Soloist is violinist Pinchas Zukerman. Mr. Barenboim conducts Schubert's Overture to "Rosamunde," Lalo's Symphonie espagnole, with violin soloist Pinchas Zukerman, and concluding the program, Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony.

WILLIAM STEINBERG

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891
JUL 24 1971
New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD: July 24: Open Rehearsal at 10:30 a.m. William Steinberg, Beethoven Program, 'King Stephen' overture, Symphony No. 3 'Eroica,' Symphony No. 7, 8:30 p.m. . . . July 25: Leonard Bernstein, Beethoven, Missa Solemnis, Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes, Tanglewood Festival Chorus, In memory of Serge Koussevitzky, 2:30 p.m. . . . July 30: Weekend Prelude with Berkshire Boy Choir at 7 p.m. Michael Tilson Thomas, Copland's Appalachian Spring, Ruggles' Sun-Treader, Stravinsky's Scherzo a' la Russe, Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake - Divertissement Act III, 9 p.m. . . . July 31: Open Rehearsal, 10:30 a.m. Seiji Ozawa, Haydn's Symphony No. 96 'Miracles', Prokofiev's Piano concerto No. 3, Byron Janis, Takemitsu's Cassiopeia, Stomu Yamash'ta, 8:30 p.m. . . . August 1: Daniel Barenboim, Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture, Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole, Pinchas Zukerman, Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4, 2:30 p.m.

POST
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
S. 88,000
JUL 25 1971
New England Newsclip

TANGLEWOOD, Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass — Today at 2:30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein conducting Beethoven program with Missa Solemnis performed by Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes, Tanglewood chorus, in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; weekend prelude, Friday at 7 p.m., Berkshire Choir Boys performing music from the Renaissance; Friday at 9 p.m., Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducting all orchestral program; Saturday at 10:30 a.m., open rehearsal; Saturday at 8:30 p.m., Boston Symphony in the shed with soloists Byron Janis, piano, and Stomu Yamash'ta, percussion, Seiji Ozawa, Tanglewood artistic director, conducting; Aug. 1 at 2:30 p.m., Daniel Barenboim, guest conductor, with soloist Pinchas Zukerman; Tuesday Tanglewood-on-Parade, the annual demonstration of the work of the students of the Berkshire Music center, Tanglewood grounds open to public at 5:30 p.m., beginning at 6:30 p.m., simultaneous performances of opera scenes and arias and dance demonstrations; 8:30 p.m., Berkshire Music Center orchestra in tribute to Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, fireworks over Stockbridge Bowl follow; weekend preludes are Friday at 7 p.m., two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, presenting guest artists and members of the orchestra in short recitals offered at no extra charge to Friday evening ticket holders; open rehearsals in the shed each Saturday at 10:30 p.m. for benefit of the orchestra's pension fund, offer a relaxed look at the orchestra, conductor and soloists preparing Berkshire Festival music; seats are unresevred, $2.50 each and available the morning of the rehearsal; tickets for regular performances $8.50, $8, $7.50, $7, $6, $5, $4.50, $3.50.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891
JUL 24 1971
New England Newsclip

Leonard Bernstein

Bernstein To Conduct Sunday Concert

Leonard Bernstein will make a rare appearance at Tanglewood on Sunday, July 25 at 2:30 p.m.

He will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Missa Solemnis with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and soloists Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran and Sherrill Milnes.

On Saturday, July 24, William Steinberg leads the orchestra in a program of Beethoven's Third and Seventh symphonies and the "King Stephen" Overture.

The fifth weekend of concerts at Tanglewood begins Friday evening, July 30 at 9 when Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducts Copland's Appalachian Spring, Ruggles' Sun-Treader, Stravinsky's Scherzo a la Russe, and the Divertissement from Act 3 of Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake.

The weekend prelude, at 7 p.m. on Friday, features the Berkshire Boy Choir performing music from the Renaissance.

The summer's fifth Boston Symphony open rehearsal takes place Saturday morning, July 30 at 10:30 a.m.

Tanglewood artistic director, Seiji Ozawa, conducts the Boston Symphony Saturday evening July 30 at 8:30 in the Shed with soloists Byron Janis, piano, and Stomu Yamash'ta, percussion. The program is Haydn's Symphony no. 96, Prokofiev's Third Piano Concerto, with piano soloist Byron Janis, and Takemitsu's Cassiopeia with percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta.

Daniel Barenboim is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Sunday afternoon, August 1 at 2:30 p.m. Soloist is violinist Pinchas Zukerman. Barenboim conducts Schubert's Overture to Rosamunde, Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole, with violin soloist Pinchas Zukerman, and concluding the program, Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony.

Tanglewood on Parade, the annual demonstration of the work of the students of the Berkshire Music Center, takes place Tuesday, July 27. The Tanglewood grounds will open to the public at 5:30 p.m. Beginning at 6:30 p.m., performances of opera scenes and arias and dance demonstrations will take place.

At 8:30 p.m., the gala concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra begins with Boston Symphony associate conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas, conducting the Overture to The Flying Dutchman by Wagner. Tanglewood artistic director, Seiji Ozawa, then conducts the Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin" by Bartok. Tanglewood's other artistic director, Gunther Schuller, will conduct a concert performance of Act I of Wagner's "Die Walkuere."

56

GLOBE
BOSTON, MASS.
S. 581,160
JUN 27 1971 New England Newsclip

LEONARD BERNSTEIN returns to Tanglewood to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, Sunday, July 25 at 2:30. Soloists for the concert include Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes.

NEWS-TIMES
DANBURY, CONN.
D. 31,285
JUL 22 1971 New England Newsclip

All-Beethoven at Tanglewood

The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

Tomorrow evening at 9 Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the violin concerto. Other works on the program are the third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony.

Saturday night at 8:30 is an all-orchestral concert with Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh symphony.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30, Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's adviser, conducts the "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Berstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

POST
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
S. 88,000
JUL 18 1971 New England Newsclip

library, Southport.

TANGLEWOOD, Berkshire Festival, Lenox, Mass.—Today at 2:30 p.m., Ozawa conductor in program of Mozart and Brahms, Vladimir Ashenazy, piano soloist, Maureen Forrester in alto rhapsody; Friday at 9 p.m., William Steinberg, conducting Beethoven program, Itzhak Perlman in violin concerto; Saturday at 8:30 p.m., William Steinberg conducting Beethoven program; July 25, at 2:30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein, conducting Beethoven program, with Missa Solemnis performed by Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes, Tanglewood Festival chorus, in memory of Serge Koussevitzky; weekend preludes each Friday at 7 p.m., two hours before the Boston Symphony concert, present guests artists and members of the orchestra in short recitals offered at no extra charge to Friday night ticket holders; open rehearsals each Saturday at 10:30 a.m. in the shed for benefit of the orchestra's Pension fund offer relaxed look at the orchestra, conductor and soloists preparing programs, seats are unreserved at $2.50 each and available the morning of the rehearsal; tickets for other concerts, $8.50, $8. $7.50. $7, $6, $5, $4.50, $3.50.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUL 24 1971 New England Newsclip

Friday Night Record Broken At Tanglewood

A record Friday night audience of 9,015 attended the Beethoven concert last night at Tanglewood.

The previous high for Friday night was 8,100 last year, also for a Beethoven concert.

JOURNAL
LAKEVILLE, CONN.
W. 4,405
JUL 22 1971 New England Newsclip

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUL 26 1971 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Doubles Weekend Attendance Over Last Year

Tanglewood drew an audience of 38,186 this past weekend, nearly double last year's figure of 19,017. The biggest weekend in 1970 was the seventh of the season, which drew 32,510. The management also announced that it was an all-time record high in box-office dollars, but did not disclose a figure.

The Friday night concert had an audience of 9,015; Saturday's rehearsal drew 4,270; Saturday night's concert, 12,359; and Sunday's concert 12,542.

EVENING CONCERT . . . at Tanglewood's Music Shed provides the opportunity for relaxed listening and enjoyment of the balmy summer weather. Many visitors to Tanglewood arrive quite early in the evening for a picnic on the grounds. For their pleasure, the Boston Symphony provides prelude concerts each Friday evening at 7 p.m. This Friday's prelude will be a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs by Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky and Tchaikovsky. There is no extra charge for the prelude concerts.

THE TIMES RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 42,181
JUL 24 1971

Itzhak Perlman Solo Violinist In Beethoven At Tanglewood

By BILL RICE

Itzhak Perlman, the exciting young violin virtuoso from Israel, was guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., in the opening program of an all-Beethoven weekend of concerts.

Perlman performed the violin Concerto in D Major, the only concerto written for violin by Beethoven. Also on the program, conducted by William Steinberg, was the Leonore Overture No. 3 and the Symphony No. 5 in C Minor.

A record-breaking Friday evening crowd of 9,015 was in attendance.

Twenty-six-year-old Perlman's command of his instrument is awesome, but in the Beethoven concerto he doesn't overwhelm the listener with technique. Rather he wins his audience with expressiveness, warmth of tone, and great feeling for the lyrical qualities of the concerto.

Even the technical demands of the cadenzas, these written by Fritz Kreisler, are minimized by the ease and evenness with which Perlman plays them.

Not "On" Night

As fine as his performance was, we felt Perlman was not exactly having an "on" night. There were a few minor flaws and intonation was not as exact as we have heard. But Perlman is one of those performers who can have a "bad" night, which this was not, and still play circles around many performers.

Beethoven's development of themes is crystal clear throughout the violin concerto, one of the most monumental ever written for the instrument. It is full of melodies one can easily recall and the listener is always led logically from one thought to the next.

At times, the concerto is like a symphony with the violin solo weaving itself through the thematic material. At others, the violin is out front all the way demanding all of the tone and technique the soloist can muster.

Unorthodox

William Steinberg is not exactly an orthodox conductor. Conducting without a score he uses sweeping movements, often bringing both hands to his knees. He is not showy but his individual style demands attention. A perfectionist at all times, Steinberg controls every nuance of expression and dynamics as though he had written the music himself.

The opening selection, the Leonore Overture No. 3, is more of a symphonic poem than an overture, and was one of three overtures the composer wrote to precede his only opera, "Fidelio." It musically encompasses much of the dramatics of the opera even to an off-stage trumpet call which announces the arrival of one of the principal characters.

Probably no movement in symphonic literature has been analysed to the extent of the first movement of Beethoven's Fifth, with its famous "fate knocking at the door" theme.

For this reason it sometimes seems overexposed. This familiarity often causes one to overlook the not so familar beauty and strength the symphony embodies in its other movements.

Future Shows

William Steinberg will also conduct this evening's portion of the all-Beethoven weekend starting at 8:30. On the program will be the third (Eroica) and seventh symphonies and the King Stephen Overture.

On Sunday, Leonard Bernstein will conduct Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, in memory of Serge Koussivitsky, in the afternoon performance starting at 2:30 p.m.

Soloists will be soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran and baritone Sherill Milnes. John Oliver will conduct the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

JUL 24 1971 New England Newsclip

Perlman Cheered At Tanglewood

B. R.C. HAMMERICH

LENOX —Itzhak Perlman took possession of another large audience Friday night at Tanglewood. Most of the 9015 listeners were on their feet cheering before he could stand after playing the solo part of Beethoven's Concerto, Opus 61.

Steinberg Conducts

William Steinberg conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra with as usual a sure feel for the shape of Beethoven's ideas, but it was Perlman who dominated the evening.

He is a stocky, likeable young man (26) with a shock of curly hair and a big grin. When he was 4 in Tel-Aviv, he contracted polio and has been playing the fiddle sitting down ever since.

At his concerts he struggles on stage with crutches, sits and is handed his violin. When he finishes, as the audience applauds, and usually shouts a few bravos, he hands his fiddle to the concertmaster, reaches to the floor for his crutches and stands to bow; the audience crowds forward grinning with him and claps and explodes flashbulbs.

Sometimes Variable

The basic cause of the excitement is his violin playing; he is an extraordinarily accomplished violinist. His intonation and tonal control is sometimes variable, tending to rasp and waver under pressure but his feel for the music is deep and thoughtful.

Friday he was unusually eloquent; his music was full of subtle and tasteful expression of warmth and assurance of neatly chosen accents and timing of apt phrasing.

He dug into the music and came up with some beauty and satisfaction worthy of a fiddler twice his age.

Record for Friday

After intermission the ochestra played Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, perhaps the best known and most often heard of symphonies. Steinberg led the orchestra through a sturdy, reliable performance which is another way of saying the music probably pleased the audience.

The press office issued the announcement that the 9015 gate count is an all-time record for a Friday night which must have made the shade of Beethoven smile.

At the 7 o'clock prelude program Sherrill Milnes, Metropolitan baritone, sang 13 songs, including encores, with a powerful style befitting his giant physique.

Most effective was Shaklovity's aria from Mussorgsky's opera, "Khovanshchina." The aria is a passionate expression of the fear Shaklovity feels in the 17th century for the future of his people (Russians) after years of oppression under the Tartars and the Boyars.

Nearly as effective was Milnes' expression of love as sung by Prince Yeletsky in Tchaikovsky's opera, "Pique Dame," when he discovers that the affection of his girl is growing cool.

Milnes was powerful, also, with his encores: Avant de Quitter from Gounod's "Faust," prologue to Pagliacci by Leon Cavallo and a folksong, "Shenandoah."

But the major part of the program, which consisted largely of art songs by Handel Mozart, Hugo Wolf and Joseph Marx, seemed all alike, even though the sentiments expressed in the poetry was varied.

Tonight at 8.30 Steinberg will lead another all-Beethoven program: Overture to 'King Stephan' and Symphonies No. 3 and 7 and tomorrow at 2.30 Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra, Tanglewood choir, Tanglewood Festival Chorus and four soloists in a performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis in D, Opus 123.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
W. 3,650

JUL 22 1971 New England Newsclip

All-Beethoven Weekend At Tanglewood

LENOX — The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood offers three all—Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

Friday evening, at 9, Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg will conduct a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin concerto. Other works on the program are the Third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony.

Saturday at 8:30 p.m., is an all-orchestral concert with Mr. Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the King Stephen overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh symphony.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's Advisor, conducts the Missa Solemnis in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Mr. Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening at 7 p.m., for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky, and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the Orchestra's Pension Fund, is Saturday morning at 10:30 a.m. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed. Admission is $2.50 and all seats are reserved.

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 8,245

JUL 24 1971

Itzhak Perlman Opens All-Beethoven Program

By BILL RICE

Itzhak Perlman, the exciting young violin virtuoso from Israel, was guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., in the opening program of an all-Beethoven weekend of concerts.

Perlman performed the violin Concerto in D Major, the only concerto written for violin by Beethoven. Also on the program, conducted by William Steinberg, was the Leonore Overture No. 3 and the Symphony No. 5 in C Minor.

A record-breaking Friday evening crowd of 9,015 was in attendance.

Twenty-six-year-old Perlman's command of his instrument is awesome, but in the Beethoven concerto he doesn't overwhelm the listener with technique. Rather he wins his audience with expressiveness, warmth of tone, and great feeling for the lyrical qualities of the concerto.

Even the technical demands of the cadenzas, these written by Fritz Kreisler, are minimized by the ease and evenness with which Perlman plays them.

Not "On" Night

As fine as his performance was, we felt Perlman was not exactly having an "on" night. There were a few minor flaws and intonation was not as exact as we have heard. But Perlman is one of those performers who can have a "bad" night, which this was not, and still play circles around many performers.

Beethoven's development of themes is crystal clear throughout the violin concerto, one of the most monumental ever written for the instrument. It is full of melodies one can easily recall and the listener is always led logically from one thought to the next.

At times, the concerto is like a symphony with the violin solo weaving itself through the thematic material. At others, the violin is out front all the way demanding all of the tone and technique the soloist can muster.

Unorthodox

William Steinberg is not exactly an orthodox conductor. Conducting without a score he uses sweeping movements, often bringing both hands to his knees. He is not showy but his individual style demands attention. A perfectionist at all times, Steinberg controls every nuance of expression and dynamics as though he wrote the music himself.

The opening selection, the Leonore Overture No. 3, is more of a symphonic poem than an overture, and was one of three overtures the composer wrote to precede his only opera, "Fidelio." It musically encompasses much of the dramatics of the opera even to an off-stage trumpet call which announces the arrival of one of the principal characters.

Probably no movement in symphonic literature has been analysed to the extent of the first movement of Beethoven's Fifth, with its famous "fate knocking at the door" theme.

For this reason it sometimes seems overheard. This familiarity often causes one to overlook the not so familiar beauty and strength the symphony embodies in its other movements.

Future Shows

William Steinberg will also conduct this evening's portion of the all-Beethoven weekend starting at 8:30. On the program will be the third (Eroica) and seventh symphonies and the King Stephen Overture.

On Sunday, Leonard Bernstein will conduct Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, in memory of Serge Koussivitsky, in the afternoon performance starting at 2:30 p.m.

Soloists will be soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran and baritone Sherill Milnes. John Oliver will conduct the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528

JUL 26 1971 New England Newsclip

57

Baritone Brings Large Applause At Tanglewood

A Tanglewood audience is not easily brought to its feet applauding. It happened twice Saturday.

The first occasion was Metropolitan baritone Sherrill Milnes outstanding performance at the Weekend Prelude Program.

Milnes' voice is strong and virile, dramatic and dynamic. He quickly captures his audience and holds them. They brought him back for four encores, and he could easily have sung all night.

His program — a most interesting and unusual one — contained works by Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky, and Tchaikovsky. Most of the pieces are not particularly well-known. Many of them should be.

Milnes, of course, is an opera singer, and it was the arias that drew the largest applause. But to this critic, it was his handling of the Wolf and Marx art songs that held the greatest pleasure and surprise.

Not every singer of opera can do art song. Milnes can.

We offer one criticism. As with many opera singers, Milnes tend to sacrifice clear diction and enunciation for tone quality. One is accustomed to this when listening to opera, although that does not excuse it; but we wish singers would be more careful when singing art song. Here bigness of voice is not important; expression of text is.

Milnes does sing expressively and interpretively. We just wish he would take greater care with the language.

It was however an excellent performance. And applaudits must go also to Jon Spong, who did a marvelously sensitive job with the piano accompaniments.

The audience was brought to its feet again during the regular concert — an all-Beethoven program — by Itzhak Perlman's playing of the Violin Concerto in D, op, 61.

It was indeed an extraordinary performance by the young Israeli violinist. So much so that the symphony musicians themselves applauded and applauded his work.

Perlman does not draw a big or strong tone from his instrument. It is warm, tender, lyrical. It is crystal clear and enormously expressive. Two outstanding passages must be mentioned: the beautifully played cadenza in the first movement, and the second movement Larghetto with the solo violin accompanied first by pizzicato strings and then by winds.

Conductor William Steinberg kept the balance between orchestra and soloist well under control. Interestingly, the performance gained momentum and sensititity with Perlman's initial entrance, and became more powerful and moving as it went along.

The Leonore Overture No. 3 and the great C minor symphony, No. 5, were also on the program.

Neither of these reached the heights of the standards set by Milnes and Perlman. They didn't have to. As a colleague said to me, "It's nights like this that make a critic's work a joy".

R.C.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 26 1971

No Fads, No Gimmicks, Just Music

12,000 Enjoy Beethoven Straight

TANGLEWOOD

An audience estimated at upwards of 12,000 people inundated Tanglewood Saturday night. The program was straightforward and traditional, all Beethoven in fact, so it is interesting to speculate on the why of it.

Faddists and seekers of sensation would not be interested, Bernstein was not conducting, Van Cliburn was not playing, there were no rumors of any Kennedys planning to attend, no multimedia rock works were scheduled. Could it be that it was just Beethoven, a great symphony orchestra, and a superior if unspectacular conductor that attracted such a large gathering?

WHY NOT, it should and it did and they were given full measure by the Boston Symphony and William Steinberg, conductor.

The featured works were Symphonies 3 and 7, and the manner in which they were played and conducted, my dear readers, is the proper manner. Without cavil or carp, let it be said that this Orchestra, to the best of was the somber genius Beethoven, being served by Steinberg, and therefore, the their considerable abilities.

It was vintage Beethoven, and it was apparent that all the performers had come to play. With Steinberg in complete and authoritative command, the orchestra demonstrated just why it is that they are one of the few great ensembles on this planet.

EVERY MEMBER, no doubt, could play these two symphonies without the score, they are that familiar with them. But, with an eminence such as Steinberg in charge, with his wide-ranging and un-erring concepts of just what it was Beethoven was about, familiarity does not breed contempt. Steinberg has a fision of what this music means and he is ineluctable in his insistence that the orchestra share this vision in full measure with him. They did that and the results were as fine an evening of the symphonic music of Beethoven as has been heard for some time.

The audience was fervent in their response, and only reluctantly left the shed to battle the more pedestrian realities of life, to wit, rain, and the fierce competition involved in the removal logistics of about eight thousand cars. Richard Vincent.

UNION
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 79,398

JUL 24 1971 New England Newsclip

Perlman Cheered At Tanglewood

By R.C. HAMMERICH

LENOX —Itzhak Perlman took possession of another large audience Friday night at Tanglewood. Most of the 9015 listeners were on their feet cheering before he could stand after playing the solo part of Beethoven's Concerto, Opus 61.

Steinberg Conducts

William Steinberg conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra with as usual a sure feel for the shape of Beethoven's ideas, but it was Perlman who dominated the evening.

He is a stocky, likeable young man (26) with a shock of curly hair and a big grin. When he was 4 in Tel-Aviv, he contracted polio and has been playing the fiddle sitting down ever since.

At his concerts he struggles on stage with crutches, sits and is handed his violin. When he finishes, as the audience applauds, and usually shouts a few bravos, he hands his fiddle to the concertmaster, reaches to the floor for his crutches and stands to bow; the audience crowds forward grinning with him and claps and explodes flashbulbs.

Sometimes Variable

The basic cause of the excitement is his violin playing; he is an extraordinarily accomplished violinist. His intonation and tonal control is sometimes variable, tending to rasp and waver under pressure but his feel for the music is deep and thoughtful.

Friday he was unusually eloquent; his music was full of subtle and tasteful expression of warmth and assurance of neatly chosen accents and timing of apt phrasing.

He dug into the music and came up with some beauty and satisfaction worthy of a fiddler twice his age.

Record for Friday

After intermission the ochestra played Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, perhaps the best known and most often heard of symphonies. Steinberg led the orchestra through a sturdy, reliable performance which is another way of saying the music probably pleased the audience.

The press office issued the announcement that the 9015 gate count is an all-time record for a Friday night which must have made the shade of Beethoven smile.

At the 7 o'clock prelude program Sherrill Milnes, Metropolitan baritone, sang 13 songs, including encores, with a powerful style befitting his giant physique.

Most effective was Shaklovity's aria from Mussorgsky's opera, "Khovanshchina." The aria is a passionate expression of the fear Shaklovity feels in the 17th century for the future of his people (Russians) after years of oppression under the Tartars and the Boyars.

Nearly as effective was Milnes' expression of love as sung by Prince Yeletsky in Tchaikovsky's opera, "Pique Dame," when he discovers that the affection of his girl is growing cool.

Milnes was powerful, also, with his encores: Avant de Quitter from Gounod's "Faust," prologue to Pagliacci by Leon Cavallo and a folksong, "Shenandoah."

But the major part of the program, which consisted largely of art songs by Handel Mozart, Hugo Wolf and Joseph Marx, seemed all alike, even though the sentiments expressed in the poetry was varied.

Tonight at 8.30 Steinberg will lead another all-Beethoven program: Overture to 'King Stephan' and Symphonies No. 3 and 7 and tomorrow at 2.30 Leonard Bernstein will conduct the orchestra, Tanglewood choir, Tanglewood Festival Chorus and four soloists in a performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis in D, Opus 123.

BERKSHIRE COURIER
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
W. 3,650

JUL 22 1971 New England Newsclip

All-Beethoven Weekend At Tanglewood

LENOX — The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood offers three all—Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

Friday evening, at 9, Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg will conduct a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin concerto. Other works on the program are the Third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony.

Saturday at 8:30 p.m., is an all-orchestral concert with Mr. Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the King Stephen overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh symphony.

On Sunday afternoon at 2:30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's Advisor, conducts the Missa Solemnis in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Mr. Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening at 7 p.m., for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky, and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the Orchestra's Pension Fund, is Saturday morning at 10:30 a.m. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed. Admission is $2.50 and all seats are reserved.

THE TROY RECORD
TROY, N. Y.
D. 8,245

JUL 24 1971

Itzhak Perlman Opens All-Beethoven Program

By BILL RICE

Itzhak Perlman, the exciting young violin virtuoso from Israel, was guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., in the opening program of an all-Beethoven weekend of concerts.

Perlman performed the violin Concerto in D Major, the only concerto written for violin by Beethoven. Also on the program, conducted by William Steinberg, was the Leonore Overture No. 3 and the Symphony No. 5 in C Minor.

A record-breaking Friday evening crowd of 9,015 was in attendance.

Twenty-six-year-old Perlman's command of his instrument is awesome, but in the Beethoven concerto he doesn't overwhelm the listener with technique. Rather he wins his audience with expressiveness, warmth of tone, and great feeling for the lyrical qualities of the concerto.

Even the technical demands of the cadenzas, these written by Fritz Kreisler, are minimized by the ease and evenness with which Perlman plays them.

Not "On" Night

As fine as his performance was, we felt Perlman was not exactly having an "on" night. There were a few minor flaws and intonation was not as exact as we have heard. But Perlman is one of those performers who can have a "bad" night, which this was not, and still play circles around many performers.

Beethoven's development of themes is crystal clear throughout the violin concerto, one of the most monumental ever written for the instrument. It is full of melodies one can easily recall and the listener is always led logically from one thought to the next.

At times, the concerto is like a symphony with the violin solo weaving itself through the thematic material. At others, the violin is out front all the way demanding all of the tone and technique the soloist can muster.

Unorthodox

William Steinberg is not exactly an orthodox conductor. Conducting without a score he uses sweeping movements, often bringing both hands to his knees. He is not showy but his individual style demands attention. A perfectionist at all times, Steinberg controls every nuance of expression and dynamics as though he wrote the music himself.

The opening selection, the Leonore Overture No. 3, is more of a symphonic poem than an overture, and was one of three overtures the composer wrote to precede his only opera, "Fidelio." It musically encompasses much of the dramatics of the opera even to an off-stage trumpet call which announces the arrival of one of the principal characters.

Probably no movement in symphonic literature has been analysed to the extent of the first movement of Beethoven's Fifth, with its famous "fate knocking at the door" theme.

For this reason it sometimes seems overheard. This familiarity often causes one to overlook the not so familiar beauty and strength the symphony embodies in its other movements.

Future Shows

William Steinberg will also conduct this evening's portion of the all-Beethoven weekend starting at 8:30. On the program will be the third (Eroica) and seventh symphonies and the King Stephen Overture.

On Sunday, Leonard Bernstein will conduct Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, in memory of Serge Koussivitsky, in the afternoon performance starting at 2:30 p.m.

Soloists will be soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran and baritone Sherill Milnes. John Oliver will conduct the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528

JUL 26 1971 New England Newsclip

57

Baritone Brings Large Applause At Tanglewood

A Tanglewood audience is not easily brought to its feet applauding. It happened twice Saturday.

The first occasion was Metropolitan baritone Sherrill Milnes outstanding performance at the Weekend Prelude Program.

Milnes' voice is strong and virile, dramatic and dynamic. He quickly captures his audience and holds them. They brought him back for four encores, and he could easily have sung all night.

His program — a most interesting and unusual one — contained works by Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky, and Tchaikovsky. Most of the pieces are not particularly well-known. Many of them should be.

Milnes, of course, is an opera singer, and it was the arias that drew the largest applause. But to this critic, it was his handling of the Wolf and Marx art songs that held the greatest pleasure and surprise.

Not every singer of opera can do art song. Milnes can.

We offer one criticism. As with many opera singers, Milnes tend to sacrifice clear diction and enunciation for tone quality. One is accustomed to this when listening to opera, although that does not excuse it; but we wish singers would be more careful when singing art song. Here bigness of voice is not important; expression of text is.

Milnes does sing expressively and interpretively. We just wish he would take greater care with the language.

It was however an excellent performance. And applaudits must go also to Jon Spong, who did a marvelously sensitive job with the piano accompaniments.

The audience was brought to its feet again during the regular concert — an all-Beethoven program — by Itzhak Perlman's playing of the Violin Concerto in D, op, 61.

It was indeed an extraordinary performance by the young Israeli violinist. So much so that the symphony musicians themselves applauded and applauded his work.

Perlman does not draw a big or strong tone from his instrument. It is warm, tender, lyrical. It is crystal clear and enormously expressive. Two outstanding passages must be mentioned: the beautifully played cadenza in the first movement, and the second movement Larghetto with the solo violin accompanied first by pizzicato strings and then by winds.

Conductor William Steinberg kept the balance between orchestra and soloist well under control. Interestingly, the performance gained momentum and sensititity with Perlman's initial entrance, and became more powerful and moving as it went along.

The Leonore Overture No. 3 and the great C minor symphony, No. 5, were also on the program.

Neither of these reached the heights of the standards set by Milnes and Perlman. They didn't have to. As a colleague said to me, "It's nights like this that make a critic's work a joy".

R.C.

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169

JUL 26 1971

No Fads, No Gimmicks, Just Music

12,000 Enjoy Beethoven Straight

TANGLEWOOD

An audience estimated at upwards of 12,000 people inundated Tanglewood Saturday night. The program was straightforward and traditional, all Beethoven in fact, so it is interesting to speculate on the why of it.

Faddists and seekers of sensation would not be interested, Bernstein was not conducting, Van Cliburn was not playing, there were no rumors of any Kennedys planning to attend, no multimedia rock works were scheduled. Could it be that it was just Beethoven, a great symphony orchestra, and a superior if unspectacular conductor that attracted such a large gathering?

WHY NOT, it should and it did and they were given full measure by the Boston Symphony and William Steinberg, conductor.

The featured works were Symphonies 3 and 7, and the manner in which they were played and conducted, my dear readers, is the proper manner. Without cavil or carp, let it be said that this Orchestra, to the best of was the somber genius Beethoven, being served by Steinberg, and therefore, the their considerable abilities.

It was vintage Beethoven, and it was apparent that all the performers had come to play. With Steinberg in complete and authoritative command, the orchestra demonstrated just why it is that they are one of the few great ensembles on this planet.

EVERY MEMBER, no doubt, could play these two symphonies without the score, they are that familiar with them. But, with an eminence such as Steinberg in charge, with his wide-ranging and un-erring concepts of just what it was Beethoven was about, familiarity does not breed contempt. Steinberg has a fision of what this music means and he is ineluctable in his insistence that the orchestra share this vision in full measure with him. They did that and the results were as fine an evening of the symphonic music of Beethoven as has been heard for some time.

The audience was fervent in their response, and only reluctantly left the shed to battle the more pedestrian realities of life, to wit, rain, and the fierce competition involved in the removal logistics of about eight thousand cars. Richard Vincent.

58

TROY RECORD July 24, 1971

Itzhak Perlman Opens All-Beethoven Program

By BILL RICE

Itzhak Perlman, the exciting young violin virtuoso from Israel, was guest soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra Friday evening at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., in the opening program of an all-Beethoven weekend of concerts.

Perlman performed the violin Concerto in D Major, the only concerto written for violin by Beethoven. Also on the program, conducted by William Steinberg, was the Leonore Overture No. 3 and the Symphony No. 5 in C Minor.

A record-breaking Friday evening crowd of 9,015 was in attendance.

Twenty-six-year-old Perlman's command of his instrument is awesome, but in the Beethoven concerto he doesn't overwhelm the listener with technique. Rather he wins his audience with expressiveness, warmth of tone, and great feeling for the lyrical qualities of the concerto.

Even the technical demands of the cadenzas, these written by Fritz Kreisler, are minimized by the ease and evenness with which Perlman plays them.

Not "On" Night

As fine as his performance was, we felt Perlman was not exactly having an "on" night. There were a few minor flaws and intonation was not as exact as we have heard. But Perlman is one of those performers who can have a "bad" night, which this was not, and still play circles around many performers.

Beethoven's development of themes is crystal clear throughout the violin concerto, one of the most monumental ever written for the instrument. It is full of melodies one can easily recall and the listener is always led logically from one thought to the next.

At times, the concerto is like a symphony with the violin solo weaving itself through the thematic material. At others, the violin is out front all the way demanding all of the tone and technique the soloist can muster.

Unorthodox

William Steinberg is not exactly an orthodox conductor. Conducting without a score he uses sweeping movements, often bringing both hands to his knees. He is not showy but his individual style demands attention. A perfectionist at all times, Steinberg controls every nuance of expression and dynamics as though he wrote the music himself.

The opening selection, the Leonore Overture No. 3, is more of a symphonic poem than an overture, and was one of three overtures the composer wrote to precede his only opera, "Fidelio." It musically encompasses much of the dramatics of the opera even to an off-stage trumpet call which announces the arrival of one of the principal characters.

Probably no movement in symphonic literature has been analysed to the extent of the first movement of Beethoven's Fifth, with its famous "fate knocking at the door" theme.

For this reason it sometimes seems overheard. This familiarity often causes one to overlook the not so familiar beauty and strength the symphony embodies in its other movements.

Future Shows

William Steinberg will also conduct this evening's portion of the all-Beethoven weekend starting at 8:30. On the program will be the third (Eroica) and seventh symphonies and the King Stephen Overture.

On Sunday, Leonard Bernstein will conduct Beethoven's Missa Solemnis, in memory of Serge Koussivitsky, in the afternoon performance starting at 2:30 p.m.

Soloists will be soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran and baritone Sherill Milnes. John Oliver will conduct the Tanglewood Festival Chorus.

PRESS
BRISTOL, CONN.
D. 18,000

JUL 16 1971

New England Newsclip

All-Beethoven Concerts Planned At Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX, MASSACHUSETTS — The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 23 at 9 p.m., Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin concerto. Other works on the program are the Third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony.

The next evening, Saturday July 24 at 8:30 p.m., is an all-orchestral concert with Mr. Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the King Stephen overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh symphony.

On Sunday afternoon July 25 at 2:30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's Advisor, conducts the Missa Solemnis in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949.

Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The weekend prelude, Friday evening at 7 p.m., for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky, and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the Orchestra's Pension Fund, is Saturday morning July 24 at 10:30 a.m. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed. All seats are unreserved.

Tickets for this fourth weekend of the 1971 Berkshire Festival are available at the Tanglewood box office, 637-1600 and through all Ticketron outlets.

Fourth Weekend Concerts

Friday July 23: Weekend Prelude; 7 p.m. Shed; Sherrill Milnes; and songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx and Mussorgsky.

William Steinberg, 9 p.m., Shed: All-Beethoven program; Itzhak Perlman, violin; Overture "Leonore no. 3"; Violin concerto in D; and Symphony no. 5.

Saturday July 24: Open Rehearsal, 10:30 a.m. Shed. William Steinberg, 8:30 p.m. Shed: All-Beethoven program; King Stephen overture; Symphony no. 3 "Eroica"; and Symphony no. 7.

Sunday July 25: 2:30 p.m. Shed, Leonard Bernstein, Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran, Sherrill Milnes, and Tanglewood Festival Chorus; Beethoven: Missa solemnis in memory of Serge Koussevitzky.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,200

JUL 21 1971

New England Newsclip

To Perform

Sherrill Milnes, who appeared recently at Symphony Hall in Boston with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as narrator in Schoenberg's "A Survivor From Warsaw" and soloist in Beethoven's Ninth Symphony will appear at Tanglewood July 25 as baritone in the "Missa Solemnis" by Beethoven, conducted by Leonard Bernstein.

REGISTER
TORRINGTON, CONN.
D. 11,891

JUL 17 1971

New England Newsclip

Tanglewood

Itzhak Perlman Is Soloist In Beethoven Concerto

The third weekend of Tanglewood's Berkshire Festival concerts features conductors William Steinberg and Seiji Ozawa and pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy.

On Saturday, July 17, at 8:30 p.m., Steinberg conducts an all-Brahms concert. Violinist Joseph Silverstein, Boston Symphony concertmaster, and cellist Zara Nelsova are soloists in the Concerto for Violin and Cello. The program opens with the Academic Festival Overture and closes with the Symphony No. 4.

The weekend's open rehearsal, Saturday morning, July 17, at 10:30 features Ozawa conducting. Tickets for the open reharsal are $2.50 and benefit the Orchestra's pension fund. Tickets are on sale at the Tanglewood ticket office the morning of the rehearsal.

The final concert of the weekend, Sunday, July 18, at 2:30 p.m., will be conducted by Ozawa, artistic director of Tanglewood. Pianist Vladimir Ashkenazy makes his second appearance of the weekend performing Mozart's Paino concerto in B flat K.595. Contralto Maureen Forrester sings Brahms' Alto Rhapsody with the Orchestra and the male voices of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director. The program opens with Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture and closes with Brahms' Haydn Variations.

The fourth weekend of concerts at Tanglewood offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 23, at 9, Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin Concerto. Other works on the program are the Third "Leonore" Overture and the Fifth Symphony.

The next evening, Saturday, July 24, at 8:30, is an all-orchestral concert with Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" Overture, the Third Symphony (Eroica) and the Seventh Symphony.

On Sunday afternoon, July 25, at 2:30, Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's advisor, conducts the Missa Solemnis in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Bernstein is joined in this performance by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

Violinist Itzhak Perlman will appear at Tanglewood under the baton of William Steinberg on Friday, July 23.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening at 7, for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Musorgsky and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth open rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the Orchestra's pension fund, is Saturday morning, July 24, at 10:30. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed.

Tickets for this fourth weekend of the 1971 Berkshire Festival are available at the Tanglewood box office, 637-1600, and through all Ticketron outlets.

The Knickerbocker News
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 56,638
JUL 26 1971

At the Concert

Tanglewood Offers Several Gems

By EDWARD FRENCH

LENOX, Mass.—Friday night of the fourth weekend at Tanglewood offered not one but two musical gems. The first was the Prelude featuring Sherrill Milnes, baritone, assisted by Jon Spong, piano.

Milnes is one of the rising figures in the operatic world and is tremendously gifted in both sheer vocal endowment and the ability to project his artistry over the footlights. STARS

A RAPTLY ATTENTIVE audience that filled three quarters of the huge shed heard arias by Handel, Mozart, Moussorgsky and Tchaikovsky and lieder by Wolf and Marx.

These were donw ith fine sense of the appropriate style. His Mozart and Handel had great flexibility and beautiful phrasing, and the Russian arias were sung with great warmth and dramatic power.

Jon Spong gave fine support throughout, notably in the subtle expressive and technical demands of the Wolf songs.

Among three encores was an utterly magnificent projection of the Prologue from "Pagliacci."

The second gem was some superlative Beethoven as revealed by William Steinberg in his conducting of the "Leonore Overture No. 3" and the ever effective "Fifth Symphony in C minor," both very familiar but sounding so fresh and spontaneous.

This conductor's readings are so sane, so perfectly balanced and logical and have such vitality. There are no undue podium gymnastics, the music is allowed to speak for itself.

As in the Brahms concert last week the orchestra had a silken sheen and a crystal clear clarity of texture. The brasses had a silvery quality and the fortes, while loud, were never ponderous. It was a performance that only happens when everything goes right.

Itzhak Perlman's playing of the Beethoven Violin Concerto was fully on a par with the rest of the program. It was sturdy yet elegant, perfectly shaped; and he made beautiful sounds. His tone is rich, his technic superlative and his intonation flawless. The Kreisler cadenzas the soloist used were musically effective anf technically brilliant. STARS

★ ★ ★

SUNDAY AT TANGLEWOOD was devoted to one work, Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis in D," conducted by Leonard Bernstein. This work is scored for a quartet of vocal soloists, a mixed chorus, organ and orchestra.

Mr. Bernstein's reading of this large work was notable for the wonderful feeling of spontaneity that rediated from his interpretation.

We felt that the score was alive at all times. Contrasts in dynamics and tempi were sharply defined, the subdued parts had an unearthly beauty and the dramatic climaxes had great excitement. Every conceivable level of sound was employed.

Soloists Phyllis Curtin, soprano, Maureen Forrester, contralto, William Cochran, tenor, and Sherrill Milnes, baritone, sang wonderfully well. The two women deserve special praise as they were last-minute replacements for the artists originally scheduled.

As always, the Tanglewood Choir sang with great spirit and beauty of tone.

HERALD
NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
D. 33,737
JUL 27 1971
New England Newsclip

At Tanglewood, the apex of music

By HENRY M. KEEZING

Tanglewood revisited after too many years, is like seeing the World Series after watching local talent in game after game.

Sunday at the music shed on the spacious Tanglewood grounds in Lenox up in the Berkshires, was big league all the way. The Boston Symphony Orchestra was on stage, with Leonard Bernstein himself at the podium. One soloist scheduled to sing a part in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" was forced to cancel her appearance and the part was sung by no less than Miss Phyllis Curtin.

The music was majestic. The setting magnificent. The whose scene an inspiration to the soul and the senses.

This writer is no music critic, but it does not take a refined, technical understanding of music to recognize that this symphonic presentation was something special. One need only have watched the reactions of musicians following the concert with their own score to appreciate the artistry unfolding. Their 'oohs' and 'ahhs' were gasps of admiration and virtual disbelief at the perfection of the performance.

Bernstein conducts at his own choice, and at Tanglewood this has meant that he leads the orchestra only once each season. Rarely does he repeat the same music. Never before, according to the program notes, had he led the "Missa Solemnis.

On the Lawn
at Tanglewood

If you have ever watched him conduct, live or on television, you can appreciate the thought of his incredible vigor. He leaps into the air, immersed in the music, his arms flailing, his whole being radiating the mood of the interpretation he seeks.

So dynamic, so vigorous is Bernstein, that he seemed at times almost in contrast with the Beethoven work which he was conducting. The "Missa Solemnis" was written as a Mass to honor the elevation of Archduke Rudolph of Austria in 1818 but was not actually performed until five years later), and it is replete with a great range and diversity of mood; now sweet, now rhythmic, now crashing and intense.

Part of the scene is Tanglewood itself, and the people, a wonderful cross-section of life. Here a dowager, stepping from a chauffered limousine. There, two young long-hairs, barefoot, with back-packs. Every seat in the shed was filled, and the lawn was a teeming mass of humanity — a middle-aged Woodstock, if you will, without the pot. Wine, cheese and apples abounded at endless picnics on the grass.

The audience rapport added to the mood. All those thousands (12,500, we were told), and the loudest sound while the concert was going on was the squeak of a Lenox policeman's shoes as he made his way down a path.

"Missa Solemnis" is not performed often, and the reason became readily apparent. It is simply too demanding a work; too challenging to musicians and singers.

The work was performed without intermission, and was greeted at its conclusion by an uproar of applause such as we have seldom experienced. The program was recorded live, and will be commercially available in the autumn.

We have often said that one of the joys of living in Central Connecticut is the marvelous diversity of facilities and activities within easy reach. Two hours up into the mountains of Western Massachusetts brings you to the apex of symphonic music. No travelling time could be better spent.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
D. 30,400
JUL 24 1971
New England Newsclip

Leonard Bernstein

Tanglewood

Bernstein To Conduct Sunday Concert

Leonard Bernstein will make a rare appearance at Tanglewood on Sunday, July 25 at 2:30 p.m.

He will conduct the Boston Symphony in Beethoven's Missa Solemnis with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and soloists Arlene Saunders, Florence Kopleff, William Cochran and Sherrill Milnes.

On Saturday, July 24, William Steinberg leads the orchestra in a program of Beethoven's Third and Seventh symphonies and the "King Stephen" Overture.

The fifth weekend of concerts at Tanglewood begins Friday evening, July 30 at 9 when Michael Tilson Thomas, associate conductor of the Boston Symphony, conducts Copland's Appalachian Spring, Ruggles' Sun-Treader, Stravinsky's Scherzo a la Russe, and the Divertissement from Act 3 of Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake.

The weekend prelude, at 7 p.m. on Friday, features the Berkshire Boy Choir performing music from the Renaissance.

The summer's fifth Boston Symphony open rehearsal takes place Saturday morning, July 30 at 10:30 a.m.

Tanglewood artistic director, Seiji Ozawa, conducts the Boston Symphony Saturday evening July 30 at 8:30 in the Shed with soloists Byron Janis, piano, and Stomu Yamash'ta, percussion. The program is Haydn's Symphony no. 96, Prokofiev's Third Piano Concerto, with piano soloist Byron Janis, and Takemitsu's Cassiopeia with percussionist Stomu Yamash'ta.

Daniel Barenboim is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Sunday afternoon, August 1 at 2:30 p.m. Soloist is violinist Pinchas Zukerman. Barenboim conducts Schubert's Overture to Rosamunde, Lalo's Symphonie Espagnole, with violin soloist Pinchas Zukerman, and concluding the program, Tchaikovsky's Fourth symphony.

Tanglewood on Parade, the annual demonstration of the work of the students of the Berkshire Music Center, takes place Tuesday, July 27. The Tanglewood grounds will open to the public at 5:30 p.m. Beginning at 6:30 p.m., performances of opera scenes and arias and dance demonstrations will take place.

At 8:30 p.m., the gala concert by the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra begins with Boston Symphony associate conductor, Michael Tilson Thomas, conducting the Overture to The Flying Dutchman by Wagner. Tanglewood artistic director, Seiji Ozawa, then conducts the Suite from "The Miraculous Mandarin" by Bartok. Tanglewood's other artistic director, Gunther Schuller, will conduct a concert performance of Act I of Wagner's "Die Walkuere."

TIMES UNION
ALBANY, N. Y.
D. 71,675 SUN. 145,169
JUL 27 1971

Tanglewood Concerts Attract Record Crowd

By RICHARD VINCENT
Music Critic

The weekend at Tanglewood was attended by about 30,000 people for the three concerts. This is a record for this festival both for the weekend and for a single performance of the orchestra. The single performance was on Saturday night when 12,349 attended. There were less on Sunday which means that Steinberg outdrew Bernstein by several thousand if one enjoys playing the numbers game.

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" with the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and Choir, and soloists, Phyliss Curtin, soprano, Maureen Forrester, Contralto, William Cochran, tenor, and Sherril Milnes, baritone, aided and abetted the Orchestra, all under Bernstein's direction.

BERNSTEIN, that enormously talented man, is just not the conductor for works like this. The performance was more than competent, all the notes were in place, the tempo proper, but the subtleties were lacking. Bernstein, as we all know, is simply too involved with the theatrical aspects of a concert. The impression is always one of climax, until too soon, there is nothing left to give. If the performers are called to the ultimate time and again, the emotion and enthusiasm become more difficult to maintain with the result that the true emotion becomes spurious and diluted.

THE FEMALE soloists were both substitutes for the scheduled singers. Neither showed any signs of crisis, but Miss Forrester was simply magnificent. This surely is one of the great singers before the public today. In the "Sanctus" when she and Sherril Milnes were exchanging the lines, "Benedictus qui venit in nomine Domini," the artistry and sheer beauty of these two glorious voices in tandem was a most felicitous exercise in the vocal art.

Mr. Cochran performed well, and Miss Curtin, an old friend to Tanglewood, fared less well than the others, but we know what she can do.

The audience reaction was what we have come to expect when Bernstein directs. He is a glamorous figure and his followers believe that anything less than a boisterous happening is not to be allowed.

60

NEWS
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
D. 95,528
JUL 26 1971
New England Newsclip

Bernstein, Beethoven Draw Large Throng to Tanglewood

By RICHARD CONWAY

Leonard Bernstein conducted at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon. Moreover, he conducted Beethoven's monumental "Missa solemnis in D". The lure of this combination in the public's mind must be overwhelming. An enormous crowd was on hand to hear the concert.

There couldn't have been more than a few vacant seats inside the Music Shed; and even the threat of rain failed to keep the lawn area from being packed with people. They were not disappointed.

It was a stunning performance. Even its faults could not detract from the tremendous impact it made on the audience.

We wrote last year that if there is one 'Superstar' in the world of concert music, it must surely be Leonard Bernstein. From the moment he walks on stage there is a charisma that is incredible.

One can argue with his conducting style, of course. It is very physical and emotional. Many of his gestures smack of the purely theatrical. He begs, pleads, cajoles, demands, drives. And when it is over, he is literally drained. And so is his audience.

But the results! Glory be — the results!

The combined Tanglewood Festival Chorus and the Tanglewood Choir, prepared by John Oliver, was excellent. They responded quickly to Bernstein's every cue, and showed an extensive dynamic range from fortissimo affirmations to introspective pianissimos. Special mention should be made of the sopranos, who did an outstanding job with what is often a very difficult line in terms of tessitura.

Two last minute changes occurred in the announced soloists. Phyllis Curtin, soprano, and Maureen Forrester, contralto, stepped in for Arlene Saunders and Florence Kopleff, respectively. Miss Forrester was the more successful. Miss Curtin did a fine job, but it was obvious that she was not really secure with it.

We felt that William Cochran, tenor, did the most outstanding work of the soloists. Sherrill Milnes, baritone, was good, but so much of his part tends to be covered by the instrumentation. In addition, while Milnes' middle and top range is fine, the lower range lacks point and power, and so tends to be lost.

Tenor Cochran's voice rings true and clear, and was very expressive Sunday.

Bernstein kept the balance between orchestra and chorus beautifully controlled, always allowing the text to be clearly heard.

The major fault we found Sunday was that tempo changes sometimes took a little while to be clearly established. But we are perhaps being picayune.

As we wrote, the dramatic and emotional effect was stunning. When Bernstein would fling his arms wide as if to encompass every bit of glorious sound in a rapturous embrace, it would take an unfeeling soul indeed not to be moved.

The audience of over 12,000 Sunday had a musical experience they should remember for quite awhile.

Newsday
GARDEN CITY, N. Y.
D. 427,270
JUL 26 1971

MUSIC

Call it Tanglefoot

By Al Cohn

Lenox, Mass.—From Louisiana to Newport, this has been a sorry summer for music festivals, and perhpas it was too much to hope that the 34th Berkshire Festival—even at tradition-minded Tanglewood—would be an exception.

The disappointment of the past weekend had nothing to do with Beethoven, to be sure, or with the Boston Symphony and its various conductors and soloists. The composer sounded at least as good in the three all-Beethoven programs as in last year's monumental celebration of his 200th birthday—possibly better, since we haven't been hearing quite so much of him at 201.

The Boston was as powerful and true as ever under William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein. Itzhak Perlman, the 26-year-old violinist who plays while seated because of a polio attack in his childhood, gave the best reading of Beethoven's Violin Concerto that I have heard. Even soprano Phyllis Curtin and contralto Maureen Forrester, both last-minute substitutes in yesterday's performance of the "Missa Solemnis," were superb.

Nor could one cite Tanglewood itself, although the Festival's planners and concerned area officials must share some of the blame. The bulk of the problem, as it was at the Newport Jazz Festival and at Louisiana's ironically named "Celebration of Life," was the audience. A Boston Symphony official put it best: "It's what's happening to people, not Tanglewood. People need a lecture."

It was not a case of the drugs and drinking that broke things up at Newport. Neither was it simply because of the overflow attendance of 38,186, which set a box office record for a weekend here. There have been large crowds in past years—I particularly recall a Saturday night when more than 15,000 listened reverently to Van Cliburn—yet somehow Tanglewood remained a blissful escape, a tranquil, green setting away from the crush of summer beaches and resorts.

But there we were on the huge lawn behind the music shed, particularly yesterday afternoon and Saturday night, unable to avoid the obvious comparisons with Jones Beach, or possibly Coney Island. The clatter of latecomers lasted long enough to merge with the clatter of early departures. People moved wantonly through the crowd, knocking into chairs and rushing into blanket-sitters in their haste.

Disturbances of more than routine proportion seemed the order of the weekend. As magnificent as Perlman was, you had to stand in back of the shed if you wanted to hear the subtleties of his technique.

Surely, the traffic and parking situations, which have become progressively worse in recent years, are problems that officials will have to deal with before long. One newcomer to the Festival, considering the total picture, remarked that he would stick to his stereo in the future. It was something I never thought I would hear in reference to Tanglewood, yet I could hardly disagree. /II

PATRIOT LEDGER
QUINCY, MASS.
D. 70,525
JUL 27 1971
New England Newsclip

The Sound of Music

Leonard and Ludwig

By Diane Foster

Patriot Ledger Correspondent

The Missa Solemnis was scheduled to be performed during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Beethoven Festival last April but when William Steinberg became ill, it was replaced by the Ninth Symphony.

Sunday, after more than a year's wait, the Mass was presented at Tanglewood in memory of Serge Koussivitzsky and conducted by Leonard Bernstein in his only guest appearance with the orchestra this summer.

The attraction of the concert lay in the opportunity to hear a live presentation of this great work. A huge, intricate, and technically and emotionally taxing work, the Missa Solemnia is difficult for the listener as well as the performer. It demands much preparation from four vocal soloists, four-part chorus, and orchestra to allow detail to emerge through density, sincerity through theatrics, and continuity through diversity.

Neck and Neck

Leonard Bernstein's production starred Leonard Bernstein with Ludwig van Beethoven as runner up. Lenny, true to character, appeared onstage in a white Nehru suit, danced on the podium till his mane was disheleved and his clothes were gray with sweat, and bowed to a tumultuous roar of bravos. His role as America's most popular conductor is persuasive, though the sensationalism tends to get out of hand.

Musically, also, things got out of hand. The fugues at the end of the Gloria and Credo, for instance, are monumental conclusions to intense movements, and as such they require a second wind of strength and inspiration. Taken at such a frenzied pace, however, they elude articulation and control and lapsed into wild orgies of climax competing against climax, forte against forte, and force against force.

This feeling of competition, born from lack of balance, creeped into every musical parameter. Lack of balance distorted the dialogue between orchestra, chorus, and soloists; each pushed to be heard against the other. Dynamic contrasts, especially in the Kyrie, zoomed from double piano to double forte, omitting the entire mezzo range. Tempo changes were often uncomfortable and so drastic that selections were maximally accentuated. In such a manner, Beethoven's character became a stock role.

Reinforcements

The soloists had a problem with blending, though they were working under unusual circumstances. The two scheduled female soloists, Arelene Saunders, soprano, and Florence Kopleff, contralto, were announced as indisposed and replaced by Phyllis Curtin and Maureen Forrester respectively.

Miss Curtin's voice is able to handle the high tessitura of the soprano part, but it is rather like a dessert topping in comparison to the more substantial, meaty tones of Miss Forrester. William Cochran, tenor, shone through the chorus of the Kyrie splendidly, but Sherrill Milnes' magnificent voice was all but lost in the quartet and choral passages. His attacks were resonant, only to fade in the accumulating density of sound.

Undoubtedly all these difficulties contributed to the intervention of the spirit of communion. Though elaborate, the Missa Solemnis is indeed a solemn mass embodying Beethoven's affirmation of God and mankind and incarnating the awe of reverence. Yet its religious aura did not always penetrate.

Over Expressive

In the Sanctus, for example, the Praeludium, Sostenuto was disappointingly monochromatic. The sublime solo violin passage, designed for expressive virtuosity such as Joseph Silverstein's, appeared smothered by the vocal and orchestral accompaniment, as if not allowed to be developed. For this listener, it was a case of conscious involvement in the expressive realization of the score instead of being naturally transported by the music.

Except for spitting the attack of the Kyrie and a few prominent s's, the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and Tanglewood Choir had remarkable diction considering the inherent difficulties of the parts. The mesmerizing murmur of the hushed choral passages, as in Miserere Nobis, made up for the occasional strain on the sopranos in the upper register. John Oliver, director, dramatically shaped the choral phrases of Dona Nobis Pacem, and Mr. Bernstein ended the perplexing yet appropriate five-bar orchestral ending with an eloquent blend of understatement and conviction.

It was, despite seeming paradox, an extraordinary experience to hear the Missa Solemnis. Beethoven's Mass can't help but have an awesome effect.

REPUBLICAN
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
S. 117,499

JUL 18 1971 New England Newsclip

LEONARD BERNSTEIN

AT TANGLEWOOD

Bernstein to Lead

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox — The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood will offer three all - Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 3 at 9 p.m., Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg will conduct a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin concerto. Other works on the program are the third "Leonore" overture and the Fifth symphony.

Saturday at 8.30 p.m. will be an all-orchestral concert with Steinberg leading the Boston Symphony in the "King Stephen" overture, the Third symphony ("Eroica") and the Seventh symphony.

Sunday, July 25 at 2.30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein, Tanglewood's adviser, will conduct the "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky, his teacher and mentor, and the Boston Symphony's conductor from 1924 through 1949. Bernstein will be joined by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherrill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening at 7 p.m. for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, will be a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing works of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky, and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the orchestra's pension fund, will be Saturday morning at 10.30 a.m. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed. Admission is $2.50 and all seats are unreserved.

Tickets for this fourth weekend of the 1971 Berkshire Festival are available at the Tanglewood box office, 637-1600, and through all Ticketron outlets.

JEWISH ADVOCATE
BOSTON, MASS.
24,500

JUL 22 1971 New England Newsclip

Bernstein Leads "Missa Solemnis" At Tanglewood Beethoven Series

ITZHAK PERLMAN

LEONARD BERNSTEIN

SHERILL MILNES

TANGLEWOOD, LENOX — The fourth weekend of Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood offers three all-Beethoven concerts conducted by William Steinberg and Leonard Bernstein.

On Friday evening, July 23 at 9 p.m., Boston Symphony Music Director William Steinberg conducts a program with Itzhak Perlman as soloist in the Violin concerto. Other works on the program are the Third Leonore overture and the Fifth symphony.

The next evening, Saturday, July 24, at 8:30 p.m., is an all-orchestral concert, with Mr. Steinberg leading the "King Stephen" overture, the Third symphony (Eroica) and 7th symphony.

On Sunday afternoon, July 25, at 2:30 p.m., Leonard Bernstein conducts the "Missa Solemnis" in memory of Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Bernstein will be joined by soprano Arlene Saunders, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor William Cochran, baritone Sherill Milnes, and the Tanglewood Festival Chorus, John Oliver, director.

The Weekend Prelude, Friday evening, at 7 p.m., for which admission is free to ticket holders for the 9 p.m. concert, is a short recital by baritone Sherrill Milnes, who will sing songs of Handel, Mozart, Wolf, Marx, Mussorgsky and Tchaikovsky.

The fourth Open Rehearsal of the 1971 season, benefiting the Orchestra's Pension Fund, is Saturday morning, July 24, at 10:30 a.m. The Sunday concert will be rehearsed. Admission is $2.50 and all seats are unreserved.

AMERICAN
WATERBURY, CONN.
D. 40,675

JUL 28 1971 New England Newsclip

Tanglewood Features All-Beethoven Concert

Last weekend, fourth in the Berkshire Festival series at Tanglewood, in Lenox, Mass., proved that the musical public's love for Beethoven is still unflagging and by far the most popular and revered of all the great classical music that is our heritage.

Coupled with the brilliance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, William Steinberg's conducting, and featuring Itzhak Perlman, the gifted young virtuoso violinist from Israel, brought to Tanglewood an all-time record audience of 9,015 for a Friday night.

Steinberg opened the all-Beethoven program and then gave the concert over to Perlman who was a polio victim at the age of 4 and has been playing the violin in a seated position ever since. His playing was an exciting experience, stirring the audience with great empathy.

Saturday's all-orchestral concert started with the Overture to "Konig Stephan," a rarely-heard work, conducted and played with verve, precision and flamboyance. The Symphony No. 3, commonly known as the "Eroica," followed.

The last half was the highlight of the evening, Symphony No. 7, and was truly a superb and stirring performance for the audience of 12,359.

Sunday afternoon brought an audience of 12,542 to hear the legendary and dazzling Leonard Bernstein on the podium in his only appearance of the season at Tanglewood for the "Missa Solemnis," a work that was played in memory of Serge Koussevitzky who died just 20 years ago and was Bernstein's teacher and mentor.

Florence Kopleff, contralto, became ill at the last moment and Maureen Forrester accepted the invitation to replace her. She is to be commended for her beautiful performance and remarkable clarity of tone and expression.

John Oliver, director of the Tanglewood Festival Chorus and Choir, is also to be congratulated on their splendid and uplifting performance. Their voices blended with the soloists and the orchestra to soaring heights of ecstatic beauty.

However, Bernstein was the star of the day, and his genius goves on forever, despite his retirement from the New York Philharmonic.

Next weekend brings two famous soloists to Tanglewood. Byron Janis will perform the Prokofiev Piano Concerto Saturday evening, with Seiji Ozawa conducting. An all-orchestral concert will be given Friday evening under the baton of Michael Tilson Thomas. Sunday afternoon brings a new guest conductor, Daniel Barenboim, with the brilliant violinist Pinchas Zuckerman as soloist. A total for last week's attendance reached an all-time high of 38,186 for all scheduled events, including contemporary trends and Saturday's open rehearsal. Tuesday evening, Arthur Fiedler brings the Boston Pops to Tanglewood. SSM

61

Concert Review

Fourth Tanglewood Weekend

Martha deB. Beaver

The fourth weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox was wholly devoted to that giant of composers, Ludwig van Beethoven, climaxed by a stirring performance of his seldom heard Missa Solemnis.

Among the 38,186 total weekend attendance, 12,542 were drawn to hear and see Leonard Bernstein conduct this extemely difficult work, which ranks with but does not supersede Bach's Bminor Mass or Bruckner's Fminor, culmination of all Mass composition.

Applause was cumulative and thunderous, much like a line of Chinese firecrackers, as Bernstein approached the podium. It was also part of many individuals' tribute to the late Serge Koussevitsky, in whose memory the concert was dedicated, and from whom the young conductor received his conductorial initiation, impetus and inspiration.

HAMPSHIRE GAZETTE
NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
D. 16,200

JUL 30 1971 New England Newsclip

After the orchestral introduction of the Kyrie, the soloist and chorus in continuing crescendoes, restrained and exact, Bernstein clutching his baton with twohandsand blowing a kiss to the chorus for a particularly well-clipped ejaculation of Kyrie (later also in the Gloria, and it was a warm-hearted gesture), he almost effaced himself, or rather his choreographic gestures, in the profundities of total involvement with soloists, orchestra and chorus.

All of the main characteristics of the Missa are present in the Kyrie, the choral chanting and ejaculation, lyricism of the solo voices, contrapuntal development, solo winds defined in ethereal clarity against the strings, here heard in the prayerful coda.

Bernstein coordinated his responsive forces with tremendous effect, achieving the mighty mixture of contrasting dynamics, styles, and changing meters with refreshing and renewed evocation. There were times when swift tempi eclipsed melodic clarity and subsequent allegro passages. And the Agnus dei, with some of the loviest music in the Missa (plus a borrowing from the Messiah), that supremely moving Dona nobis pacem (Petition for internal and external peace as Beethoven termed it), contrasted with gentle martial motifs suggesting spiritual dangers, struggles and trimphs, seemed to lose its inspiration in a sudden spending of energized and beatific uplift.

For such a complex work, both diligent and inspired (accomplished during the years when the composer's miseries were also complex, including encroaching deafness), with Beethoven's own religious ideals and compositional mastery freeing from traditional ecclesiastical restraint, Bernstein achieved an excitingly introspective and mainly well-balanced production.

Outstanding in recall were: the Miserere nobis of the soloists, the Qui tollis with oboes and first violins, the tenor's compelling almost defiant in character projection of the Crucifixus, the vocal quartet in the quiet Et incarnatus est. An impressive Benedictus, exquisitely presented in sequence and combination by bass and contralto, soprano and tenor, against ascending and descending strings, also sustained Silverstein's silken-sweet solo of ineffable and soaring beauty.

Is it necessary to relate that Bernstein and the performers were acclaimed with vigourous and vocal demonstrations, which erupted into thunderous floor-stamping by, we assume, the chorus?

